5. The Military Hospitals Commission should assume the responsibility of taking care of and providing for all returned soldiers who for any cause are incapacitated for employment, or who require special training or treatment before being able to undertake any employment.

8. All expenditures necessary in connection with carrying out the responsibilities referred to in suggestion No. 5 should be borne by the Military Hospitals Commission, except such as are agreed upon by the respective Provinces in the detailed statements to be furnished to the Commission under suggestion No. 7.

MEMORANDUM of suggestions adopted at Interprovincial Conference, Ottawa, October, 1915, regarding the problem of taking care of and providing employment for members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who return to Canada during the period of the war.

The representatives of the several provinces, in attendance at the conference, agree to submit for approval to their respective Governments the following suggestions, regarding the various problems involved in taking care of and finding employment for members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who return to Canada during the period of the war.

In case upon consideration, the Government of any province deems it advisable to alter or amend any of their suggestions, or make further suggestions, it shall immediately forward notice thereof to the provincial secretary of each of the other provinces of Canada, with a view to having the same approved by the Government of such provinces.

Suggestions.

1. The Military Hospitals Commission should undertake to assist and advise all Provincial or local committees or organizations with respect to the best methods and plans to be adopted to attain the objects in view.

2. The Government of each Province should appoint a Central Provincial Committee consisting of such number of members as each Province may deem advisable.

3. All expenditures necessary in connection with the organization and administration of Provincial and other purely local committees should be borne by Provincial or local authorities or by voluntary contributions.

4. Each of the Provinces of Canada working through its Central Committee should assume the responsibility of endeavouring to find employment for discharged soldiers, who, upon their return to Canada, are physically and otherwise fit to assume such employment. All expenditures necessary in undertaking the duty should be borne by the Provinces. -

5. The Military Hospitals Commission should assume the responsibility of taking care of and providing for all returned soldiers who for any cause are incapacitated for employment, or who require special training or treatment before being able to undertake any employment.

6. With a view to assisting the Commission in this discharge of its responsibilities in this regard, each Provincial Central Committee should be constituted as a branch sub-committee of the Commission, and should be under its direction. One of the members of the Committee to be designated by the Provincial Government should be ex-officio a member of the Commission.

7. Through its central committee, each Province should furnish to the Commission a detailed statement of the institutions and facilities within its borders which will be available for the purpose of taking care of and providing for the various classes of returned soldiers referred to in suggestion No. 5 including all necessary particulars regarding the accommodation available and the terms and conditions under which institutions and facilities may be made use of for the purpose mentioned under Provincial and local administrations.

8. All expenditures necessary in connection with carrying out the responsibilities referred to in suggestion No. 5 should be borne by the Military Hospitals Commission, except such as are agreed upon by the respective Provinces in the detailed statements to be furnished to the Commission under suggestion No. 7.

Future Problems.

In the above suggestions the conference has attempted to deal only with those problems which are pressing for the moment. There are, however, two other problems which demand attention. The first of them relates to the advisability of devising a practical method of placing returned soldiers on the land, under such conditions as will enable them to provide comfortably for themselves and families. This problem is so complex in its character that it would seem advisable to make it the subject of a special inquiry to be instituted by the Federal authorities. The other problem relates to the finding of employment for the large number of soldiers who, within a short space of time, will return to Canada upon the conclusion of the war. It is suggested that the committee, as well as the Provincial authorities, should give the question their consideration with a view to arriving at a possible practical solution thereof at a subsequent conference.

Conclusion.

In conclusion, the conference desires to assure the Military Hospitals Commission that the provincial Governments of Canada are in hearty sympathy with the movement of making suitable provision for returned soldiers, and will endeavour in every possible manner to facilitate the work of the Commission by arranging to place at the disposal of the Commission such Provincial institutions and facilities as are available for the purpose.

Notes of Meeting of Special Committee appointed to deal with the Adjustment of Relations between the Military Hospitals Commission and the Provincial Governments in Matters arising out of the Education of Disabled Soldiers.

Meeting held March 17, 1916, in office of Soldiers' Employment Commission, Dandurand Building, Montreal.

PRESENT: Hon. J. S. McLennan, Hon. G. A. Simard and the Vocational Secretary. The Vocational Secretary reported that Mr. W. D. McPherson had telegraphed regretting his inability to be present.

The Vocational Secretary submitted the following notes on the interview which Hon. G. A. Simard and the Vocational Secretary had with Hon. Mr. Mitchell, provincial treasurer, at Quebec, on March 15, 1916.

1. Hon. Mr. Simard outlined the proposed scheme of classes in convalescent homes and inquired of Hon. Mr. Mitchell what the attitude of the Quebec Government would be towards the Commission's undertaking such work.

2. Hon. Mr. Mitchell stated that:—

(a) "The Quebec Government will not interfere in any way as long as the M.H.C. is dealing only with disabled soldiers."

(b) "This was the understanding arrived at by the Conference which met in Ottawa on October 19 and 20 last."

(c) "If a Provincial Committee is required for the Educational side of the work of the M.H.C., let the Military Hospitals Commission appoint one. If the M.H.C. desired, it might consult the Provincial Commission as to the personnel of the Committee."

3. Hon. Mr. Simard stated that he had seen Hon. Mr. Mitchell again on the matter on March 16, and that Mr. Mitchell had confirmed his statements as to the attitude of the Quebec Government. Mr. Simard said that the intention and understanding was that the Military Hospitals Commission should have "carte blanche" in the work of educating disabled soldiers.

4. It was therefore resolved that the Military Hospitals Commission should, with the advice and on the recommendation of the Provincial Commissions invite a small number of persons in each province to act as an advisory council on the education of disabled soldiers. The President of the Provincial Commission to be a member of the Provincial Advisory Council.

MEMORANDUM re Vocational Training, Quebec and Maritime Provinces.

Vocational training was started simultaneously in Eastern Canada by the opening of classes at the convalescent homes in Montreal and Sydney, N.S., on April 3, 1916. At first the range of subjects offered was very limited, consisting of instruction in business, English, Arithmetic, Mechanical and Architectural drawing, and handicraft in wood. The teachers at first were engaged for only one or two hours each day and were drawn from the public schools and technical schools.

On April 24, 1916, vocational work was introduced into the Parks Convalescent Home in St. John, N.B., by the engagement of a part-time teacher and on June 13, 1916, classes were opened at Savard Park Convalescent Hospital, Quebec.

During this time, it had become apparent that the vocational classes had a great therapeutic and disciplinary value in the homes as well as a practical value to the men in increasing their wage-earning potentiality against the time when they would return to civilian life again. The advisability of providing some light occupational work and technical training for men convalescing from tuberculosis was seriously considered. The medical experts in charge of sanatoria welcomed this policy within certain limits. Tuberculosis patients were divided into three classes: (1) Bed cases, (2) porch cases, and (3) cases which were allowed gradually increasing exercise. The work was started as an experiment at Laurentide Inn at Ste. Agathe les Monts, Quebec, in the middle of November, 1916. A special building had been erected for a workshop and it was fitted up with a modest equipment of woodworking machinery, carpenters' benches, etc. The reason for putting in power-driven machinery was to obviate the necessity of the patients putting any undue strain upon the muscles of their chests. The windows facing south had the sashes removed and ordinary light cotton cloth tacked in. This afforded free access of air without draughts. The typewriters were also placed in this building and men who had progressed far enough to be taking exercise spent a certain amount of time here every day. They have done some very creditable work in wood and are beginning to do something in hammered metal. As the men become stronger and their strength rises toward normal, they naturally turn toward education which will give them wage-earning power. For such men, mechanical drawing, sign writing, typewriting, bookkeeping, motor mechanics, etc. is provided.

For porch cases light work such as embroidery, raffia, weaving, basketry, and study are provided and help the soldiers to pass the time.

For bed cases, no educational work is attempted. All the vocational training is carried on under the direct observation of the medical officer and any patient who over-exerts himself is denied the privilege.

Any of the patients at the Laurentian sanatorium who are on exercise and wish to attend the classes at Laurentide Inn are allowed to do so.

Educational work at the Lake Edward sanatorium was started on January 15, 1917. Here it was found that enough of the patients had had training and experience in various lines to act as instructors. Therefore a staff was selected to teach English, French, agriculture, book-keeping, motor mechanics, and stenography and typewriting. These men were given $15 a month each in addition to their military pay and allowances and the cost of instruction was kept down to a very low figure.

Each man who is allowed to take training by the medical officer is given actual teaching two days a week and given enough work to keep them busy studying and practising between lessons. When the weather becomes warmer, the men will be able to do much more effective work on the porches. Equipment for woodworking and handicraft work will be installed if it appears from the experience at Ste. Agathe des Monts that this should be an integral part of the plant at each sanatorium.

After a few weeks' experience in supplying vocational training in the convalescent homes, the great value of this work was an aid to the medical and disciplinary departments of the work. It became obvious that the men should have a certain definite amount of instruction each day, unless excused by the medical officer. Therefore, provisions were made for a regular programme of physical and vocational training for each week day. This was put into effect simultaneously with the formation of the units of the Military Hospitals Commission Command.

The vocational branch had to secure full-time teachers because the hours of instruction occupied the middle of each day. The number of subjects of instruction was extended and better results were apparent immediately. At the Ross Military Convalescent Hospital only was the system of part-time instructors continued, because it seemed to be adequate for this small home.

In Montreal a portion of the recreation room at the Grey Nuns' home was partitioned off for workshops and class rooms. The classes in mechanical drawing and mathematics which had been carried on at Khaki League Home No. 2 were transferred to the new quarters. As the number of returned men increased, the subjects taught were also increased to include French, English, arithmetic, preparation for the Civil Service examinations, woodworking, novelty making, shoe repairing, motor mechanics, mechanical and architectural drawing, and stenography and typewriting. In woodworking, shoe repairing and novelty making the men had the opportunity of making fifty cents to $1 a day by making products that were sold. In this respect, the cost of materials was deducted from each article, 20 per cent was deducted for overhead expense and the cost of materials, and the remainder of the money remained as a profit for the soldier. The men in the home could draw 20 per cent of the amount due them from time to time if it appeared desirable to the instructor but all the soldiers were encouraged to leave the whole of the balance in their favour until they were discharged. This gave them a little nest egg in addition to their deferred pay with which they could tide over the hiatus between getting out of military service and securing a position in civilian life. The opportunity to make a little extra money beside securing some proficiency in one of the lines of work mentioned was a great incentive to the men to keep busy during their convalescence. Their efforts also tended to build their muscular power up toward the normal capacity which they possessed before enlistment.

It soon became apparent that the quarters provided at the Grey Nuns Home for vocational training were much too limited. When plans were made for the opening of a new convalescent home in the old Loyola College Building on Drummond street, provision for a special new building was made to give adequate space for the classes. After it was decided that this building would take up too much room on the grounds of this home. The Applied Science Faculty of McGill University and the Directors of the new Montreal Technical School, 70 Sherbrooke street, W., were approached to see if quarters could not be procured for vocational training. Both institutions met the Military Hospitals Commission with a splendid generosity and placed their rooms and equipment at the disposal of the commission in so far as it did not hamper the regular work. A new class in machine tool operating was thus possible at McGill University in their fully equipped machine shop. At the Montreal Technical School the Commission was given the continuous use of two splendid class rooms seating 40 men each, the automobile laboratory and demonstration room, and a hall about 200 by 40 feet, which was divided into suitable work rooms and class rooms. Accommodation has thus been secured for the training of 250 or 300 men at once.

The classes were transferred to their new quarters last week. Those who can walk the required distance are paraded under escort from and to the convalescent home and the others who are still suffering from their disabilities to such an extent that the walk is too much of an effort are driven back and forth.

There have been three blinded men who have come back to Montreal who needed vocational education. One of these men was given his training at the Montreal School for the Blind, 6500 Sherbrooke street W., and after leaving the school has been able to earn a competent living continuously at his home in the West. Another man was given instruction in Braille reading, writing and typewriting by a voluntary lady teacher at the Montreal General Hospital while he was receiving medical attention. As soon as his hospital treatment was finished he was sent to the School for the Blind in Halifax, where he is learning to be a masseur. The third man is still receiving medical care every day and will go to the School for the Blind in Montreal when his wounds are healed.

Vocational re-education in Montreal has not been started vigorously as yet, because the medical organization of this unit is not yet completed.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

CITY HALL, COUNCIL CHAMBER,

TORONTO, March 20, 1917.

The Committee met at 10.15 a.m. the Chairman Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

The CHAIRMAN: I may say that in preparing a programme for the next four days we have assigned two days to the examination of witnesses from the Province of Ontario, and two days to the examination of Western witnesses. It has been suggested that our first day be occupied mainly in what we might call constructive testimony (that is what is being done by the various agencies) and that to-morrow we hear those who have suggestions or criticisms to offer, particularly from returned soldiers' organizations. On Thursday morning we are invited to see the various institutions in Toronto, and cars will be provided for us to do that. On Thursday afternoon we will hear the Manitoba representatives, and on Friday those from the Provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. This morning our programme deals with those men who are prominent in connection with the work that is being done for returned soldiers in No. 2 District and throughout Ontario. Col. Marlow was requested to reappear before the Committee at the request of Senator Lougheed, but we have a wire from the Senator that he cannot be here until to-morrow and he asks that the examination of Col. Marlow be postponed until then.

Major-General W. A. LOGIE, G.O.C., Military District No. 2, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are, I understand, General Logie, the General Officer Commanding No. 2 Military District?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you occupied that post?—A. I have been acting since the first of January, 1915, I was appointed permanently last June.

Q. What are the limits of the District over which you preside?—A. Well, roughly, it is from Ontario County on the east to Brant County on the west, on the north as far as James Bay.

Q. Including North Bay and Sault Ste. Marie?—A. Yes, but not Fort William, which is in Military District No. 10, also the Niagara Peninsula on the south. The details are given in the Militia List at the head of the District.

Q. Can you give us the total number of men who have enlisted in your District?—A. Yes, 91,863.

Q. Can you file for the benefit of the Committee a statement showing the number of battalions that have been recruited in this District, the number of men in respect of each battalion who went overseas, and the number of men dropped from each battalion before it went overseas?—A. Yes, I have not that information with me, but will furnish it.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Up to what date were the 91,863 men enlisted?—A. This is as of last return, February 28, 1917.

By the Chairman:

Q. How many men have gone overseas from this District?—A. 56,920.

Q. How many men have you ready to go overseas?—A. 11,813.

28277—40

[Major-General Logie.]

Q. And of the remainder?—A. Struck off 16,637 from one cause or another.

Q. Does that account for the whole 91,863?—A. Yes. Then there is also a difference of 1,627, an additional number supposed to have been enlisted, bringing the total up to 93,490. But that 1,627 cannot be accounted for, because, when the troops went to Valcartier the nominal rolls and states were not handed in to this district, and, when they got to Valcartier, a large number of men were struck off, which we did not know about. That accounts for the 1,627.

Q. How many men have returned from the other side who went from this district?—A. I have no record of that, we are not advised.

Q. Who would be able to give us that?—A. The Secretary of the Militia Council through one of the branches.

Q. How many men have you in your Special Service Battalion?—A. It is only a company. We have 392 and the distributing of them is shown in the sheet which I will hand in. (See Exhibit No. 1.)

Q. That sheet, I presume, shows how many are fit for overseas service?—A. No, it does not. The Special Service Company is composed of men who are permanently unfit, and who never have been fit. That is up to this time. In future we are to transfer to the Special Service Companies those boys under age who are being returned, until they become of age and fit to go.

Q. What are the duties of the Special Service Company?—A. They are detailed in that list which I have handed in. The greatest number are employed as military police, and one large section was employed in looking after the furnaces and stoves at night at the exhibition, which had to be kept alive to preserve the health of the troops.

Q. These men are enlisted for overseas service?—A. Some enlisted for that service and some are returned soldiers from overseas.

Q. If a man enlisted for overseas service and was subsequently found to be unfit and transferred to one of the Special Service Companies, is he maintained there against his will?—A. No—well he is transferred against his will, but, on my representing to the department that there were a number of cases which should be discharged for various reasons, I got authority given to me to recommend the discharge of any man I thought should be recommended for discharge.

Q. That would be in the case of men with large families who wanted to return to civil life?—A. Of course, each case is considered on its merits. If you are thinking of the Patriotic Fund I think those men are doing good service, and should be paid from the Patriotic Fund.

Q. I wanted to make sure whether you retain a man against his will?—A. No, there is no man at the present time, as far as I know, being retained for special service, who does not want to be retained. But I can say if the Patriotic Fund removes their grant there will be a whole lot of them who will not want to stay because they cannot live on the money they get.

Q. We are now looking into that question. Does the Special Service Corps differ in any way from the composite battalion that does home duty?—A. We have nothing like that here. We have no battalion like that; this company is taking the place of such a service battalion.

Q. In other districts there are some home service battalions, composite battalions who are enlisted for guard duty?—A. We have guards on munitions plants, etc., part of which are supplied by the militia regiments, and for such work as guarding the Welland Canal.

Q. They are not eligible for the Patriotic Fund money, as they are not going overseas, and the money is raised for the men who are going overseas?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. But if you did not have these men as members of the special service corps, would you require to replace them with men from the battalions who are enlisted overseas?—A. Exactly, that is the reason it was organized, and it was on the policy of employing men who were not willing to go overseas but who were willing to do something that would relieve other men who were able to go overseas.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. How did you designate these 1,627 men that you referred to a moment ago?—A. It is the balance of men who have enlisted, but who cannot be accounted for because we have no return of their discharge from Valcartier.

Q. Were they supposed to be enlisted here?—A. They were supposed to have left this district when the war broke out for Valcartier, and to be discharged there without any record being kept of them, and presumably they have returned to civil life, to their original homes.

Q. And they have been lost?—A. Yes, there is no trace of them.

By the Chairman:

Q. What agencies to care for the returned men have you in this district?—A. The Soldiers' Aid Association of the Ontario Government is the most effective agent that I know of. It is a splendid organization, well administered, which very thoughtfully and thoroughly goes into the question of returned soldiers.

Q. Do you, as officer commanding the district, feel that the agencies already created are sufficient and efficient for caring for returned men?—A. I think so. I cannot say as to the future, when the men who are now in hospital are discharged, but I think the expansion of the soldiers' aid will cover any such questions.

Q. The medical care of the soldiers of No. 2 district is under whom?—A. It is now, and has been always, under me. There has been some uncertainty about it, but the most recent instructions, I think, are under date of the 15th March; I suppose, perhaps, you have those?

Q. No; I want to get that filed?—A. It is a letter from the Adjutant-General.

Q. Read that and put it on file, because this is the latest ruling?—A. (Reads the following letter):—

H.Q. 393-8-92-B.G.P.

DEPARTMENT OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE,

OTTAWA, March 15, 1917.

From the Adjutant-General, Canadian Militia,
To the G.O.C., M.D. No. 2, Toronto, Ont.

"Re" use of the Canadian Army Medical Corps of the Militia Department by the M.H.C., to deal with the care of Invalid Soldiers returning from Overseas.

SIR,—I have the honour, by direction, to inform you that the medical services of the Military Hospitals Commission in connection with all military hospitals and homes established, or to be established, under the Military Hospitals Commission, will be carried on by the Canadian Army Medical Services of the Department of Militia and Defence. The medical services of all such hospitals and homes will be administered through the usual channels of the Militia Department, with the exception undermentioned:—

"When a hospital or home has been decided upon as necessary, by the M.H.C., the medical services, immediately such hospital or home is reported as fit for occupation, to provide the necessary staff to carry on the medical work. The M.H.C. to provide everything except the medical personnel, and, with that exception, to carry on the various services in such establishments (e.g., such services as are under the Militia Department, carried on directly or indirectly by engineer, ordnance, barrack store or supply officers' commissariat as well as technical training and education." And for such services as indicated therein the Military Hospitals Commission will be responsible.

Kindly have the A.D.M.S. of your district immediately take action to meet the changed situation, and make the necessary recommendation for such increase of staff in the medical personnel only as may be necessary to meet requirements of the military hospitals and convalescent homes provided by the Military Hospitals Commission in M.D. No. 2.

Kindly give the above instructions immediate attention so that the matter of the medical personnel to be employed may be given attention without delay

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. E. HODGINS, Major-General,
A/Adjutant-General.

Q. Do I understand that from now on the medical care of returned men is under the Army Medical Corps, and therefore under the officer commanding the district?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is your first agent in connection with the medical care of returned men?—A. The A.D.M.S., Colonel Marlow.

Q. Has the Military Hospitals Commission Command been abolished, or does that still exist?—A. It still exists. According to this letter all we have to do is to look after the medical end of it.

Q. Does the officer of the Military Hospitals Commission come under your jurisdiction?—A. No; that is where we find that there is a certain lack of co-ordination. He does not, but I have in his office what you might call a D.A.D.M.S., in the person of Major Munn, who reports directly to Colonel Marlow, and through him to me.

Q. Is Major Munn the connecting link between the Army Medical Corps and the Military Hospitals Commission in your district?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is the head of the Military Hospitals Commission in this district?—A. Major Wilson, who went over with the 83rd and has returned.

Q. Then I understand that the active treatment of returned soldiers and the medical care of convalescent men coming back from the front both fall under the jurisdiction henceforth of the Army Medical Corps of No. 2 District?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. What is the exact position of Major Munn?—A. Major Munn has no exact position, and that is one slight fault. He was an officer under Colonel Marlow before the Hospitals Commission Command was talked about; we detailed him to the branch called Casualties, to take charge of that, and look after the documents, administration and pay of casualties, whether overseas or home. He organized that branch, and that Casualties Branch, with him in charge of it, was transferred holus bolus to the Hospitals Commission Command whereupon it continued, with the addition of Major Wilson as D unit, and Major Munn was paid and has been paid by the Hospitals Commission Command, but has not yet been taken over by them.

Q. He is paid by them?—A. Yes.

Q. And under your command?—A. Yes. It is slightly an anomalous position.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What is the necessity for the duplication. Was there any necessity for that duplication?—A. Well, there is no duplication now. No matter how you put it, if you still keep up the Hospitals Commission Command—

Q. What is the necessity for keeping it up?—A. I do not propose to enter into that. That is a matter as to which I cannot speak. If you ask me, I really think the Hospitals Commission Command is a good thing, because it has a free hand as far as housing, feeding, vocational training, etc., are concerned.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. But the Hospitals Commission is not the Command?—A. The Command gets its funds from the Commission, and there is no red tape about it.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is there any necessity for squandering those funds? Or is it squandering the funds by having that Command?—A. I cannot say about that, but I think that that organization, having a free hand to meet expanding needs, without having the necessity of referring everything to headquarters and getting permission to do this and that and the other thing, is a good thing.

Q. It is more flexible?—A. Yes, but the medical end of it, owing to the fact that the soldier is still on duty and on pay, should be, as it is now, run by the Army Medical end, and then the difficulty of co-ordinating has been solved by Col. Marlow's suggestion to have an A. D. M. S. Invalids.

Q. That is forming a connecting link?—A. A connecting link at Ottawa, and then he in turn has an A. D. M. S. in the district, who might be Major Munn, and they may co-ordinate through me with Ottawa on the administration side.

Q. That is a new creation?—A. Yes, and only necessary because of the Hospitals Commission Command.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Have these officers been seconded?—A. They never were, but why they never were I cannot say. We were never asked to do it by Ottawa. Ottawa is the authority which seconds officers in this district.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you think the changes are an improvement on the old system?—A. I think they are. I think they work all right if you just link up the administration side with Ottawa.

Q. Have you any suggestions to make with a view to improving matters to even a greater extent?—A. No, sir, I cannot say that I have. I have no complaints at present, but I used to get many complaints. Latterly I have had no complaints. The important work—the work of making the man as fit as he can be made under Colonel Marlow's organization—is carried on well. I do not know how that could be further improved.

Q. And then the balance of the work, technical training and re-education?—A. Those are matters that should be left to the Commission.

Q. You mean the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, because it does not come within our purview.

Q. You think it would be even better to have the matters you spoke of carried out by the Military Hospitals Commission than by the department because of the greater elasticity that would result?—A. That is my personal opinion.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are satisfied with the new arrangements, then? You think they are in the best interests of the returned soldier?—A. I do, sir, but I think there might be more co-ordination in the way of having a D.M.S. Invalids and an A.D.M.S. under him, and so on.

Q. It is the intention, if the newspaper reports are to be credited, to have a D.M.S. Invalids at Ottawa. Would he be a new officer?—A. I do not know. I think the man who has had charge of the organization relating to casualties, since we organized it in this district, would be the natural man to be the A.D.M.S. Invalids in this district.

[Major-General Logie.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You said the changes would in your opinion, work out satisfactorily if the administrative side were linked up more closely with Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you explain that in a little more detail?—A. Each man's case is dealt with by a file. The medical history, the boards and everything else of the kind, are kept with each man's name in a file.

Q. Are you speaking now only of the medical side of the case?—A. No, I am speaking of the administrative side of it. I am leaving out the administration of housing, feeding, clothing and re-education, that is all left out. I am only speaking now of the military end, which we think should be linked up a little better. That man's file has to be physically kept somewhere. It is naturally kept where the man is, in Spadina Hospital, or whatever institution he is in, and it is kept in what is called a Central Registry, so that when you ask for John Smith's file it may be turned up and ascertained what is the matter with John Smith. That registry is in the Hospitals Commission command. We are several miles away. Now, Ottawa asks us what is the matter with John Smith, his relatives are inquiring how he is getting on. Then I have to send up to the Hospitals Commission Command for the file in order to be able to answer that letter. You see, therefore, that we are held responsible by Ottawa for that man's progress towards health and for reporting upon his case, the information concerning which is in that file, a considerable distance away, thus causing some delay.

By The Chairman:

Q. Where is Major Wilson's headquarters?—A. No. 7 Queen's Park, which is up near the Parliament Buildings.

Q. How far is that away?—A. It is from three to three and one half miles from the Exhibition Grounds.

Q. And you have to send a distance of three miles to get the file in question?—A. Yes. There is a lack of co-ordination in the way I have explained, and we would like to see it remedied. Now, Ottawa holds me responsible for the safe-keeping of those files, and to see that they do not get lost. Well, I cannot really be responsible unless I have the custody of and the control over them.

Q. You are speaking always of returned soldiers?—A. Yes. The other files, of course, are in our own central registry.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You say there is a lack of co-ordination because these files are not under your custody. Are they supposed to be under your charge?—A. They are supposed to be officially, but they are not actually. If there were a central administrative building, which we have not got, and if that building were in close physical touch with the office of the M.H.C.C. and our medical man in the building with his files, as it might be at the Technical School on College Street, which has been offered to us by the Board of Education, with 7 Queen's Park, which is quite near, we could send an orderly to and fro with that file as needed and so secure the necessary co-ordination.

Q. It would be a sort of clearing house between the two?—A. Yes.

Q. If a soldier is sent to an ordinary hospital, would not his file accompany him to the hospital?—A. No, it would not accompany him but his medical history sheet would. His file would be in our central registry. You see we keep physical possession of the files relating to him.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. If there were a large Military Hospital, containing a large number of patients, would not the man's file go with him when he entered that institution?—A. It should, but in that case the man should be under our own medical officer.

[Major-General Logie.]

Q. That leads me to another point: How is the discipline of the Military Hospitals conducted? Are they under the control of the Military Hospitals Command or is there a medical officer in charge?—A. A M.H.C.C. Hospital would be under the charge of the officer commanding the Unit, Major Wilson, who is not a Medical Officer.

Q. What do you mean by the Unit, a Hospital Unit?—A. You are speaking now of men in Military Hospitals?

Q. Yes?—A. The man in the Military Hospital is under the King's regulations and so comes under the Officer Commanding that Hospital. If he commits any offence he has to be reported to his own Commanding Officer for punishment.

Q. What I want to get at is this: Who commands the Hospital, the Military Medical Officer, or is there some special Military Officer detailed?—A. There is a hiatus there which I am trying to have remedied.

Q. Then there is something to be looked after?—A. Yes. Ordinarily when a man goes to hospital and commits an offence, that offence is noted and he is sent back for punishment when he is well to his own Commanding Officer; but there are a number of cases, such as venereal cases, in this district who become obstreperous; I have applied to Ottawa to pass a regulation under the War Measures Act, giving the Commanding Officer of the Base Hospital the powers of a Commanding Officer, so as to deal with these unruly cases.

By the Chairman:

Q. I suppose we can procure from Major Wilson evidence as to the methods of discipline he employs throughout the hospitals in connection with the convalescent men. When disciplinary measures are needed Major Wilson is the one to apply them?—A. Yes.

Q. I suppose we can secure evidence from Major Wilson as to the methods of discipline employed throughout the hospitals?—A. That is another point. The Senator's question was directed towards the military hospitals.

Q. But in regard to the disciplinary measures necessary for invalids, Major Wilson will speak of them?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. I notice that you have enlisted in this district up to the 28th of February in round numbers 92,000 men, and of the 92,000 you have struck off 16,637. Have you a classification showing the reasons why these men were struck off?—A. No, sir, we have not. It could be done to some extent, but not wholly.

By the Chairman:

Q. The Committee would like to know how many of these men were medically unfit having passed the preliminary examination and being subsequently discharged?—A. I could not say; I would not like to say without looking it up. But I would say that a very large proportion were medically unfit.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. They never left here?—A. When they were struck off.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The sixteen thousand odd had been passed as medically fit in the first instance?—A. Yes. There are causes. A man used to be discharged quite frequently on the application of his people before the regulations were made stricter. He also might be discharged because he was not likely to become an efficient soldier. He also might be discharged because he was incorrigible or undesirable. Again, he might be struck off because he was medically unfit.

Q. Could you put in a memorandum showing the number struck off for these various causes?—A. I can try. I do not know whether I can do it with any accuracy.

By the Chairman:

Q. The Committee would like to secure, if possible, a statement showing the number struck off because medically unfit, and any analysis that might be possible as to the reasons in other cases.—A. I am not sure that statistics have been kept for a sufficiently long period to furnish complete information.

Q. Will you file it if you can?—A. I will.

By Brig.-Gen. Mason:

Q. Could you give the length of time a man was in service before being struck off?—A. It would mean going through the sixteen thousand names, which would be an intolerable task for the staff we have. But I could get more help probably.

Q. It is possible that a man might develop some ailment after enlisting?—A. That is quite frequent, sir. It is claimed by the medical men that a man might appear perfectly well when he is examined originally, but that ailments will develop during training, such as hernia.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Tuberculosis?—A. Yes, concealed hernia, flat feet chiefly, and things of that kind, which would not be brought out or discovered by the doctor with reasonable care in the examination.

By Brig.-Gen. Mason:

Q. Would that apply to many of the men struck off?—A. Yes, sir, I think the large bulk have really broken down in service training.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is not the medical examination to-day very much more strict than it was a year ago?—A. Yes.

Q. As a result, you have fewer men discharged as medically unfit after enlistment?—A. We have hardly had time to judge that, it has not been in force long enough.

Q. What procedure is followed now when a man enlists towards establishing his medical fitness?—A. He is not enlisted until he is passed by the board at the mobilization centre.

Q. What examination does he undergo, supposing he enlisted in Owen Sound?—A. At first, the instructions from Headquarters were not quite clear, so after consultation with my staff, I decided that a man when he presented himself for enlistment would sign the ordinary enlistment form without the medical history sheet and take that with him to the mobilization centre. At the mobilization centre he is examined by the board composed of the best men that can be got in that vicinity. If he passes the board for any class, he is drafted into that particular unit, such as infantry or army service, or some less strict class. If he is not fit for any class, he is not attested at all but sent back with a number of days' pay and his railway fare, back to his home. He is never enlisted. We only get the men actually attested fit by that board. After that, when they are passed fit, they are again examined by the medical officer in their own unit.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Before getting their uniform?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. How are they sworn in?—A. They are sworn in at the mobilization centre into the C.E.F., and posted to a particular unit.

[Major-General Logie.]

Q. Before they are examined?—A. No, sir. They come from their localities to the mobilization centre where they are examined. If they pass they are sworn into the C.E.F..

Q. After passing?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is that the present practice?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it adopted?—A. In this district, about the first of February.

By the Chairman:

Q. I have an attestation paper here in which there is printed in the margin in red ink four questions as follows:—

13. Have you ever been discharged from any branch of His Majesty's forces as medically unfit?

14. If so, what was the nature of the disability?

15. Have you ever offered to serve in any branch of His Majesty's forces and been rejected?

16. If so, what was the reason?

How long have these four additional questions been required of men who come up for attestation?—A. I could not say offhand, perhaps Colonel Marlow could say when these came into effect.

Col. F. W. MARLOW: I am sorry I could not say.

The WITNESS: I think it was last fall, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Within the last six months, at all events, those questions are being answered by every recruit?—A. They should be, they must be.

Q. What is done where a recruit answers them falsely, and it is afterwards established that they are false?—A. If we know of it, he may be prosecuted. No, there is nothing can be done with him. The Judge Advocate General has held that the answers to those questions do not form part of the man's attestation, and that if he lies about it as much as he likes, there is nothing to be done to him.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What do they put the questions on the paper for?—A. Well, this form of question is based on the attestation paper in Great Britain. On attestation in England, as I understand it, those questions were asked so that a man would not be entrapped into enlisting without having everything put before him, but the answers to these questions, if false do not form a part of his attestation, and he could not be prosecuted for a false answer to the attestation. That is the way I understand the ruling is now.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. There is really nothing to prevent a man enlisting several times?—A. If he answers these questions truly, yes.

Q. But if he does not?—A. The board does not find it out.

Q. Have you reason to think that that is done frequently?—A. I think that a good many men went up, repeaters, went up again and again.

Q. As many as three times?—A. Well, several times, because I think they really wanted to serve. It was not that any dishonesty was intended, and they did so in a great number of cases for reasons very creditable to themselves.

Q. So the sixteen thousand might not represent that many individual cases?—A. Oh, no, it might not.

Q. There might be a great many duplications?—A. There are, I have not the slightest doubt of that.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. In the same way, there may be many repeaters in the ninety-two thousand men comprising the total enlistment?—A. Well, there may be some. There is no question about the men we have sent over, or about the men we have still here. The first contingent, there is some trouble about that.

By the Chairman:

Q. In the ninety-two thousand enlistments you may have men who have enlisted two or three times and who have been discharged and who have enlisted again at some other point?—A. They would come under the 93,490, the total.

Q. But do I understand from you that really these statements are of no value?—A. That is my present understanding of the ruling of the Judge Advocate General.

Q. There is a note at the bottom of the attestation paper: Attention is drawn to the fact that any person making a false answer to any of the above questions is liable to a penalty of six months' imprisonment?—A. Yes, I understand that under the War Measures Act the answers to some questions are made the subject of penalty, and the answers to others are not. We had a case the other day in which the original attestation form did not contain the words "and inoculated" in question 8, which reads: "Are you willing to be vaccinated, or revaccinated, and inoculated?" We called attention to the fact that when a man enlisted he refused to be inoculated. A case arose recently in which a man refused inoculation, after he had signed this attestation paper. We had him up on the charge of making a false attestation, and the Judge Advocate General ruled that there was no compulsion.

Q. But supposing that a man, a young recruit, to-day fills out that paper with clauses 13, 14, 15 and 16 in it, can he not be punished for false attestation if he afterwards refuses?—A. My understanding is that he cannot, that the ruling of the Judge Advocate General is that he cannot; I may be wrong, and I can put it up to him again officially.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. A man might swear to-day: "I am willing to be vaccinated or revaccinated and inoculated," and he might be telling the truth in saying so, but when the time comes he says: "I am not willing, now, to be inoculated," and he would not be perjuring himself?—A. No.

By the Chairman:

Q. I can see how you could not hold a recruit when he signed the attestation paper without this question in it, but when he signed the paper, to-day, with these four questions in it could he not be punished?—A. My understanding is that the whole of these questions to be put to a man before his attestation do not form part of the man's attestation, and, unless there is some enactment which I am not aware of, the Judge Advocate, as I understand it, rules that a false answer to those questions does not hold the man.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Was that a general ruling, or was it given in a specific case?—A. In a specific case.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. The idea of putting these questions is to guard any unfit man from coming in?—A. Certainly, and that the answers to them should render the man liable if he made a misstatement. I may be mistaken as to the ruling of the Judge Advocate General.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If it did not render the man liable, do you think it should?—A. Most decidedly so. In fact, men have been prosecuted and convicted under that in this district.

[Major-General Logie.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The question should be to this effect: not "Are you willing to be inoculated or vaccinated now?" but, "Will you be willing to be inoculated or vaccinated when the time comes?"—A. Exactly.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Are not these questions on just the same basis as those asked an applicant for insurance; they are very similar in the case of an applicant for insurance, and if he answers them wrongly it throws out the whole insurance. It appears to me to be something like a legal document, is not that what it is?—A. Yes, I would have thought that it is, and it is vital that punishment should be provided for false answers.

By the Chairman:

Q. You said in your evidence a moment ago that the separation of the various departments was a matter which, here in Toronto, caused a waste of energy. Do I understand you to advocate that there should be a central building here in Toronto where all the various departments are under the one roof, so that the interchange necessary between them can be facilitated?—A. Yes, that is what I recommend, and that was the case before the war.

Q. What would you put in that building—who would you put there?—A. The different branches of the staff.

Q. Would you name them?—A. The General Staff, the Administrative Staff, which includes the Medical Department, the Services, and departments, such as the A.D.S. and T., which deal with the Supplies and Transportation, the Engineering Services, etc.

Q. Do you think that the Military Hospitals Commission and the Soldier's Aid Association should be there, would it be a benefit to have them all centralized in that building?—A. I do not think so. So far as the military end of it is concerned I think the need is to co-ordinate a little better the administrative end and the Medical Service.

Q. Is there any one place here in Toronto where a discharged soldier, who feels that he has a grievance, could go, and make his complaint, so that he would know in what department it falls and feel assured that his matter will come before the right party?—A. I have announced again and again that if any soldier had a grievance and communicated with me it would be attended to.

Q. Returned soldier, or otherwise, discharged soldier, or otherwise?—A. Well, with regard to the men who have not yet gone overseas, they should make their complaint under the King's Regulations, to their own Commanding Officer. I have told them that if they communicated with me I would see that any complaint was brought to the proper quarters, and I have done that.

Q. Is there any official now, whose duty it is to act as an information bureau, where a returned soldier would go and state his case?—A. Discharged, or undischarged?

Q. Both.—A. An undischarged returned soldier would naturally go to Major Wilson, who is the Commanding Officer, a very thoughtful and considerate officer, and his complaint would be attended to properly.

Q. Then I understand that any returned man who has not yet been discharged may go to Major Wilson in connection with any grievance that he has?—A. That is his duty.

Q. And it is attended to at once?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the discharged man?—A. He is a civilian and I do not know what the military has to do with it.

Q. Supposing a man is not satisfied with his pension? What unfailing source of help is there to which he can go and seek information?—A. I have told them that

[Major-General Logie.]

I will be only too happy, myself, to do anything of that kind. There have not, as a matter of fact, been many complaints—in fact I do not remember any complaint with reference to the pension, that has not been satisfactorily explained except as to the rate as a whole.

Q. Has any officer of your department been delegated to hold himself at the disposal of discharged soldiers, who feel that they have grievances and do not know how to get them righted?—A. No, sir, that hardly comes within the scope of the military end of it. The Soldiers' Aid Association I may say, attends to that, and I think everybody recognizes that they attend to it thoroughly.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. As a matter of fact any such complaint that goes to you, would that be directed to the proper authorities?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Then I understand there are really at present two bureaux of information for a returned soldier; if he has not been discharged he gets in touch with Major Wilson?—A. Yes.

Q. If he has been discharged he gets in touch with the Soldiers' Aid Commission?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you consider the training here sufficient? I ask that for this reason, that I notice a great number of returned soldiers say that they have been sent back rejected in England, they having had the greatest good faith in going, but that they had been rejected in England by reason of the fact that the training here has not been sufficient to bring out any latent defects; what do you say as to that?—A. I cannot answer a question like that, nor what a man would say when he is sent back.

Q. No, but do you consider the training sufficient?—A. Yes, I consider the training here, so far as we are able to conduct it with the equipment at our disposal is sufficiently severe.

Q. When you say equipment at your disposal, would you want more equipment than you have got now?—A. Well, there is very little, but there are certain things that we have not got, such as gas masks and things like that, which we have not got at our disposal yet.

Q. That would not help in the training?—A. Yes, that helps in the training.

Q. Not in the development of the man?—A. The man is developed in every way by physical training and bayonet fighting too, some people think far more than he should be.

Q. Sufficient to bring out all those latent defects?—A. It is so sufficient that my medical officer thinks it is too severe.

Q. Then you do not think there is anything in the complaint of those men that have just arrived here now, that they have been rejected in England and not sent across the Channel; you don't think there is anything in that complaint that there is not sufficient training here?—A. If that complaint has been made I do not think that it is correct.

Q. You do not think it is correct?—A. No, I do not.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Can you speak for other districts in that regard as well as your own?—A. No, I cannot, I only speak for my own.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You think the training here is quite sufficient?—A. I do; I think it is quite sufficient.

[Major-General Logie.]

Q. I was just looking over this, and I would just like you to explain it—I am just asking you for information; I do not just get the point; you stated to the Committee here that the Army Medical Corps now had charge of those hospitals under that order of March 15?—A. No, they have charge of the medical services in the hospital.

Q. Only the medical services?—A. That is all.

Q. So that matters are left the same as they were before?—A. Except that the medical service is now settled in its channel.

Q. Then the man who has charge of the medical service under the Army Medical Corps has not charge of that hospital?—A. No.

Q. The discipline is not his?—A. No.

Q. Then this order is all surplusage, because that was so before?—A. Well, this order defines how the medical services are to be continued under the Military Hospitals Commission Command, and that is all it does.

Q. In the Military Hospitals Command prior to that order who had charge of the services?—A. The same people, but it was not authorized; at least there was an uncertainty as to whether the medical services of the Militia Department were to be utilized, or whether an outside service was to be organized to take their place.

Q. That is, the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes. That is, now the Army Medical Corps takes charge of the army medical arrangements.

Q. Who looks after the disciplinary end of the hospital?—A. The man in charge of the unit, that is Major Wilson.

Q. Then all the military man has to do there is to go and look after the hospital in co-operation with the medical man, that is, the Canadian Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes, that is all; that is a very large end of it.

By the Chairman:

Q. As I understand, all the men you have in the hospitals here are, as it were, in the battalions of which Major Wilson is commanding officer?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Who looks after the discipline of those men?—A. The discipline in the hospital is under Major Wilson. On the streets I am responsible.

Q. I am talking of the hospitals only; is Major Wilson a medical man?—A. No.

Q. Does Major Wilson have the infliction and the determination of punishment for a man?—A. Yes, whatever punishment, of course he would not arbitrarily define it without consultation with the medical officer, whether a man is getting punishment—

Q. Supposing a man is brought up, and to be punished, who has the infliction of that punishment?—A. Major Wilson; but he would not punish unless he consulted his medical officer.

Q. Before a man is sentenced the medical officer is consulted?—A. Yes, always. Even in the battalion he is.

Q. You are not a medical man yourself?—A. No, I am not.

Q. Do you think—I am only asking for your opinion—that it is better to have the discipline of a hospital under the medical officer in charge, who has actual charge of those medical cases and knows just the internals of every man there, or do you think it is better to have it under the charge of a military man who is not a medical man?—A. Well, I think that I can hardly answer that, but I may tell you that I have asked the Department at Ottawa to give the powers of a commanding officer to the officer commanding the base hospital here.

Q. The officer commanding the base hospital is a medical man?—A. Yes, so that he may administer if necessary the proper punishment to men who create a breach of discipline; but the King's regulations at the present time are against that so far as military hospitals are concerned.

Q. They are always in charge of a non-medical man?—A. No, they are in charge of a medical man, but that medical man has no power to administer punishment to men if he is not "commanding officer." You see, each man in the hospital comes from a unit which has a commanding officer. Well, the medical man, under the King's regulations, cannot give that man 28 days' detention, we will say; he must report the case to the man's own commanding officer, who in turn will have him up and punish him when he is able to be punished.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is, in case of camp cases?—A. The King's regulations cover everything, but I have asked for that to be changed in regard to the Base Hospital here. This is regarding soldiers in the C. E. F., whoever may be in the Base Hospital.

Q. You have asked it to be changed to what extent?—A. To give the powers of a commanding officer. The King's regulations do not allow the officer in command of a hospital to punish an individual patient in that hospital; he must be remitted for punishment to his own commanding officer, who may be the commanding officer commanding the 104th, or any other battalion outside, when he is well; but there are certain cases in the hospital now which are unruly, as I said before—venereal cases—and they are very difficult to handle, and they are not nearly so sick that punishment should not be inflicted, and yet they cannot be punished by the officer commanding the hospital; so I have asked Ottawa, after consultation with the Judge Advocate General, to pass some regulation under the War Measures Act to give an officer commanding a hospital, such as the base hospital, the same power as a commanding officer, so that if he won't take treatment he can punish him right on the spot.

Q. Then that recommendation pretty well carries out your thought?—A. Yes, but that is regarding military hospitals. The Commission is another matter.

By the Chairman:

Q. That does not refer to returned soldiers?—A. No.

Q. Camp cases?—A. Yes; what you call camp cases.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Why should you make any difference between a sick returned soldier and a sick camp man?—A. You don't, really.

Q. Don't you in this circumstance?—A. Only because of the organization of the Hospitals Commission.

Q. The other is Army Medical Corps?—A. It is a unit of the Army Medical Corps.

Q. Then the Hospitals Commission comes along and makes a difference so far as returned men are concerned?—A. Well, only in so far as commanding officers of the unit having the powers of a commanding officer. The only difference is that he is not a medical man. He may not be; he may be.

Q. The chances are that he is not?—A. He is not in this district.

Q. So far as your observation has gone would an enlargement of the Army Medical Corps have done the duties quite as well as the appointment of a military hospitals commission?—A. I am not sure. I would not like to say that.

Q. You would not like to express an opinion on that?—A. I would not like to say, because, as I said before, it is such a different question, and if it had been left to the Militia Department I would not like to express an opinion as to whether it would have been more efficiently carried on by them than under the present state.

Q. As a man having had a great deal of experience in this line of work, do you or do you not think that one authority is absolutely necessary, either the Medical Corps or the Hospitals' Commission?—A. Well, I think there should be a definition of authority and responsibility.

Q. Do you see any reason why there should be two?—A. Well, that is a matter of policy. I am not prepared to express an opinion on that.

Q. You are not prepared to discuss that end of it?—A. No. I have not the knowledge necessary to do it.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. You really did express an opinion on something very nearly that a little earlier in your examination. You spoke of the Hospitals' Commission being appointed specially for the purpose of looking after these returned soldiers, that there was more flexibility and greater ease in getting the funds?—A. Yes.

Q. And that there would not be the same delay and that sort of thing?—A. Yes.

Q. I think you gave expression to that idea?—A. Yes, that is my opinion.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. The very fact that the Hospitals' Commission can act immediately rather than have it go through the usual military routine, with the usual delay, is really the most important feature?—A. I think so—to meet the expanding needs.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. The Army Medical Department as at present constituted, even as enlarged, would hardly be the right kind of department to take up vocational training, for instance?—A. In my personal opinion, I do not think so.

Q. It would be sort of exceptional work for them?—A. Yes.

Q. And they would naturally have to employ, the same as the Hospitals' Commission have employed, men who were experts in that particular knowledge, who would not be members of the Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes. I would like to file the order for the creation of mobilization centres in this district. That will answer some of your questions. (See Exhibit No. 2 herein.)

The CHAIRMAN: Sir James Loughheed cannot be here until to-morrow and he specially requested that Mr. Marlow be not examined until Wednesday; so that we will examine him to-morrow.

Witness discharged.

Mr. W. K. GEORGE, called, sworn, and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are a member of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the area that falls under your jurisdiction?—A. As a member of the Military Hospitals Commission, I imagine the whole Dominion is under it.

Q. The Military Hospitals Commission, then, is one for the whole Dominion?—A. Yes.

Q. So that your interest not only obtains in respect to this district, but of all Canada, so far as the Military Hospitals Commission is concerned?—A. It does.

Q. You naturally, however, are principally familiar with this district?—A. Quite so.

Q. Can you tell us briefly what the Military Hospitals Commission here and in his district are endeavouring to do at the present time, and what facilities they have or are accomplishing their work?—A. They have endeavoured to provide hospitals properly equipped, and properly staffed, to look after the returned men. We began in Toronto first with the old Bishop Strachan School building on College Street, which furnished an accommodation for about 130; when now filled, as it is, fuller than perhaps it should be, I think that there are more than that number. That hospital building has been pretty well equipped with such surgical or special appliances as in the opinion of the medical men were considered of special use and advantage in the treatment of the returned invalided soldiers. It is well equipped. It has, for example, very efficient X-ray equipment, it has a complete optical and dental equipment, it has hydro-therapy, electro-therapy and mechano-therapy equipment, continuous baths, massage, and many appliances for the treatment of men which are not generally found in other hospitals. After that we took on old Knox College, now known as Spadina, and that has been converted into, I think, a very satisfactory hospital for these men. It is very comfortable, and I think the men are very well satisfied with their surroundings.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many beds?—A. The accommodation in Spadina, as far as my recollection goes, was supposed to be 230. Again, that is full at present to overflowing, and there are possibly more there to-day than that number. Then, in addition to that, there is a small home, one of the original convalescent homes on North Yonge Street, which was loaned by Mrs. Charles Beatty. That is useful in a modified way for cases of some men who should get out to a quieter place. We have found as a rule that the small home is not the proper way to treat these men. My contention and recommendation has for a long time been that we should only establish large central hospitals sufficient to accommodate a large number of men (possibly 200 as a minimum), so that we would be justified then in putting in proper equipment and maintaining a proper staff of medical men and others to properly look after these men. In addition to that, in the immediate Toronto district, we are now arranging for the opening of what at present is called the Booth Memorial Home. This is a training college which was being built by the Salvation Army as a memorial to the late General Booth for the training of their own men in their own work. It is a very fine building, which I hope you gentlemen will favour with a visit during your stay in the city. It has cost in the neighbourhood of $200,000. That building was turned over to the Hospitals Commission in the rough, I mean just the rough walls, and is being altered so as to work out into a very satisfactory hospital for the treatment principally of orthopædic cases.

Q. Which is that?—A. The Booth Memorial. I think the intention is to confine that largely, or to utilize it principally for the treatment of orthopædic cases, such as amputations, although I understand now that orthopædic work covers all kinds of bone surgery and allows for a much wider field than we perhaps understood.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. All kinds of deformities?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Where would the limb factory be?—A. The limb factory, I think, will be moved up into that immediate vicinity. I think you gentleman understand it was decided to establish one limb factory for the present at least, to as far as possible supply the needs of the men who have suffered the loss of arms or legs.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. All over the Dominion?—A. Yes, and for that purpose a factory has been established in this city, the desire being, of course, to give the men everything that is best in the way of the best limbs that money can turn out.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is it an entirely new factory, or in operation before?—A. It is an entirely new factory.

By the Chairman:

Q. By whom is it operated?—A. By the Commission.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many beds will the Booth Memorial provide when you get it finished?—A. I am not certain. I will ask Mr. Riddell to give us that information.

MR. RIDDELL: Between three and four hundred beds.

THE WITNESS: Does that include the pavilions to be built on the grounds.

MR. RIDDELL: Yes.

[Mr. W. K. George.]

The WITNESS: That will include dormitories or wards which will be built on the ground belonging to the main central building. The main building will give the administrative accommodation, it will furnish ample administrative accommodation, much ward accommodation and everything that is required, as you will, I think, see on the occasion of your trip there.

By the Chairman:

Q. Then you have other hospitals outside Toronto. Which are those?—A. We have taken over the buildings at Whitby which I think will furnish a most ideal opportunity of doing this work, and I think probably every one of this Commission feels without any suggestion on my part that there is something more due to these men than to be turned out of the hospital as soon as such medical or surgical work as can be given to them is finished. I know what I would be like if I had been in the hospital for a period from six months to two years and then when I was cured I was allowed to go out on the street. I would be so thoroughly hospitalized that I would not be much use to go back to civil life. Our idea is that as far as possible—at least it is my idea, and I think it is the idea of every member of the Commission, that as far as possible our institutions for the treatment of these men should not be in the centre of cities, but should be surrounded by or closely adjacent to considerable tracts of land, so that the men could go out on the land, exercise, play and work, and be taught various things which will be of considerable service to them in the future. The conditions in that way at Whitby will be, I think, ideal from many standpoints, because the accommodation will be quite large enough to justify the maintenance of everything that is necessary. It is on the lake shore. There are 600 acres of land, belonging to the property, and the men will have a splendid opportunity to attain not only to health but to physical strength, and their muscle and moral fibre will be built up during the time they are there.

Q. You refer to the physical and vocational opportunities?—A. The opportunities for physical and vocational training will be excellent. As far as physical training is concerned it has been demonstrated in England to have wonderful curative results.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Mentally?—A. Good mental as well as muscular results. I might explain, if you will follow me for a moment, the channel through which the wounded men previously travelled in England. They went through the various hospitals and from the hospitals to convalescent homes. They spent some time in the latter institution, and having been built up as far as possible, by that kind of treatment, were then sent to reserve battalions and were supposed to gradually rehabilitate themselves by their surroundings so as to be ready to go back to the front. This, of course, only applies to men whom it was supposed could be re-established in health and strength for active service.

By the Chairman:

Q. Were you over in England?—A. Yes, I was over last summer. I understand that the number of men who were returned into active service under this treatment did not run to more than 15 or 18 per cent of the casualties. The method of treatment was then changed. The men, after leaving the hospitals, continued to go into convalescent homes, but instead of afterwards going to base battalions or reserve battalions, they went to what were called command depots to undergo physical drill in the open air. This drill began in a very moderate and easy way, gradually being increased day after day until the treatment covered two hours in the morning and two hours in the afternoon of strenuous physical drill. I saw at Monk's Horton from 1,200 to 1,500 men undergoing drill who looked more like athletes than returned invalids. I was told that as a result of this treatment the number of casualties returning to active service had grown from 15 to 18 per cent to something like 76 per cent. I do not want to assume responsibility of these figures, but I believe investigation will show that they are largely borne out by facts. I now come to Guelph.

Q. Before you leave Whitby, let me ask you what has been done to make life attractive, particularly for single men, there?—A. I do not know that we have gone far enough yet in our experience at Whitby to give a very definite answer to that question. I think perhaps Mr. Laidlaw can give you more valuable information upon that point because he is not only a member of the Soldiers' Aid Commission but has also a country home near Whitby. I may say, however, that I saw the Quartermaster a few nights ago, and he reported to me that the men were very happy and very well pleased.

Q. What is the provision for a married man, who might prefer to be near his wife and family, if he were a resident of Toronto, at Whitby?—A. I cannot give a definite answer to that question. The charge has been made that we were sending these men away from their homes. I suppose if that argument were carried to its logical conclusion we would have to keep every returned soldier in his own home. We would have to provide each man with proper medical treatment and nursing in his own home, which, of course, is impossible; and I do not know any reason why a Toronto man should not be sent to Whitby equally as well as for instance a man from Galt. We cannot establish proper places in every little centre to look after these men. All we can do is to get them as near their homes as the location of the large centre which has been established for their treatment will permit.

Q. Are you of opinion that the married man, for example, can be better equipped for civil life at an institution like that at Whitby than if he were an out patient here in Toronto?—A. In reply to that question, Sir Herbert, I am inclined to answer in the affirmative as far as regards the great majority of cases.

Q. You were going to discuss the Guelph institution when I interrupted you?—A. The next place after Whitby is Guelph, which will furnish accommodation in the early stages for something like 500 or 600 patients.

Q. Will those be general convalescents?—A. They will be, I think, if our theory works out. It will be for the accommodation of the men who are more nearly ready to graduate into civil life than the inmates of any other institutions which we have in this district. For this reason, I think perhaps Guelph is even more ideal than Whitby. Guelph has 800 acres of land, it is situated adjacent to the Agricultural College; it has in its own buildings eight or ten, perhaps more, perhaps less, I am not certain on that point, commercial factories, which the Ontario Government has been operating in the past and will continue to operate in the future.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How many factories?—A. Eight or ten commercial factories, woodworking weaving, making furniture, etc, etc.

Q. Which have been used by the prisoners?—A. Yes, in the past. A staff of competent expert men will continue to operate these on behalf, as I understand it, of the Ontario Government, because that Government counts on the output of these factories to supply the various institutions throughout this province with many of the various articles which they require.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Will the prisoners be working there as well?—A. There will be no prisoners

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What will be done with the output?—A. The output will go to the various institutions under provincial control. The buildings at Guelph will be evacuated b

[Mr. W. K. George.]

the prisoners long before we put our men in. That would be the practical course. The factories will continue running, as I understand it, and our men will have access to them, so that for instance, ten or twelve could be put in the furniture factory, if they desired to follow that occupation; four or five men in the foundry, and so on in each case working under the supervision of skilled workmen. Then, being adjacent to the Agricultural College—

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is it the intention that the returned soldiers will profit by their labour in these factories?—A. I think that is the intention, Mr. Ross. How far that has been worked out I cannot say, and I would not like to say that it is the intention at the present moment. It is a theory entirely yet in that point. That institution, being as it is adjacent to the Agricultural College will furnish ideal opportunities for these men while they are being educated or instructed in many things that pertain to agriculture. I am satisfied that the professors and senior students will both be more than glad to give lectures to those men on poultry raising, bee keeping, dairying, market gardening, and anything that will help to make these men more competent when they go back into civil life. I think that there we are going to have almost an ideal possibility for the treatment of the men.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. It is proposed to graduate them from Whitby to Guelph and then into civil life?—A. That again is the theory, that is the desire; how far it will work out in practice time will tell. I do not see why it should not.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. We have heard a good deal about the men wanting to go into market gardening, is the Commission taking any special steps towards this end with the 800 acres at Guelph and the 600 acres at Whitby which are available?—A. It is intended certainly that they shall, Mr. Pardee, at both these institutions where the area is more than ample for all they will require.

Q. Have you sufficient instruction there?—A. It would be better to ask Mr. Nichol to give full information about that.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Were the whole of the resources of these institutions placed at the disposal of the commission?—A. Practically, I believe the entire institutions, the grounds and all.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You said that those factories at Guelph would continue to be used for prisoners?—A. Not by prisoners, but by competent workmen. We will certainly not mix our men with prisoners.

By the Chairman:

Q. At Whitby there is no mixing at all as between insane civil patients formerly at Whitby and returned soldiers; they are entirely in another part of the grounds?—A. Certainly, that will be so.

Q. At Guelph, there is no contact whatever between the soldiers and the prisoners?—A. The prisoners will be removed entirely as I understand it, and everything that gives a prison aspect to any part of the buildings (which I believe are magnificent buildings), we are trying to eliminate. For instance, let me make it clear by saying that they have cells in one portion of the buildings. These will not be used; I do not think we will even have that portion open.

Q. So that the rather hasty criticism that we are sending our returned soldiers to insane asylums and prisons is absolutely without foundation and fact?—A. I think emphatically so.

[Mr. W. K. George.]

Q. What other institutions are there in this part of Ontario under the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. There is one at Hamilton, in fact, two. There is the Victoria Home which was furnished and turned over to the Commission by Stanley Mills and his brothers; and there is Mrs. Crerar's. Both of these started in the earlier days (Mrs. Crerar's particularly so), and there the accommodation is limited. I do not think that Mrs. Crerar has accommodation for more than eight or ten, and the Victoria Home has accommodation for perhaps thirty-five or forty.

Q. Do you think these very small homes are desirable?—A. I do not.

Q. Is it your intention to continue that policy?—A. We certainly will not continue the policy of taking on any more. Just how soon we could throw back a gift into the hands of the giver, I am not prepared to say.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. How many beds are there in those homes?—A. In the Mills home, about 35. At the beginning everybody thought that was the proper thing to do, the size of the problem was not appreciated at all, and it was supposed that a home here and there would be all that was necessary; and homes all over the country were offered, as you gentlemen know, and a few were accepted and work on them undertaken. But for a long time now these offers have been politely refused. I have had scores of them.

By the Chairman:

Q. What do you consider the ideal number to a home?—A. Not less than 200, I should say offhand. That, of course, is open to argument.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. How would that be, Mr. George, in the case of the smaller provinces, where there will not be such a large number of returned convalescents? Would you advocate sending the soldiers from these small homes up to these larger centres?—A. No, except for special cases requiring special treatment.

Q. Such as orthopaedic cases?—A. Orthopaedic and special nerve treatment, or something that required appliances or specialists to do the work. I would certainly keep the men as near their homes as possible.

Q. Of course, when you advocate using very large institutions I do not know but what you are perfectly correct. It might interfere with localities where there were not such a large number?—A. It certainly might, and I should say that other institutions of a smaller size would have to be established. Of course, you are apt to have your judgment coloured by the local surroundings, and I am thinking of the larger numbers we have here to deal with.

By the Chairman:

Q. Throughout your District, have you sufficient accommodation for all the convalescent soldiers at present?—A. I do not think, Sir Herbert, let me premise that by saying I am not absolutely up to the minute on what our total accommodation is in this immediate District. But I do not think that we have a bed for every man in this District who is still under hospital treatment.

Q. That is, you have a large number of out-patients?—A. There are out-patients.

Q. If you had all in the in-hospital accommodation that you desired, could you call in the out-patients? I mean, have you out-patients at the present moment because you have not sufficient in-hospital accommodation?—A. I think that is possibly so but I would like to point out, in view of many of the newspaper statements that have been made, in which the public were rather led to the idea that these men were standing on the corners of the streets waiting for a chance to get into a bed, that, as a matter of fact, these men are all (speaking generally) where they would rather be than be in hospital. They are at their homes, and they are getting hospital treatment.

[Mr. W. K. George.]

ment. I do not say that that is the ideal way of handling the situation, but I do say that the men have not been suffering any hardship, so far as they themselves are concerned, owing to the temporary lack of accommodation on the part of the hospitals.

Q. Except that in your judgment they have received less than the best?—A. So far as the treatment goes, yes. I do not think that it is the ideal way. I have always felt that the "out" treatment is not the proper one, because, outside of the fact that it is almost impossible to supervise these men and to see that they get their proper medical treatment, the home atmosphere which would be natural to every one of us is not the one best calculated to build the men up in fibre and send them back to civil life. We would all make a hero of him; that lad has suffered, and, naturally, if he were a member of our family, we would be all inclined to pet and coddle him, and that perhaps is not the quickest way of getting him back into the mental attitude which will enable him to again take his place in civil life.

Q. What steps are being taken to secure additional accommodation?—A. Mr. Armstrong, who is coming before you, will be able to give you much more concrete information with regard to the situation, and to tell you just what is being done for the purpose of increasing the actual bed accommodation for this District, than I can.

Q. Who is Mr. Armstrong?—A. He is the Director of the Military Hospitals Commission.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How many out-patients are there, can you tell us that?—A. No, I cannot.

Q. Would it go into several hundred?—A. I am not sure, although I should say it would.

Q. Are these men anxious themselves to go into the regular hospitals?—A. I do not think they are. Not more than a small percentage of them are anxious to get into the hospitals. I do not think that even a majority of them who are now in the hospitals, but would, if given their choice, go to their homes. I think that their treatment of out-patients is not actually the best, nor is it as efficient as it would be if they were continually under the eye of the medical authorities, as they would be if in the hospital.

Q. And therefore it is not in the public interest, of course?—A. Ultimately it is not.

By the Chairman:

Q. In the treatment of soldiers, do you separate overseas from camp men?—A. I do not think so, Sir Herbert, no.

Q. Do you allow the camp men into the same hospitals as the overseas men?—A. We have had to put them in the same hospitals.

Q. Have you camp men in the Knox Hospitals and in the Beattie Home?—A. I would not say at the moment in the Beattie Home. Perhaps I might ask Mr. Riddell again, if you will permit me.

Mr. RIDDLE: Yes, they are all treated alike.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is there not a large military hospital here?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it full?—A. I do not know.

Q. Why are the camp men not sent to the base hospital instead of to yours?—A. The only camp men sent to our hospitals are those assigned to us for treatment and they cannot be treated in the other hospitals.

Q. But if you are so short of accommodation that you have to allow of returned soldiers to be out-patients, why do you take camp men into your hospitals, when there is a large hospital under the Military authorities, which is only partly filled?—A. I think that, Sir Herbert, is a very fair question, and I am sorry that I am not able to answer it. I think it is a very logical question. I think they are simply sent to us and we have been expected to take them.

Q. Have you made any protest against taking camp men?—A. I do not think that we have, we take the returned soldiers and the camp men.

Q. I understand that the base hospital is a large institution, with how many beds?—A. 600, I think.

Q. Of which, one-half, or less, are occupied?—A. I do not know, I have never been in it.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Would the returned soldiers come into the category of camp men?—A. No.

Q. You are, I understand, only authorized to deal with returned soldiers?—A. No, with any member of the Expeditionary Force.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you find that among the returned soldiers there is any dissatisfaction with regard to having their accommodation partly taken up by men who have never been overseas?—A. I have never heard any expression of that kind.

Q. There is no dissatisfaction about the mixture of the two classes?—A. I have not heard any criticism or any trouble arising from that mixture of late. Perhaps it still exists. In the earlier days there was more or less; I heard rumours of more or less objection. The overseas men thought, and perhaps rightly thought, that they were in a little better class than the men who had not yet gone overseas.

Q. And that they were entitled to a little more special consideration?—A. I do not know that they took that attitude, but the man who had been overseas thought that perhaps he was more of a hero, and quite naturally so.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. He had done more for his country?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you have any clearing house, here in Toronto, to which a man goes when he returns from overseas, and are they, at that clearing house, apportioned to the several hospitals according to the difficulty therein?—A. I think I can say yes to that question, there is the receiving hospital.

Q. Where is it here?—A. The receiving hospital, if I may use that name, is at Spadina. The men on their arrival in Toronto are taken directly to that Hospital.

Q. That is, they come by train directly from Quebec to Toronto and go into the receiving hospital at Spadina?—A. Yes.

Q. Are they segregated there according to their diseases, the tubercular cases to one hospital, shell-shock cases, to another, and the orthopaedic cases to another? I there any separation of that kind made at that hospital?—A. I would prefer that you ask that question of the Medical Officer of that hospital, who can give you more accurate information than I can.

Q. That is Major Munn?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Have you, at any time, found an insufficiency of facilities at the clearing hospital to receive these men when they came?—A. I think I can say no to that question because these men, with the exception of a few cases who are not in fit physical condition, are all sent to their own homes so that they can meet their families and greet their wives and children. Then they report back to the hospitals and receive active treatment.

[Mr. W. K. George.]

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Are the returned men sent in all cases to their own district, no matter where?—A. Generally speaking yes, with this exception, that all the orthopaedic cases are centred in Toronto, and all the nerve cases, though I am not quite certain, for how wide a district, are centred at Cobourg.

Q. There is a distinction, or a division made, according to their ailments?—A. They might require a special kind of treatment which does not demand the establishment of institutions for the treatment of those specific cases all over the country. They are then centralized at those points where those institutions are established.

Witness discharged.

Hon. W. D. McPHERSON, Chairman of the Soldiers' Aid Commission for Ontario, called, sworn and examined:—

By the Chairman:

Q. You are chairman of the Soldiers' Aid Commission I understand?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Created under what authority?—A. Originally by Order in Council of the Province of Ontario, and subsequently by Act of the legislature.

Q. And what special work do you undertake to perform?—A. Under the Order in Council our duties were "to take care of and to find employment for members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who return to Canada during the period of the war, and to assist, advise and co-operate with Military Hospitals Commission and with all provincial or local committees or organizations authorized by this Act, and to do all things which may be incidental and auxiliary to the foregoing. Then at the session of the legislature last year, 1916, the Order in Council was approved by the legislature, and the duties were somewhat extended, and our authority was enlarged not only to deal with soldiers who might return to Canada during the time of the war but also at the conclusion of the war. We also have charge of vocational education in Ontario.

Q. Your duties then, relate not merely to the care of the disabled man who comes back from time to time, but also with the larger problem of demobilization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think that this committee will only care to hear evidence at the present time regarding the first of those two problems; the other will be taken up later. Then what personnel or staff or associates have you in this work?—A. The other members of the commission are Mr. John B. Laidlaw, Mr. Robert J. Christie, Mr. William Banks, Senior, the Hon. George Gordon, Senator; Mr. K. W. McKay, Mr. W. E. Nickle, K.C., Hon. George Lynch-Staunton, Senator; Mr. E. J. Henderson, Mr. W. L. Best.

Q. Do you meet as a committee here from time to time?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is your executive officer?—A. Joseph Warwick is the secretary.

Q. For the province?—A. For the province. We have now 97 local branches in different parts of the province.

Q. And each of those committees, according to local conditions, try to carry out the same aims and objects?—A. Yes, and they are practically in daily communication with us.

Q. How many men have come back to this district?—A. 6,115; when we say the district, that is the province of Ontario; our district is the whole province.

Q. How many of those men have you located in civil life?—A. 1,487.

Q. Have you any analysis showing what disposition has been made of those 1,487?—A. You mean the various classes of employment?

Q. Yes?—A. I will supply that record with pleasure. We have records of them in our office.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

Q. Now as to the difference between 6,115 and 1,487, how large a percentage represents men who have been discharged from hospitals and are fit for re-employment in civil life?—A. The data I have here shows that the number of men returned from overseas service is 5,400; the number of men discharged before overseas service is 632; the number of men discharged from Imperial Service is 83; total, 6,115. The number of men at present in or out-patients of the Convalescent Homes or hospitals in Ontario is 1,503; the approximate number of men discharged from Convalescent Homes and Hospitals as fit for employment is 4,612. Approximately 1,487 positions have been obtained locally, with an average weekly payment of $16.02, for discharged soldiers in Toronto. The number of men for whom positions have been found locally is 999.

Q. In Toronto alone, have you similar figures for the rest of the Commission throughout the Province?—A. We only get returns, some of them fortnightly and some monthly, so that I could not give that precisely. The 1,487 positions that have been found include only Toronto, but we have a regular form of return that comes in from the branches.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Then there are upwards of 3,000 men who have simply gone back into civil life who have not been assisted by your organization?—A. Of those who have been discharged from the military service many have gone back to their former employment; in other words, they have not made application to us to get them employment.

Q. Of your 1,487 positions, how many individuals does that represent?—A. 999.

Q. It would mean, then, that it took three positions to satisfy two men?—A. In some instances, when a position has been found for a man and it would turn out either that his strength was not up to the work, or that the work was of a class that he was not sufficiently familiar with to give satisfaction to his employer, he might perhaps in a short time come back to us, and we would get him another position.

Q. You are quite willing to do that?—A. Yes, we do that without the slightest demur.

Q. Have you found any men who come back so often that you began to lose confidence in their desire to get a job?—A. We have tried to be as charitable as we could, and we have not come to that conclusion in any case yet. We have exercised a great deal of patience with some of them.

Q. As I understand, 4,612 have come, and 1,487 or something like that have been found employment in Toronto alone?—A. Yes.

Q. What percentage would you say throughout the Province have been found employment, of returned soldiers?—A. That is, capable of taking employment?

Q. And whom you have found employment for?—A. You mean, I suppose, capable of taking employment.

Q. I don't know whether they are capable, but how many are capable of taking employment, and how many have you placed—What percentage?—A. We are not supposed to find employment for any man until he is discharged from military service; we would not interfere with the medical service after he has been returned home. After he has been discharged from military service, or it may be in anticipation of his discharge, he comes to us to look for employment, and we find about what his capabilities are, and what his desires are, and as far as possible try to meet him in that way; we correspond with possible employers, or look over the applications that we have on our files.

Q. But how many have come to you wanting employment?—A. It would be very difficult to answer that question.

Q. Then there is no way that we can find out what percentage of soldiers you have got employment for?—A. We can answer you that by giving you an estimate of those whom we deemed to be as yet unemployed, who desired employment.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

Q. How many is that?—A. Nine in Toronto, and the reports from different branches are that there are no men out of employment. I should say 98 or 99 per cent of the men who desire employment are in employment.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Those 1,487 all refer to Toronto?—A. Yes.

Q. You have throughout the province some ninety-seven branch organizations?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any figures to show what employment has been obtained for returned soldiers outside of Toronto?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you give them to us?—A. We can give them, but I have not got them here; we have the data at the office.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you be good enough to endeavour to file with the Committee a statement showing the total amount of employment secured throughout the entire province for returned soldiers, the numbers placed by your branches as well as in Toronto, and the numbers that have applied?—A. The secretary perhaps will explain what might be the practical difficulty of our getting that down precisely as you have requested it.

Mr. WARWICK (Secretary): In the past we have experienced some difficulty in getting reports from our branches, and we have recently appointed a branch inspector, an organizer, whose duty it is to go around visiting branches we have already formed.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Then, frankly, you cannot give us that information?

Mr. WARWICK (Secretary): No, I do not say that, but I can get it by communicating with the branches. Just at the last meeting of the Commission, held in February, there were messages sent out to all our branches asking them the condition of the men that went through their hands.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would it not look a little as though some of your branches were only on paper?—A. No, I do not think it means that at all, only they do not feel pressed in the matter of sending in reports where they do not have any men unemployed.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Can you give us any idea of how many men you have appointed for outside places? Do you know of any?

Mr. WARWICK: Oh, yes.

Q. Can you give us the number, 100 or 200?

Mr. WARWICK: I should say 95 per cent of the men outside of Toronto have been found employment through the Soldiers' Aid Association. As soon as information comes here I divert it to the branch.

Q. Have you any figures to justify that statement, or are you assuming that to be the case, from what you have done in Toronto?

Mr. WARWICK: I derive it from the information the branches send to me.

Q. I thought you said they did not send any information?

Mr. WARWICK: Oh, no; I did not say that.

The WITNESS: Oh, no; some of them delayed at first, but down to February 1st we had that information, and we would be glad to place it at your disposal.

By the Chairman:

Q. Will you file that report to February 1?—A. Yes.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Take employment given to returned soldiers east of Toronto and employment given to returned soldiers west of Toronto, can you classify it in that way and give us the information?—A. Yes, we can do that for you.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. How many branches of the Association are there?—A. I would say that the report was that about the middle of February there were some 86 branches of the Association, if I remember correctly. This morning the Secretary tells me they have increased to 97. We have an organizing secretary who is on the road all the time, organizing fresh branches wherever we find there are a number of soldiers going to a certain centre; we get a branch organized there upon the theory that the law of average will persist. If there are five men in the place and they are increasing it will probably be in the ratio that five bears to the total number who have already come back.

Q. You had 86 branches in February? Those were incorporated only a short time?—A. We have been incorporated a year and a half. I would say there has been a steady progress. We started out with 28 or 30, the number of men in these particular localities being larger than in other centres. Then, as men began to come back in larger numbers to some of the other municipalities we deemed it necessary to have a branch there to attend to their wants, and we kept pace with the work as well as we could.

Q. In many places you would not have a branch?—A. In some places we would not have a branch, but we have lists of all the employees and manufacturers, and we communicated direct with them by correspondence.

Q. Do many men come back where you have no record of them?—A. No, we have all of them recorded from official records, although there is no obligation on the men themselves to report to us. We make inquiries from Members of Parliament and officials in the various districts, to get the conditions of the various soldiers in their neighbourhood, and we ask them to notify us if they have any returned soldiers requiring attention.

Q. There have been quite a few complaints about the people in smaller places, of those in authority not receiving notice of the returned men, and they have come back in quite a number of instances without anyone being aware of their coming?—A. And not in a position to extend a welcome to them?

Q. Yes?—A. The method followed out in connection with that is that when a man leaves the discharge depot at Quebec they notify the Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission at Ottawa and likewise send a telegram to us at Toronto telling us how many men will reach Toronto by such and such a train. Of course they are under the charge of the Military Hospitals Commission. The Soldiers' Aid Commission does not have anything to do with them until they are directly in touch with us after their return here.

By the Chairman:

Q. But when they leave in search of employment and go to rural parts of the province, do you take any steps to prepare for their reception in advance of the men's arrival?—A. If we were requested to do so we would, but we have no means—

Q. You have no means to do that?—A. It would not be possible unless the man notified us where he was going.

Q. As men are discharged from day to day, you know they are going to be discharged?—A. Yes, and we are in constant touch with them, and offer them our services, but there is no obligation on their part to accept our services, and no obligation on their part to let us know what their movements will be.

Q. You take steps to communicate with a man about to be discharged from a convalescent hospital, indicating that your Commission would be willing to help him if he is going back to secure employment?—A. The method that is being followed in that regard is this: when the men come in I go to the train and meet them coming in, and I go to the place where they have an address of welcome, and I explain to them what the Soldiers' Aid Commission has been formed to do and extend a very cordial invitation to them and tell them where our offices are and tell them what we are prepared to do for them, assist them in their correspondence, look after their arrears of pay or to assist them in the settlement of any pension difficulties or anything of that kind and place the services of the staff at their disposal, and also explain to them what provision has been made for vocational training.

Q. Is it understood your office is always open and that the secretary in charge may be consulted by any discharged soldier as to any matter relating to him?—A. Yes, and the whole of our organization is placed at their disposal. Then that is followed up by a formal letter; not only do I make the statement to them verbally, but that is confirmed by a formal letter from our secretary expressly offering the services of our Commission.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What financial aid do you give to outside associations?—A. We have only received requests from very few of them, and the only financial aid we have arranged to give is given in this way: take, for instance, in Hamilton; we offered to finance them to the extent of dollar for dollar, whatever the municipality put up, we would put up out of the provincial fund, dollar for dollar, to form a fund out of which they might make advances to men against arrears of pay, or until their pensions came in, or if they got a position, until their first week's wages came in, to make them a temporary loan, it being, of course, understood that the money would be repaid by the man to whom it had been loaned.

Q. Do you do anything in the way of actual assistance without requiring anything to be put up as security for re-payment?—A. Yes, we have a regular relief fund, derived from voluntary contributions, and the Government have also authorized me in my discretion, to make grants where I think such are necessary.

Q. Is that wholly in your discretion?—A. Yes.

Q. Not in the discretion of the Commission?—A. No, my personal discretion.

Q. That is the only way in which public moneys may be spent?—A. That is the only way which we have found necessary up to the present time.

Q. Is there a fund set apart by the province for that purpose?—A. Only on requisition. The amounts are placed as I requisition them, and afterwards for the purposes of audit we send our vouchers to the Provincial Auditor and he passes upon our funds as they are requisitioned. If we send in vouchers for $1,000 he authorizes the issue of another cheque for $1,000 to cover those vouchers.

Q. I want to draw your attention to the evidence of Mr. E. R. Cameron, President of the Ottawa Branch of the Soldiers' Aid Commission, who told us during his hearing at Ottawa that the Provincial Government would come to the aid of the local Government only after they had exhausted aid from voluntary sources. Such an attitude would reduce the Commission to being a charitable institution.—A. No, I would not say that. Although, when we do meet with cases that are deserving, where the man would not have eventually the opportunity of repaying, we do make him a grant.

Q. Yes, but this is an association, it is not a man we are dealing with?—A. Are you referring to the Ottawa Branch of the Soldiers' Aid Commission?

Q. I am referring to the evidence of Mr. Cameron, President of the Ottawa Branch of the Soldiers' Aid Commission. His association wrote to the Provincial authorities and the effect of the reply was as I have given it.—A. I would prefer to produce the correspondence rather than to accept a version of it. I do not think you are quite correctly informed as to what the correspondence was. Therefore, I shall be very glad to produce the correspondence itself.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

Q. In the event of such rules you would not make a grant out of state funds?—

A. We have not made any such grants so far.

Q. Why not?—A. There has been no necessity for it.

Q. Has there been no demand made upon you at all for that sort of thing?—A. Ottawa, Hamilton and London have all had conferences, but Ottawa, if I recollect correctly, is the only Branch that has made a positive request for funds.

Q. And what was your reply?—A. What we told them, as in the Hamilton case, was, if the municipality made a grant of $250 we would make a grant of an equal amount, to establish a fund out of which assistance might be available against re-payment by the person to whom the money was loaned.

Q. Mr. Cameron was asked (reads):

“As a matter of fact, do not the Ontario Government practically say: ‘Until you have about exhausted the last dollar you can raise this way, we will not come to your assistance?’—”A. I do not think it has been put to us in that way at all—in fact I understand from Mr. Best, who is the Ottawa representative of the Commission in Toronto, that he has been verbally told that where the citizens do not supply the funds necessary for our work the Government will supply them.”

Is that not about right?—A. If a case arose.

Q. I am not asking for a case, this is the Ottawa Branch of the Soldiers’ Aid Commission.—A. Would not that still be a case?

Q. I beg your pardon. I thought you were going to cite a personal case.—A. If occasion arose we would give consideration to their requirements.

By the Chairman:

Q. Case by case?—A. Case by case. It is impossible to lay down a rule. You might keep a great deal of money out; there would be no means of passing vouchers, and the public funds would be liable to be misspent here and there. If they made out a case, I would make representations to the Government, and I am sure the Government would come to their assistance.

Q. Do you not feel that, if you were undertaking work, of such magnitude, to provide care and employment for all the soldiers who require it throughout the Province of Ontario, there ought to be something more definite in the matter of financial support than a sort of an understanding that it will partly come from private subscriptions, partly from municipalities and partly from the Government?—A. Take the case of Ottawa, I do not think any person is more interested in getting employment for the citizen soldiers of Ottawa than Ottawa itself, for they want to retain their population, and they have means for placing their men there; and, as a rule, until a man is discharged from military service he is in receipt of his military pay, and if he is disabled he has his pension. Then he goes into employment. So it is only to bridge over, so to speak, the time between his discharge from military service and the time he gets military employment that he gets assistance.

Q. Yes, but if this is to be a permanent organization and to have an established office and a man giving his whole time to the work, and the necessary staff or personnel that might be required to deal with the situation in a place the size of Ottawa, where would the funds come from?—A. From the municipality of Ottawa.

Q. Supposing they should decline to offer them?—A. Then we should have to consider that situation when it arose.

Q. Are you not approaching a problem of such magnitude that that question ought to be settled?—A. If that question is likely to arise, it would have arisen in the year and a half that we have been in operation, but it has not. It would seem to me that Ottawa should finance its own branch.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

Q. It would seem to me that some definitely well understood policy should be enunciated as to whose duty it was to finance this operation. You say you appeal practically to the benevolent public?—A. No. We have not made any appeals further than in the advertisement which we carry in the newspapers informing the public what we are doing. If we have cases that require relief we say that if any person cares to send in a contribution to make it payable to the order of the Soldiers' Aid Commission, and in every instance the particular application for relief is carefully reported on, and we will give any contributor, if he desires it, information as to the disposition made of his gift.

Q. If Mr. Cameron of Ottawa, for instance, should have a special case requiring relief, and he could not relieve it with Ottawa funds, would your branch at Ottawa draw a sum of money for branch purposes, and would you send down for the actual statement of that man's particular requirements and pay it on a warrant in that man's name?—A. If he met with a case of that kind, he would communicate with us, and say it was a deserving case, and if we regarded it as such, we would assist.

Q. In other words, you centralize it here to such an extent that no individual soldier could be helped unless he came here as a special case?—A. Did I understand that the soldier should come here, or the case come here?

Q. The case would come here. Is that method going to stand the test of a large influx of men?—A. If you can imagine any other variety of cases than we have already had to deal with, I would be glad to take it into consideration. But in the 6,115 cases that we have already handled I think probably all the problems that are likely to arise have already been encountered by us. I do not know offhand.

Q. These are sample problems?—A. I do not know of any that could well arise other than those we have already dealt with.

Q. Your work may so increase in magnitude that it may become a different problem altogether, requiring different methods?—A. Then we will change our methods to meet the changed conditions.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Have there been any complaints regarding the work of your association?—A. None whatever; everything as far as I know in connection with our work is giving entire satisfaction.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Judging from the figures you have given us it would appear that you are assisting people, almost exclusively, as far as giving employment goes, from Toronto?—A. This is the headquarters of this military district, and this being the headquarters it does not necessarily follow that the money spent here is spent for the benefit of the Toronto men, but it is for men from all over the division.

Q. That is what I am trying to get at. Will you tell us how much money you have been given by the Government to spend under the requisition that you made?—A. I will give you the precise amount of money expended to date, but I do not know that I can give you the details without looking at the books.

Q. I would like to know, of that amount of money, how much has been spent on returned soldiers in Military District No. 2, showing the amount spent on men from the city of Toronto and how much on men from other parts of the Military District No. 2, than Toronto, and also the money spent outside Military District No. 2?—A. I have no account made up classified in that way, but if you want it, it can be done.

Q. I wish you would have the account made up in that way. The Head Office of the Association being here, and the soldiers coming back in larger numbers than to other cities, probably there are larger demands made upon you at the Head Office than there will be from the outside portions of the province?—A. All the money that has been used from a purely relief standpoint, is infinitesimal in its total; a few hundred dollars, I suppose, will cover the whole amount.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

By the Chairman:

Q. What about money required for administrative purposes?—A. The municipalities raise that themselves. I do not see why it should be a matter of complaint. I think it is a matter in which the municipalities concerned, in their own interests and in the public interests should work together.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you not help the returned soldier with the Ottawa money when their own funds are exhausted?—A. I suppose that 98 per cent of the applications that come to us are not for charity at all. A man comes in and says: "My pay is in arrears," or "I have not got the Paymaster's cheque, can you let me have $10 or $15 in the meantime. I will make over the Paymaster's cheque when it comes."

Q. That is not the case I am speaking of, when you get the money back. I am alluding to cases where you do not get the money back?—A. There are so very few such cases. The amounts are small.

By the Chairman:

Q. The men who come to you for money are generally those who expect to pay it back again?—A. Yes, we do sometimes find cases of distress in the families of soldiers who are overseas; we have women visitors who are in touch with the Women's Auxiliaries of the various overseas battalions, and if we find a case there requiring assistance, we give it. I can give you the figures for that class of cases, but the total will be very small.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is there a Toronto branch of the Soldiers' Aid Association?—A. No, not organized as such; they have in existence here what they call the Returned Soldiers' Employment Bureau. But the Mayor and the Controllers were in conference with me two or three weeks ago, and said they were considering the formation of a Toronto branch.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. There is no branch of the Soldiers' Aid Association here, similar to that existing in Ottawa?—A. No.

Q. Are you assisting financially the organization that exists in Toronto?—A. No, they look after that themselves.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. So that everything that is being done here in Toronto for the returned soldiers has been provided for from charitable contributions?—A. No, by no means, that is not the case at all. The returned men have not asked in Toronto—

Q. Well, make it voluntary?—A. They have not asked for charity, they have come and asked for accommodation against their pay, or against their pension, or something of that kind, and we have made them advances which they have repaid. The Paymaster would send them a cheque, and then the men would repay the amount they have had.

Q. Where does your banking capital come from that you lend?—A. It comes from the moneys that we receive from the Government.

Q. That is, from the Ontario Government?—A. Yes.

Q. And that has been very little, you say?—A. Well, I mean it is turning over all the time. We may have out sometimes as much as $2,500, but it is turning over all the time, and the next month, when the man's pay cheque comes in, his particular account is closed.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. But those are moneys you receive for administrative purposes; is that the idea?—A. Yes, but the Government have authorized us to make use of the funds in such way as we may deem desirable in order to relieve any cases of hardship or distress in the meantime until their pay cheques come in.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Supposing you had lack of opportunity here, and had plenty of opportunity, say, at a place like Nobel or the Soo, and wanted to send a soldier from Toronto to take a position at Nobel or the Soo, where would you get your funds from?—A. We pay that from the provincial funds; we are authorized by the Government to do that.

Q. From the provincial funds?—A. Yes; in other words, we are authorized by the province to pay everything that is of a general provincial nature out of the provincial funds.

Q. Then you get that paid back?—A. No. It is possible a man might pay it back if he choose but if he was being transported from one point to another to get employment we would not ask him for repayment.

Q. You would not ask him to pay back in that case?—A. No.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Then, so far as you know, everybody in the province of Ontario who has wanted assistance has been assisted by your organization?—A. I would say yes to that, in general terms.

Q. And while you have not particularly encouraged the doling out of charity, is it your object to do anything of that kind with returned soldiers?—A. No, Different organizations, some fraternal societies, have held concerts and that kind of thing, and accumulated a few hundred dollars, and have asked me how I thought they could make the best use of it and what could be done with those funds. I have said, "If you are willing to turn them over to us we will look after them, and when our visitors report a deserving case where they think a grant might be made out of this fund we will make it and advise you, and report to you at any time as to the disposition of the money you have donated to us."

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you any such thing as a composite committee in Toronto that meets together and discusses these funds with a view to avoiding overlapping in dealing with returned soldiers?—A. I cannot say that we have anything in the nature of a committee, but the officers of our Association are continually doing that.

Q. Would it not be well to organize what corresponds to the charity organization society, to have an exchange of that, a composite committee?—A. We work in conjunction with the officers of the Patriotic Fund; we are practically in daily communication with them backwards and forwards. We also work in connection with the paymaster of the district, who may perhaps make some advances of one kind and another, and our Association works constantly in touch with the women's auxiliaries of the overseas battalions. Almost every overseas battalion has an auxiliary association to look after the welfare of the men from that battalion, and we are in constant touch with them.

Q. Is there anything like a central record here that would prevent a man from drawing from three or four different sources at the same time?—A. Not, that I am aware of.

Q. Would you think that necessary?—A. It would be a difficult service to maintain, and I do not think there is much cause to suspect anything of the kind.

[Honourable W. D. McPherson.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. In the statement you were good enough to say you would prepare, would you be kind enough to include all money received by your organization from the Government?
—A. Certainly.

By Brigadier General Mason:

Q. When do you consider assistance to returned soldiers to end?—how long after the war?—A. We have never come to any conclusion upon that point. We are perfectly willing to help a man at any time he applies if he is a returned soldier, as long as the Commission is in existence and if he came in and showed that he is a returned soldier we would give him any assistance.

Q. Even for more than a year?—A. Yes, we have not dealt with him on any time limit basis at all.

Q. Would it be necessary to put such machinery in operation?—A. I do not think there is the slightest necessity. Any necessity that arises will be taken care of. The system under which the Government does business in administering their finances will enable them to do it by accountable warrant.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. I find the Province has already agreed to do this, after conference between the Dominion and Provincial Governments, at which the Province of Ontario was represented, and to which the Province of Ontario was a party, namely, that each Province should assume the responsibility of finding employment for discharged soldiers upon their return to Canada who are physically or otherwise unfit to resume their employment, and all expenditures necessary in undertaking this duty are to be borne by the Province?—A. Yes.

Q. So you have already agreed to do that?—A. Yes, and we are doing it.

Q. In addition to that, all costs in connection with the organization for administration, or for purely local committees, are to be borne by the Province?—A. Yes.

Q. So as a matter of fact you have agreed to do that?—A. Yes.

Q. And you say that you have done it to the extent that is necessary so far?—A. There has been absolutely no complaint, and everything is working very satisfactorily.

Q. And you are prepared to do whatever is necessary from a financial standpoint?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: That will do then, Mr. McPherson.

The WITNESS: Is there any further information you will require about vocational training or anything else?

The CHAIRMAN: If anything comes up during the next three days that we would like to hear further from you upon, we will make it convenient to hear you.

The WITNESS: I shall be glad to attend again if it is necessary.

Witness discharged.

Mr. LLOYD HARRIS called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand, Mr. Harris, that you are a member of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been here this morning while we have been hearing Mr. George's evidence. Have you anything that you can add that will be helpful to the committee?—A. I think, sir that my fellow commissioner, Mr. George, has covered the ground so far as the commissioners themselves are concerned. I do not know whether there is anything I can add to it now, unless some member of the committee would like to ask questions.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many men are you capable of taking care of in Guelph?—A. We think we will have between five and six hundred.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are you satisfied, Mr. Harris, that the present accommodation is ample?—A. I think that the accommodation we are arranging for will be ample.

Q. But it is rather scanty at the present time?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that any real hardship has been inflicted upon any of the returned soldiers due to scanty accommodation?—A. There may have been very recently, but the situation will be overtaken in a very short time.

Q. By which new hospitals?—A. Whitby and Guelph, and the Salvation Army, that is the Booth Memorial in Toronto.

Q. You think that these three new hospitals will relieve the situation so that you will have plenty of accommodation?—A. I think that will take care of the accommodation in the Toronto district for a few months to come. We are planning for 3,000 beds in No. 2 Military District including Guelph. We have other properties that we have under consideration.

Q. What percentage of vacant beds do you plan to keep ahead of the demand?—A. That is a very difficult question to answer, for the reason that the hospitals are evacuated at such uncertain times. The men are coming and going all the time; but after looking into the whole question rather carefully on my return from England last summer, and then later on in conference with Major Kirkby, who was sent out from England by Colonel Reid, I made an estimate that our requirements in Canada would be about 10,000 beds for the year 1917, and that is the programme that the Commission is practically adopting in preparing for the number of beds that we are trying to secure.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. When will you have these ready?—A. It will be quite the middle of the summer, but in time to take care of the more pressing needs.

By the Chairman:

Q. Supposing the policy should be altered so as to send out a greater number of active cases. Would that accommodation be sufficient?—A. Of course, the figures we have are based on estimates.

Q. Including a certain number of active cases?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Are you in any shape to take care of a great influx of active cases?—A. To-day?

Q. Yes?—A. No. The demand for accommodation only came upon us in November last. We had no demand before that, and our hospitals were half empty. We did not open Spadina Hospital until the 4th of October last, because there was no necessity for it. We had Spadina Hospital ready in the spring of 1916.

Q. Would you say, considering the increased demand that there has been since that time that you are fairly equipped with beds now?—A. I think we have done all we possibly could to get the necessary accommodation. It is a very difficult matter to get the class of buildings that we require.

Q. Does it strike you that there should be some extra special effort made to get the largest accommodation possible?—A. Yes, I think so, that is being urged very strongly.

Q. Are there funds at your disposal for that purpose?—A. Absolutely.

[Mr. Lloyd Harris.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. It is being urged, you say, but is it being done?—A. It is being done as fast as we can get accommodation.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you been under any financial handicap?—A. No.

Q. Then the fact that you have not more accommodation is not because you have not had the financial support you require?—A. No.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Because you could not get accommodation?—A. We could not get the accommodation. I think London was not mentioned this morning.

By the Chairman:

Q. You might tell us about district No. 1?—A. Of course, Guelph is in No. 1 district. You understand that Guelph is situated in No. 1 district, but it will be operated from Toronto.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. That is the institution of which Mr. George spoke?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. What else is there in No. 1 district besides Guelph?—A. We were able to make arrangements with the governors of the Victoria Hospital in London whereby they turned over to us the Isolation Hospital, which is adjoining the General Hospital in London, and the arrangement to be made was that they would put up a temporary building to take care of the isolation cases, for which they agreed to pay half the cost, and we agreed to pay half the cost and we had to put up the kitchen and dining room accommodation in connection with this isolation building, so that that gives us a very complete hospital in the city of London.

By the Chairman:

Q. How many beds?—A. 130 beds.

Q. For convalescents?—A. Yes, and it is in the same grounds as the General Hospital, and we have all the accommodation of the General Hospital.

Q. Is it bright and attractive?—A. Oh, very. It is an hospital building—built for hospital purposes.

Q. Have you vocational training?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything more in the way of hospital accommodation between London and Sarnia?—A. No, this is the only building we have in No. 1 district. We did have another convalescent home in London, the home of Colonel Smith, and we decided to close that up at the time that we had no patients for it and we only had about 20 or 30 in the convalescent hospital, and Col. Smith was anxious to get his property back, and the policy has been for months back not to encourage the opening of small convalescent homes.

Q. Do you, as a rule, put a man through convalescence in the military district in which he originated?—A. That has been our endeavour, yes.

Q. Would there be, for example, at Toronto any considerable number of men who originated in No. 1 Military division?—A. There has not been up to the present time. At the present time our London home is full and we would have to be putting them wherever we have the accommodation.

Q. Your London accommodation at present is full?—A. Yes, that is being occupied now.

Q. Is that the new one you refer to?—A. Yes. A few months ago we only had 20 or 30 cases. We had accommodation for 130.

[Mr. Lloyd Harris.]

Q. You send them to Guelph?—A. Of course, we will decide what cases have to go to these various institutions. We will have to consider the cases according to the malady and the necessities of the case where it is in the way of special treatment or special vocation training and re-education they will have to go into one institution where such treatment is carried on. The only thing that we have decided is that the Booth Memorial will be the orthopaedic institution.

Q. And Cobourg for insane?—A. Yes.

Witness discharged.

The Commission adjourned until 2.30.

The Committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Major WILSON called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you occupy with respect to the military services of this District?—A. I am the Officer Commanding "D" Unit.

Q. That is, Officer Commanding Military Hospitals Commission Command, "D" Unit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your address in Toronto?—A. 208 Bloor street West.

Q. Do I understand you are the depository of the records and files regarding returned soldiers?—A. Yes, sir, they all come to my office.

Q. So that the history of any returned soldier of this District will be with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will that be his overseas history, his medical history?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. His pay book as well?—A. His last pay certificate comes in to me and is sent to the Paymaster of the unit.

Q. There are two matters on which the committee wishes a little information and wishes cleared up. First, the matter of the pay. We had complaints made in Montreal that some of the discharged soldiers who arrived in this country had had their pay books taken away from them, and on arrival here had nothing to show when the final settlement came, and consequently did not know whether to accept as correct the amount finally paid them on discharge. Now, is it customary for the men, when they come back, to be without their final pay book?—A. On that question I cannot give you very much information. They should have their pay book. I do not know what they do at Quebec, but we get a last pay certificate when the man's documents come in showing the exact amount of pay that is due him. When he arrives at Quebec the officers there give him a certain amount on account, and the balance is placed to his credit here.

Q. Where is that recorded?—A. That is recorded on his last pay certificate.

Q. Not in his pay book?—A. It may be in his pay book, but I do not see that book, that is the man's personal property.

Q. A witness from Kingston testified before the committee at Montreal, that the bulk of the men who come back to No. 3 District do not have their pay books?—A. I do not think that is correct.

Q. You do not think that is correct?—A. No, I do not think that is correct. The pay book is the man's own personal property although he may have handed it out to have it checked up in Quebec with the pay certificate; but I do not think that there has been any order taking the pay book away from him.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What is your reason for expressing that opinion?—A. My own knowledge of the transactions of the men I have passed through myself.

[Major Wilson.]

Q. To how many men would that apply, because the estimate has been given to us that 95 per cent of the returning men would be without their pay books?—A. I have had no complaints from any of the men who have come to this District.

Q. How many men would you interview in that connection?—A. If there were any complaint of that kind I would almost certainly hear it; the complaint would come to me.

By the Chairman:

Q. What you say is that several thousand men have passed through your hands?—A. I took over the command on the first day of November, and since that time about 4,000 men, or approximately that number, have passed through my hands.

Q. Since then others have come and others have been dismissed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many men per month return to this district?—A. In February we took in about 500 men.

Q. That has reference to "D" Unit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would not include the figures for Kingston and London?—A. No, sir.

Q. Those 500 returned men a month would represent what you are normally receiving?—A. Yes, in round figures.

Q. You say there has been no complaint from any of the returned soldiers who have passed through your hands in regard to the pay book?—A. No, sir, no complaint has reached me.

Q. Who is in charge of the discipline?—A. I am.

Q. Of the convalescent and undischarged men?—A. I am.

Q. In all the military hospitals here?—A. In all the hospitals.

Q. Do you have any trouble with the men here, insubordination, drunkenness, or anything of that kind?—A. I am sorry to say I do at times.

Q. What form of punishment do you have when a man returns at night, let us say intoxicated?—A. I administer justice according to the King's Regulations: admonish him the first time, the second time I fine him $2, and so on.

Q. Have you cells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you lock a man up in those cells?—A. If he is unmanageable we do.

Q. As a penalty or as a prevention?—A. Largely as a prevention.

Q. How are the cells furnished?—A. It is furnished with a place for him to lie down and supplied with electric light and the men are warm and comfortable.

Q. Is the cell furnished with a mattress or cot?—A. We do not keep the men in overnight if we can possibly avoid it. If they do remain overnight we supply them with a mattress.

Q. You would supply the man with a mattress every night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about violently insane patients, what do you do with them?—A. I have not seen many of them; they have been principally sent to Cobourg. When they come through from Quebec they have been left off at Cobourg.

Q. When you are inflicting a punishment like incarceration, is it done on the knowledge and with the sanction of the medical officer of the hospital?—A. Always.

Q. You would not inflict any penalty without first consulting the medical officer?—A. No, not under any circumstances.

Q. Have you a medical officer in all these hospitals?—A. We have.

Q. And is that medical officer there day and night?—A. Yes, sir. And when an orderly room is held, the medical officer stands at my right hand, and the man's papers and documents are all there to be viewed.

Q. So there would not be any chance of a convalescent man being given punishment that would lessen his chances of recovery?—A. No, sir, not under any circumstances.

Q. To what extent do these convalescents return to the hospital under the influence of liquor? That, I suppose, is very detrimental to them in their process.

[Major Wilson.]

of recovery?—A. Yes, sir, quite so. We had a great deal of trouble with the men on that account until about a month and a half ago. At that time there was no conducting officer sent along. When they left Quebec they had liquor on the train, and it was supplied to them, I think, along the route. When they arrived in Montreal they were often in a very drunken condition. To get over that difficulty I suggested to Ottawa that they should send a conducting officer along with the men from Quebec to Montreal.

Q. With each party?—A. With each party. Then when arriving in Montreal I send a conducting officer from here and they would be handed over to my conducting officer at Montreal.

Q. Has the conducting officer any power to prevent these men from obtaining liquor?—A. Yes, sir. In Montreal, when they arrive at the Windsor station—they have all been coming C.P.R.—we wire ahead and have a guard provided at Montreal at the station doors, and no man is allowed out of the station. There is a Khaki Club there which provides amusement for them and gives them light refreshments, and so on, until train time comes. Some civilians, thinking they are doing the soldiers a kindness, come in and try to smuggle liquor in to them. Before the men step on the car they are searched by a sergeant of the picket; and before they go out the conducting officer goes over the car and searches every man's kit so as to avoid any chance of his having any liquor. The result has been that in the last month and a half we have had practically no drunken cases arriving in Toronto.

Q. After they get to Toronto, what hours are the men allowed to be absent for recreation out of doors?—A. Their work ceases about four to four-thirty, p.m., each day. On Saturday afternoons there is no work or drill. And they are free from that time until ten o'clock at night. If a man wishes to stay out after that, if he is going to a concert or something of that kind, he is given a late pass which entitles him to remain out until twelve o'clock. If a man misbehaves himself during the week, his passes are cancelled, as one of the means of punishment.

Q. One of the means of punishment is to compel a man to stay in the hospital?—A. Confining him to barracks.

Q. Changing his costume?—A. Yes, putting him in blue.

Q. Do you ever keep him in bed?—A. No, sir, not as a rule.

Q. As a punishment?—A. I have thought of that, but I thought that was too easy. We make him work when he is in blue.

Q. Some of these men bring back liquor with them either in their pockets or their anatomy?—A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. Have you complained to the authorities here with a view of getting that stopped?—A. I went personally to Col. Grasett and asked him to assist.

Q. Is he the Chief of Police?—A. Yes, sir, the Chief of Police in Toronto, asked him if he could lend some assistance in trying to stop it. I suggested different ways that I thought would be efficient, but he said that he was doing all he could at the present time with the plain clothes men. We find that the plain clothes men were not at all satisfactory in connection with our soldiers.

Q. You do not feel then that he has done all he could to protect your men from the influence of liquor in Toronto?—A. No, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Does that state of affairs still exist?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. And you, as an officer, regard it as very detrimental to the health and progress of your men to have it possible for convalescent men to secure liquor?—A. They leave the hospital and in fifteen minutes they come back stupefied drunk.

Q. Within fifteen minutes of their absence from the hospital?—A. Yes.

[Major Wilson.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Does that happen now?—A. Yes, it happens every day or two.

Q. Where do they get the liquor?—A. Some man around the corner gives them bad liquor.

By the Chairman:

Q. You do not think the city authorities are showing the activity that they should in protecting the soldiers?—A. I think they could do a great deal more.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Does that lead to many breaches of discipline?—A. Yes, sir, it is our greatest difficulty. We have a hard time handling the man that gets drunk. In many cases, amputation cases, men go out and have to be carried home, and it is most difficult to handle an amputation case of that nature.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Have you made any recent complaints about these occurrences?—A. Yes, sir, I have complained time and again without very much effect.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. I cannot understand this Order in Council of the 15th of March. I want some idea in regard to the line of demarkation between the Military Hospitals Commission and the Army Medical Service. As I understand it, the Military Hospitals Commission in the first place is a civilian body?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, the question of administration and discipline, and documents, is a military matter, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, of course, that is under the care of the Military Hospitals Commission Command?—A. Yes.

Q. You really cannot be directly responsible logically to a civil body, can you?—A. I am responsible for discipline to General Logie. I have not received any orders from the Commission.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, you are responsible to General Logie for what?—A. For discipline.

Q. Isn't your superior officer, Colonel Sharples?—A. Yes. All I am responsible to him for is interior economy and administration.

Q. Is that what you consider to be the purport of this Order in Council, or has it always been so?—A. That has always been so.

Q. My impression was that you were responsible directly to Colonel Sharples?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not in any respect?—A. In some respects, yes.

Q. Not as regards discipline?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would it not be a better co-ordination of things if you were responsible all through to General Logie?—A. Well, it might make it more simple.

Mr. Ross: Less unwieldy.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. From whom did you receive your appointment?—A. I was brought from France for this appointment. I was in France at the time.

Q. From whom did you receive it?—A. From the Minister of Militia, I think. I do not know really—

Q. Who appointed you to your position under the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. I arrived here on the order of the Minister of Militia. I went and reported to General Logie, and I suppose it was he who put me in the position I am now in.

Q. Did you get merely a verbal appointment or a written appointment?—A. I got a verbal appointment.

[Major Wilson.]

Q. You have nothing in writing?—A. No, sir, nothing in writing.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: That is curious.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Major Wilson, what staff have you in connection with your position as Commandant of the Military Hospitals Commission here?—A. Do you mean combatant staff?

Q. What staff for carrying on your work, what buildings do you occupy, and so on?—A. We have different hospitals, there is the Spadina, College—

Q. Where are your headquarters?—A. At No. 1 Queen's Park.

Q. What staff have you there?—A. I have the paymaster, senior medical officer; all the documents are there and the staff working on those documents.

Q. You did practically this same work before the Military Hospitals Commission Command was established, in other offices, did you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it done in other offices?—A. That was before I arrived here.

Q. Supposing as a matter of fact, you were made responsible to General Logie and this matter was put under the Army Medical Corps, could not a lot of this expense be done away with for that staff?—A. I do not think that there is any undue expense there.

Q. Is there any duplication?—A. No, not that I know of.

Q. Is it not being done with a heavier staff than it was before?—A. The work has increased considerably.

Q. Could not the old staff have been expanded with greater economy than has been done in this way?—A. I do not think there is any waste in this connection.

Q. What is the number of the unit here?—A. "D" Unit.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Are you an Army Medical Corps, or a Hospitals Commission man?—A. I am not an Army Medical Corps man, I know that.

Q. You are not a medical man?—A. No, I am a soldier.

Q. Then the medical man under the Military Hospitals Commission does not come under your jurisdiction at all?—A. They are under me in rank only.

Q. Are they below you?—A. Yes.

Q. Are they wholly subject to your orders?—A. As far as discipline goes they are.

Q. But otherwise they are not?—A. No.

Q. Is the Army Medical Corps superior to you in a medical way, that is as to the treatment of cases, etc.?—A. I should think they should be, they know more than I do about that.

Q. Consequently you have nothing whatever to do with them?—A. Not with the medical part.

Q. You have wholly to do with discipline?—A. Exactly.

Q. And, as I understood you to say, you have the sentencing of men for various offences?—A. Yes.

Q. That is wholly within your power?—A. Within my power.

Q. What offences are there besides drunkenness?—A. There is insolence to an officer, there is disobeying the command of an officer, or of a sergeant, etc., etc., more or less offences that apply to the Army.

Q. Insolence, disobedience, drunkenness, what else?—A. Absence without leave, those are the principal items.

Q. When you hold court does a medical man sit with you?—A. Always.

Q. For what purpose is he there?—A. He informs me as to the fitness of the man for the punishment which is to be served out to him.

Q. So that it is a double-barrelled arrangement so far as the punishment is concerned?—A. No, I would not say that, exactly, we work together, he advises—

Q. Quite so—it is double-barrelled; I am right about that after all.—A. No.

[Major Wilson.]

Q. Well, neither one does it without the other.—A. The "double-barrelled," does not sound exactly right.

Q. Neither one can act without the other, Major.—A. As to whether the man is ill or unfit for the punishment; I cannot sentence him without a say-so of the medical officer, but if he is fit, I can give him punishment.

Q. If he is fit; you take it on the certificate of the doctor, whether he is fit or otherwise?—A. Exactly.

Q. Would it strike you now as an ordinary business proposition, leaving the military end of it out of it altogether if you like, that the one man could do that job?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. In any battalion, local or overseas, before the Commanding Officer sentences a man to detention he has to have the advice of the Medical Officer that the man is fit, and it is a repetition of that in this case.

Q. Well now, suppose a medical officer was Commander in the hospital could he not do that just as well as a non-medical commander?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why?—A. Medical men are alright on medicine, but they are not soldiers.

Q. Can you not make soldiers of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. You can make a soldier out of a lawyer?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Would he, as a rule, make a good soldier when you come down to the last analysis?—A. He might.

Q. Now you will admit that medical men as a rule have as much brain as anybody else and as much force of character and education?—A. They have not had the training.

Q. Would not a doctor train just as well for a soldier as I, a lawyer?—A. Yes.

Q. Quite so, and how many professional men are soldiers in Canada?—A. I think there are quite a number.

Q. Now, there are, but I am talking about here before, when we had no profession of soldiers, Major?—A. I am talking about the present.

Q. Following up your own argument, the Army Medical Corps were in existence, as soldiers, long before the Hospitals Commission was ever born?—A. Yes.

Q. The Army Medical Corps was in existence before the Military Hospitals Commission was appointed, isn't that right?—A. I never thought the Army Medical Corps were real soldiers.

Q. They were just playing at it, and the rest of you were doing what?—A. We were the real soldiers, the men who were doing the fighting.

Q. You were all real soldiers, in training for about 10 days each year?—A. That was before the war.

Q. We are talking about before the war, and you all had the same training, the Medical Corps and the others?—A. I do not know much about the Medical Corps before the war.

Q. Leaving the Medical Corps out of it, that is what you had at that time, ten days training?—A. Yes.

Q. And so did they. Now then, if they had just as much training, and no more, and you had just as much training, and no more than they did, would they not make as good soldiers as anybody else?—A. You could make as good soldiers out of them by giving them the same training as I have received in the last three years.

Q. Then your contention is that no doctor is enough of a soldier to take command of a hospital?—A. I will not say that.

Q. You will not go as far as that down the road with me?—A. No.

Q. How far will you go?—A. Well, they know enough to run the part of the hospital that has to do with the illness and the trouble from which the men suffer, that is as far as the disability of the men physically is concerned, but beyond that I do not think they are capable of running a hospital.

[Major Wilson.]

Q. Give your reasons?—A. Because most of the men who are soldiers to-day are business men, and it requires more or less business knowledge to handle the work at the present time, with a thorough knowledge of soldiering combined.

Q. Following that line of argument then you say that the doctors are not business men?—A. I would not class them as business men.

Q. Why would they not be business men any more than the members of any other profession? You have known doctors successful in business, have you not?—A. Not as a rule.

Q. I am going on with that; you say that doctors are not business men?—A. I would not class them as business men.

Q. You have known them to be successful doctors in business?—A. Not as a rule.

Q. Anyway, your opinion is that no doctor should have command of a hospital?—A. For discipline, yes, sir.

Q. He is all right to treat the measles, but he must not look after the men in the way of discipline?—A. Exactly.

Q. And that is the reason you think the Army Medical Corps could not have been expanded and have done the same work as the Military Hospitals Commission and Military Hospitals Command?—A. I don't think they would have done it as well, that is my opinion.

Q. As I understand you, your contention is that the training of an army medical man is entirely towards the medical preparation?—A. Exactly.

Q. And that his training is not such as to fit him for disciplinary purposes when compared with a man who has been through the discipline of military training?—A. That is exactly it.

Q. But you are always leaving out the fact that the doctor may have been through that himself?—A. I haven't seen any of them yet.

By the Chairman:

Q. The Army Medical Corps' training is not training in the handling of men?—A. Exactly.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, to what extent a medical officer, before he joins the Army Medical Corps, receives military instruction?—A. I can't say.

Q. You don't know?—A. I don't know the whole detail, no.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, you have been giving evidence with regard to the capabilities and capacities of medical officers as military officers without knowing anything about what they got in the way of instruction?—A. I would not say exactly that. I get a certain amount of knowledge, but I can't go into details to tell you exactly how much they get, but I know they are not trained like an ordinary every-day soldier.

Q. Do you think you would be in a position to give an opinion without that information?—A. From my general knowledge I think I would.

Q. Without knowing how much instruction these medical officers get in military matters you are able to give an opinion as to how they were unable to carry out their duties?—A. Yes, and I know a soldier when I see him, and I know the medical men are not soldiers in that sense of the word that I know a soldier.

Q. What do you mean by that now?—A. I can tell a soldier as soon as I see him.

Q. Do you? By his clothes, or what?—A. No, his command, his appearance, as a rule. I know whether a man has received training or not. You know, yourself, when you come across those men that have been trained in England you easily tell them as soldiers.

Q. I have seen a good many soldiers, both English and on this side; however, I do not think much is to be gained from that; I want to go back for a moment to find out how you received your appointment; you told me that you have never received any written appointment, that you received word over in France; now, from whom did that word come?—A. That came from Ottawa.

Q. Was it written word to you?—A. I did not see it; I got an order when I was in France to return to England for duty.

Q. Who did that order come from?—A. It came from Folkestone; I didn't see the order: it came from the headquarters of the Canadian army in Folkestone.

Q. Who gave the order to you?—A. The officer commanding the battalion, Colonel Allen.

Q. And he told you to report over here?—A. He told me to report back to Folkestone, and I reported to Folkestone, and was given transportation back to Canada, saying that I was going back on duty. I arrived back here, and I saw Colonel Sharples at Quebec, and he told me that I was appointed officer commanding D Unit, and described what it meant. I reported to General Logie at Camp Borden on my return here, and took over my duties on November 1st.

Q. Did General Logie appoint you to your present position?—A. I can not tell you regarding that.

Q. Is that the military method of proceeding?—A. I do not know.

Q. Don't you think the medical men could have given as complete and military a set of orders as that, even without any instruction?—A. I reported to Colonel Newburn, the A.A.G., and he told me to take command on November 1st. I did not require any written order for that. It came direct from him.

By the Chairman:

Q. Just to clear this matter a little bit, Major Wilson, in the training of a combatant officer, the handling of men is one of the principal things you are taught?—A. Absolutely, sir, one of the most important.

Q. One of the principal things that your experience gives you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as you get up in rank and handle larger bodies of men you are oftentimes selected because of that ability?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hence a combatant officer in a high rank is presumably capable of handling men?—A. Yes.

Q. Is any corresponding course of training given to the men of the Army Medical Corps?—A. Not that I know of. I don't think there is.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. How about the Ambulance Corps?—A. I don't know.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. As to whether or not it would be better to have the discipline in the hands of the medical rather than in the hands of yourself, take the case of a man who is in the field, say, and is sent to the field hospital, and while in the field hospital has been guilty of some breach of discipline: have the medical officers in charge there any power over him as to punishment, or does he refer to the colonel of the regiment?—A. He refers to the officer in command of the regiment.

Q. That is the practice followed there?—A. Yes.

Q. And in any case, in the Army or the Canadian Expeditionary Force, has the medical officer any power of discipline over the soldier other than recommending him to the officer in charge?—A. No, none whatever.

Q. So that if this disciplinary power were given to a man in charge of a hospital while the man is in pay as a soldier in Canada it would be the first instance where a medical man as such would have disciplinary power over the soldiers?—A. Yes, to my knowledge.

[Major Wilson.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. I could understand your remarks as to an officer in charge of men on active service, but this inquiry is in regard to broken men, wounded men, men who have lost arms and legs and so on; now tell me frankly, do you consider that more of a military problem than a medical problem? Are we considering a military problem in this matter, or more of a medical problem?—A. Well, it is so combined that it is awfully difficult to say whether it is all military or it is all medical.

Q. Which has the preponderance of importance? We are not trying to train these men to fight; we are trying to make them well?—A. You can't have one without the other.

Q. Which is the more important?—A. I should think it is more medical than it is military.

Q. Then I should think that a medical man would be the proper man to look after that?—A. No, I think you are entirely wrong. If you will come and see the way that it is administered it would perhaps convince you that your idea of it being all medical is wrong.

Q. I do not say it is all medical, but you admit now that the preponderance is medical?—A. Yes, naturally you can't get away from that.

Q. Then I would think that medical men who have been trained in the army of Canada would be the men who would be best to handle it?—A. I don't agree with you in that.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. The proposition I put to you was that no medical officer as such had disciplinary powers of punishment; is that applicable to the British army as well?—A. I think it is; I am not familiar with the regulations of the British Army.

Q. I am speaking either on active service or in the hospitals over there; so far as you know no medical man has the power to impose a sentence?—A. No, I have never seen a medical man that had.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Do you know anything about the position of the Ambulance Corps?—A. No, I am not familiar with the Ambulance Corps.

Q. You know that the only officers they have are medical men, don't you?—A. I suppose it covers all medical men. I really don't know the make-up of the ambulance corps.

Q. Because you were stating that no medical officer has disciplinary powers in the Expeditionary Force or in the British Army, but you were not referring in that statement to the Ambulance Corps?—A. Well, in the Ambulance Corps in France there was always an ambulance attached to the battalion, and the medical officer was attached there with his assistant, and he was subject to the commanding officer, and so on.

Q. You are simply referring to a battalion arrangement?—A. Quite.

Q. But as a matter of fact you know that the Ambulance Corps are entirely distinct from any battalion arrangement, do you not?—A. There are Ambulance Corps, I believe, that way.

Q. And you do not know—or do you?—that the ambulance corps are commanded entirely in all respects by the officers that are attached to them or belong to them, and that they are all medical men with the exception of the Quarter-master?—A. Perhaps medical men can handle a medical man, but they are not dealing with soldiers.

Q. You mean the Ambulance Corps are not soldiers; you go as far as that?—A. No. I would not go as far as that in the sense of doing their duty as a soldier, but they do not deal with the private in the ranks. The men we are handling to-day are the privates, the "Tommy" that comes through our hands.

Q. But these Corps have privates and non-commissioned officers, the same as any other company or corps?—A. But they are all medical men, I believe.

[Major Wilson.]

Q. They are what?—A. I cannot argue as to that, because I do not really know. It is only from hearsay.

By the Chairman:

Q. Technically speaking, all the men who are in the hospitals, returned soldiers here, form a battalion of which you are the commanding officer?—A. Yes, sir, that is the situation.

Q. And the relationship of a medical officer to your battalion is the same as the relationship of the medical officer to a field battalion?—A. That is the situation.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. When these men come back, who has the placing of them? Do you or does the medical man?—A. How do you mean?

Q. Assigning them to certain wards and so on?—A. That is done by the hospital surgeon.

By the Chairman:

Q. Two hundred and fifty returned soldiers arrive here in Toronto. Who distributes them and determines which shall go to one hospital and which to another?—A. The officer in command of the reception hospital.

Q. Is he a medical man?—A. Yes.

Q. So that the distribution throughout the hospitals of this district is determined by a medical man?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. I cannot understand why the Army Medical Corps could not do this. What is the personnel of the hospital staff in the Army Medical Corps?—A. I cannot tell you that. I do not really know what the personnel of the corps is.

Witness discharged.

Major F. J. MUNN, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are an officer of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. You are attached to the new, about-to-be-created invalid branch?—A. I do not know that.

Q. You are the chief medical officer of the Military Hospitals Commission command?—A. Yes, D Unit.

Q. So that from a medical point of view, all the medical matters referred to by Major Wilson fall under your jurisdiction?—A. Yes.

Q. So that one works in co-operation with the other?—A. Quite.

Q. You work in co-operation one with the other?—A. The very closest.

Q. Where is your head office?—A. No. 1 Queen's Park.

Q. In the same building as Major Wilson?—A. Yes.

Q. I think we pretty well covered the statistical information regarding the convalescent hospitals in this district. Have you sufficient accommodation at the present time for all the returning men?—A. No, sir.

Q. What steps are you taking to increase that accommodation?—A. I do not know.

Q. I suppose that information we should obtain from the Military Hospitals Commission, from Mr. George?—A. I would suppose that Mr. Armstrong would be the man.

Q. Mr. Armstrong will tell us about the additional accommodation?—A. Yes.

Q. If you are of opinion your accommodation is insufficient to whom do you report?—A. Col. Thompson.

Q. At Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you done so?—A. I have.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. To what extent is your present accommodation occupied?—A. With the exception of 120 beds, which I am proposing to hold for men who are coming back on the Letitia, in another hospital train, such as ran into Whitby ten days ago, our accommodation is completely used.

Q. Have you a number of out-patients?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think it is advisable to have those out-patients come into the hospital?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How many?—A. I think it is 515. It is a little bit difficult to get the exact figures.

Q. Returned men?—A. Returned men. There should be beds for them.

By the Chairman:

Q. I am going to ask you the same question I asked this morning. I understand there is a military base hospital here capable of holding five or six hundred patients and that it is only partly filled, that you have a number of camp cases in the hospitals belonging to the Military Hospitals Commission. Why are those camp cases not sent to the military hospitals and the additional accommodation rendered free for the returned soldiers?—A. For a very good reason: that there are certain facilities for treatment which we have established in the convalescent hospitals which, being in one hospital of the city, it was not necessary to establish them in a second hospital, with the consequence that, having the close co-operation of Colonel Marlow, we arranged that certain cases of ours, contagious diseases and such like, should be treated at the base hospital, and that, in correspondence, certain cases for which we had facilities for treatment, would be taken care of by the convalescent hospitals.

Q. How many overseas men have you at the base hospital?—A. I could not say off-hand, sir. It is not great. It might be 10 or 15.

Q. How many camp cases have you in the Hospitals Commission Hospitals?—A. About the same number.

Q. Do you think you are taking at the base hospital all the camp cases that you possibly can?—A. I think you have your question twisted, sir.

Q. Are you taking at the base hospital all the camp cases that you can?—A. I have nothing to do with the base hospital.

Q. You have a good many of the camp cases in your other hospitals?—A. Possibly 15 or 20.

Q. In the Bishop Strachan, the Knox College, the Beatty Home, the Booth Memorial and Whitby and Guelph?—A. There is no hospital at Guelph yet.

Q. You have not then more than 15 or 20 camp cases?—A. No.

Q. So that even if those camp cases were all taken out of your military hospitals, it would only mean 15 or 20 more beds at your disposal?—A. Those men are treated as out-patients if their cases warrant it, just the same as our overseas men are.

Q. Is there any differentiation as regards these different hospitals? That is, do different kinds of cases come to the Bishop Strachan, the Knox, the Beatty or the Booth Memorial?—A. Quite. Particularly the Bishop Strachan, as you call it, is used largely for the orthopaedic cases which have crowded out the most of the others. Perhaps I had better explain that a year ago last November the Bishop Strachan was started, when of course everything went there. Last September we started the Spadina Hospital, and since then it has rapidly developed that although the dental clinic is still required there, the cases for eye clinic have been very largely removed to Spadina Hospital, while the Bishop Strachan School is largely filled with orthopaedic and amputation cases.

Q. What do you intend to use the Booth Memorial Hall for when you get it?—A. That is to be the active surgical hospital which will include all the orthopaedic cases.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. That is to be the active surgical hospital?—A. Yes, where the orthopædic and amputation cases will be treated.

Q. What will you use the Whitby Convalescent Home for?—A. I have been contemplating setting aside one cottage there for non-tuberculous chest cases, including asthmatic cases, convalescent pneumonia cases, and such like.

Q. What also do you accommodate at Whitby?—A. Other than that, general convalescents. We are using it at the present time to help us out in the way of general accommodation.

Q. I understand that when you get a mixed consignment of returned soldiers they go to the receiving hospital at the Spadina Institution?—A. Yes.

Q. Are they sorted out very carefully according to the treatment they require?—A. Partly, and partly according to where they live. For instance, a man may live in Hamilton and have a condition which does not require very active treatment; that man is allowed to go to his home city. Our accommodation at Hamilton is very limited and our facilities for treatment there have not been worked up as well as in Toronto.

Q. Apart then from the desire of every man to be in his own locality, do you classify them according to their disability?—A. Well, not according to hospitals because we had only two hospitals up to a couple of weeks ago, when we moved some men to Whitby. We have classified them of course in the hospitals.

Q. What do you do with insane people?—A. They go direct from the railway station to the asylum or to the reception hospital.

Q. At Cobourg?—A. I mean if they go past Cobourg.

Q. If such cases come here, do they go from here to Cobourg. If treatment at Cobourg is necessitated the patients are sent to Cobourg. I believe the practice is that if Cobourg finds the man is permanently insane, he is transferred to his own province. Such cases do not come into our Convalescent Hospitals although they are dealt with by our administrative office.

Q. Does it work satisfactorily to have the insane cases eventually sent to the men's native province for the provincial authorities to take care of?—A. I do not know that I am in a position to speak of that. I have heard no arguments against it.

Q. What do you do with tubercular patients in this district?—A. Send them to a sanitarium as soon as we get empty beds there.

Q. What sanitarium are you sending them to now?—A. To the Mountain Sanitarium at Hamilton.

Q. What accommodation have you there?—A. Accommodation for about 75 patients at the present moment.

Q. About how many patients are there at the present time?—A. About 75.

Q. Then the hospital accommodation there is filled?—A. Yes. There were extra beds coming along every few days, but we are crowded with patients all the time.

Q. Have you any tubercular patients here which you are not able to send to a sanitarium?—A. Probably there are 10 patients.

Q. And you have no place to send them to?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you used the accommodation offered at Gravenhurst at all?—A. We have about 30 men there now.

Q. Is that all the Gravenhurst Sanitarium can take?—A. It is all they will take. For five months, approximately, they have refused to take any new cases, though they agreed to hold what cases were already there.

Q. Then at the present time you are decidedly short of accommodation for tuberculous patients in this section?—A. Not decidedly.

Q. Pretty dangerously close to the margin?—A. There is extra accommodation to be provided at Hamilton, and every few days we get a few extra beds. There are some new pavilions there which will be available in a few days. It has been just that way right along.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. With the pavilions you expect to have at your disposal at Hamilton, will you have a margin of safety?—A. No, not here.

Q. Not for this district?—A. No.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you think extra accommodation should be got at once for tubercular cases?—A. Yes. I hold rather advanced views upon the subject of tuberculosis. I mean by that, that the general consensus of opinion of tuberculosis specialists is that if we could continue the ideal conditions such as are arranged for a man at a sanitarium, and if that could be continued for a period of from three to five years, the number of break-downs would be very, very small. In civilian life a man goes to a sanitarium for six or nine months. He then goes back to the same conditions under which his tubercular condition was created, and the fact is that a great many of such cases break down and return for further treatment.

Q. Your idea is that the returned soldier should go to one of these institutions for six or nine months?—A. Yes.

Q. Then what?—A. And then be transferred to a colony, where his disability for pension purposes could be estimated on the basis of his physical disability. He should be given perhaps a free cottage, built on proper lines, with open air sleeping porches, and other conveniences, and remain under medical direction.

Q. For how long?—A. Until such time as it is concluded that his case is not only closed and quiescent, but really cured.

Q. If not cured the man should be kept on indefinitely?—A. Yes. There would always be a few such cases develop. We would always have some incurables.

Q. Do you agree with some of the evidence which has been given here, but which you have not heard, that a period of six months with the proper treatment will alleviate the disease and teach the patient a great deal in the way of prevention, that is providing you have his co-operation and good-will?—A. It will, with the proper co-operation of the man.

Q. Yes, with his co-operation and will?—A. Yes, but not sufficiently so from a public standpoint. The Federal authorities are responsible for this man and for any exacerbation of his condition which may be attributed to the service. Therefore, if you let him go out after six months or nine months, he is out six or nine months and he comes back and you have wasted all that has previously been given.

Q. Is he a danger to the balance of the community while he is out?—A. It depends whether he is active, whether there are germs in the sputum or not.

Q. That cannot be determined very well, I suppose?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. I mean without constant examination?—A. Quite.

Q. As to the balance of these cases that you have spoken about, you say that you consider the accommodation for wounded men coming back to Canada is short. What, in your opinion, ought to be done?—A. Get more.

Q. Are you in favour of large or small institutions?—A. Large.

Q. With a maximum or a minimum of what?—A. Five hundred.

Q. A minimum of 500. How many, in your opinion, ought to be established with men coming back at the rate they are, and with the possibility of a great many more coming, a larger percentage by reason of the probable termination of the war?—A. Well, I feel that I should now have 500 more beds than I have at the present moment, for present needs, and that probably by the time we get the Booth Memorial hospital in North Toronto we will have enough additional patients to fully fill that.

Q. Would you take the 515 out patients you have and put them in the Booth Memorial as soon as it is finished?—A. No, I would not put them in the Booth.

Q. Nor in any other hospital?—A. No.

Q. How many?—A. I have not exact figures, but I would presume 90 per cent, allowing some men, nervous cases, who would really do better in home surroundings.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. Am I right in saying this: will you tell the committee that in your opinion a shortage at the moment is to this extent, that there are 515 out patients, 90 per cent of whom ought to be in convalescent homes or hospitals?—A. Yes.

Q. You say that is right?—A. Yes.

Q. So to that extent you are short anyway?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many of those 515 would consent to go into a hospital again, do you know?—A. Oh, they would have to; there is no question about it.

Q. They would go?—A. Yes, or be discharged. They come in and out now in the routine. They are given a pass for a week, two weeks or three weeks.

By the Chairman:

Q. They are all part of the army?—A. Quite.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And being treated?—A. Yes.

Q. But not properly by reason of the lack of accommodation?—A. We cannot exercise the proper supervision.

Q. Now then, I want to ask, are you a military doctor, Major Munn?—A. Yes.

Q. You know something about military routine, and so on?—A. Yes, I have been in it eleven years.

Q. Are you A.M.C. or M.H.C.?—A. A little of both.

Q. Were you ever in the A.M.C.?—A. Yes, for eleven years.

Q. And now you are—A. I am still in it.

Q. And Military Hospitals' Commission, too?—A. Yes.

Q. Now then, have you had any experience of medical men being in command of a hospital such as these convalescent hospitals are that we are talking about?—A. Yes, it was not until the 1st of November that we had any disciplinary officer in the hospitals.

Q. When?—A. In 1916. Let us take it from another standpoint. Take a base hospital, with its quota of approximately 34 officers, 84 nurses, and a personnel of 252 non-commissioned officers and men, who is responsible for discipline there?

Q. Who is?—A. The medical officer, the O.C.

Q. Does he administer that whole hospital?—A. Certainly.

Q. Is he in charge of that hospital from cellar to garret, for its administration in every way?—A. Absolutely. There is this difference: the soldier as a patient, and the soldier as a member of the personnel of the Army Medical Unit. The soldier as a patient in the hospital is not amenable to punishment while in hospital. His crime sheets are made out in hospital and referred back to the O.C. of his battalion. In the arrangements for drafting men overseas and returning them to Canada, the O.C. of the battalion does not exist when the man gets back here so far as we are concerned; therefore we have felt it absolutely necessary, notwithstanding K.R. and O to administer discipline. We had to do it and we did it.

Q. And you have done it successfully?—A. Reasonably.

Q. Even if you say so yourself?—A. I think, reasonably.

Q. You will admit it; that is fair?—A. Up to the first of November.

Q. Since that time, and only since that time, has any new authority come upon the scenes. And with all due modesty to yourself and the A.M.C., will you say that you see very much betterment since this new order of things came into force?—A. Yes, it is better in this way, it relieves us. We have a distinct shortage of medical officers, and we can use the disciplinary officer in the hospital to great advantage.

Q. Then would you say that a disciplinary officer is best in the hospitals outside of the medical men?—A. Yes.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. Then you do agree—do you want to qualify that?—A. I want to say this: in my opinion the disciplinary officer should be not the O.C. but the adjutant under his chief.

Q. Now, you have got me in a little deeper water. The disciplinary officer should be the O.C.'s adjutant?—A. Yes, his assistant.

Q. He should be a medical man?—A. Not necessarily.

Q. If he is the O.C.'s adjutant, the O.C. should be a medical man?—A. Yes, he should be. I am simply giving you my opinion. My opinion is that the O.C. of the hospital should be a medical man.

Q. And his adjutant need not be a medical man?—A. No.

Q. But he should be a disciplinarian?—A. Yes.

Q. And the adjutant should be under the O.C.?—A. Yes.

Q. That is right?—A. Just as the O.C. has his quartermaster.

Q. You have heard Major Wilson give his evidence here. You do not believe that a medical man belonging to the A.M.C. should be under the man at the top of the hospitals here, and that he should be subservient to him in any way except in a medical way?—A. I did not get that question.

Q. Well, Major Wilson says that in his opinion a medical man is not fit to be an O.C. I think you heard that?—A. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Major Wilson said not necessarily.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What you say is that if Major Wilson thinks that a medical man is only fit to take care of the medical end of the hospital, he is mistaken in that?—A. There is no problem in a hospital which has not got a medical aspect.

Q. Quite so, therefore what?—A. That is the conclusion that I have come to.

Q. Then will you say that a medical man could take care of that hospital in a disciplinary and in every other way?—A. Without any question.

Q. And if there is a disciplinary officer he should be under the medical officer?—A. Yes, just as the quartermaster looks after stores and supplies, the adjutant after discipline, and the medical officer commands the hospital.

Q. All medical units are administered by a medical man, the O.C.?—A. Yes, the field ambulances, clearing hospitals, base hospitals, and so on.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. The returned soldier question is a medical question?—A. Seventy-five to ninety per cent of it.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Then, in your opinion, the Military Hospitals Commission could be used for some things to aid you in the A.M.C.?—A. Well, I am not just clear as to your question.

Q. Could they be used so that they could be of benefit to the A.M.C.?—A. In what way do you mean?

Q. Do you think they are necessary?—A. I do not know—there are many divisions that could be made of the various duties; I do not know what the proposition is, or here they are going to divide it.

Q. Are you of this opinion, that there should be one definite head?—A. Did you ever see anything that worked well with dual control?

Q. Then is this working well with divided jurisdiction? (No answer.)

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You said you wrote a letter making certain recommendations, when was that?—A. That was an error; my letter was addressed to Major Wilson, and he forwarded to Col. Sharples.

Q. When was that?—A. Approximately two weeks ago. It was as soon as I could see daylight in the matter, what numbers were coming to us.

Q. Has any action been taken on that, as far as you know?—A. Not as far as I know.

Q. And the insufficient accommodation was just as you described to Mr. Pardee?—A. Yes. Mind you, this is all coming up now, it is all new, the situation is changing all the time, and up to the present influx we have approximately had sufficient accommodation.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. There were some letters, filed here by Colonel Marlow, written by you to him; here is one of February 6, 1917, re tuberculosis. These are your letters, are they?—A. Yes. (Vol. III of Evidence handed to witness).

Q. They are contained on pages 220, 221, 223, 224 and 225?—A. I have not had an opportunity of reading them.

Q. No, but I take it they are yours; but if you care to make any statement regarding those letters, alright.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Do you wish to make any statement about those letters now?

The CHAIRMAN: If you desire to do so, you may look them over, and if you have any statement to make to the Committee afterwards you may do so if you like.

WITNESS: I will have to recall those letters. Going back to the question of tuberculosis, the discipline in the sanatoria is altogether a medical problem. It has no other aspect. There are only two punishments, one is fines and the other confinement to bed and removal of clothes. Crimes in sanatoria are serious matters. King's Regulations and Orders do not cover it at all. I have a scheme to submit to this Committee, which I put up some time ago to Ottawa, and I would urge very strongly that this or some such basis should be given us as an assistance in maintaining discipline in the sanatoria.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. With regard to crimes to sanatoria?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it in brief?—A. There are four main crimes: absence without leave, expectoration, drunkenness, and disobedience. Absence without leave is an offence for which, on the first offence, the man forfeits his pay for the number of days of his absence, and is to be admonished; for the second offence he forfeits his pay for the number of days absent, and a fine of an equal amount; for his third offence he would forfeit his pay for the number of days absent and is fined twice that amount; for the fourth offence he forfeits his pay for the number of days absent, and is fined four times that amount; for the fifth and each subsequent offence, he forfeits his pay for the number of days and a fine of eight times that amount. We have, in addition, C.B., which, in this instance, means confinement to bed and removal of clothes, which is good treatment in tuberculosis cases, and may be given at the discretion of the officer in charge of the sanatorium. The fine may be remitted for good behaviour. There is one clause here to which I would like to call attention:—

“The objection may be raised that the punishments are too heavy, but I would point out that the man has two chances to get off in each case, without being seriously punished, and that if he gets to a fourth or fifth offence, it is practically useless for us to waste time, effort and money trying to effect a cure for him.”

This memo. received some consideration; I took it up with Col. Mewburn, now Major General Mewburn, and it met with his approval, after some objections which I removed from a medical standpoint.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. Have your suggestions been adopted?—A. No, sir. At the time I thought it was necessary, and I thought I could put out a scheme of discipline in connection with the convalescent hospitals; but I have come to the conclusion that it is not necessary.

Q. Do you find that when tubercular convalescents secure liquor it has a very deleterious effect on them?—A. Oh, very. I made drunkenness a very serious crime in my scheme of punishments.

Q. In the trouble cases it is one of the worst things possible?—A. Absolutely.

Q. Are you troubled much with drunkenness at the places where you have tubercular patients?—A. Only to a very moderate extent now. It was.

Q. Are you assisted in every possible way by the authorities?—A. At the sanatoria?

Q. Yes?—A. The sanatoria are so remote from the usual centres that there is not the same difficulty as there is here in Toronto.

Q. You have not the same difficulty that Dr. Byers reported in St. Agathe?—A. No.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In regard to tuberculosis, did you examine the sanatoria in Muskoka?—A. Yes.

Q. I received a letter from the proprietor of the Minnewaska, or some such sanitarium, complaining very bitterly of Col. Thompson's evidence in regard to that hospital did you read that evidence of Col. Thompson in regard to that hospital?—A. If I did it is so long ago that I do not recollect it clearly.

Q. What is the condition of that hospital as far as its being a proper place for treatment of tuberculosis?—A. I do not think it was up to grade.

By the Chairman:

Q. How long did your patients occupy it?—A. Some months; I would not like to say.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What was the matter with it?—A. In the first place it was not suited. It was an old summer hotel which was remodelled. There was one wing which had the proper open air features to it, but other than that it was not suitable.

Q. You mean the proper scientific appliances were not there to give the patients proper treatment?—A. The construction of the building was not proper; it was an old ramshackle building, and they tried to fix it up with sanitarium rooms.

Q. Had they proper appliances for inspecting the sputa and so on?—A. No, we had to put them in ourselves.

Q. You have no patients there now?—A. Not at the Minnewaska. We have some still at the Muskoka free hospital.

Q. Have you inspected the hospital at Whitby?—A. Yes.

Q. What is going on there now in respect to massage? Are they teaching the convalescent soldiers massage?

The CHAIRMAN: We will get that from Mr. Nichol.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. There is a class in massage in charge of Sergt.-Major Kendall, of some twenty-eight women and twenty-one men, I believe. We have very little to do with that. They were put in there for instruction under Sergt.-Major Kendall.

Q. They are not under your jurisdiction at all in any way?—A. No.

Q. You don't know much about them?—A. I don't know anything about them.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is that under the vocational officers?—A. No.

Q. Under what jurisdiction are they?—A. I believe they are directly under Colonel Thompson from Ottawa.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What is the charge for soldiers at the Free Hospital at Muskoka?—A. Twelve dollars a week.

Q. What was the charge at this other place, the Minnewaska?—A. Ten dollars.

Q. Did you have some complaints from the patients who were sent up to the Free Hospital? That they would not stay there any longer?—A. It was one procession of discharges from there.

Q. From the Free Hospital?—A. Yes; it is yet.

Q. What was the reason for that?—A. The reason goes back, I think, to the reason for my proposing this scheme of discipline for sanatoria; that is, that the civilian institutions do not give any scheme of punishment for minor offences. They have only one punishment—discharge. If a man does not behave, out he goes.

Q. Did you ever hear of this complaint—I have—that the soldier patients who were sent to the Free Hospital at Muskoka complained that when they got there they were placed in the position of orderlies for the purpose of serving the civilian patients?—A. They had a great shortage of help up there, I believe, at one time, and they thought that there was no reason why these healthy men who were able to do it should not wait on table. The only criticism of that was that they should not have been asked to wait on civilians; but we insist, not only in sanatoria but in convalescent hospitals, that a man who is able to do light hospital duties should do it.

Q. I am not criticising that, but, as I understand it from the information I have, the reason many soldiers left the Free Hospital was because they were placed in the menial position of acting as orderlies for civilian patients, and it was in consequence of that—because they would not receive them in the Free Hospital on that account—that you had to take them to the Minnewaska for a short time?—A. I am not familiar with all the details as to the arrangement between the Free Hospital and the Minnewaska.

Q. You found that they would not accommodate at the Free Hospital all the patients you would like to send there?—A. I really do not know; I am not in a position to express any opinion; I am not familiar with the details.

Q. You do not know that?—A. I do not know that.

Q. You do not know whether the Minnewaska was opened or patients were sent there because the Free Hospital would not keep them?—A. No. I would not go on record in connection with the matter; I don't know enough about it.

By the Chairman:

Q. Many of your patients, military patients with tubercular ancestors, declined to remain long enough over there to do them real good or arrest the disease?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. What percentage of your patients are willing to stay out the full length of time necessary to arrest their trouble?—A. I would not like to give exact figures.

Q. Will half of them do it?—A. Oh, more than that.

Q. Is there anything you can suggest that would render conditions more attractive so that men, for their own good and for the good of the state, would remain there and not take their discharge until they were really capable of returning to work?—A. There is no scheme whereby you could, unless you had compulsory legislation induce every man to stay six months in any one place. You might induce 75 per cent of them, but you cannot induce them all.

Q. I can see that it might be difficult to compel them to stay, because a tubercular case held against his will will not make improvement, but could anything be done to make those institutions more attractive, so that the men would be willing to stay?—A. Well, it must necessarily have a rather severe aspect. A man must rest. He must have his whole attitude towards life completely changed. There are many complex interweavings of one sort and another that go towards the treatment of tuberculosis; I think it is the most complex problem of all. I do not think the are more than 25 per cent, if there are that many—20 or 25 per cent of the men—who do not take sanitarium treatment.

Q. What becomes of that 25 per cent?—A. They are given a month's pay in lieu of sanatorium treatment.

Q. They go back into their homes?—A. Yes.

Q. They are discharged, and you no longer have any control over them?—A. No.

Q. They are centres of infection to their families and to others?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Would not you favour compulsory legislation?—A. I would very decidedly, particularly in cases which are actively infectious to others. The general consensus of opinion in tuberculosis, I think, is that it is largely a matter of infection during childhood, and that the disease remains latent for a number of years until conditions are such as to bring about the active tuberculosis as we know it.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Evidence has been given to us here that as to that twenty-five per cent who did not want treatment, that if you forced treatment on them it would not do them any good?—A. Yes; it may not do them any good, but it would do the rest of the population a tremendous amount of good. There is no reason why we should have tuberculosis running at large any more than smallpox, in my opinion, not a bit more. That is, when a man has got the germs in his sputum.

Q. On the same principle then, you would have to apply the same rule against civilians?—A. Quite.

Q. You would have to extend it to everybody?—A. Oh, certainly; and if the soldier knew that treatment were compulsory he would bow to the inevitable.

Q. You think that he would submit to it so that he would get out the sooner?—A. Yes, I am quite satisfied that would operate in most of those cases.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you any idea how many tuberculosis cases have disclosed themselves in this district?—A. You mean in training and from overseas?

Q. Yes; how many soldier tuberculosis cases have developed?—A. I haven't any exact idea.

Q. Have you any idea how many returned men have come back to this district affected by tuberculosis?—A. I have not.

Q. Are you able to get the figures? I would like to know, for example, how many of your tubercular cases in this district were over in France; how many never left Canada; how many went as far as England?—A. I doubt very much if I could get these figures for you, but I believe that figures of that sort have been obtained at Ottawa.

Q. That is the place to get them?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Have you any suggestions to make to this Committee to enable it to give better treatment to returned soldiers?—A. I think that we have here in Toronto the very best possible medical staff which could be obtained; I have in the hospitals here a house staff of the brightest younger men that I could get. I have a visiting staff of the rightest practitioners in Toronto, (the consultants of 5 to 10 years from now) and the rightest consultants in Toronto. I think a better scheme in the way of medical treatment could not be devised.

Mr. Ross: I do not want to confine you to medical treatment, but any suggestions you can give that will help us to deal with this problem.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Along the line of our establishing the soldier in private life?—A. Well, I do not know. I have not anything definite at present.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you believe in the colonization scheme—that is, in colonies of soldiers?—
A. I would not express any opinion on that. I have not given it any thought. I have definite opinion on —

Q. Tubercular colonies?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. But this wider problem you have not had time to consider?—A. I have almost slept with the problem for thirteen months and I feel that I know something about it.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Would you advocate the forming of colonies of tubercular patients?—A. Yes. I hope to have a town plan to present in further connection with that colonies scheme of mine, which I believe Colonel Marlow presented to the Committee and I would be very glad to leave a blueprint with you. I expect to have it tomorrow.

Q. And you will give us all the particulars about it?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Do you mean a colony with women as well as men?—A. The colony scheme as a self-supporting proposition has been tried in various places, but it has never been feasible because there was considerable doubt as to whether it would be self-supporting or not, but with the backing of the Federal Government or, in other words, with the fact that each man will receive a pension of $200 or $300 or $400 a year, I see no reason in the world why the project could not only be self-supporting but prosperous. The man's effort could be directed in a colony, and his earning powers made far greater than they could be under any other scheme, particularly such as having him go back into competitive life in the city.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Would you make it compulsory for him to go on the colony?—A. No, the features of it would have to be attractive enough to hold him.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. You have not answered my question as to whether you would admit women to that colony?—A. In connection with that I meant to say that I felt that if it could be once established with the backing of the pensions, as my proposition would be, that it would be a comparatively short step to establish it as a working scheme for the civilian patients, but I do not include the women in this way, that I think that a man's family, where he is married, should be brought to him when he goes to the colony.

Q. Where he is already married?—A. Yes.

Q. But in the case of the unmarried man?—A. There would be community buildings for those.

Q. They would be separated entirely?—A. When in the colony.

Q. Mr. Pardee asked you a little while ago a question that I don't think you answered, and that is, do you think as a member of the Army Medical Corps, that that corps would look after this matter of reception, treatment, care, training and re-education of wounded, disabled and convalescent members of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces as well as it is looked after by the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. I believe it could be very well looked after indeed if there were proper direction of the medical service.

Q. If there were proper direction of the medical service?—A. Yes.

Q. You think there is not proper direction of the medical service at the present time?—A. No.

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. Do you think the Army Medical Corps would be able to look after technical and vocational training as well as a commission appointed especially for that purpose?
—A. That is not a Medical Corps matter, that is a separate matter.

Q. Then you would not include the re-education and training of convalescents at all in your scheme of looking after these men by the medical corps?—A. Not at all.

Q. Well, I am trying to find out what it is?—A. I would say decidedly the vocational work is absolutely necessary.

Q. And you think it could be as well done by having the whole thing under the control of the Army Medical Corps as it is by having the matter in the hands of a commission especially appointed for that purpose?—A. I have not thought about that at all, sir. I have not formed an opinion on it as a matter of fact.

Q. Then you would not like to have it put down as an expression of your opinion that in your opinion the Army Medical Corps could have looked after the whole subject just as well without the Hospitals' Commission as with it?—A. Let me put it in another way. The Commission has unquestionably done some very valuable work. But the matter of co-relating the vocational work in this scheme, outside of what has been going on, has not received any consideration from me whatever.

Q. You think then that it is an advantage to have the Military Hospitals' Commission?—A. Unquestionably so far as the introduction of these various alleged branches are concerned.

Q. You said just now that in your opinion there was something wrong with the direction of the medical service?—A. Yes.

Q. That is the Army Medical service?—A. Yes.

Q. What is wrong in your opinion?—A. Lack of direction.

Q. Could you explain that any more fully?—A. Well it is not in my place, as a medical and military officer, to offer criticism—

Q. Then don't do it. You say it would be criticising your superior officer?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. How long has this lack of accommodation been noticeable in the hospitals?—A. Mainly recently.

Q. How recently?—A. To a minor extent it has been going on for probably two months, but it has become—at least I believe it has become very acute recently.

Q. In looking over the evidence given by the chief officer of the Military Hospitals' Commission I notice some questions that were submitted by Mr. Pardee, and he quoted a newspaper article which reads as follows:—

“Thousands of disabled Canadian soldiers who are unfit for further service at the front but who have sufficiently recovered from their wounds to permit of their return to Canada are being detained in Britain because the Military Hospitals' Commission of Canada has failed to provide the necessary accommodation in the Dominion for the care of the wounded and because adequate arrangements have not been made for the return of these men to civil life.”

When Mr. Pardee asked: “I want you to make it clear to the committee to what extent that statement is true, because the public have a right to know the facts?” When Mr. Thompson answers: “The statement is not at all true. We have arrangements on foot for the provision of 10,000 beds in Canada at this time. We have been in constant communication with Sir George Perley and from time to time have been making preparations to furnish beds for those men when they return. Of course, you understand that an hospital is not like Jonah's gourd, it does not grow up over night. It takes time to provide the necessary accommodation." The examination proceeds—

"Q. I understand. All I am trying to do is ascertain what is true and what is not?—A. The fact is this: never at any time have we been short of beds for the men they sent from England.

"Q. You say that every man sent from England up to date has been taken care of?—A. Yes, he has been taken care of."

Do I infer from your remarks that there is a difference of opinion as to the proper care of these out-patients? Is your statement to the effect that they would get much better treatment if they were in hospitals, and does the Military Hospitals Commission admit that the out-treatment is sufficient in meeting the requirements?—A. I think the general consensus of opinion is that they should be in-patients.

Q. That is the consensus of opinion, but have the Military Hospitals Commission acted as if they felt these men were receiving proper treatment out?—A. I don't just get your question.

Q. You say the consensus of opinion is that they ought to be treated in the hospitals, yet they have been given permission to go home, and have been treated as out-patients. Was that the view of the Military Hospitals Commission in regard to the treatment?—A. It was almost a necessary thing, in a way. On account of the rapid expansion of the work there were bound to be some places where it was impossible to provide sufficient accommodation.

Q. Dr. Thompson states that we have on foot provision for 10,000 beds in Canada at this time?—A. I am not able to express an opinion on the broad aspects of the work. I am not familiar with that. I am speaking only of conditions as I see them here in front of me.

Q. You mean in this district?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. I would like to ask you one more question in connection with the administration of the Army Medical Service. Colonel Potter is the head, is he not, of the Army Medical Service?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, Colonel Potter stated before the Committee, in his evidence given at Ottawa, that he had no power; all he could do was to recommend. Now, if that is a true statement of the condition of the head of the Army Medical Service, does it not follow, as a natural and positive result, that his department cannot be properly administered? In other words, do you not think that the officer at the head of a department must necessarily have the power to control that department if he is going to have efficient management of it? What would be your opinion?—A. I think unquestionably you are right, sir; otherwise he would only be a figurehead.

Q. Exactly. Otherwise he is only a figurehead. I do not know whether you read Colonel Potter's evidence?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. I remember perfectly well that Colonel Potter, the head of the Medical Branch, stated in his evidence that he had no power, he simply recommends. Do orders which emanate from the Medical Department in Ottawa come by direction of the head of the Department or through the Adjutant General's office?—A. I did not grasp your question.

Q. Let me repeat it. Do orders relating to medical matters come directly from the medical head or are they given by the General in Command or through the Adjutant's office?—A. All orders come through the Adjutant-General's office to the G.O.C. of the District.

Q. Even upon medical matters?—A. Yes.

Q. So that the officer at the head of the medical department has really no control over it?—A. As to that I do not know. I am not conversant with conditions in Ottawa

[Major F. J. Munn.]

Q. You have been in the Army Medical Corps for ten or twelve years?—A. When a matter comes to our observation, we reach a conclusion upon it and a recommendation is forwarded to Ottawa.

Q. You do not bother to find out how these communications come or the medium through which they come?—A. The channel of communication is direct from the G.O.C. of the District to the Secretary of the Militia Council, and the answer back will be from the Adjutant General or from some official for him.

Q. In other words, you get no orders from Colonel Potter as the head of the Army Medical Service at all?—A. He may sign the letters.

Q. But he does not give the orders?—A. He signs the letters as the D.G.M.S. for the Adjutant-General.

Witness discharged.

Mr. T. J. LeCRAS, Superintendent of the Artificial Limb Institute, Toronto.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are you in charge of the establishment where artificial limbs are made for the returned soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is it situated?—A. 426 Yonge Street, at the present time.

Q. Are you giving up your entire time to this work?—A. With the exception of one hour per day.

Q. What previous experience had you in that kind of work?—A. I had 27 years' experience.

Q. Where?—A. 12 years in Cleveland, Ohio, and the balance of the time at Authors & Cox, Toronto.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. When you say "balance of the time," how long would that be?—A. Fifteen years.

By the Chairman:

Q. Then it is your profession?—A. Yes, sir, I have done nothing else during my entire life.

Q. What is your staff number at the present time?—A. Seven, sir.

Q. Are you able to keep up with the demand?—A. No, sir.

Q. What steps are being taken to enlarge your output?—A. The difficulty has been largely that we could not get help, but now I think we are at the stage where we can manage all right. I shall have two, in fact, three men coming within a week or less than a week. Then the staff will be such that we shall, I think, have a production sufficient to meet the demand.

Q. Are you going to continue to manufacture at the same place or will you move to the Booth Memorial Hall?—A. No, sir, I understand that we are to continue at our present place.

Q. You expect to continue your artificial limb making where you are?—A. Yes, sir, for some time.

Q. Have you the necessary accommodation to enlarge, if you wish?—A. Plenty, sir.

Q. Have you had many complaints from men about long delays in getting their artificial limbs?—A. Yes, sir, I have had some.

Q. You saw this letter (holding up newspaper clipping) which appeared in the Toronto Star on the 20th of February?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The writer of this says he has suffered the loss of a leg and has been waiting for months to be fitted with a limb at the Government limb factory here in Toronto, and he adds: "but I cannot obtain any information from the superintendent of the limb factory as to when I shall get my limb." Do you know of that particular case?—A. I have my opinion of that, but whether it is safe to express it or not is another. I don't think any returned soldier is responsible for the letter.

Q. Not for that letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, has any returned soldier been kept waiting for months for his limb?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many have you now on order?—A. I have orders for 17 men.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do those orders come from this district or from the whole of Canada?—A. They cover the whole of Canada.

By the Chairman:

Q. Returned soldiers come here from all over Canada to be fitted with artificial limbs?—A. I understand so.

Q. Do the men themselves come to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you fit the limb to them, and the limb is tried out here for a while in order that the men shall learn to be accustomed to use it?—A. The men wear their limbs from one to two weeks, they report from day to day for the purpose of having such alterations made as may be necessary, and finally the limbs are finished at the men's requests.

Q. And if a man is not satisfied, can he come back and have the limb readjusted or be given a new one?—A. Yes, sir. He does not receive a final board until he is willing to place his signature over a statement that everything is satisfactory.

Q. You say you have applications for limbs for 17 men?—A. Do I understand that you mean any limb, or a leg or an arm?

Q. A hand or foot or leg or arm?—A. At the present time I have received 55 orders for arm amputations—that is above the shoulder, above the elbow and below the elbow. I have completed 21, have under construction 3, waiting 29, and 2 cancellments.

Q. Those are arms only?—A. Those are arms only. I have received 103 amputations at the thigh, knee bearing and below the knee. Out of this 103 I have completed 40 and have under construction 46, waiting, 17.

Q. Do you mean you have not commenced the legs at all?—A. The orders are on file, not at the factory yet.

Q. You really have the 46 and the 17 waiting?—A. Yes, sir. But there would be quite a number of that 46 very close to completion.

Q. That is you have had 103 orders, and you have filled 40 and have 63 unfilled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long will it take you to fill that 63?—A. The number differs from day to day, because I may be putting on one, two or three to-morrow in complete condition, while a week may go by and I may not have any complete.

Q. How long would these 63 take you to complete if you had no more orders?—A. That is rather difficult for me to say. I cannot give you a positive opinion.

Q. A couple of months?—A. Probably so.

Q. And in that time you will have a great many more?—A. Yes, but I will have four men coming and two machines, which means—

Q. Increasing your output?—A. Very much so, to the extent of three or four a day. I hope inside of two weeks to be producing that.

Q. To be turning out three or four limbs a day?—A. Yes, providing the men who are making these machines will keep their word as to delivery.

Q. That will be three or four extra a day?—A. The capacity will be three to four each day; that will be the maximum capacity.

[Mr. T. J. LeCras.]

Q. Probably you can fit out 25 men a week with arm or leg?—A. I am not so sure about an arm. The matter of arm makers I do not know what to say about. The United States cannot procure a satisfactory arm maker.

Q. Is that a special profession?—A. Most decidedly.

Q. Quite distinct from leg making?—A. Yes. They can make something that looks like an arm; but it is a difficult proposition.

Q. You are scouring the United States for competent men?—A. I have scoured the beehive of the United States, as it is called, for arm and leg makers, and I cannot find them. I went to Minneapolis, to St. Paul, and to Milwaukee, and I found that with few exceptions the shops were one man shops. The largest factory I saw in Chicago was the Rowley factory.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Have you any knowledge of the Royal Alexandra Institute in England?—A. Nothing more than what I have read in the reports.

Q. They have a very much larger number to deal with than in Canada, and the patients themselves assist in the manufacture of the limbs.—A. I have two returned men now, sir, working.

Q. Where a man gets an artificial leg, it has to be tested, I suppose, for a while before it is considered perfect?—A. He has to try it out for one or two weeks. They report every two days after putting it on in the rough.

Q. Would it be better to have all these men under the same roof while you are providing limbs and testing the efficiency of the limb?—A. I find in testing, sir, that if they are out in public life and have their minds occupied they do better than if their whole attention is centred on their limb.

Q. They do better outside?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What do you base your statement on that you do not think that the newspaper item referred to was written by a returned soldier? It is signed "A Returned Cripple." Why do you think that is not so?—A. In the first place, looking over my records when that letter came into the public papers, I have no knowledge of any one man coming to me with any complaints other than that he might in an offhand way say: "This is a long time."

Q. Well, then, he goes on to say here: (Reads):—

I can buy a leg just as good for fifty dollars from a dozen Canadian and American firms, and why are we not allowed the best leg that is made even if it costs $100, when the Government is giving artificial arms that are made by an American firm, and cost $250, and are only an ornament when you get them. It is the general opinion among the boys who are waiting for the legs that somebody should be put in charge of the Government factory who will make something better than the old single socket wooden leg, when the Government has a factory for the purpose.

Q. Is that the class of leg that you are manufacturing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Yours is up to date?—A. It is up to date.

Q. And the cost is what?—A. That depends upon the amputations, the cost of production.

Q. I want to know what the ordinary cost to the Government is of these limbs? A. As near as I can gather, between $35 and $40 for a leg with a market value of $110.

Q. The Government buys them at $35 or $40?—A. That is outside of the overhead cost.

Q. The Government pays the cost and it costs them about $35 or $40 plus overhead expenses?—A. Yes, as near as I can gather.

[Mr. T. J. LeCras.]

Q. Well you are doing it.—A. Yes, but it has not been possible for me to arrive at the positive cost because of the little delays that the men require. For instance, if a man is making an artificial limb and two men come in requiring to be fitted or to have plaster of paris casts taken, that takes up some of the man's time, so that I cannot arrive at a positive cost until I have found that I have sufficient work to do to put a man on that work only.

Q. Do you make a leg and render a bill for it to the Government?—A. No, sir.

Q. How do you get your money, whom do you charge?—A. I draw a salary, sir.

Q. I see, you are just doing that for the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. It costs in the neighbourhood of $50 a leg?—A. I would think so.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What would a leg sell for if sold outside?—A. $85, $100, $110, or $120.

Q. How does that compare with the leg you are making?—A. It is the best leg that is on the market, open for inspection to the best critic you can find.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. It is manufactured entirely for the returned soldiers?—A. Yes, sir. My hours are from 9 to 12 and 2 to 5, and I am often there until 5.30 and sometimes until after 6.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. This institution was created by the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. And you are an employee of theirs?—A. Yes.

Q. At the time you were appointed what business were you engaged in—we know you were in the manufacture of artificial limbs, but were you managing a business of your own or connected with some other person?—A. I was managing the firm of Authors & Cox.

Q. You had no business of your own?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are the manager of another firm's business?—A. I was managing my own business.

Q. Is that firm still in existence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Still manufacturing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you still connected with it?—A. Financially yes; but I give no time to it other than one hour a day.

Q. Is it in competition with the artificial limb you are now making?—A. Not at all, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. It deals with civilian trade?—A. Yes, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. There are no soldiers going to this firm for artificial limbs —A. No, sir, I am positive of it.

Q. What arrangement was made with you when you became Superintendent of the Military Hospitals Commission factory?—A. That I was to give the hours from 9 to 12 and 2 to 5.

Q. To what?—A. To attend to the manufacture of the artificial limbs for the returned soldiers.

Q. That is six hours a day. What remuneration were you to receive?—A. $2,500.

Q. A year?—A. Yes.

Q. What number of employees have you?—A. I have one arm maker, two leg makers.

Q. Let us have the number, I do not care about the occupations?—A. Eight.

Q. And how are they paid, at what rates?—A. They differ. One man we have at $6 a day; the others work by the hour at 45 to 50 cents an hour.

[Mr. T. J. LeCras.]

Q. There was no long term arrangement made with them?—A. We have only yearly contracts with three men.

Q. And the others are just hired by the day?—A. Yes, roughers. I would like the gentlemen of the committee to understand that I have but about two or three artificial limb makers on my own staff; the others are all roughers and office men.

Q. What was the reason for the establishment of this factory specially, were there no others engaged in the manufacture of artificial limbs?—A. I do not know.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many employees have you in your own factory, limb makers?—A. Two.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Did you ever have more than two?—A. No.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you know of any other factory in Canada that employs three or four?—A. I do not think that there are any factories in Canada employing more than three limb makers.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You mentioned the number of the building on Yonge street which you occupied; what was the number?—A. No. 426 Yonge street.

Q. Who owns the building?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Who can tell us that?—A. Mr. Riddell, the secretary, has the handling of that matter.

Q. And you go there from 9 till 12, and from 2 to 6 every day?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is in charge when you are not there?—A. The office man and the shop foreman.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are you close to the central military hospital, the Bishop Strachan School?—A. Yes, in the same block.

Q. So that when we visit the Bishop Strachan Hospital we can visit your factory?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What was the reason for the centralization of this artificial limb making in Toronto?—A. I do not know.

Q. As I understand it, a Halifax man, requiring an artificial limb has to come to Toronto to get it?—A. Yes.

Q. And it is the same with the man who lives in Winnipeg?—A. Yes.

Q. Why is that?—A. It is not good policy to supply a leg to a man unless you have the patient there with you all the time.

Q. Why could you not do it as well in Halifax as in Toronto?—A. You cannot find competent limb makers in all these places.

Q. Is not the Government supplying the money for these limb makers that you have here in Toronto?—A. Yes.

Q. And could it not supply the money just as well to employ men for the same purpose at Halifax?—A. That hardly comes within the sphere of my knowledge; I do not know about that.

Q. We have asked other witnesses about that, but nobody seems able to inform us on that point. Are there other firms engaged in the manufacture of artificial limbs in other cities?—A. Yes, but this is not a firm.

Q. Are there not some firms in Montreal engaged in that business?—A. Yes.

Q. And they are old established firms?—A. There are two.

Q. Would it not be possible to make arrangements with firms such as those?—A. I do not know; I could not speak on that subject. I do not know anything about it.

[Mr. T. J. LeCras.]

Q. How did you come to be engaged as superintendent of this factory? Did you apply for the position?—A. Not directly.

Q. Did you apply for it indirectly?—A. I went down to visit the Secretary, Mr. Riddell, several times, because I felt there was going to be a contract given for the making of limbs; the time came when I found that the Government intended to get a factory and make these limbs in it instead of letting a contract. I cannot tell you directly what wording there was, or how it came about.

Q. But it was brought about in this indirect manner by your going directly to the Secretary?—A. I went there and tried to see if contracts were going to be given out, or how the thing was going, and also by writing to Ottawa several times as I did, and visiting Ottawa.

Q. And by reason of these interviews with the Secretary did you find out that they required a superintendent, or did you apply for the position at all?—A. I cannot quite recall how it came about, unless it was that the question was asked me. I think the thought was to take over some one firm, and to appoint the man who was running it to supervise it. If I am not mistaken Mr. Riddell asked me if it were possible to take over our shop, and I answered yes, and the men with it.

Q. He asked if they could take over your shop?—A. Yes, that was the commencement of it, and from that time on, there were no further developments, until I was notified that I was appointed, but I came into contact with nobody else but those I have told you of.

Q. What committee was it you spoke of?—A. Dr. Bruce, Dr. Galley, and some one else.

Q. All military men, or were they Military Hospitals Commission men?—A. I cannot quite say who they were, they were appointed by the Military Hospitals Commission, I think.

Q. To do what?—A. To see what facilities we had, etc.

Q. Where is their office?—A. They have no office.

Q. Where did you see this gentleman who was the Secretary?—A. At his office.

Q. Where is that?—A. In the Board of Trade Building.

Q. What was he secretary of?—A. The Military Hospitals Commission.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. He is the local secretary?—A. I think so.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. How did your remuneration come to be fixed?—A. I believe Mr. Riddell asked me what salary I would accept in the event of the Commission wanting to engage my services. I told him $3,000 a year, and he said that was too much. I replied that in order to leave my business, it would not pay me to accept the position for less, that was provided the Commission wanted my entire time. Following that up, he said, "Supposing we gave you an hour a day so that you could attend to your own affairs until such time as you could close up your business, or appoint a man to carry it on, would you not take less?" I replied that I would, provided the Commission gave me from twelve to two o'clock each day, which they agreed to. I appointed my manager, and there are days I never see my own factory at all.

Q. How long have you been in this position under the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Eight months.

Q. Did that gentleman of whom you speak as the secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission have any previous experience in the manufacture of artificial limbs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or did any of these other gentlemen of whom you have spoken as far as you know?—A. They are medical men, and naturally they would have knowledge of it.

Q. But I am speaking of the manufacture of artificial limbs?—A. No, sir, they did not.

[Mr. T. J. LeCras.]

Q. None of them have been engaged in the manufacture of artificial limbs?—
A. None.

Q. Who looks after the overhead expenses?—A. That is attended to at the office.

Q. Who would know about that, who could give us information with reference to that?—A. I do not know.

Q. Are you not the superintendent?—A. Yes, but all accounts are sent to the secretary's office.

Q. Who looks after the installation of machinery, the furnishing of equipment, and all of that, by whom is that done?—A. I attend to that, to all the requirements and the equipment itself.

Q. Then you really determine the running expenses do you not?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any statements which would show what the cost of production is?—
A. No, I was not advised until 10 o'clock this morning that I would have to meet this Committee, and I have no office help until within the past few weeks, during which I have had a returned man for a few hours every day.

Q. How long have you had that assistance?—A. Perhaps for less than two months, I have had one of the returned men every day.

Q. Then is it not possible that so much of your time has been taken up in attending to your duties that what is suggested in the letter read by Mr. Pardee, could happen and that some one of the returned soldiers' cases had been overlooked and put off for a short time?—A. No, the reason, if any man has been put off has been because of lack of labour. It is impossible to get leg-makers; I can get roughers, but not leg-makers.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Expert men are difficult to get?—A. You can't find them.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Would you be good enough to make up a statement, I recognize that if you only received word to attend the Committee at 10 o'clock this morning, it was impossible for you to make up any statements for our information—will you make a statement showing the general overhead expenses, the running expenses, and the cost of production in this factory?—A. Yes.

Q. And you can lay it before this Committee during the sittings here?—A. I can get it from Mr. Riddell's office, I presume.

Q. Will you give us also a statement as to when each of these applications for 55 arms and 103 legs were received?—A. I can get that for you, giving the exact date I received each order.

Q. And will you give us also the date on which each of those 21 arms and 40 legs, which have been completed, were finished. I would like to know how long it took to furnish each soldier with these limbs. A. If we take as August 8th the date of opening up the factory or institute.

Q. August 8th, 1916?—A. Yes. Up to the present time I have had one arm maker to cope with this work.

Q. That may be true, but maybe you should have had more; I just want to find out how long it would take you to serve twenty-one men for arms, and forty-one men for legs. We will probably have to look to the United States for arm makers and leg makers. Could you give the committee this information, or tell us how to get it?—A. Yes, I can give it to you just month by month.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Give us a list of the artificial limb-makers in Canada, and the number of employees, and where those factories are located?—A. I am afraid that I could not give you that without visiting them.

Q. You are closely in touch with the trade, are you not?—A. Yes, I could get it from the directory mainly.

[Mr. T. J. LeCras.]

Q. And the list of where the factories are located in Canada?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where you could get a number of employees at each of those points?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Have you asked any of those other factories if they could send you some employees?—A. I have had advertisements standing out week after week throughout the whole of Canada in order to get men from Canada before I struck the United States.

Q. You had advertisements all through Canada asking for those special limb-makers?—A. Yes, sir; Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, down through Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa. I know there are no factories in a lot of those places, yet I put advertisements in the paper, and made many efforts myself after using up $21 in small inch and inch and a half advertisements.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you ever tried in the United States?—A. Yes, I have three advertisements now—Rochester, Pittsburg and Buffalo.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You are convinced now that you cannot get any more?—A. I am making no particular effort now, because I have three good men coming in.

Q. Do you think those would be sufficient? Would it not be advisable to get some apprentices to work? How long does it take a man to learn this occupation?—A. Might I say that I cannot answer your question directly just now; but if there were some method that I could be advised of how many amputations were coming from time to time I could be better prepared. They come right on me all at once, within a day or two. I don't know whether this is possible or not, but I think I could handle the business much more quickly and expeditiously if I had that knowledge.

Q. It is possible to have have some of the limbs partially prepared—prepared in the rough so that you could keep a certain amount of work ahead, irrespective of the man who was to use it?—A. I hope to have within a month a machine that will turn out 25 shin pieces per hour. We have already ordered that.

Q. Do you think it would be advisable to get some men to work as apprentices—say a returned soldier who might like to go into that occupation—and educate him to be a limb-maker?—A. I have two now.

Q. According to your evidence it would seem to me that you would have to get some limb-makers?—A. I have no knowledge how much I might expect, and do not know whether to get 100 or 200 or 500 parts out. I only know that the report that Mr. Riddell handed me some time ago—

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are artificial limbs admitted free to this country?—A. They are now, and have been for some years, and parts.

Q. Are any quantity imported from the United States and Europe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us how many are imported?—A. I heard indirectly, from what I consider authentic sources, that there are about $2,000 worth of artificial limbs of United States make coming into Canada each month.

Q. How many legs and arms would that be?—A. About $100 apiece, approximately.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Do you mean for returned soldiers?—A. No, sir; civilians.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. In view of the large number that are requested, could not artificial limb-makers now situated in other parts of Canada be employed in this work? Are there not in Montreal and other cities in Canada artificial limb-makers to whom this work could be passed around so that these men should not be compelled to wait for those limbs? Don't you think it would be fair to the manufacturers?—A. I believe, as a manufacturer, that we can get a larger production by concentration.

Q. Suppose you were to get a very large number of orders in the next two or three months, that you would be unable to fill, don't you think it would be fair to the soldiers to pass those orders around to the other limb-makers in other parts of Canada rather than keep all the orders here in Toronto?—(No answer.)

By the Chairman:

Q. Are there men able to make them in other parts of Canada?—A. The type of leg we are manufacturing are not made generally.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are there not limb-makers in Montreal?—A. Yes, but they are two.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Did you not make that type of leg in your business before you were attached to the military hospitals?—A. No; Authors & Cox did not produce such a leg as is being produced to-day, and not such a limb is being produced as to strength and everything else.

Q. Is it a new design or a new patent?—A. The joints are designed so that they will take the wear.

Q. Is it a new patent?—A. Yes; the ankle-joint is known as a cordless ankle-joint.

Q. A recent patent?—A. Not a recent patent, a recent joint.

Q. Who holds the patent?—A. There are several kinds; there is the Hall, Foster and Hanger.

Q. This particular one you are speaking of, who holds that?—A. There are three—the Hanger, the Hall, and the Foster.

Q. Are you using all three?—A. No.

Q. I am speaking of the one you are using; don't mind the others; who holds the patent for the one you are using?—A. There is no patent covering it.

Q. You said a moment ago that there was; are you using any part which is patented?—A. No, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. I met a soldier to-day with a crutch, without a leg; what is the explanation of that? Is that man waiting for his leg to be made?—A. I understand that the policy of the Hospitals Commission is that no man will be fitted for an artificial limb until some months after amputation. That man may arrive here six weeks after an amputation; the stump may not be ready for it.

Q. Is that man brought to Toronto until he is ready for the leg to be fitted?—A. I could not tell you that.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you ever asked the Hospitals Commission to endeavour to secure for you some idea of the number of men that might be expected here, amputation cases, next month or the month after next?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have they failed to do that?—A. In a sense it seemed to be impossible to gather that.

Q. They must know how many men are coming from England?—A. But they do not know in time enough to give me sufficient time to get my parts together.

Q. They would know as soon as the men left the other side; that would be two weeks at least before they were here. Would that be any help to you?—A. Yes.

By Brigadier General Mason:

Q. How do the limbs you turn out compare in efficiency with those manufactured in other places? You say there are no patents for those you are using. Are there patents for those that are made elsewhere?—A. You will find a large part of the artificial limb, whether it be a leg or an arm, these parts that are patented are more or less intricate affairs that very often should not be used. For instance, I got one yesterday from a maker on paper. The drawings and specifications look all right, but when you come down to the practical side it is all wrong. It simply shows a small screw for adjustment in the front, whereas we take the bearing at the back for the knee joint. That is a patented joint. I might have a dozen or twenty patented joints, which do not dwell on the stability of the leg rather than on some fantastic idea of securing a joint to the leg.

Q. You have a knowledge of the different limbs that are made. You know them?

—A. Yes, I know them better than my own name.

Q. Do you think our men are getting the most efficient and serviceable article?—

A. I am satisfied of it.

Q. They may not know the difference, but you do?—A. I know the difference. I know every joint is practically packed.

Q. Have you any complaints from the men after they have been furnished with the limbs that they are not suitable or sufficiently serviceable?—A. No, I have not heard one complaint.

Q. In the case of an arm amputated, where it is taken out at the shoulder, can you furnish an arm which can be used?—A. They are of very little value, other than filling in the coat sleeve.

Q. Not much value?—A. No.

Brigadier-General MASON: I saw one where a man with the muscles of his shoulders could move the arm, and I saw him light a cigarette.

By Mr. McCurdy:

Q. How does the quality of the leg made under your direction compare with the limbs fitted in England? Have they come under your observation?—A. Yes.

Q. How do they compare in quality?—A. I think the legs manufactured here are better.

Q. Have you had occasion to observe any of the limbs that have been fitted in England?—A. I have had 16 sockets to take off the Rowley leg which is made in England.

Q. Have you had any occasion to refit the leg?—A. 16 cases.

Q. In any of those cases which you refitted, was the defect due to bad workmanship or to limbs having been fitted too soon?—A. The difficulty is not so much with the leg as the fact of fitting them on what we call a green stump.

Q. So that it is better not to have a leg for some time, not until the stump is ready?—A. Or we shrink it—put on shrinking material.

Witness discharged.

Mr. E. H. SCAMMELL, recalled and further examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is it in contemplation on the part of the Hospitals Commission to have other places besides Toronto for making and fitting on legs?—A. It is under discussion.

Witness discharged.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Dr. Capt. C. B. FARRAR, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are you a member of the Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you been so for some time?—A. Only since November.

Q. Prior to that time you were a civil practitioner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you specialized on cases of insanity?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is your particular line of work then under the Hospitals Commission at present?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us just briefly what you are doing for returned soldiers who come back here suffering from shell shock, or who are unbalanced, or whose mental condition is unsound?—A. I do not think I could add anything, sir, to the testimony of the medical superintendent, Col. Thompson. I think he outlined that in his testimony. The cases are differentiated at Quebec. The hopelessly insane cases go to the province from which the man enlisted. The milder cases, including a great many of the so-called neurasthenics and shell shock cases and that sort of thing also go to their respective provinces, where they are admitted to the convalescent homes I believe. In between there are certain other cases, doubtful cases, possibly mild cases of insanity, and some everer shock cases that are diverted to Cobourg. Those are the three distributions.

Q. Are you familiar with the conditions at Montreal?—A. No, I have had very little experience at Montreal.

Q. You have not visited the Grey Nuns Hospital at Montreal?—A. I visited it once, but spent very little time there.

Q. Do you think it desirable that men who are in a highly nervous condition should be subjected to the same treatment as ordinary convalescent patients and kept in the same hospital with them?—A. My opinion would be that they should be segregated.

Q. You think that where a number of patients come back, as in this case, to Toronto and Montreal, that they should be classified and that those that are in a nervous condition should be treated separately?—A. Based on civilian experience I would say, yes, sir.

Q. Would the effect of discipline on men of that character be prejudicial to their recovery?—A. From what I have been able to observe and gather from the opinions of others who have had more experience the discipline is absolutely necessary.

Q. What do you do with the shell shock cases?—A. The first and most important thing in those cases is rest, fairly complete rest, in many cases isolation. Hydrotherapy also comes in, electricity suggestion and as soon as possible, occupation.

Q. Where are they treated in this district?—A. I do not know how they are distributed here. I believe in the convalescent homes.

Q. Have you a special institution for that at Cobourg?—A. Yes.

Q. You have them elsewhere as well I suppose?—A. Cobourg is the only institution I believe devoted exclusively to the care of mental and nervous cases so far.

Q. Are you familiar with conditions there?—A. Fairly.

Q. How many cases are there there?—A. I should judge about 50. There may be a few more or a few less, I have not kept track in the last few weeks.

Q. Of these some are hopelessly insane?—A. A considerable number.

Q. Some are "border-land" cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some are victims of shell shock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they all together or separated?—A. There are three floors at the Cobourg institution. Patients are admitted to what is called a reception ward, on the middle floor, and there they are under observation for a certain length of time; it may be a few days, or it may be a week or two. If it turns out that the patient is hopelessly, or a very disturbed mental case, he is sent to the top floor, where the more disturbed mental cases are kept. If he turns out to be a mild case, one that can be trusted with a certain amount of liberty, he is brought down to the ground floor, where he has much more freedom. The shock cases as a rule are located on that floor.

Q. Do you keep shell shock cases and these "border-land" insane cases in the same building?—A. They are there, sir, yes.

Q. Do you think that is desirable?—A. The whole question is so experimental that I should hate to give a positive answer. I should think, however, that a certain amount of separation would be beneficial. In fact I believe it would be.

Q. When you come to look over your insane and semi-insane cases, what are the fundamental reasons of their being insane?—A. Heredity and natural tendencies, natural development.

Q. Epilepsy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else?—A. Cases of actual out-spoken insanity are almost all due to the inherited and natural constitution of the individual, coming on up from early life.

Q. And to some other induced causes, I suppose?—A. To specific disease, alcohol and causes of that nature.

Q. Syphilis and kindred diseases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These account for most of your cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any insane cases that have been to the front?—A. Do you mean cases that were insane before enlisting?

Q. Have you any insane men who have actually been in France on active service?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you many who have been to the firing line?—A. I should say there are a fair number.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. The total number is not very large?—A. No, the total number would not be very large.

Q. I mean to say, the total number of insane cases you have is less than 50.—

A. According to the English boards, from 10 to 12 per cent.

Q. No, no. I mean the total number of those who have returned and are insane. The total number of insane is a very small one. One witness told us it was less than 50.—A. That would perhaps depend, sir, on the definition. Taking the mental cases together—the mildest as well as the severest—there would probably be from 10 to 12 per cent of the returned men.

Q. What were you engaged in before you took up this work?—A. I have been in this work for the past 15 years.

Q. For whom have you been working, the Hospitals Commission or for the Government?—A. I suppose you might say for both.

Q. Were you practising at the time you were engaged?—A. During the past summer I was down on the Rideau Lakes where I had charge of a private institution for shock cases. Previous to that I had been connected with hospitals in the State.

Q. Up to last summer you were connected with hospitals in the States?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What experience have you had as an alienist?—A. Fifteen years' experience.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What kind of hospitals were you connected with in the States?—A. Hospitals for mental diseases.

Q. Where were they?—A. In Baltimore, Maryland, and Trenton, New Jersey.

Q. Are you a Canadian?—A. No, sir.

Q. What are the names of these hospitals?—A. The Sheppard Hospital in Baltimore, the John Hopkins Hospital and Medical School, and the Trenton State Hospital and Princeton University.

[Captain C. B. Farrar.]

Q. How did you come to get your present position?—A. I came up here during the summer to take charge of the convalescent camp down on the Rideau Lakes for the experience in military psychiatry, and I became very much interested in it and made further inquiries. One step led to another, and finally I found my way to Colonel Thompson, who advised my coming into the service.

Q. Was this institution on the Rideau Lakes a private hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Managed by whom?—A. It was a donation from the Richardson estate, maintained by Miss Agnes Richardson.

Q. Operated in connection with returned soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. And your coming up there in the first place was for experience?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never had any connection with military matters before, and therefore you were not conversant with these cases of shell shock?—A. Not previously.

By the Chairman:

Q. You came to learn and stayed to teach?—A. I came to learn and stayed to learn.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. I think you said you were at John Hopkins University.—A. Yes.

Q. In what connection?—A. I was associate in psychiatry for several years.

Q. Associate to the professor?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Are you a graduate of any Canadian University?—A. No, sir.
Witness discharged.

Mr. W. W. NICHOL called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. You are, I understand, General Vocational Officer under the Military Hospitals Commission of the province of Ontario?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your jurisdiction extends throughout the entire province?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your headquarters are where?—A. In Toronto.

Q. You might, in your own way describe to the Committee what you are doing and attempting to do in vocational training for the returned men in your district?—
A. I have under my charge the hospitals—

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. First state what your experience has been prior to starting this work?—A. I organized the Evening Technical School at Ottawa four years ago. Up to that time I had been a Collegiate Institute Teacher and principal of High Schools. For the last eight years I was connected with the Ottawa Collegiate Institute as mathematical instructor and previous to that I had been principal and Mathematical Master of the Stowel High School. I have specialist standing in mathematics, and am an honour graduate in mathematics and physics of the University of Toronto. I may say that the Ottawa Evening Technical School was an organization of 1,400 pupils and 35 teachers.

By the Chairman:

Q. If there are no other preliminary questions, we will ask Mr. Nichol to tell about his work in his own way?—A. In October, I gave up the principalship of the Ottawa Evening Technical School to take charge in Ontario of the vocation work for the soldiers. There were four or five centres: London, Hamilton, Toronto, Kingston and Ottawa at that time. All the hospitals that I was given charge of then have since been organized and classes started in vocational subjects. In every hospital we have classes in what we call the preparatory course, viz.: elementary arithmetic, spelling, writing, what are usually called the three R's. I found in my Ottawa experience with the technical evening classes that about 10 per cent of the working men who were taking evening class work required preparatory instruction in ordinary common school lines, and I knew also that about 90 per cent of those who take up correspondence courses require this training before going on to higher technical work. Some courses were put on simply to interest the men and occupy their time for its good effect upon their health. Then, there were classes put on for improvement purposes. The men were given instruction along the lines of their own particular calling so that when they returned to civil employment their wage earning capacity would not be impaired and indeed in some cases we hoped that the men would be able to take better positions after they left the hospitals than before they entered.

Q. That is better after they have left the war than when they entered it?—A. Yes. So that after they leave the hospitals they would be able to take better positions than previous to their enlistment. This improvement phase is, to my mind, one of the most important features of our work and deserves particular attention. Very soon this difficulty arose in Toronto, where we started; there did not seem to be adequate provision in the Spadina Hospital, nor yet at the College Street Hospital for vocational training. The Military Hospitals Commission obtained accommodation for classes in telegraphy, commercial and elementary subjects in the Central Y.M.C.A., just opposite the College Street Hospital, and since that time classes have been running regularly in rooms fitted up by that association for their own night classes.

Q. That is on College street?—A. Yes. We tried to obtain accommodation in the nearby Lansdowne Public School because all the room in the Spadina Hospital was taken. We did for a time have classes there, but were very soon crowded out. However, by the end of the year we had obtained rooms in the Lansdowne School, and classes have been carried on there quite successfully ever since. We obtained the co-operation of the Central Technical School authorities, and we have been sending quite a large number of our students there in industrial branches. We have at present 4 students attending the Central Technical School in various branches, which will be named later. There have passed through, or are at present attending the Central Technical School in Toronto 96 persons. In London the Central Convalescent Home in the sun room of the hospital, equipment was put in for instruction in wood carving. One of the best wood carvers in Canada took charge of the work and has made a great success of it. We also had classes in preparatory and commercial subjects, and one or two men took telegraphy. Nearby is the Institute of Public Health, where lectures are given to the students of Western University, and we were able to obtain a classroom there for morning work, but not for afternoon classes, as the room was required. In London we have also co-operated with the Technical and Art School, and a number of our pupils are going there. In Hamilton, at the Victoria Convalescent Home we have one teacher who carries on the preparatory and shop work. Some of our men are going to a business college and a number are going to the Hamilton Technical and Art School, taking work in machine shop practice, drafting, electricity and other subjects. At Ottawa we have a teacher of our own in the preparatory and commercial subjects, and we are starting light shop work as well, and projecting a course on the automobile.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Where?—A. At the Sir Sandford Fleming Home, on Chapel street. At Kingston, we recently started classes in elementary subjects and carpentry. We have no classes in all our hospitals in preparatory work, commercial work and light shop work but depend on the technical schools for special instruction. In view of this inquiry I wrote to the teachers of the different hospitals, and I have the figures for this week. In Spadina Military Hospital, Toronto, there are 167 in attendance; at the Central

[Mr. W. W. Nichol.]

Military Hospital, 60; at the Central Military Convalescent Hospital, London, 45; at the Victoria Military Hospital, Hamilton, 18. From the Mountain Sanitarium, Hamilton, there are 6 who come down daily for work to the Technical School. At the Sir Sandford Fleming Home, Ottawa, 24; at the Elmhurst Home, Kingston, 12, and there is one coming from the Richardson Home in Kingston. There is a total of 333 at present attending classes in Ontario. Some 413, however, have been in attendance, or have passed through our classes since we began last October up to the end of February. The figures are as follows: Toronto, 265; Hamilton, 40; London, 77; Ottawa, 31; total, 413. There was an increase during February of 90, and no doubt if the increase in March is commensurate there will be a hundred more on the lists.

By the Chairman:

Q. What will make the increase, increased facilities?—A. Increased facilities and increased interest on the part of the men.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. A greater number inquiring?—A. Yes, sir. At Spadina we have a system by which every man as soon as the medical officer considers that he is fit to take up this kind of work is at once requested to report to the vocational officer himself or to an officer there, and he is assigned to one or other of the classes and his attendance is checked up daily. We have the good fortune to have on the staff of the Spadina hospital, a Captain McCarthy, who has taken a very great interest in this work. He has been in France, and so has great influence over the men, the men have great confidence in his judgment. He understands employment conditions very well, and is able to advise them; and since he has come on the staff the classes have been growing very rapidly, and a great many men are taking up just the courses that will do them good. The number enrolled in the various courses to the end of February in vocational work is as follows, that is in all our hospitals up to the end of February, for at that time the Kingston hospital had not been brought in. Preparatory, 214; Civil Service preparation, 55, (20 of our students wrote on the Civil Service Examination on March 6); 40 book telegraphy, book-keeping, shorthand, and typewriting, 33; automobile engine and repair 75; carpentry and general woodworking 33; machine shop practice 79; electricity 7; industrial design 4; linotyping 1; fitting (mechanical fitters) 2; steam engine 1; gasoline engine instruction 1; show-card and sign-writing 9; one man is taking acetylene gas welding, music 2; mechanical and architectural drawing 71; art metal 6; and woodcarving 26; making a total of 659. I have their names here if it is necessary to give them. The technical schools are helping greatly to relieve the situation. It has been our policy from the first to make the fullest possible use of the facilities given at these institutions with their well organized courses of study selected staff, and costly equipment that should not be duplicated. We have the hearty co-operation of the authorities in every case. Up to the present we have not been asked to pay anything for maintenance although possibly in the future we will be. Anything at the present time that has been asked for was in the way of books and additional instruments only. At Hamilton there are at present 18, in attendance at the technical school, and eight have passed through the classes, in shop mathematics, machine shop works, etc., making a total of 26. At London, there are 12 taking such subjects as machine shop work, electrical work, mechanical drafting, and kindred subjects, and 17 have passed through the classes, making a total of 29. At Toronto there are 44 in attendance, and 52 have passed through the classes, making a total of 96, making a grand total of 151 attending the technical schools.

Q. Are those included in the list of 600 that you gave us?—A. Yes. A difficulty which we experienced at first was in getting a stable organization. Men's courses were constantly being interrupted by having to go for medical treatment. Sometimes they had only been a day or two in class when they were given a final board and discharged. Sometimes they were sent to other hospitals. In future re-education students taking months training for new occupations will form the nucleus of the classes and the classes will tend to become more permanent. Men who thought their discharge was imminent did not care to enter courses as they thought they would not be able to carry them through to completion, and that still is a difficulty. I have every reason to believe that the interest in classes will grow. We have in Toronto, Hamilton and London at least, the very best instruction available along industrial and technical lines. As these schools are generally at some distance from the hospitals we requested transportations for them and the Military Hospitals Commission supply the necessary carfare. In regard to the re-education cases, there are a considerable number of men scattered through the country, who were discharged prior to the beginning of the vocational branch of the Soldiers' Aid Association. We are now bringing them to Toronto, and later will assemble them at other centres, and have their cases investigated. Each of these men is examined as to previous education and industrial experience by the vocational officer. There is also a survey made by the medical officer, and then a disabled soldiers training board is held consisting of those two officers and a member of the Commission, and recommendations as to the man's training are sent to Ottawa. If they are approved he is put on vocational pay, and his family is given support for the period that it will be necessary to give him his re-education. We send out letters to all the branches of the Soldiers' Aid Commission.

DEAR SIR,—From time to time there will no doubt come under your notice cases of returned men who would appear from the nature of their disabilities to be unable to resume the occupations they pursued previous to enlistment.

It is the intention of this Commission to see to it that every man so unfortunate shall have an opportunity to learn some occupation suited to his condition and capacity, the support of himself and his family or dependents, during the period of re-training, and for one month after it is completed, being provided for according to scale.

I have the honour, by direction, to request that my attention be promptly drawn to each case so that steps may be taken for immediate investigation.

By the Chairman:

Q. How do you determine whether a man is worthy of re-education?—A. In the first place on a man's medical record which comes from Quebec there is a notice that the man should consult the vocational officer and frequently there is a red seal drawing attention to the fact that he was very much disabled, and it would appear he should be re-educated. If such a man applies to me, or he has been recommended by our branch secretaries, he is brought to Toronto, or to some other centre. There is a survey, form "A" with regard to his family history, his previous education and his industrial experience, that is to say what his principal trade was, what other work he did, whether or not he failed at it or made good, and what wages he had been making. Then the form "B" is filled out, which is a more personal one, is filled out, taking into account his intelligence and capacity, his reading habits, and various other things. Such as whether he has a clerical or mechanical type of mind. Then the medical officer makes a similar survey, pointing out to us certain occupations which the man could not with profit, but rather with danger to himself, take up, and suggesting some line that might be the best for a man in his present physical and mental condition, and which would make the fullest use of his remaining capacity. Then those three surveys are brought before the Disabled Soldiers' Training Board, which consists of the Vocational Officer, the Medical Officer, and a member of the Commission. The man's case is discussed and a recommendation made and sent to Ottawa for approval.

[Mr. W. W. Nichol.]

Q. And is passed on by the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. Then the proper arrangements are made, and the man's pay goes on?—A. Yes, and we make arrangements to give him the desired occupation.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If there is insincerity in the statements in his application, is there any allowance to go on?—A. Up to this time I have had no such cases.

Q. They are very satisfactory?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many men could you take care of?—A. Well, with Technical School here we could take care of a very large number, 300 or 400, I guess.

Q. And in the other places how many, all told?—A. In Hamilton, in the regular Technical School there, I should say another 200 or 300; and in London probably about 150 or 200.

Q. What other places are there?—A. There will be Whitby and Guelph.

Q. That comprises all the technical schools that there will be?—A. Yes.

Q. Whitby will take care of how many?—A. There will be about 500 there in hospital, I suppose. By an alternating scheme, by using our class room in alternation, having a man go to a class room part of the day and then take shop-work another part of the day, we can take charge of another 100; from 150 or so.

Q. How much of a staff do you expect to employ?—A. At present we have two of our men at London, and we have three men in the Technical School that are doing our work. In Toronto we have five men, but at the Technical School we have other five or six men doing our work. At Hamilton we have about three or four of the Technical School teachers, and one of our men.

Q. How many at Whitby?—A. At Whitby I think we will require at least one preparatory teacher, one teacher of commercial work, one shop teacher, and possibly also other teachers might be required for other branches. Of course the staffing of Guelph has not reached anything like our final plans, but to my mind Guelph will help us out wonderfully in the re-educating end of the work.

Q. You think that is going to be a No. 1 place?—A. I do, yes.

By Mr Sutherland:

Q. Are we at the present time providing any training along agricultural lines?—A. We are planning that when we go to Guelph we expect to have one of the faculty of the Agricultural College, which is nearby, and possibly senior students may assist from time to time.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What proportion of returned men coming under your notice are ready to take up farming in order to return to farm work, or take up farming as an occupation?—A. Personally I have not had many, but Captain McCarthy, at Spadina avenue, says that he has had quite a number who are willing to return to the farm. I have, however, had young farmers ask for such special courses in stock-judging, soil-testing and work of that kind.

By the Chairman:

Q. In order to better fit them to return to their own farms?—A. Yes, sir, and have had such requests even for learning barn framing and carpentry instruction, so that they can do their own building and repair work.

By Mr. Pardeè:

Q. Do you expect to prepare for agricultural training in Whitby too?—A. I think there will be some facilities there, and we intend to do a small amount. I look upon Whitby as a sort of preparatory school to Guelph.

Q. To send them on to Guelph?—A. Yes.

[Mr. W. W. Nichol.]

By the Chairman:

Q. That is, the agricultural students?—A. Yes, and the others also. That is to say, a man who is looking forward to machine shop practice instruction can begin in Whitby, studying mechanical draughting, shop mathematics and the theoretical side of his work, and then when he goes to Guelph he can carry the practical side.

Q. I suppose you will do your re-education work at Guelph?—A. I think the bulk of it will be done there; that is mechanical training.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Is there anything you can suggest with a view of improving the lot of returned soldiers, that is not being done now?—A. To my mind the main thing is a bigger organization to cope with the serious problem of vocationally advising the large number of returned men who apparently are so disabled that they will require it. It takes a considerable time to sit down beside a man and talk over his previous education and his wishes for the future, especially in the condition in which some of them are physically; and unless it is not to be done in a perfunctory manner it is going to take up a very great deal of time. Personally the pressure of the work has been such that at present I have begun to feel it. I am asking to have assistant vocational officers appointed for the larger centres—men who are acquainted with technical school organization and understand industrial conditions well enough to be able to advise these men; and in that way I hope to cope with the problem and to clear off the large number of those cases that may be now pending.

Q. There are a large number of cases now pending for the purpose of determining what occupation a man should really follow?—A. There will be very soon.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Do you include in your training men who have been discharged? Take the case of an ex-soldier, but who has been discharged from the army, do you give him training also?—A. If he has been discharged, and has suffered disablement that prevents him from going back to his old position, then we recall him and give him a course of instruction. I think, however, in future we will avoid that as much as possible. The men will receive their education while they are convalescing, and we will know better what to do for them when they are discharged. There will be no break in their courses and there will be no loss of valuable time.

Q. But a man who has not been in a convalescent hospital, would you consider him a subject for training?—A. Well, not unless he is really so disabled that in the opinion—

Q. In the pamphlet that was issued there is a statement that if a man has lost his means of making a living he belongs to Class 2 in consequence of the survey; is he then a subject for the training? I refer to the clause which says that able-bodied men who are out of work at the time of enlistment, or who have been superseded in their absence, and invalided and wounded men belong to Class 2, and that such will be taken care of?—A. I have not had much to do with that particular class.

Q. You deal with the men who are sent you?—A. Yes.

Witness discharged.

No. 1.

Creation of Mobilization Centres,
C.E.F., Military District No. 2.

In order that more care be exercised in regard to the enlistment of recruits, especially with reference to "over and under" age, by officers and n.c.o's engaged in recruiting, under H.Q. 593-3-7, dated 12-9-16, mobilization centres will be established at:—

- (a) Toronto (Armouries).
- (b) Hamilton (Armouries).
- (c) Sudbury,

with effect from the 26th February, 1917.

The purpose of these mobilization centres is:—

- (a) To examine before a Medical Board all recruits obtained for the C.E.F.
- (b) To attest those found medically fit.
- (c) To draft recruits found fit by medical boards to units for which recruited, or send them to units with lower standards of physical requirements for which such recruits may be found fitted.
- (d) To return recruits found medically unfit for any branch of the service and those who do not come up to infantry requirements and are unwilling to transfer to units with lower physical standard to points at which they offered for enlistment.

On and after the 26th February next, all recruits obtained in the District must be sent to one of these mobilization centres after preliminary examination before being attested and taken on the strength of a C.E.F. unit.

All recruits obtained in the city of Toronto, counties of Peel, York, Simcoe, Halton, Norfolk, Ontario, Dufferin, Grey and District of Muskoka will be sent to Toronto mobilization centre.

All recruits obtained in the city of Hamilton, counties of Wentworth, Lincoln, Welland, Brant and Haldimand will be sent to Hamilton mobilization centre.

All recruits obtained in the districts of Sudbury, Algoma, Nipissing, Timiskaming, Manitoulin Island, and Parry Sound, will be sent to Sudbury mobilization centre.

All recruits on proceeding to mobilization centres will take with them a single copy of Attestation Paper (M.F. "W" 23) with "Questions to be Put Before Attestation" filled in, and the medical examination certificate on the reverse side of the form filled in and completed by the medical officer or civilian practitioner who conducted the preliminary examination. The rest of the form will be left blank.

The recruiting officer should satisfy himself that the medical officer has received proper instructions regarding the conducting of such examinations from the A.D. M.S., M.D. No. 2.

Pay:—

Recruits will be paid by the mobilization centres up to the time they are drafted to a unit of the C.E.F.

A recruit having passed the preliminary medical examination is entitled to pay and allowances, as a private from the date of such examination, but if he wishes to remain at home for a few days before proceeding to mobilization centre, he will only be entitled to pay from the date of his leaving for mobilization centre, and not for the days he remains at home.

If a recruit fails to pass the medical board at the mobilization centre he should at once be paid up to and including the earliest date he can arrive back at the point he offered for enlistment. If the recruit is declared fit by the Medical Board, he is to be credited with pay and allowances up to and including the date on which he is due to report to the unit to which he is drafted, given an advance to cover his needs, and transferred by the paymaster of the mobilization centre in the regular way; Part II of orders to be carefully prepared by the O.C. mobilization centre and sent to the Inspector of Pay Accounts, C.E.F., Toronto.

The paymaster of a unit must not credit any recruit with pay until he receives the last pay certificate from the mobilization centre.

A refund of pay will be called for in the case of every man taken on a unit's strength after the 26th February, 1917, and whose attestation paper shows that he was not attested through a mobilization centre, as the attestation will be irregular.

Transport:—

Transport warrants for recruits proceeding to mobilization centres can be obtained through the chief recruiting officer M.D. No. 2. Return transportation will be issued at the mobilization centre.

The hours at which recruits will be examined by Medical Board at mobilization centres are as follows:—

Toronto.—9 a.m. to 12.30 p.m. and 1.30 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Hamilton.—2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Sudbury.—2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Each mobilization centre will make its own arrangements to accommodate over night recruits who may arrive by train after these hours; the cost of such accommodation to be deducted from the recruits' subsistence allowance at time of settlement of the man's pay account at the depot.

Uniform:—

Recruits will not be given uniform until they are drafted from the mobilization centre to units.

Returns:—

A certificate in the case of all men rejected is to be prepared by the Medical Board; this certificate to be signed by the rejected applicant, the officer commanding mobilization centre, as well as by the president of the Medical Board. The form of certificate to be similar to that for deserters, (M.F.B. 356, new series). This form can be obtained at the district stationery office.

A weekly return of unfits is to be compiled at mobilization centres on form similar to M.F.B. 238 (copies can be obtained at the district stationery office).

Two copies will be sent to the A.A.G., M.D. No. 2, and one copy to the other mobilization centres in the district.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

CITY HALL, TORONTO,
COUNCIL CHAMBER,

WEDNESDAY, March 21, 1917.

The committee met at 10.08 a.m., the chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

Members present: Sir Herbert Ames, chairman; Messieurs: Bennett, Marcell, McCurdy, Middlebro, Murphy, Pardee, Ross (Middlesex), and Sutherland, of the Commons Committee; Sir James Loughheed, Brigadier-General Mason, Senator Daniel and Senator Ross, of the Senate Committee.

The Hon. G. HOWARD FERGUSON, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are Minister of Crown Lands for the province of Ontario, I understand?—A. Yes.

Q. And have given considerable study to the matter of assisting returned soldiers to get back to civil life, is that so?—A. Yes.

Q. I understand you have prepared and are submitting legislation along that line?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you be good enough to file a copy of that legislation for our record and give us briefly an explanation of its purpose?—A. I can file with you a copy of the bill as it is in committee, now, it has not gone through committee. (See Exhibit No. 1 herein.)

Q. It is a Government measure, I suppose?—A. Yes.

Q. And therefore will be subject only to slight amendment?—A. Very slight amendment.

Q. Will you be good enough to give us the main purport of that bill?—A. The bill on the face of it is very wide in its terms, and leaves to regulation very largely the development and the working out of the scheme. It being in the nature of an experiment, we thought it wise to enable us to meet difficulties unforeseen, that might arise from time to time, that we should have authority by Order in Council to work out these difficulties, but the scheme in short is this, knowing the difficulty of inducing many men to go upon the land, and the possibility of having a number of misfits, we are taking the precaution of having every man pass through the hands of our Soldiers' Aid Commission, that is we have a sort of trial board, before whom the men who desire to go into Northern Ontario will go, and having been examined by this board as to their fitness and capability, will be passed on to us. We send them to the depot that we are establishing on the Government Experimental Farm, at Monteth, in Northern Ontario, where they go into training. This depot, or school, will be in charge of competent instructors, men who know the conditions in Northern Ontario, men who are experienced agriculturists, and they will have practical instruction in the elements of farming, that will enable them to undertake the work for themselves. They are to be properly housed and fed and clothed there, in a large dormitory, having a club-house in connection with it, and some social features to induce them—

Q. What do you do with the married men who have families?—A. That is one of the difficulties which we have not entirely solved. I have been proposing—I think is not any breach of confidence to say that I have been urging upon the Dominion Government very strongly, and I hope they will take the view that I hold myself, that they shall continue the separation allowance during the period of instruction. The men will be paid a wage for the work they do for us during the period of training, the purpose being that if a man becomes dissatisfied or finds that he is incapable of enduring that class of work, or that it is not congenial, that he can quit at any time and he is paid for the labours he has performed in the meantime. In that way we will select and hand-pick as carefully as we can the men whom we place on the land. Having given them a reasonable amount of training, which our instructors will decide, we purpose taking them and settling them in colonies more or less on the community basis, in fact largely upon the community basis, on a properly selected location along some line of railway, preferably the Transcontinental, I think, where we will establish central buildings, living quarters, dormitories, and all the other conveniences. We intend clearing around about that, beginning with an area of land from which the community will be largely self-supporting, we hope, very shortly.

By the Chairman:

Q. By returned soldier labour?—A. By returned soldier labour under competent instruction; once we get them there we will have no trouble taking care of the wife and family, because we can build our dormitories after the manner of apartments and that sort of thing, and having done that we propose cutting our townships into eighty-acre lots and clearing across the front of each lot, approximately ten acres, on which will be constructed buildings, and each one will be placed upon one of those eighty-acre lots. We will maintain the more expensive portion of machinery, plant, and that sort of thing, at the central point, where it can be made use of by the individual settler on application, at a nominal figure. A man who desires to have a little plant of his own and buy the less expensive implements, stock, and that sort of thing, we will, under our ordinary Settlers' Loan Act, advance him up to $500 for that purpose. That, shortly, is the whole scheme. We hope that it will meet with considerable success.

Q. Do I understand that from the point of view of the Ontario Government they practically are willing to assume the responsibility of re-employment until demobilization takes place?—A. Are you speaking generally?

Q. With respect to the underlying principle in connection with this legislation, do I understand that the Ontario Government assumes the responsibility to rehabilitate in civil life discharged soldiers?—A. We do not assume the responsibility, as I understand it. We are assisting, and, perhaps, I should not speak as to this, because it is a matter as to which the re-employment, in the ordinary sense, does not come under my jurisdiction; but we are, as, perhaps, you know, lending the assistance of our institutions and our staff and all that sort of thing in a re-educational way—our employment agencies and bureaus are co-operating with the Dominion, but my understanding of the situation is that it is in a co-operative way with the Dominion.

Q. What I am endeavouring to ascertain is whether, through the Soldiers' Aid Commission and through your project for replacing men on the land, you intend to deal with all the returned soldiers, or whether you simply intend to deal with a certain proportion of them, leaving the balance to be cared for by other features?—A. We deal with all; so far as we undertake the work, we deal with all who come to us.

Q. The Provincial Government, then, assumes the responsibility of finding employment or habitation for the returned men of Ontario?—A. Now, what do you mean by that?

Q. Exactly what I say?—A. Assume the responsibility—do you mean that we are assuming all the financial burden that the Dominion Government should assume?

Q. Put it in another way: How far do you expect the Dominion Government's responsibility to extend in respect to the demobilization of the men in Ontario?—A. That was pretty largely settled at a discussion at Ottawa, at the time of the organization of the Dominion Hospitals' Commission some year or more ago.

[Honourable G. Howard Ferguson,]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Is this what you refer to:—

2. "That each province should assume the responsibility of finding employment for discharged soldiers who upon their return to Canada are physically and otherwise fit to assume such employment, and all expenditures necessary in undertaking this duty are borne by the province."

3. "As to all returned soldiers who for any cause are incapacitated for employment or who require special care or treatment before being able to undertake such employment, the Military Hospitals Commission representing the Dominion Government assume all responsibility."

A. I am not quite clear as to that. My recollection does not entirely agree with this, and I would not like to say.

By the Chairman:

Q. The trouble is that if the problem grows to be very great and neither the Provincial nor the Dominion Government is primarily responsible for the solution there is danger of a good deal of falling through between the two, and I want to ascertain from you whether in the view of the Ontario Government the responsibility for final employment which is assumed by the Soldiers' Aid Association and the responsibility for getting the men back to the land in Ontario has been assumed by the Provincial Government?—A. So far as the scheme I have outlined is concerned it comes peculiarly under my department because I have charge of the northern part of the province. As far as that is concerned we are assuming all responsibility in connection with it, although we are hoping, and urging very strongly, that the Dominion Government should continue, as I say, the separation allowance. When you go beyond that field, our Soldiers' Aid Commission has been doing a good deal of work in connection with re-education, and finding employment, and so on, but to say that we are assuming the entire responsibility for all men who come back here, I would not like to do that.

Q. Not quite that. I think it is clearly understood the Dominion Government will look after the disabled man, will look after his vocational training, and, if necessary, his re-education up to the time that he is discharged as presumably capable of supporting himself, or able to make the difference between his pension and what he requires to live. Your scheme relates mainly to men who are not disabled?—A. Yes.

Q. Consequently what we are endeavouring to ascertain is whether in your judgment the responsibility of the Dominion Government throughout Ontario is for those demobilized fit men, as well as for the injured. I understood you to say that practically all you wanted from the Dominion Government was that while your men were in your farm colony, if they were married the pension allowance should continue to their families?—A. As far as this particular scheme is concerned, that is all we have been urging. It is perhaps not correct to say it is all we want. We have urged, without success, further consideration, but the view—

Q. On what line?—A. Perhaps I am not at liberty to say, because it was at the Interprovincial Conference, at which the Prime Minister presided, that the whole matter was discussed, and various views were advanced, and I do not know that it was ever reduced to reports.

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. You refer to the conference in Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. In October, 1915?—A. No, this last fall.

SIR JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, I remember it. No, it has not been reduced to writing in any way. It was an informal discussion.

[Honourable G. Howard Ferguson.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. The project you have outlined, and which your Government intends to carry out under the legislation that is now before the House is altogether an agricultural one, as I understood it?—A. It is, yes.

Q. But you do not speak with finality as to the Government's action in general?—A. No.

Q. You are merely explaining that up to the present time that is all you have done?—A. I did not understand—in fact I did not know why I was asked to come down here. As a matter of fact I was telephoned and asked to come down, and I assumed it was merely to explain what the land settlement project was, not to speak generally as to what the Government's attitude and its policy may be. If that had been intimated to me, I would have been glad to be in a position to tell you that.

Q. But so far you have spoken only of the agricultural project?—A. Yes.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Can you tell us what the other provinces are doing or contemplate doing?—A. No, I cannot say as to that.

By the Chairman:

Q. Were you present at the Interprovincial Conference covered by this report? (Showing report)—A. Is that the report dealing with the formation of the Military Hospitals' Commission?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

The WITNESS: I was not there all the time, I had to leave, but the Prime Minister was present until the Conference concluded.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you remember this clause? (Reads):—

"At a conference between the Military Hospitals' Commission and representatives of the Provincial Governments, it was agreed (1) that all expenditures necessary in connection with the organization and administration of provincial and other purely local committees be borne by the provincial and local authorities, with such voluntary contributions as may be received.

"(2) That each province should assume the responsibility for finding employment for discharged soldiers who, upon their return to Canada, are physically and otherwise fit to assume such employment, and all expenditures necessary in undertaking this duty are borne by the province.

"(3) As to all returned soldiers who, for any cause, are incapacitated for employment, or who require special care or treatment before being able to undertake such employment, the Military Hospitals Commission, representing the Dominion Government, assume all responsibility."

Now, is that as the Provincial Government of Ontario understands the situation?—A. As I have already said, Sir Herbert, I left the first day of that Conference and I have never seen the report of its proceedings until the present occasion. Largely that was my view of it, but not entirely.

Q. Would it be possible for you, Mr. Ferguson, perhaps after consultation with your colleagues, if that seems desirable, to write this committee a letter—A. I would be very glad to do so.

Q. Telling us exactly what the attitude of the Provincial Government is upon that finding?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How much land do you give the returned soldiers?—A. 80 acres each, with 10 acres cleared upon it.

[Honourable G. Howard Ferguson.]

Q. You advance them, then, so much money?—A. We make an advance up to $500 on almost any terms he may wish.

Q. The title to the land does not go to them right away?—A. No, the title does not go to them for five years.

Q. What security do you get for your advance?—A. The land, the man's clearing and improvements.

Q. But the title still remains in you?—A. Yes, we hold the unpatented land with the improvements upon it.

By the Chairman:

Q. Whatever improvements the man makes go with the land if he falls down?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. They revert to the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. Will the $500 advance be sufficient to buy implements?—A. We make use of the loan proposition in the case of the ordinary settler to-day, and we have found—it has only been in operation for a year—that it has worked fairly satisfactorily. There are some cases where it might perhaps be well to advance the settlers more; but when you consider the situation, particularly in the Northern country, where the land is fairly well wooded with pulp, which is a fairly remunerative thing, what the settler may get from the 5 or 6 cords per acre, together with the money advanced by the Government, is a pretty fair sum.

Q. What amount of interest does he pay?—A. 6 per cent without any charges of any kind.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If he has cattle do you keep them as security?—A. We retain control over everything.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Over the settler's land and his cattle?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. The scheme which you have outlined is really supplementary to the plan which was arrived at at the Interprovincial Conference.—A. Entirely so.

Q. You are giving the returned soldier preference over the ordinary settler?—A. Yes, we are giving him a very substantial preference.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You give the returned soldier preferential treatment in the matter of appointment to the Civil Service?—A. Yes, by Order in Council.

By the Chairman:

Q. I suppose the lands available to the returned soldiers would only be unpatented Crown Lands. Do you contemplate purchasing any farm lands in the older settled areas of the province, and treating the returned soldier in the same way in respect to them?—A. The Agricultural Department deals with that branch of the work, Sir Herbert, and the Prime Minister has under consideration some idea with which I am not entirely familiar. I may say that I have not been in attendance at the House for a couple of weeks and do not know just what has been done.

Q. Have these plans sufficiently reached maturity to be useful for the consideration of this Committee?—A. I cannot say as to that, I have not talked with the Prime Minister recently about it.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The $500 that you referred to is the amount that you now grant to settlers under the Act?—A. Yes.

[Honourable G. Howard Ferguson.]

Q. I notice that Clause 8 reads, "For supplying necessary machinery, tools, stock and assistance in building upon and otherwise improving the lands located upon or settled under this Act." Is any money to be given for these in addition to the $500 provided for by Clause 7?—A. I was endeavouring to make clear a moment ago that we take the right to buy machinery and retain it ourselves; at least, it will belong to the community and it will be used upon a community principle; for instance, a threshing mill, it is not necessary that everybody should have one. We will own one, which will do all the threshing; and the more expensive class of machinery we will buy and own ourselves. The smaller machinery, like ploughs, harrows, and so on, the individual settler will want, as well as his own horses, and we advance the money.

Q. Clause 9 reads: "Providing for the purchase of stock, implements and agricultural machinery for the use of settlers, and the terms of such user," and clause 10 reads: "For co-operative arrangements for the purchase and sale of goods, wares, merchandise, produce, stock, machinery, implements and other articles by settlers." Is the $500 intended to cover all those items?—A. No.

Q. What does it cover?—A. What the man wants to buy for himself.

Q. And the Government provides the community chattels in addition?—A. Yes.

Q. What would be a fair amount then for a settler?—A. The average settler with 10 acres of land cleared, for an average of even four cords of pulp at $5 a cord would do fairly well.

Q. He will get $500 for his own individual machinery and the use of the community plant?—A. Yes. Moreover, taking the stock proposition we buy stock by carloads and send it up there, so that the settler gets it at the lowest possible price. One difficulty is that if a settler wants to buy a cow it costs more to transport it than it does to buy it.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. The construction of roads in a spruce timber country is a very important thing for the new settler. Are you doing anything towards constructing colonization roads?—A. Oh, yes. We spent last year through my own Department about $600,000 in building roads up there.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. That is going on all the time?—A. Yes.

Q. Under Mr. Whitson?—A. Yes.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. At the conference held in 1915, the matter of devising means to place soldiers at the conclusion of the war was brought up. They will be coming in large numbers, which is one of the problems treated. The report of the Conference says: "The other problem relates to the finding of employment for the large number of soldiers who within a comparatively short space of time will return to Canada at the conclusion of the war, and the Military Hospitals Commission as well as the Provincial authorities have undertaken to give this question their consideration with a view to arriving at a possible solution thereof at a subsequent conference." It is suggested that the matter would have special inquiry by the Federal authorities. Has anything been done regarding that?—A. By the Federal authorities? I do not know anything about that.

Q. You are not in touch with the Federal authorities?—A. No.

Witness discharged.

Mr. THOS. L. CHURCH, Mayor of Toronto, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are mayor of the city of Toronto?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have given a good deal of time, study and interest to matters pertaining to recruiting and to the returned soldiers?—A. I have.

Q. We would be very pleased, Mr. Mayor, to have any statement or information that you may see fit to give to the committee for its consideration?—A. Well, I may say, Mr. Chairman, that in order to save time I have prepared a short statement which I submit in printed form, as this is the day appointed, I understand, for receiving suggestions or helpful criticisms. The soldier to-day is a civilian practically throughout the country, and is entitled to go to the military authorities, technically, and make a complaint; but in practice, in almost every case, he declines to make a complaint because he does not want to be looked upon as a "squealer." I may say that it is in the interest of the Government and the country generally that these matters should be brought to your attention. I congratulate you on the work that you have done so far; it will, in my opinion, have very important results.

The first thing I wish to lay before you, as Chairman of the Board of Police Commissioners of this city of half a million people, is that I take exception to remarks made here yesterday by a witness, Major Wilson, of the Military Hospitals Commission. I have with me in attendance the chief of police of the city, who is one of the best chiefs we have in Canada, and one who has been a soldier himself, and has had a great many years' experience; and there is no city in the Dominion that has given more active police aid to the military authorities than Toronto has. Toronto has done everything possible. At the suggestion of General Logie when we had 20,000 troops here, we ceased arresting soldiers for trivial offences on the street, and notwithstanding the great number of soldiers we had here, we obtained good results under that system. The Police Board suggested that the military authorities should look after their own men on the streets, which has been done. We have no complaints on that score from the military authorities. I think that a little more tact on the part of some of the civilian officials of the Military Hospitals Commission would achieve better results from the municipalities. For three years I have been President of the Union of Canadian Municipalities, and I know that this is not a local complaint by any means. I think a little more tact and courtesy on the part of minor civilian officials of the Military Hospitals Commission would produce more harmonious relations with the municipalities. The evidence given yesterday by Major Wilson, is in my opinion, not correct. I have seen very little drunkenness on the street myself. We have a very active police force here. Owing to the war a great many of our force have gone overseas, and you cannot get as good men to take their places. I hope you will call on the chief of police a little later on to give evidence. We have been doing everything possible, we have plain clothes men and detectives on this work and they are very active. In the police court there are prosecutions every day by the dozen for selling liquors to soldiers and others. Under the Military Hospitals Commission's own auspices I have seen men coming into the city under the influence of liquor. At the station the other day I saw one man throw a bottle of whisky out of the window which narrowly missed injuring the Chairman of the Soldiers Aid Commission and others. If it had struck any one it would have injured him very severely. Now, these people were under the control of the Military Hospitals Commission, they came from the city of Quebec, and liquor was on the trains in large quantities. It is only fair to say that matters have been remedied latterly. We wish to work in harmony with the Commission, and I think that a little more tact should be shown on the part of the civilian officials of that Commission, who have not been to the war and who are not in a position to criticise the returned soldiers. The conduct of these returned soldiers in the city of Toronto has, on the whole, been most admirable. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the chief of police is here and will, a little later on, probably give you his views upon the question.

The statement which I have prepared is, I may say, based very largely upon the complaints I have heard, and the interviews I have had with these soldiers since the war started, having during that period met hundreds of them in the city. The statement sets out shortly the different points I desire to bring before your attention. I would like especially to call your attention to the second paragraph—I will not read the whole of the statement, but I desire to emphasize this paragraph:

“All honour to our heroes”—

I regret I cannot agree with Lieut.-General Sir Sam Hughes, when Sir Sam told a Toronto audience the other night “Not to pamper the returned soldiers.” I wish that such warnings were needed. There is no danger of the returned soldier being pampered, either in Toronto or any place else. Under our Militia Department, everybody in sight was pampered but the soldiers on active service. An officer could go overseas, and come back wounded to find that he is junior in rank to some officer who was junior to him when he left Canada and has been promoted to high military rank, without sacrifice of comfort or hazard of life or limb. I hope that Sir Edward Kemp will make a change in the direction of greater consideration for returned soldiers. I am proud of what Toronto has done. There is a fine spirit among the people of this city.

“But the best of us do not need to be warned against the sin of pampering the returned soldiers. We have got to improve a whole lot before we need any such warnings or begin to do as much for the returned soldiers as these soldiers and their comrades have done for us.”

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. The various paragraphs of this statement contain a relation of your personal experience in this matter?—A. Yes. Then on page three you will see some constructive matters are dealt with there. People will not go on the farm owing to the lack of conveniences, and a method is set out there, under the heading “Advanced Hydro Policy,” by which men going on the farm, or taking up agricultural work in either of its branches will be enabled to get the same conveniences on the farms as are now enjoyed by the people in the cities. Then on the next page, in paragraph 8, I deal with the great inland waterways, which will be a source of employment to a large number of men. The next subject taken up is that of vocational training. Many men are tired of country life, and after the war is over will all want to flock to the city. In that paragraph I call attention to the fact that before the war rural Ontario was depopulated by 500,000 in ten years. These are the figures the Hydro-Electric Commission has prepared. One of the main reasons for the under-production in Ontario is the fact that there are no adequate conveniences on the farm to-day. The province is without a proper system of good roads, hydro-radios, hydro-telephones, and cheap light and power. Sir Adam Beck should be encouraged to bring the boon of cheap light and power to every farm in the province, with its attending conveniences. On page 5 I have a paragraph in reference to a survey. If peace was declared to-morrow there is no survey in the city of Toronto of the men who have gone to the war and their vocations, and employers have not been approached with a view to seeing what should be done for them when they come back. I suggest that something might be done along that line by the Federal Government, with the help of the municipality. On page 6 I advocate an educational campaign with regard to those soldiers who are employed by the manufacturers of Toronto. Many of the manufacturers of Canada are reducing the pay of their old employees after they come back from the war because the returned soldier has not one hundred per cent of efficiency. A case came before the Board of Control this morning. A man had a good position, and when he came back he was ordered to climb ladders although the man had only one leg. The manufacturers should not expect one hundred per cent efficiency from the soldiers. The manufacturers of Canada cannot look at the returned soldiers in the cold light of dollars and cents and expect a hundred per cent efficiency. The manufacturers should consider that if it were not for the soldier he might not have the prosperity he has to-day and make the money he is making. For that reason I think there should be an educational campaign among the manufacturers to urge them to go further. Some manufacturers no doubt are doing splendidly. I regret that the country has little use for the soldier after he is brought back unfit. I claim that the returned soldier should be kept on the country's pay-rolls for two years after the war, until industrial conditions readjust themselves and until the dislocations brought about by the war are solved. I understand the soldier under Class 1 comes home and he is unfit, and he is given fifteen days' pay, and after the country using him they turn around and say, "We have no further use for you." There is a great deal of hardship on the families along this line. The same remark applies to the Patriotic Fund and the Pension Pact. On page 7 there is something about the Hospitals Commission, and I think it is a fair criticism.

"In my opinion the Hospitals Commission should be abolished, and their duties transferred to a department of the Government. There were too many commissions appointed in time of peace, and this policy seems to have been continued unnecessarily in war time. The tendency of these commissions is to shift responsibility from the Government, and the returned soldier should be able to deal directly with the Government. Many of these commissions are out of touch with the municipalities. I do not intend this in any spirit of criticism of the splendid and public-spirited men who compose the Hospitals Commission, who have on the whole done good work, but many of them have had no practical experience in hospital work, and some of the officials are more or less amateurs. As everybody knows, the hospital business is highly technical work and requires the best brains that the country has in this connection."

I also refer to the Patriotic Fund, and add that the care of the wounded and missing soldiers overseas should have been assumed by the Government itself; the soldier who is a prisoner of war should not be left to the mercy of private organizations, but should be a direct charge on the Government. Regarding convalescent homes, there is no reason why Whitby should have been opened, or Guelph, notwithstanding what was said here yesterday. The Hospitals Commission came to this city and opened up two old ramshackle buildings that were more or less condemned for educational purposes—Bishop Strachan's old college and the old Knox College. The plumbing, in my opinion, was not satisfactory. They were old ramshackle buildings. There were a large number of other buildings that could have been opened, such as the buildings connected with the university and others. On account of the hotel policy of the present Government, a lot of hotels were closing their doors, many of them having comfortable furniture and conveniences and homelike conditions. I had a letter to day from a soldier at Whitby, who says he has been housed and treated there as though he were insane. He is not insane. He wants to be with his people; he wants to see his friends. His nerves are high-strung and out of condition owing to shock and that sort of thing. He has been herded out there and treated more or less as if he was out of his mind. All those soldiers need care and quietness, and when they are home with their families they become normal more readily than when separated from their families; I refer to that later on. There were a large number of public buildings in Toronto; it is unfair for the Hospitals Commission to say that they could not get them here. The city had the old General hospital on Gerrard street, a building capable of housing 700 men. We gave that building up to the Dominion, and they use it for a base hospital for this military district, and the Government even asked the city to pay the rent of that building, which they are paying, $10,000 a year, to the Hospital Trust, which is a city trust. That was one of the buildings that should have been taken over. Dr. Hastings is a very capable health officer, he has inspected a large number of new schools and found them ideal for all classes of soldiers coming back, whether suffering from mental diseases or not. One of those schools is known as the new Jesse Ketchum School; another one is the new Park School. There is also the new School of Commerce and Finance, erected at a cost of $700,000.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Would those be available for the use of the Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes. The Hospitals Commission never came to the city to get together. We could have turned over a lot of those buildings, in fact there are a lot of civic buildings in the Exhibition Ground, and others.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Were you consulted about the buildings they have now before they were taken?—A. Well, we offered them some buildings. They did not come to us; they seemed to prefer the country to the city.

Q. Did they ask you about the Bishop Strachan School and about Knox College? Were you consulted about those buildings?—A. We were consulted, yes; we helped to furnish them and fix them up; in fact we did all the fixing up of the Bishop Strachan College, the first college which they got. I might say, in conclusion of that part of my remarks, that there are an abundance of places in the city of Toronto without going to Whitby. The Government has another place at Guelph. What are they doing at Guelph? We have erected a more modern farm in Toronto here, seven miles from the city, on Yonge street, which cost $800,000, with more modern buildings than Guelph. The Government are going to take those prisoners and move them down from Guelph to our more modern farm on Yonge street—move the prisoners which are in the Guelph farm here and turn the Guelph site over to the Hospitals Commission. Now, the Hospitals Commission directly are going to cause the parents and the relatives of the soldiers from Toronto a great deal of inconvenience. The relatives of the soldiers will have to pay prohibitive rates for travelling on the Grand Trunk Railway. The service is bad, as they have taken trains off both to Whitby and Guelph.

By the Chairman:

Q. I was suggesting yesterday that negotiations should be entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway to run a Saturday excursion train from here to Whitby and back?—A. That is a detail.

Q. For soldiers' wives and children, at reduced rate, say 50 cents for parents, and 25 cents for children?—A. My argument is, why should not the Hospitals Commission use the farm on Yonge street, only seven miles from this city, with better buildings and conditions, instead of sending Toronto soldiers to Guelph? The returned soldier has to go fifty or sixty miles to Guelph.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is this farm on Yonge Street a city institution?—A. Yes, it cost $800,000; it has 80 acres; it can be reached by automobile right from this City Hall in half an hour or forty minutes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you educational facilities there?—A. Well, I don't just understand this high-sounding name—educational facilities and vocational training—but they could have all the educational facilities they have at Guelph; it is the same kind of farm

[Mr. Thos. L. Church.]

Q. Have they teachers and class-rooms and laboratories and all those appliances that are used in the teaching of agriculture?—A. Yes, and we could have them more modern than they have at Guelph. It is erected with the authority of the Ontario Government, and is patterned from Guelph. On page 8 I have an item regarding the transportation:—

“Returned soldiers should have the right to travel free on all electric railways in the Province. Many of these roads got subsidies and bonuses and obtained their charters for nothing from the municipalities, and they should be required for all time to carry our returned soldiers free. The City of Toronto own civic car lines, since the war started, have allowed them to ride free. If public ownership does this, so should private ownership.”

Then I speak of better conditions on the steam railways and at amusements. On page 9 there is a reference to lack of proper respect shown to returned soldiers, and I refer to the automobiles that should be provided at various depots, and that clubs should be organized to meet returned soldiers at the station and drive them to hospitals or homes. On page 10 I speak of the preference in employment that should be given to returned soldiers:—

“All public positions should be given to returned soldiers only. Those who are occupying public positions and have failed to do their duty during the war should vacate them at the war's conclusion, if they have been eligible for service. If necessary, to some extent at least, some should make way for the returned soldiers. At the present time the returned soldier is getting very largely only menial positions, when the best should be given him, including all vacancies in the Senate, judgeships and the higher positions in the civil service in all its branches, by the Dominion and Federal Governments and municipalities. The City of Toronto is engaging no one except returned soldiers, and we intend to continue this policy.”

It is a strange thing to me that the returned soldier is only being given menial positions in the public service. I contend that the higher positions in the public service should be given to them, and the giving of positions is not a commensurate recompense for all they have done for us.

Then, on page 10, there is a reference to the Great War Veterans' Association. I think they could assist in the solution of this question, if their services were utilized. On page 11 there is a reference to the fact that a soldier is exposed to a great deal of hardship regarding his taxes. Many of these men are in arrears for taxes, and have had the bailiff put in on them. These men are now in Flanders and France, and I would suggest that the soldiers' taxes should be remitted until after the war. This, of course, would deplete the finances of the municipality, but that could be arranged: the sum could be capitalized and we could issue short-term bonds. The power of sale in mortgages should be postponed till 12 months after the war. That is the law now in some cases, but is gotten over by mortgagors coercing the families of the soldiers left at home.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You referred to the hard rule in regard to the payment of separation allowance?—A. Often I have letters from people that do not come within the four corners of the rule of the Patriotic Fund. There have not been as many lately, but there have been a number since the war started. For instance, a mother has an only boy and he has gone to the war and his living taken away and they ask “Does he not qualify for the fund?” There should be some other fund that would take care of him.

Q. Do they not give a separation allowance to a mother who has an only son?—A. Some of them do not get the separation allowance.

By the Chairman:

Q. If the son who was enlisted was the only son and his mother was solely dependent upon him, she not only gets the separation allowance and pay, but she gets something from the Patriotic Fund as well?—A. Some of them say there is no fund given to them.

Q. When you get letters of that kind do you ask the Dominion Government for their story?—A. I generally send them to the Government.

Q. You know there are always two sides to a story. You say the allowance should be increased?—A. There are some cases where the allowance should be increased.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you mean the general scale of separation allowance?—A. No. There are some people in Earls court, which is a British-born district, who say the allowance is not sufficient. With one accord the women sent their husbands to the war. They encouraged them to enlist. Many of them have large families, and the separation allowance is not sufficient.

Q. They get a bigger allowance from the Patriotic Fund for a bigger family?—A. I do not think the increased scale is sufficient under the high cost of living. Take the matter of coal for instance: the people of Earls court cannot buy it except by the bag. Our property commissioner made a report that in some instances people were paying as high as $30 a ton. It may seem incredible, but when you buy it by the bag and pay a high rate for the delivery of it it mounts up, and many people complain the scale is not sufficient for people with large families. I have heard very little criticism about the Patriotic Fund. It is beyond criticism, but there are some cases that do not come within the rule, and it is a hardship. I refer to page 11 of this memorandum, in regard to the delivery of telegrams. There is considerable hardship by reason of the delay in the delivery of these telegrams notifying people of the death of their relatives. The messengers come to the doors at all hours of the night and they will call out, "Your husband is killed." In some cases they telephone to a neighbour and have the telegram delivered in that way. You have a hard and fast rule about the loading of steamers at Halifax and St. John. You do not load a boat except between certain hours in the morning and afternoon. I think there should be a rule that telegrams should not be delivered except in reasonable hours, say between 11 at night and 6 in the morning.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a rule to that effect.

The WITNESS: It is a matter of working out the details. There is a great deal of hardship among the poorer people whose husbands are at the war. Then at the foot of page 11 there is a reference to another matter. Last Sunday about 40 men came in at North Toronto station and the majority of them were sent home because they were unfit. They were never at the front at all. This is a very serious thing in Toronto and in large cities. Men are not properly examined before they go away. There is evidently a great deal of carelessness, judging from what the people who write to me have to say. The examinations in a great many cases have not been satisfactory. Many unfit men are going over and coming back. This works out as a hardship on many families. They leave their employment. They think they are going overseas. They train for six months or a year, and the final medical examination passed, and then they are rejected in England, and they are sent out on the street. They cannot qualify for a pension. They come under clause 1, I think, and the result is that the country has no further use for them and they are stricken off the pay rolls. This is a hardship on the men and their families.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. You say many unfit men are being sent over?—A. Yes, many unfit men sent over. Last Sunday morning 60 per cent of the returned men came back were of that description. Many of them came to me and said they had three or four doctors at them, and they were sent over there having given up their living here, mechanics, and their wives got $1.10 a day, plus the other allowance, but now they are out of employment, and the country turns them adrift, and that should not be.
[Mr. Thos. L. Church.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You do not mean to say that is being done now?—A. Yes, I know the men come back and complain very bitterly and say it is unsatisfactory. At the foot of page 11 there is a reference to the unfit men who are returned, and the statement is made: "Many of these men, I understand, will not get pensions, as they are returned as unfit, and it is a great injustice to them, as they have to start civil life all over again, and many of them have no funds." On page 12 there is a reference to the census of native-born. The city of Toronto is not getting a fair count-up of the number of men who have enlisted. I think it should be in the interest of the country that such a census should be made. That is, a survey should be made showing the returns by provinces of the men native-born. The native-born Canadian is not given a fair show. He has been criticised in a manner which is not fair to the young men of Canada. I give an illustration of this. The Royal Canadian Horse Artillery in Kingston has sent 2,200 men to the front, and three-fourths of them came from Toronto. There are 250 men now ready to go. One thousand of these men are native-born Canadians and 500 are British-born, and the remainder are some Americans and others, born of American parents who have lived here a great many years. There is criticism all over Canada, and I think it would be in the interest of the native-born Canadian that such a census should be made to show that the Canadians have done their duty. I have several letters from the front asking that this be done, and the returned men have spoken about it.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. That information can be obtained from the Department in Ottawa?—A. I do not think you can get the information. It should be published.

Q. In every attestation paper you have it?—A. The attestation papers would show it, but there is no way of getting it as far as I know.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. It has all been tabulated?—A. You have it tabulated, but I think the information should be given to the public, so that the public would know. The next matter is about uniforms worn by the soldiers on the street. The men are going around in uniforms not becoming to the country for which they fought. They are given suits or the equivalent in money, but the rule should be that the man should be given a uniform and not the equivalent in money. In nine cases out of ten, the man will take the money.

By the Chairman:

Q. I think that is the custom. They have the option between the $13 suit and the money?—A. Yes. Then on page 13, No. 30, there is a reference to slackers. There are a lot of slackers even in Toronto who are going to the States. I know many cases of young men who have gone to the States. I think the States should be asked to report these men back to Canada as undesirables and I think their services should be utilized by the Government. There are some aliens—foot of page 13—and many of these men are in the hospitals in England, and some of them suffering from heart trouble and other ailments and they cannot get home, while officers, some of whom have never been to the front, can come home and take around moving-picture shows and matters of that kind, to the detriment of the returned soldier.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Who is responsible for that?—A. I am not prepared to say, General, but somebody must be responsible. In the meantime the returned soldier is getting the worst of it. Let me refer to a case which came before me to-day, of a young soldier who has been wounded four times. He is connected with a Toronto unit which is known as the 9th Battery. This battery was wiped out at St. Julien and has immortalized itself on the field of battle. Notwithstanding the fact that this young man has been wounded four times, severely, he was sent back to train newly enlisted men, and is now going back with a detachment of 40 or 50 from the local unit and will sail on Thursday or Friday from Halifax. Yet there are officers who have never seen service at the front who are allowed to return to this country and are engaged in showing from place to place moving pictures of battle scenes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What do you mean by your reference to moving pictures?—A. I understand Mr. Ross, that some officers who have never been to the front and who will not revert in rank, have been given jobs to return to Canada to such work as to show moving pictures throughout Canada of war scenes, and other kindred jobs. Yet here is this young man from the 9th Battery, who has been severely wounded four times and has been on service for two years and six months, being sent back again to the front, while these officers, who have never heard a shot fired in earnest, are being sent back to easy positions in Canada.

Q. Have you many complaints of that kind?—A. Yes, lots, I have forwarded the papers dealing with this young man's case to Ottawa, but I understand he is ordered to start for overseas to-morrow.

Q. What I asked was, have you many complaints of that kind?—A. I have received quite a few complaints from returned soldiers that officers are getting preferential treatment and that the privates are being discriminated against. I do not say that this has been so much the case recently, but certainly up to the end of last year the complaints were very serious.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. You say at the bottom of page 13 of your memorandum: "There is also considerable criticism about bringing home able-bodied soldiers because they will not revert in rank." Do you speak of officers of high rank?—A. What I say there is (reads): "There is also considerable criticism about bringing home able-bodied officers because they will not revert to rank, and while it is difficult for the men in the ranks to get leave, some of these officers, who have never been to the front, can get home."

Q. Why are these officers sent home?—A. I do not know why they come home.

Q. Why will they not revert in rank?—A. I do not know. This kind of thing does not help recruiting very much.

Q. I suppose you have reference to an officer of high rank who cannot go to the front in command of his regiment because he lacks experience. He could go to the front as a junior officer but he will not take junior rank?—A. That may be. But let me ask why a young soldier who has been wounded four times should be sent back again to the front?

Q. As to the officers to whom I refer, they have no use for them in England and therefore they are sent back to Canada.—A. That may be, but the private soldier is not getting the equality of treatment he should in this regard, with all due respect to the authorities. Mr. Chairman, let me cite this case to you: Last Saturday three returned soldiers arrived in Toronto, but were put into the wrong train and sent on to London. The London authorities returned the men to Toronto to my care, although I do not know what I have to do with the matter. Under the care of Sergeant-Major

[Mr. Thos. L. Church.]

Crichton the men went to the hospital of the Military Hospitals Commission on Spadina Avenue and sought to get admission. They were told that the place was crowded and they could not be taken in. Finally he said he would bring the men to a hotel and then the hospital took them in. Now, to my mind, this incident illustrates that the Military Hospitals Commission does not look sufficiently far ahead to make a proper and adequate accommodation. If peace were to be declared to-morrow, the Commission would not be able to cope with the situation that would arise, because they do not in advance make sufficient provision for accommodation for the future.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Do you know there is sufficient hospital accommodation in Canada to take care of every wounded man who returns?—A. No. What I say is, there should be some specially qualified department of the Government to look after the care of returned soldiers in the same way that they are cared for when they are going overseas. If that were done, we should see much better work performed and get better results. The municipality of this city has been dealing directly with the Dominion Government. It has turned over to the Government our whole accommodation in Exhibition buildings. In fact it has turned over every building available for the purpose which the city has. Had the Military Hospitals Commission asked us we would have done the same for them. With all due respect to the Commission, I say it is not fair that three men, such as those I have indicated, men who have returned to Canada after doing their part at the front, should be allowed to be put into the wrong train and sent off to London, returned from that city to Toronto, and then when they seek hospital accommodation here, find that the place is over-crowded and that they cannot be admitted.

Then with regard to the munition plants in Toronto, I think something should be done by this Committee to insure that the returned soldiers will get a fair show. At the present time these munition plants are stocked with women, to the detriment of the returned soldiers. I am not criticising the women, who have done wonders in this war, but there is a section of them who do not need this work.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do the women get the same pay as men for the same work in these factories?—A. I do not know whether they do or not. So far as I know there is no fixed rule in that regard. I would like to say that a resolution from the East End Ratepayers Association in Sir Edward Kemp's riding was presented to the Board of Control this morning, protesting against married women and girls being given the preference in munition plants over returned soldiers. Some 25 or 30 returned soldiers came to my office and stated that although they had gone to factories seeking employment, they were told that they were not needed because they did not have the necessary efficiency. I think there should be some amendment to the rules regarding these munition factories, so that they would be under Government control.

By the Chairman:

Q. Did you send these men who applied to you for work to the Soldiers' Aid Commission?—A. I did not. I dealt with the men myself because I could do so more promptly than the commission could.

Q. Do you not think the Soldiers' Aid Commission is the proper body to look after the employment of returned soldiers?—A. We do not want the poor fellows to come to us if there is some other authority to look after them. Nevertheless they do come and we cannot turn them away. They often prefer to come to us.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. When these men came to you did you telephone to the offices of the factories concerned to find out if they had refused the men work?—A. I sent some of the complaints to the representative of Toronto in the Cabinet and to Toronto members, because it is a Toronto matter.

Q. Do you know whether these men had really been refused jobs?—A. I do not, because the factories concerned would not give me the information. I am not entitled to have it, as I am only a civilian.

Q. I ask you again, did you find out from these factories whether these men had or had not been refused work?—A. I did not because it is not my duty. I took the word of the soldiers.

Q. Do you not think you should have done it before you put the blame on the munition factories?—A. I am not putting the blame on anybody. I get letters dealing with these matters, and I send them to the proper authorities, to the Dominion Government and to the representatives of Toronto in Parliament.

Q. Do you not know that by agreement between the province of Ontario and the Dominion Government the Returned Soldiers' Aid Commission agreed to find employment for all returned soldiers?—A. Do you know where they get their employment?

Q. From the Commission?—A. That is all right in theory but not in practice.

Q. But you have not sent these men to the proper authority to secure employment?—A. I did not know of any such assistance at all.

Q. You did not know that there had been an agreement between the Dominion Government and the Provincial Government?—A. This is the first I had heard of it.

Q. That all returned soldiers must apply to the Soldiers' Aid Commission, and they have agreed to find employment for them?—A. Do they do it in practice?

Q. I am saying: Have you asked them to do it?—A. Well, the men apply to the Soldiers' Aid Commission. Let me say this: The Civic Works Department has taken on 400 men. The men are sent down by the Soldiers' Aid Commission to the city hall, and we supply the positions. The complaint of the men is that the Commission supply them only with temporary work, and that is the end of them, and they come down and want the city to give them better positions.

Q. Have you inquired from the Soldiers' Aid Commission if that is true? We had evidence given yesterday that there were only 9 men who had not employment?—A. My office is in receipt of complaints that men are not satisfied with some of the jobs of the Soldiers' Aid Commission. If you were to go in there now you would probably find four or five returned soldiers looking for better work.

Q. When you go back, ask them if they have been to the Soldiers' Aid Commission, take their names, and then go down to the Soldiers' Aid Commission and find if they have been there. In that way you would find out facts, and you would have a case?—A. That is all right in theory, but I know what it is in practice. I think I have found as many jobs for returned soldiers as all the commissions put together.

Q. We had evidence in Montreal that one concern had given employment to 600 returned soldiers, and that they were being paid the same wages as anybody else?—A. We would like to get the names of those men from the Soldiers' Aid Commission. I do not know of any factory in Toronto that has taken on 600 men.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That was done in Montreal.

The WITNESS: There should be some way to regulate these factories. It is all right to refer men there. I know soldiers that have been given a list of places by the Soldiers' Aid Commission, they go to the factory and find there is no work; they cannot even get in to see the manager, and they are told, sometimes by a boy at the gate: "We have no positions." The result is that they deluge the city hall looking for work, and the city has provided employment for many of these men. We are working in harmony with the Commission. The Soldiers' Aid Commission has a most active chairman in Mr. McPherson. When the main body of soldiers come home, neither the Soldiers' Aid Commission nor any other agency can look after them. It is a three-fold problem, requiring the attention of the Federal, Provincial and municipal authorities, who must make a united effort. The obtaining of positions is a very small part of the recognition the soldiers should get for all they have done for Canada.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Have you a record of all the men that you have supplied positions for?—A. We know the names of the men who have got work.

Q. Have you a record such as the Soldiers' Aid Commission have?—A. Yes. We have an office, Sergt.-Major Creighton has charge of it.

Q. Then there is a record showing all the names of men who have been provided with positions?—A. Yes, the city has a record of that.

Q. That is only the city employees, but I mean the men you have provided positions for?—A. We have taken it up with the Soldiers' Aid Commission; we work as well as possible with them. Some of the soldiers claim that they are getting only temporary positions through the Commission.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do I understand that you have a special officer, Sergt.-Major Creighton, who keeps a record of all the applications, and what is done for each?—A. Yes, and the city department have a record of all given employment. We took on 40 men in one day last week.

I may say, in conclusion, gentlemen, that the system is wrong whereby an officer can resign in time of war. The privates have to endure to the end. In times of peace there is no objection to officers resigning, but in war times they should be treated just as the men are. It is not fair that they should have leave to return home while the privates have to stay at the front and see the whole thing through. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I wish you would call the Chief of Police to the stand for a few minutes in regard to the charges made against the work of the force yesterday.

Witness discharged.

Lieut.-Col. H. J. GRASETT, Chief of Police, Toronto, called, sworn, and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are the Chief of the Police Force of the City of Toronto, I understand?—A. I am, sir; I have been for thirty years.

Q. Yesterday, in evidence, it was intimated that there was a feeling on the part of those connected with the care of the convalescent soldiers in this city that they were not getting the fullest assistance possible from your Department in keeping the convalescent men from getting intoxicating liquors, and the statement was made that intoxicating liquor was very detrimental to the health and progress of the soldiers. What do you say to that?—A. I may say that since the Ontario Temperance Act came into operation, the police force of the city of Toronto has done its very best to carry out its provisions. We have succeeded to this extent: From the 16th of September until the end of the year 1916 there were 149 prosecutions for breach of the Act. Since that time, from the 1st of January to date, there were 187 cases, showing an increased number for a shorter period. Personally I have taken a great deal of interest in this Act, and I desire that we should test it thoroughly and leave no means untried to give effect to its provisions. The Police Force are imbued with that idea, and their officers have supported me in that wish. In order to stop the sale of liquor, police detectives, police constables and outside men employed for the purpose have been engaged, and money has been freely spent to put a stop to illicit liquor traffic. That we have entirely succeeded it would be absurd and idle to say; we have done our best and will continue to do it.

Q. This committee is not particularly interested, as part of its study, in the general efforts being made to enforce the laws in Toronto. What we are particularly interested in is the measures that are being especially taken to protect returned soldiers from doing themselves injury. Now, have you made any special efforts to protect the returned soldiers?—A. You cannot dissociate one from the other.

Q. Can you not exert more vigilance in certain sections of the city than in others?—A. That has been done. It was represented to me that the district in the immediate neighbourhood of the convalescent hospital on College street was particularly active in the sale of liquor. The officer in charge of that district was directed to take the matter up, and he succeeded, almost if not entirely, in putting a stop to it. But, gentlemen, you must understand that when a soldier goes out in uniform and visits a friend and gets drunk, the police cannot stop it, and there are more soldiers that come home under the influence of liquor by gifts of whisky than by the sale of whisky. And in the present state of the law I do not know whether any of you gentlemen have studied it, it would be impossible for angels, much less police, to eradicate this evil. When the conditions of the law will permit us, we act; and while we have not given exclusive attention to the soldiers, and do not propose to do so, the citizens of Toronto have to have their share of police protection; we have given all that we have reasonably been expected to do, and the returned soldier has to obey the laws of the municipality and of this country, the same as any other citizens, and should not be given any preference there.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do I understand you to say that you are not prepared to exercise any special consideration with a view to protecting the health of the returned soldiers?—A. They are getting their full share and all that we can be reasonably expected to do, but we will not give them exclusively our attention.

Witness discharged.

Colonel MARLOW recalled and further examined.

The CHAIRMAN: You have been recalled owing to the fact that when you were previously examined the Chairman of the Commission, Sir James Loughheed, was not present. The evidence which you will now give is in further development of what is already on the record as your evidence.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I hope we are not keeping you, Col. Marlow, from going overseas, by asking you to attend this Committee?—A. I do not quite understand the object of your question.

Q. You have offered for overseas service, and I thought perhaps, we have kept you from going, by requesting you to attend this Committee?—A. It is not likely that you have done so; I have not an overseas appointment at the present time.

Q. I did not know but perhaps you were about to leave. You were the A.D.M.S. of this district were you not?—A. Yes, I am yet.

Q. And, as such, you know a great deal about the medical service of this district, naturally?—A. It was my business to know about the medical arrangements of this district.

Q. Do you know anything about it medically?

WITNESS: Mr. Chairman, I have been an officer in the Army Medical Corps for 17 years, and I would like to ask you if this question is in order that I should be asked after that long period of service if I know anything about my business, when I have been in this position for two years.

Q. I am asking you if you know anything about the medical services of this district?—A. I have been Assistant Director of the Medical Service for the past two years, and, as such, it was my business to know about it.

Q. It was the presumption that you would, but I am asking you did you know anything about it?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think that question should be asked. I think it is quite in order to ask questions for the purpose of obtaining information, but I do not think questions should be asked which annoy the witness, I do not think you are justified in asking questions of that kind.

WITNESS: If I did not know anything about the medical services of this district and were not competent to carry it on, I presume the General Officer Commanding the district would have relieved me of my duties.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. As Medical Officer of the district, you had to do with the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you make a report upon the accommodation for patients throughout the country?—A. Do you mean outside of my own district?

Q. Yes?—A. When I reported on the Medical Services generally I did not deal particularly with the Military Hospitals Commission side of it, probably because that was not my special duty. At the same time I did mention in my report that it was necessary to extend the accommodation in the convalescent hospitals, and that it was urgent that it should be done.

Q. Did you furnish the Military Hospitals Commission with a copy of that report?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Were you asked to do so?—A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. Will you swear to that?—A. I swear to it. My instructions were to report officially and to supply a copy to the Minister, and a copy to Mr. McCurdy.

Q. Did Mr. Scammell ask you for a copy?—A. No, he did not.

Q. And you did not give him a copy of it?—A. I did not.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. If he had asked you, on behalf of the Commission, would you have given him a copy of it?—A. I had no right to dispose of any copy of my report in any other way than I was ordered to do.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And you did not do so?—A. I did not.

Q. In this district there are a number of out-patients?—A. There are a number of out-patients.

Q. In the course of your evidence the other day, you gave the impression that you were opposed to having out-patients?—A. I am decidedly against it.

Q. You are? Are you aware of the fact that you instituted that system in this district?—A. I am aware that I instituted that system in this district.

Q. Are you aware of the fact?—A. I am aware of the fact.

Q. And against the protest of the other members of the profession?—A. Against the protest?

Q. Yes?—A. I had no protest, I was merely dealing with the matter.

Q. Well, against the opposition of the others?—A. Excuse me, there was no opposition. I was dealing with the matter in my own district, and I instituted the system to meet the requirements at that time. We had the out-patient system, because at that time we had only the one Central Military Convalescent Hospital. We had not the accommodation to provide any other system, but in the process of evolution it has become very evident to me that the proper plan of dealing with these men is to keep them under proper supervision, and therefore, as soon as the Bishop Strachan school was opened up I advised the Commission by letter—the local authorities of the Commission—that it was necessary to look ahead and provide further accommodation. It was on my recommendation that the Commission took over Knox College, and before Knox College was ready I ordered my medical officers to gather up all the out-patients that were available, and to bring them in as soon as the hospital was ready for occupation.

Q. You said the other day that the out-patient system was the outgrowth of the lack of accommodation by the Military Hospitals Commission in this district?—A. Where please?

Q. You will find it at page 182—I do not know whether that is very important. Have you any explanation of it. (Copy of evidence handed to witness?—A. (reads) "At that time, I may say, there were probably a large number of out-patients. You see when these Central Convalescent Hospitals were established, in many cases they were inadequate to accommodate all the returned men, so that an "out" patient system was adopted, whereby men did not live in the hospital, but reported there for examination."

Q. Now, as a matter of fact when was the accommodation of the military convalescent hospitals inadequate?—A. From the time that the Military Hospitals Commission was appointed the accommodation has been inadequate to meet the requirements.

Q. Give me your figures?—A. I cannot give you my figures; I have not the figures prepared.

Q. Suppose we have them and show the contrary, what do you say to that?—A. I am only speaking in respect to my own district.

Q. Let me read them—on April 1st, 1916, the accommodation was 1,446 throughout Canada, and the vacant beds were 719, and the out-patients 311. In Toronto the accommodation was 200 beds, the vacant beds 92, and the out-patients 65; now what do you say to that?—A. What time was that?

Q. On the first of April, 1916—a year ago now; what do you say to that?—A. Well, I would have to look that matter up.

Q. Then why did you swear positively?—A. Excuse me; wait a minute; when did you say?

Q. April 1st, 1916, the accommodation in Toronto was 200 beds, vacant beds 92; and the out-patients only 65?—A. Can you tell me where those 200 beds were in April, 1916?

Q. They were in Toronto district, in the D unit; as you are the medical officer I suppose you know much more about it than I; that is a reason I was asking you what you knew about your district. I may give you the further figure—1st of July, 1916, total accommodation 1,441 beds, vacant beds 731; out-patients 366; and in your medical district, Toronto, there were 165 beds, with 111 vacant, and only 54 out-patients on the 1st of July, 1916. Now, on the 1st of October last year there were 375 beds in the district, vacant 62, and at that time, on that day, there were more out-patients than 62—215. On the 1st of January this year, there were 618 beds in Toronto, and 164 vacant beds, and only 54 out-patients. On March 8th, just a few days ago, there are 1,186 beds in the Toronto district, of which 412 are vacant and only 275 out-patients. So that with the exception of the 1st day of October—at which time exceptional conditions prevailed, to which I shall presently refer—at no time has there not been a surplus of available beds, taking all the out-patients as well. Now, in the light of those facts, assuming them to be facts, and I will put the secretary in to prove them if you want it—what is your answer to the impression you made in the public mind that in this district there was not sufficient accommodation for returned soldiers, and that the Military Hospitals Commission had failed in its duty? What is your explanation?—A. Well, so far as these figures are concerned I would say that I would have to have a little time to look into them, to see what the explanation is, because I am satisfied there is an explanation. When you look at March 8th and contrast that with the present time, March 21st, that we have over 500 out-patients in this district because of the lack of accommodation, then there is some explanation of the figures, which I would have to take time to look over to give you an explanation.

The CHAIRMAN: By whom are the figures furnished, Mr. Bennett?

Mr. BENNETT: They are furnished from the records of the Hospitals Commission. Colonel Thompson is here, and Mr. Scammell.

The CHAIRMAN: Will Colonel Thompson put them in as evidence?

Mr. BENNETT: He or Mr. Scammell will.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is Major Munn an officer of the Hospitals Commission?—A. He is my medical officer, who has been doing the medical work of the Hospitals Commission.

Q. And he would be in a position to know just how many out-patients there were for whom there was not accommodation?—A. Yes, he should be.

Q. He said yesterday before this Committee that there were 500 out-patients that they could not accommodate.

Mr. PARDEE: 551.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Now, so far as the out-patient theory is concerned, you made a written report?—A. On the medical services, do you mean?

Q. You made a written report, part of which was introduced into the evidence, in which you were in favour of the out-patient theory?—A. No, sir, I take exception to that.

Q. At no time?—A. The only time that I can recall—

Q. Would you be good enough to look up your papers and take the report you made to the officer commanding the 2nd Division after you had returned from Quebec, of which you are the father?—A. I admit being the father of that. I am the father of the Central Clearing System, and probably the father of several other things in connection with this whole problem, and I remember that report very well, and in it you will see that I did at that time advocate the out-patient system.

Q. On December 16, 1915, you wrote the Chairman of the Commission; turn up that letter enclosing copy of report sent to the officer commanding the 2nd Division, in which you say (Reads):—

“When no treatment is required, and a man’s home is considered a suitable place for him to convalesce, and his progress is not likely to be retarded by his being there, and his habits at home can be checked periodically, such cases should be allowed to go home, but only on passes covering a definite period. On the expiration of their passes, these men should report at the home to be checked over by the staff. If their progress is satisfactory, their passes may be renewed, and if not, they should be readmitted to the home. When deemed advisable, they should be brought before a medical board for disposition. Men on pass, who are reported to be misbehaving themselves, and so possibly retarding their progress, should be brought back to the home at once, and be kept under supervision. Failure to report in accordance with orders, or misbehaviour in a convalescent home, should be dealt with in accordance with headquarters’ instructions in this regard.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

"Such an out-patient system is capable of expansion to any degree, and while still keeping the men under observation and control would avoid the necessity of providing homes for men who can convalesce satisfactorily in their own homes, and would permit of their being dealt with in a consistent manner and satisfactory, not only to the men, but to the country for whom they have served.

"In cases of men who are allowed to go to their homes in locations removed from convalescent home centres, typewritten instructions should be given to them, instructing them to supply through their local physicians (name of physician to be inserted) medical reports, which should reach the central convalescent home not later than the 15th of each month. Men so instructed should be required to sign a duplicate of the order as a receipt for such order."

That was to avoid the creation of homes. Have you that letter?—A. Yes.

Q. That was the 16th December, 1915?—A. Yes.

Q. And commending the establishment of an out-patient system for the purpose, you observe, of avoiding the necessity of providing homes, among other causes?—A. Yes.

Q. In view of that statement, what have you to say as to your evidence the other day?—A. I will call your attention to the fact that that report was made November 24, 1915, following a week spent at Quebec, on the return of over 600 men on the steamship Metagama, at which the present system in operation at the discharge depot was put into force, and previous to which time there was no proper system of dealing with the men there. I may point out to you that it was previous to this time, no less probably than four weeks before this report was put in, and what was the idea of the Hospitals Commission? The idea of the Hospitals Commission at that time was that these men should be sent from the discharge depot at Quebec to voluntary homes all over the country, homes nothing more than lodging places, which offered no facilities for treatment. I felt that it was absolutely necessary to get rid of this idea. The idea of having large convalescent homes in each district was proposed from here, and less than four weeks previously this plan was absolutely turned down by the Hospitals Commission. After consultation with the Director-General of the medical service, they stated that it was not necessary to have a large clearing home in the district, as the men could be sent directly from Quebec to the small homes, and what were these small homes? Simply places scattered over the district, offered voluntarily, which had been reported upon by the Militia Department, and we had to get rid of this system, and we suggested a different proposition. We went to the city of Toronto, and went to Bishop Strachan school and having jurisdiction over the district, we proposed to establish a central home of our own.

Q. You might answer my question?—A. This is an answer to the question.

The CHAIRMAN: We would like to hear it.

The WITNESS: We proposed this central scheme, a comprehensive scheme of dealing with it, which was rejected by the Hospitals Commission. Later on they decided to try it out here. The Secretary of the Hospitals Commission and Mr. George met me in Toronto. We went over Bishop Strachan's school and the following day we went to the Board of Control. They had appointed various committees. They got behind our scheme and immediately disbanded their committees, and lent their aid to put this plan in operation.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Suppose you answer my question now?—A. I am coming to that. That was one plan we adopted to get rid of this idea of having the men all over the country in places where they would have no facilities for treatment.

Q. You recommended these men being out-patients?—A. Then in order to carry out this scheme in accordance with this system which only provided one clearing house for the district, we had to develop the out-patients system because of the lack of accommodation. The one place would not provide it, and at that time I advised in connection with this the development of an out-patient system, rather than opening up such homes as had been proposed by the Military Hospitals Commission. By that I refer particularly to these small homes offered all over the country which provided absolutely no facilities for treatment, such for instance as the St. Catharines Home, which has been practically useless to the medical service in dealing with these men. The idea was to get away from the small homes, and it was this central idea, and the development of the out-patient system along with it that took the Hospitals Commission away from the idea of these small useless homes in the out-lying districts.

Q. It is a singular thing now that you should say that. It would be well if you would read the paragraph to which I now direct your attention to show that that was not in your mind at all. If you will refer to the report you sent to the Chairman of the Military Hospitals Commission you will observe this sentence: "In cases of men who are allowed to go to their homes"—?—A. What is that?

Q. In the report to the Chairman of the Hospitals Commission. You wrote this sentence—?—A. What is the number of it

Q. The report you made in November?—A. I want the number of the paragraph.

Q. It is the paragraph you added to the one I just read?—A. In my copy the paragraphs are numbered. I am merely asking for the number of it.

Q. Have you the paragraph I read a minute ago?—A. I will have to ask you to read it again until I recognize it.

Q. "When no treatment is required, a man's home is considered," etc., and then you proceed: "Such an out-patient system is capable of expansion to any degree." Have you that?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you observe the paragraph as you added to it before you sent in the report reading as follows: "In cases of men who are allowed to go to their homes in locations removed from convalescent home centres"—not scattered all over the country?—A. Yes.

Q. What have you to say to that? You were not talking about little homes then? You were talking about convalescent home centres?—A. My last page of the copy seems to have got disconnected from the others. I am sorry, but I do not appear to have the last page of this report.

Q. In your previous evidence you have made it clear to the committee that the out-patient system was established on account of lack of accommodation. That is a fair thing to say, is it not?—A. The out-patient system—

Q. That is your evidence on the previous occasion?—A. I said, if you refer to my evidence, "When these central convalescent hospitals were established, in many cases they were inadequate to accommodate all the returned men, so that the out-patient system was adopted, whereby men did not live in the hospital, but reported there for examinations."

Q. The out-patient system dates back to the recommendation of November, 1915?—A. Yes.

Q. And at that time there was no shortage of accommodation, nor has there been except at odd intervals ever since, according to figures?—A. I still maintain that previous to the time this convalescent hospital was opened, which was in November, 1915, there was a lack of accommodation. There was nothing here except one or two small hospitals, which did not provide any facilities for treatment.

Q. How many returned men came back before November, 1915?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. What was the demand for accommodation in the Toronto district?—A. I cannot tell you the demand, but I can only tell you this, that the system was such that it did not allow us to—

Q. Do not talk generalities, you are the A.D.M.S.?—A. Yes, sir.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. What was the number in 1915 in the Toronto District?—A. I cannot give you the figures.

Q. Have you not got the figures with you?—A. I have not brought the figures.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Was there a shortage?—A. Previous to that time we only had one small home in this district, and that was the one——

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Was there a shortage?—A. Certainly there was a shortage.

Q. What did it amount to?—A. I cannot tell you the figures.

Q. Was there a shortage of ten beds?—A. I cannot tell the figure.

Q. How many beds were there?—A. At that home I think there were 19 or 20 beds.

Q. And that was the extent of the accommodation in the whole Toronto District?

—A. That was the accommodation at that particular time.

Q. At the time the Commission was starting its operation?—A. That was in November. The Commission was appointed in June, 1915.

Q. What provision had they made in the Toronto District for beds in any home at that time?—A. I am not able to tell you that, because of the fact that the men sent up previous to that time were boarded at Quebec and sent singly to their destination. We did not know whether the men were here or not, except when they reported from the Quebec Discharge Depot. Sometimes they were not reported and we did not know the men were here.

Q. What was the shortage of beds?—A. I cannot say what the shortage was, but I can say that had we been able to gather the men together there would not have been accommodation for them.

Q. Do you say that you could not gather them together?—A. We could not. They were not amenable to discipline, they had been discharged.

Q. And there was no chance of a shortage so far as they were concerned?—A. These men were wrongly discharged, later on they were reinstated.

Q. Now, as the out-patient system which you recommended in November, 1915——?—A. I recommended that in conjunction with our central plan in order to avoid the necessity of opening up these small homes, which they had proposed to open up.

Q. Then the out-patient recommendation was not the growth from lack of accommodation, that is clear?—A. The out-patient system was developed at that time, I say, in conjunction with the policy to——

Q. Answer my question. The out-patient system was not developed from lack of accommodation, it was a separate and distinct recommendation by you?—A. Yes, but——

Q. You cannot say anything else?—A. But with this modification. I do not say unqualifiedly "yes." I say yes, if you admit this further statement to my evidence: That it was developed in conjunction with the central plan in order to rid us these proposed small homes, we did not want small homes.

Q. It was a question of policy?—A. It was a question of policy.

Q. The Military Hospitals Commission, in 1915, developed central convalescent homes and extended its hospital accommodation. That is true, is it not?—A. Will you put the question again?

Q. The question is this: The Military Hospitals Commission did extend its accommodation and naturally required new homes in the Toronto district?—A. At what time?

Q. In November, 1915?—A. Certainly. The next step, which was taken on my recommendation, was to provide another large home.

Q. And the home was acquired?—A. Yes, it was.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. And it was furnished?—A. Yes.

Q. And is now in operation?—A. Yes.

Q. And side by side with that was developed on your recommendation the out-patient system?—A. Previous to the establishment—

Q. Say yes or no to my question?—A. Previous to the establishment of the second I recommended the second large hospital in order to provide the accommodation which would be required in the near future. Before that was opened up I advised my medical officers to bring in all the out-patients that the accommodation would provide for. That is to say, we adopted the out-patient system at that time as a matter of policy in order to centralize the work and get rid of these small homes outside. After the opening of another large hospital we adopted a change of policy to bring in our out-patients, because, you understand, at this time we had made up our minds that these men would make better progress if they were under immediate supervision.

Q. Now, will you answer the question, please: Side by side with the development of your Central Convalescent Homes you had your out-patient system in operation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On your recommendation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have never recommended to the contrary?—A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You have never made a recommendation to the contrary?—A. It was not necessary that I should.

Q. Just answer my question. Have you ever recommended the contrary?—A. Have I ever recommended to whom?

Q. To the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. It was not necessary for me to recommend to the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Did you or did you not? Answer the question yes or no?—A. Well, my action—

Q. Answer the question yes or no, please?—A. My action was a recommendation to the Military Hospitals Commission to do away with the out-patients.

Q. Have you ever recommended to this day to the Military Hospitals Commission that the out-patient system be abandoned?

MR. PARDEE: My learned friend wants you to say no without giving an explanation. Say no, and then go on and give your explanation?—A. No, I have not.

MR. PARDEE: Now, go on and give your explanation.

THE WITNESS: But I may say that I have discussed this matter at different times with the officials of the Hospitals Commission, and if I adopted a change of policy in my own district when I had control over the medical arrangements—if I adopted a change of policy when the accommodation was available to permit a change of system—is not that sufficient recommendation?

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. That is your defence? Just as you say?—A. Is not that sufficient recommendation for any change of policy?

Q. You have changed your policy and abandoned the out-patient system?—A. Previous to the opening of Knox College.

Q. When was that, please?—A. I am sorry I cannot say without going through my correspondence. You ask me "When was Knox College opened"?

Q. Yes, for medical purposes?—A. The secretary of the local branch could give you the exact date.

Q. He is not the A.D.M.S., you are?—A. I may advise you, as far as that goes, that the medical officer whom I deputize to look after that work is here, and probably would be able to answer that question.

Q. If you say you do not know, that is another matter?—A. Just wait a minute, please. (Refers to memoranda.) I do not admit that. I do not know. It is possible I was away on my inspection trip at that particular time. However, the date is easily available and can be obtained from various officers who are here now.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. Let me ask you this question: You say you abandoned the out-patient system because you had sufficient accommodation, is that right?—A. I do not say that we abandoned the out-patient system entirely. I say that I ordered my medical officers to gather up all the out-patients whom they thought would be better treated as in-patients and to put them into the hospital.

Q. Why did you not say that before? You did that because you thought they would be better treated as in-patients?—A. Certainly. But I do not say that at any time we entirely abandoned the out-patient system.

Q. When did you give those orders?—A. I cannot tell you the exact date.

Q. Was it before you delivered your address before the Medical Association in June last?—A. I presume it was later.

Q. In June, 1916, you read a paper before the Ontario Medical Association?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. In that paper you made use of these observations: (Reads):

"As many of the invalids do not require to be retained as in-patients, a well organized out-patient service has been established. All out-patients are on pass, and are required to report at stated times, and invalids absent from the hospital without passes are dealt with as being absent without leave."

Now, do you say that you made that statement to your fellow practitioners?—A. Just a minute (referring to memoranda). I have the copy.

Q. I am reading from a printed report of your address?—A. May I ask you to give me the words again.

Q. (Reads): "As many of the invalids do not require to be retained as in-patients, a well-organized out-patient service has been established?"—A. Yes, sir, I have found those words.

Q. You made this address to the Medical Association of your Province?—A. Yes.

Q. And at that time you were explaining to them the system under which the Military Hospitals Commission was being operated among other things?—A. I was explaining the system under which the medical services in this district were being operated.

Q. Including the care for returned soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And necessarily the work of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in that address, as late as June, 1916, you made no complaint of lack of accommodation, that is clear?—A. Not in a paper of this kind, certainly.

Q. You had no complaints to make in June, 1916, about the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. May I say that—

Q. Answer that, in that paper?—A. I will not answer that. May I say that at no time have I had any relations with the Military Hospitals Commission that were other than distinctly cordial, and the Military Hospitals Commission authorities, I take it, will state that I have done everything in my power in this district to further the arrangements of the medical service to the returned soldiers in such a way that they could be taken over by the Military Hospitals Commission at any minute. I have had no quarrel with the Hospitals Commission. You assume that I have been quarrelling with the Hospitals Commission. I have not.

Q. Very well, then, Colonel Marlow, just let me ask you this: What do you mean by saying that there was a lack of accommodation for patients? In your former testimony you reiterated that statement several times. Now, I ask you what you meant by it?—A. I said that in some districts there was lack of accommodation.

By the Chairman:

Q. That refers to the general report that you made after your tour throughout Canada?—A. I presume that refers to my report after my inspection in September and October. I know positively at that time that most of the patients in No. 6 District—

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What did you mean by saying that there was lack of accommodation provided by the Military Hospitals Commission in your own District, Unit "D"?—A. I say that there is lack of accommodation at the present time.

Q. But those troops had not come in then that you were talking about the other day. You said in your former testimony that there was a lack of accommodation, but the records show that there has always been a surplus of accommodation? Why throw discredit on your own operations? When did you make any complaints to the Military Hospitals Commission of lack of accommodation?—A. Unfortunately, you understand that a great many of our communications are conducted by telephone, and we have no telephone records that we can introduce into the evidence.

Q. No, but yet you say this—and this is one of the vital points that this committee was appointed to look into—the records show that there has been a surplus of accommodation at all times, except when a ship came in the other day, and I ask you why you went into the witness box and left the impression which has been spread broadcast that the Military Hospitals' Commission in "D" Unit failed to supply adequate accommodation for returned soldiers, when such, according to the record, is not the fact?—A. Well, so far as this district is concerned, and as I have told you, I would have to go into the figures which you have presented to give you the explanation. But we have had the problem to meet. We are responsible for dealing with these men in a medical way. We have instituted an out-patients system, and that system has never been entirely, and probably will not be, entirely abandoned. We have unquestionably been suffering. My medical officers in the convalescent hospitals are constantly complaining of the difficulty of finding beds for the men, and these complaints have been coming to me for some considerable time past.

Q. Well, Colonel Marlow, show me your complaints or requisition to the Military Hospitals' Commission for further space?—A. Well, I cannot show—I cannot introduce into the evidence—any document, but I have discussed the matter with the officers of the Military Hospitals' Commission.

Q. Then there is no document?—A. My medical officer, Major Munn, has on various occasions, I presume, communicated with the O.C. in respect to this problem.

Q. But you are in charge of the district, and I ask you for any official communication sent by you as the medical officer in charge to the Military Hospitals' Commission complaining of lack of accommodation. That is a fair question?—A. In respect to that question, if there were any documents that have been sent in by my medical officer, then I think they should be put in.

Q. But any you sent?—A. You understand that Major Munn was detailed by me last February to take on this work in our own casualty department which we had organized to look after this problem, and Major Munn has continued to do that work more recently under the direction of the Military Hospitals' Commission, although not seconded to them. His dealings have been entirely, in respect to accommodation, with officers of the Hospital Commission, not through me, but directly with them.

By the Chairman:

Q. This is largely a question of fact, and the committee would, I think, like to have you prepare a statement along this line, showing the available beds for returned men, the beds occupied by returned men, the beds you have vacant for returned men, and the returned men as out patients still undischarged, for each month from November, 1915, to date. The committee could then judge for themselves from the figures submitted. You have those records, I suppose?—A. I have not the records in my office, because we were notified by headquarters to discontinue sending the monthly reports. They have been sent by the Hospitals' Commission.

Q. You can secure them?—A. Only through the Military Hospitals' Commission office.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. Well, we will secure them from the Military Hospitals' Commission office in due time?—A. My medical officer, Major Munn, may be able to collaborate it with me.

Q. We will ask you to compile it, and also request the Military Hospitals Commission to do so, so that the committee may have the figures, as it is a matter of fact.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. It was your judgment in November, 1915, and June, 1916, and I still take it to be your judgment, that the out-patient system should continue?—A. I still maintain that there is a small percentage of the men who can be treated as out-patients, but that percentage is a very small one.

Q. Now, leaving that, and coming to this record, it would follow of course that the number of out-patients would always represent some portion of the total number in the unit?—A. A small proportion, very small.

Q. Coming to the question of tuberculosis cases——

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. Col. Marlow, before you leave that question, I would like to ask you whether you ever prepared a list of the out-patients that should be brought in, or make an examination of the out-patients that should be treated in the convalescent homes?—A. Not personally.

Q. Did any of your medical officers do so?—A. Our medical officers are in constant touch with the physical condition of all our patients.

Q. Did you ever have a list prepared and submit it to the Military Hospitals Commission, to give the commission that information as to the bringing in of out-patients so that accommodation should be provided for them?—A. Not personally.

Q. But I am asking you if you are aware that any of your medical officers did so?—A. I can only say that I requested my medical officers to find all the out-patients that could be treated as in-patients and bring them in.

Q. You throw the responsibility upon the Hospitals Commission of not providing proper accommodation. Now then I ask you for the purpose of being accurate—we all want to be accurate in making this investigation—as to whether you did prepare such a list, or whether your officers did prepare, or whether you are aware that the Military Hospitals Commission was made aware that specific numbers of out-patients were to be brought in. It was your duty to keep in touch with them, to have them report to you from time to time, and to make examination of their condition, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Would it not be reasonable to suppose that under those conditions you would require to have an accurate list prepared as to the condition of these men, and that you would indicate to the Hospitals Commission that it was necessary to bring into their homes these men, was that ever done?—A. I cannot answer that question definitely, but I presume it was done by my officers.

Q. As a matter of fact, I am aware that it was not done, but I am asking you do you know that it was?—A. I said that this matter had been left in the hands of my deputy. I made the request that these men should be brought in, and a proper list must have been prepared, because they were brought in.

Q. You will recall that Major Munn did not enter upon the service of the Hospitals Commission until a comparatively recent period. It was upon the opening of the Spadina Home that Major Munn entered into the service of the Hospitals Commission. Previous to that, at any time, are you aware that this was done—I am quite candid with you in saying that I am not aware of it, and I have been closely in touch with the work of the Commission from the beginning that any such representations were made to the Commission?—A. A Major Munn has been in constant touch with the officers of the Military Hospitals Commission and there are many things that have occurred of which I have no personal knowledge. I can say that I can ask my medical officer whether there was such a list.

Q. Personally you are unaware whether it was done or not?—A. I presume it was done because it was my order that these men should be brought in.

Q. Do not let us indulge in presumptions, because I am entirely unaware of it, and I have been closely in touch with the work ever since the beginning.—A. Might I call attention to the fact that by a general order which was put on the table yesterday, by the General Officer commanding this district—I would not refer to this matter had it not been put in evidence by my Commanding Officer—and in that document there is a quotation which throws the responsibility entirely upon the Hospitals Commission, of determining when a convalescent hospital is to be opened. It in no way would place the responsibility upon the medical service, it does not require that they even ask our advice in order to determine when a hospital is necessary.

Q. But how will the Military Hospitals Commission become aware of the fact that outdoor patients are being brought in under the authority of the medical officers and that accommodation has to be provided for them, if the medical officers do not communicate that fact to the Hospitals Commission?—A. That is what I am wondering about—how we are going to carry that order into effect, unless the Medical Service determines when these men are to be brought in and the accommodation for them provided. For instance I have five hundred patients to-day that are now out-patients and we require to get them into the hospital.

Q. It is quite clear that it can only be brought about by harmony of action and co-operation between the Military Hospitals Commission and the Medical Service?—A. The responsibility is placed upon whom? Who is going to determine when it is necessary that these 500 out patients should be treated in a hospital?

Q. I am asking you if you submitted to the Military Hospitals Commission a list of those men for whom accommodation was required?—A. Major Wilson and Major Munn are here, and in fact they have a list of all their out-patients.

Q. But have they communicated it to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. I presume so, Major Wilson is an officer of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Let us not indulge in presumption. Do not think I am critical, I am simply asking you whether you know that it was done or not?—A. Major Wilson is the officer who prepares the regular states of patients daily.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is the recognized means of communication—the official channel of communication—between you and the Hospitals Commission? How do you communicate with that body in an official way?—A. I presume my official channel of communication would be through the general officer commanding the district and the secretary of the Militia Council through which the communication would be forwarded to the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. But you would make it to General Logie?—A. That would be the official channel of communication, thence to Ottawa, and the matter would be referred from Ottawa to the Hospitals Commission.

Q. You would not send it direct to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. No, I cannot conduct official correspondence with the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Then your interchange of communications with the representatives of the Hospitals Commission here is purely of an informal and friendly co-operative character?—A. Yes.

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. You may remember that there are communications that appear on the record direct from you to the Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, there are, certainly; but I am speaking of my official channel of communication, which is always through my General Officer Commanding, except in general technical medical matters.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. Then if I say to you that Colonel Thompson, who is the medical director of the Hospitals Commission, has not received for months any communication in respect to incoming out-patients or accommodation required for them, are you prepared to say he is making an incorrect statement?—A. No, because Colonel Thompson has not been in communication with me for several months; he has been in constant communication with my medical officer, Major Munn.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If there were such inadequacy of accommodation would it not be the duty of the officer commanding the Military Hospitals Command unit to report that matter to Colonel Thompson himself?—A. I presume so, as the responsibility is on the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. If there were inadequacy, that should be reported by Major Wilson himself?—A. Major Wilson is in a better position to know how many out-standing patients there are, because he prepares the roll and keeps the record.

By the Chairman:

Q. Whose duty is it to furnish that information in the interests of returned soldiers?—A. Well, sir, this whole matter has been in the hands largely of the Hospitals Commission until that order, and that order will place the responsibility on the Hospitals Commission of determining when and where a hospital should be opened. And when it is ready for occupation, then it is our duty to provide the medical staff; that is all the responsibility we are charged with.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. There was evidence given here yesterday that 550 out-patients at present were in this District No. 2. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that that number are out-patients?—A. Only from the information which I am able to obtain from Major Wilson.

Q. Did he tell you that?—A. Yes, I have consulted with Major Wilson at different times as to the number of out-patients in this district.

Q. Then you and Major Wilson do know the number of out-patients?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, in regard to these out-patients, is it his duty or is it your duty to report to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. I presume it is the duty of Major Wilson to report to the Hospitals Commission.

Q. Then, if Major Wilson reports to the Hospitals Commission, where do you come in at any time either before or after that report?—A. According to my recent orders, if the Military Hospitals Commission determines, not looking into the future, but because of the fact that there are now 500 or over out-patients in this district, that another hospital should be opened, then when that hospital is ready for occupation it is my duty to provide a medical staff for that hospital.

Q. Why would Major Wilson know of those 550? Where does he come in to know that?—A. Because every man returning to this district is taken on the strength of Major Wilson's unit. If he is discharged on the recommendation of the Medical Board he is struck off the unit. Major Wilson has his nominal roll, and has the name, number and rank of every man who is in the convalescent class.

Q. Then, would Major Wilson know whether or not that man ought to go to a Convalescent Home?—A. No, sir.

Q. From where would he get that information?—A. From the medical officers.

Q. And that would be whom?—A. His direct channel would be through Major Munn.

Q. And through Major Munn to you? You are the authority over Major Munn?—A. Well, since this change of order I am in authority over Major Munn, and have been always to a certain extent, but Major Munn has been carrying on for the Hospitals Commission for several months, and not until this order came into effect has Major Munn been entirely responsible to me.

Q. Am I right in this; 550 men are here, Major Wilson is the first one to know of these 550 men being here for a convalescent home, or 550 men that are here for treatment?—A. He is the responsible administrative officer.

Q. Is he the one to whom the fact is communicated?—A. Yes, sir; he has his daily parade statement.

Q. And he is of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. Does he communicate that fact to Major Munn?—A. I presume so, because Major Munn has been occupying offices in the hospitals commission building alongside of Major Wilson.

Q. And then does Major Munn communicate that to you?—A. Well, sir, he has not begun yet under this new order, but previously he did not.

Q. Then up to the time this new order was issued, Major Munn, acting partly for the A.D.M.S. and partly for the M.H.C., received that information; then it stayed with Major Munn, but since the new order Major Munn now communicates that information to you?—A. Yes, Major Munn should be entirely responsible to me.

Q. Then when you get that information, what is your line of action?—A. Well, I presume my line of action would be to point out—

Q. To whom would you point out?—A. To the Military Hospitals Commission, because it would be expected of them to determine that an additional hospital is necessary; but under present conditions I would report to them, at least advise them urgently, that another hospital was necessary here.

Q. Would you have those 550 men paraded before you, and tell them what treatment is desired for each man?—A. Well, not paraded.

Q. Would you examine them?—A. Well, my medical officers have examined these men.

Q. Then they are examined under you with your staff?—A. They are examined under me, yes.

Q. And this examination is conclusive as to what treatment ought to be accorded them?—A. Yes.

Q. Then when they are classified, and you know just exactly what is required, is it your duty to report to the Hospitals Commission, and the Hospitals Commission resumes responsibility? Is that the sort of genealogical tree that grows up, and then when beds are provided, or accommodation is provided, you as the medical officer treat them; is that the modus operandi?—A. Well, practically; but it would create an impossible situation if we were to wait until we got 500 men, and have them classified, and then report to the Hospitals Commission that we want hospital accommodation.

Q. What will you do with these 550 men now?—A. I cannot do anything until we get accommodation for them. They are all patients who are on pass. I may say that there is a difference between patients on pass and out-patients.

Q. Tell us that?—A. As brought out in previous statements, out-patients are merely men who do not require any active treatment whatever, and whom it is thought can be trusted to behave themselves at their homes, and whose progress will not be interrupted in any way by their being at their homes—perhaps may be expedited.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Whose surroundings at home are better than those of a hospital?—A. Yes. Those are out-patients, but many other men are patients on pass, not with the intention of making them out-patients.

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. What would be the distinction in numbers of those two classes in those 550 men? How many should really be brought in?—A. Well, Major Munn, who has been in closer touch with the medical condition of those 550 men, stated in his evidence yesterday, I think, that at least 75 per cent of those men should be treated as in-patients.

Mr. PARDEE (To Major Munn): Was it 90 per cent of those men you said should be treated?

Major MUNN: Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: That 90 per cent of those 550 should be pass patients?

Major MUNN: No, in-patients.

The WITNESS: You might say that that represents the number of patients that are on pass, and it is not determined to treat them as out-patients.

By the Chairman:

Q. I want to ask you one question: You have a military base hospital in this district?—A. Yes.

Q. How many beds have you there?—A. We have approximately 800 beds at the present time—

Q. How many at the present time are full?—A. I am sorry I could not tell you without the report.

Q. Approximately would half of them be full?—A. I would say between four and five hundred at the present time. I could give it to you accurately later.

Q. In other words, there is still considerable unoccupied accommodation at your base hospital?—A. There is a considerable number of beds and I may say that we have not as many beds in the base hospital as there might be because we have not had the use for them.

Q. To what extent do you take up accommodation which is provided by the Military Hospitals Commission which is presumably for returned soldiers, by camp cases which you should treat at your base hospital?—A. I presume at the present time there are 15 or 20 men there. I would not be positive.

Q. You have plenty of space at the base hospital, and you are lacking in accommodation at the hospitals for returned soldiers. Why do you not take the camp cases which you have in the returned soldiers hospitals and remove them to the base hospital?—A. For this reason: that there are certain types of cases that will require to have convalescent treatment over a long time.

Q. Why do you not have your base hospital take care of these cases?—A. Because the convalescent hospital, particularly the one on College street is equipped in such a way that these cases can be treated there.

Q. Is it fair to fill up the accommodation originally intended for returned men with camp cases and then have returned men living in their homes, when they ought to be in the hospitals of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Well, probably, sir, it is not fair, but we are acting in accordance with our instructions to transfer to the Military Hospitals Commission hospital certain of our camp cases. For instance our tubercular cases are all transferred to them, and there are certain other cases that require a long period of convalescence, and not active treatment cases, which the hospital provides—

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. That is a forced condition thrown upon the Hospitals Commission on account of your inability here to furnish the necessary accommodation for them. It was not contemplated when the Commission was organized that they should assume that work, and it was only owing to the fact that we had that accommodation that we were forced to take in those men?—A. I may say this, that in most other districts in Canada, if a battalion of the expeditionary force proceeds overseas and leaves behind it a number of men in the hospital, or men unable to proceed with the unit, these men in most instances, except this district, are immediately transferred to the Military Hospitals Commission unit, and from that time are a part of that unit.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Although it was not originally so provided or contemplated?—A. Well, it was provided in the Order in Council or amendment to it creating the Commission that they would look after men in Canada as well.

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. On account of the inadequacy of your provision to look after them? (No answer.)

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You say there is a shortage of Military Hospitals Commission accommodation in D unit at the present minute. That is Toronto district?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have a surplus number of beds in your base hospital at the present minute of how many?—A. I would not like to make a positive answer, because the records would be available. By telephoning to my office, I could tell you how many beds exactly.

Q. It is several hundred I am told, and equal in number to the number of patients requiring treatment?—A. Not equal to that number.

Q. Equal to the number requiring treatment, excluding out-patients?

Major MUNN: 75 vacant beds in the base hospital yesterday.

The WITNESS: But we are not using our total accommodation at the base hospital, because when the Hospitals Commission did not see fit to use the base hospital we took down a very large number of beds, and those beds can be erected in two hours if necessary.

Q. And when Major Munn said there were only 75 beds there it is misleading. How many could you put up between now and 6 o'clock?—A. Put up probably a couple of hundred.

Q. My information is that you have been using the convalescent home for your camp cases during the summer in this district; that is right, is it not?—A. Such cases as are transferred to the Hospitals Commission unit.

Q. And that arises largely because of the men being unfit for overseas services on the ultimate examination?—A. No, largely because these men require a long period of convalescence, and that the facilities for treatment there are such perhaps as are not installed at the base hospital.

Q. You are responsible for the medical care of all the men in this district for overseas services in your various positions throughout the district?—A. Yes.

Q. And they examined the men and put them on the units, and when they went overseas many of them were rejected?—A. Yes.

Q. And those men you changed over from your hospital to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, that is, some of them.

Q. And I find on June 17, 1916, there were in the convalescent homes in this district overseas men 516, and of your camp men 223, and on August 19, 1916, there were only 326 overseas men in the convalescent home in D unit, and 226 camp men in the sanatorium. You had in sanatoria of overseas men only 161, and you had 79 camp men. Then in October, 1916, in the convalescent homes there were overseas men 542, but the camp cases had risen to 304. That would be towards the fall when they were going overseas in large numbers?—A. I cannot accept any responsibility for those figures without knowing their source and having a chance to study them.

Q. I find of the sanatorium cases of overseas patients only 208, and the camp cases 214, absorbing over half the patients?—A. Regarding the tuberculosis cases, those cases were not all sent from this district. This district was taking cases from other districts.

Q. All the camp cases of this district would go there?—A. Yes.

Q. It would be correct to say that all the camp cases would be with D unit but all the overseas cases would not necessarily be from Toronto district?—A. No, not necessarily from Toronto district. The camp cases are not all from Toronto district. They were taking cases in this district from London district, Kingston district, and various other districts.

Q. I find in January this year the overseas men amounted to 1,336, and you had 235 camp men and in sanatoria overseas 271, camp men, 271, and you had a week ago in the convalescent homes 1,569 overseas and 286 camp men, and in the sanatoria 285 overseas and 218 camp men. Nearly half the space taken up by the civil population at that time in civil uniform, men who were unfit for service, men who have not been overseas at all?—A. Yes, so far as sanatoria are concerned.

Q. I am advised that in most cases that results from inadequate medical examinations in the first instance?—A. It is not altogether the direct result, it is perhaps the indirect result, and perhaps one of the natural wastages of the expeditionary force, the training.

Q. Is it not a fact that having regard—perhaps you cannot answer this till you look up your figures—having regard to the accommodation provided by military organization in the Toronto district at base hospital to the number of men that should properly be taken out, there is sufficient accommodation in this district in the convalescent home and in the military hospital, not necessarily all put up, to accommodate all the men sent there at this time?—A. If all the beds at the military hospital here and at Hamilton were made use of and the convalescent homes, but I do not know how many camp men are in the convalescent homes at the present minute.

Q. On the 8th of March we had 286?—A. I am not aware of any such figures as that.

Q. Does that not harmonize with the data which you have?—A. I could not say positively, Major Wilson could inform you as to that. But if that is the case those men would have to be provided with accommodation. Then the remaining accommodation at the Military Hospital would not be sufficient to take up the surplus of returned men. But I might say this, sir: That the accommodation offered from the Base Hospital has not been taken advantage of. I had, presumably, no authority to direct that the men should go there.

Q. You are, and always have been, since the commencement of this war, A.D.M.S. of this district?—A. Yes, sir, since April 22, 1915.

Q. And have all the powers, privileges and authority that belong to such an office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Major Munn was never seconded to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. No.

Q. There is no order to that effect and one has never been given?—A. No.

Q. And he is still under the orders of his superior officer, namely yourself.—A. Yes, at the present time.

Q. And he has never been taken from under your control by any order of the Militia Department?—A. No, but Major Munn has been carrying on the work for the Medical Superintendent of the Hospitals Commission in the district as well.

Q. I follow that, Colonel Marlow, but, to use your own word again, he has not been seconded, and is absolutely under the control and direction, subject to military law, of his superior officer, Colonel Marlow.—A. Yes, except as I say, that this direct responsibility was encroached upon by the arrangement with the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. But Major Munn was not seconded?—A. A man is usually paid by the person by whom he is employed? Major Munn has been under pay of the Hospitals Commission for some months, and naturally recognizes a certain amount of responsibility the Medical Superintendent of the Hospitals Commission.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. But he is still the military subordinate of Colonel Marlow, A.D.M.S. of this District?—A. Yes, but as I showed in my evidence, certain orders of mine could not be put into effect because of the divided responsibility. That is to say, certain orders of mine were issued with respect to sending patients to the base hospital, and these orders were not carried out because the Military Hospitals Commission, who were charged with the expense of this whole problem, were paying Major Munn and were also paying for the hospital, have insisted that these patients should be sent to the civilian hospitals rather than to the base hospital. For that reason they went there.

By the Chairman:

Q. Were you, Colonel Marlow, or Major Munn under you, responsible for determining what camp cases should be sent to the hospital accommodation provided by the Military Hospitals Commission, that is convalescents or otherwise?—A. Any cases that are transferred to the Military Hospitals Commission Command are transferred there on the recommendation of a Medical Board, approved by me or my deputy.

Q. Then you are practically responsible for sending camp cases that are in the hospitals of the Military Hospitals Commission to those institutions?—A. Yes, sir. But may I state—

Q. You could have kept them all if you had wanted to?—A. Except in certain cases where orders are definite to transfer them to the Commission?

Q. You mean as to the class of cases?—A. Yes, sir. But may I say this: I have discussed this matter with the medical superintendent of the Hospitals Commission long since, and we determined on a certain amount of co-operation. We had certain facilities in the base hospitals which they did not have, facilities for the active treatment and surgical cases and more particularly venereal cases, for which they had no accommodation. We were perfectly willing to take their cases.

By Sir James Loughheed:

Q. Do you know, Colonel Marlow, that the Hospitals Commission have never taken any venereal cases?—A. I know that, sir, but these venereal cases are returned soldiers, just the same as any other cases.

Q. You know that in practice we have never taken any of these cases, and the Militia authorities exclusively have to look after them?—A. I know, sir, but in some districts there are no military hospitals to look after them.

Q. I am speaking of the authority to look after them. That is to say, we only take such cases as are handed over to us by the military authorities?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That draws the line between where your work ends and ours commences?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You hand over to us such patients as we have to look after, but you have never handed to us any venereal cases?—A. No, certainly not.

By the Chairman:

Q. One final question: If you had kept all your camp cases in your base hospital and had not unloaded them on to the Military Hospitals Commission would there not always have been sufficient accommodation here in your district for returned soldiers?—A. Well, sir, my impression is that there would not, but I would have to look up those figures you have brought forward in order to be positive.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In answer to Mr. Bennett you stated that Major Munn is responsible to you for orders. You are his superior officer?—A. Yes.

Q. Could Major Wilson also give Major Munn orders as the head of the Military Hospitals Commission Command here?—A. I presume not, because Major Munn has not been in the Military Hospitals Commission Command.

Q. Was Major Munn in any way under Major Wilson's direction?—A. No, sir.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

The WITNESS: Mr. Chairman, Mr. McCurdy asked me to submit some memoranda regarding venereal diseases, which I have prepared.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well, put them on the record.

The WITNESS: May I just say this: These memoranda were prepared and it happened that at that particular time there was a meeting of the Academy of Medicine which is taking up the subject of venereal disease and prophylactic treatment with the Ontario and Dominion authorities. I presented these memoranda before the Academy of Medicine and they were endorsed by a resolution of the academy. I would like to file a copy of the memoranda and the endorsement.

Documents filed as requested (see appendix re venereal diseases).

Committee adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

The Committee resumed at 2.40 p.m.

The examination of Col. F. W. MARLOW resumed.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Col. Marlow, in a report that you made, on page 180 of the evidence, in paragraph 12 you say: "The Commission prefer to send cases needing active surgical treatment to the Toronto General Hospital (Civil)." I am advised that no member of the Military Hospitals Commission has at any time ever advised the use of a civil hospital. Will you be good enough to give the name of the person to whom you refer?—A. That may be quite so in respect to the members of the Hospitals Commission, but the officials of the Military Hospitals Commission insisted on these patients going to the civil hospital rather than to ours.

Q. What officials?—A. The officials of the Hospitals Commission.

Q. Give me the names, who is the gentleman in question?—A. Well, understand that this arrangement—

Q. Tell us not what you understand, but what official?—A. I understand that this arrangement was arrived at between Col. Thompson and the local secretary and probably by the medical officer, Major Munn.

Q. That is not an answer, "probably" by somebody. You have said in your report definitely that the Commission preferred to send cases to the civil hospital. I am advised that this is not so?—A. I can only state that, in my opinion, the advice you refer to is wrong.

Q. Your opinion is erroneous?—A. The opinion is not erroneous.

Q. What did you base it on?—A. You will understand that I instructed my medical officers that these patients should be sent to the military base hospital if they required active treatment. Then, if there was not interference on the part of the Military Hospitals Commission, why did my officers not carry out my orders?

Q. Will you now answer my question? If the Chairman will be good enough to tell the witness to answer my question it would expedite matters. On what did you base that statement?—A. I have told you already of the reason on which I based my statement; my orders in respect to that matter were not carried out. That was because of the decision of the Military Hospitals Commission officials to use the other accommodation and not to use the Military Hospital accommodation.

Q. Did they tell you so?—A. Well, I may say this, that on a certain occasion I visited the military base hospital with the local secretary of the Hospitals Commission and offered them certain accommodation there. His main objection to using that was that it was using accommodation not provided by the Hospitals Commission, and he considered it might be a reflection on the Commission that they did not have sufficient accommodation.

Q. To whom do you refer?—A. To Mr. Riddell, the local secretary.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. Upon that you based paragraph 12?—A. Not altogether, sir.

Q. You say they preferred to use the General Hospital, and I am advised that no member of the Commission has so instructed, and I want to know why you say that?—A. Do you make a distinction between the members of the Hospitals Commission and the officials acting for them? I do.

Q. That is your answer, the best answer you can give?—A. As I told you, I make a distinction between the officials and the Commission.

Q. What official told you?—A. It is not necessary that an official should tell me. When they take the action contrary to my orders and insist on my medical officers carrying it out, otherwise my medical officers would have carried out my orders.

Q. Then, it is a matter of inference?—A. It is not a matter of inference.

Q. What is it?—A. Well, you understand the situation which I explained to you was the divided control, and the medical officers, although under me, were being paid by the Hospitals Commission, and when preparing our casualty department to hand over to the Hospitals Commission, they were working for the Hospitals Commission as well as for me. They did not know whose orders to carry out on account of the mixed up situation which has been created. That is the difficulty with the whole thing at the present minute.

Q. That is the only explanation you can give on that paragraph?—A. That explanation ought to be satisfactory to most men.

Q. That is your explanation, on which you base that statement that "the Commission prefer to send cases" to the civil hospitals?—A. Yes.

Q. That is all the explanation you can make?—A. I consider the explanation is entirely satisfactory.

Q. I would expect that you would. Now, let us go to the hospitals for tuberculosis. You mentioned the other day in your evidence the Muskoka hospital, and when asked regarding why they used the Gravenhurst hospital you gave an answer to which I wish to direct your attention. Did you intend to convey by the many answers that you gave touching the free hospital the impression that that was a "free hospital," free to anybody who wanted to use it?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Then it was not intended to leave the impression that it was a free hospital in the sense that it did not cost anything to use it?—A. I used that because I believed that was the recognized name of the hospital.

Q. Precisely. But I notice that the press took it up as being a free institution. What is your understanding of that?—A. I do not understand that it is a free institution, in that sense, that patients are taken in there and maintained free. The majority of the patients at that hospital, I presume, are patients who are in there on the order of a city, town or other municipality, that they were paying for their maintenance, that the great majority of cases are not paying their own way, but are, in other words, municipal or city order cases.

Q. You have not learned, as a matter of fact, that the charge made in respect of soldiers is $12 a week, which is the usual charge for those not residing in the Province of Ontario. Did you know that?—A. I understand there was an arrangement, that those living in the Province of Ontario were to be maintained there at their ordinary rates of maintenance, because there is a grant given by the Province of Ontario to make up a certain amount, and that those who were accommodated there outside of the Province of Ontario were accommodated at an increased rate, because the provincial grant could not be drawn for them.

Q. Then you knew there was a charge of $12 made for the soldiers?—A. I did not know what the exact charge has been.

Q. You knew there was a charge being made?—A. Certainly.

Q. And that the Military Hospitals Commission was paying that much?—A. I presume so.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. And that it was not a free institution, you knew that?—A. Certainly.

Q. Now, you also knew I suppose that the authorities of that institution insisted upon the returned soldiers dispensing with their uniforms, and being in mufti, in common with the other patients there?—A. I heard rumours to that effect.

Q. Did you make any investigation as to that matter?—A. As to their orders in that respect?

Q. As to the whole of the regulations with regard to the running of the free Gravenhurst Sanitarium, or when did you make any investigation?—A. Certainly, I have been at the sanitarium on different occasions, and made an investigation into the running of the institution.

Q. And you knew that they insisted upon the patients being in mufti?—A. I heard it but I did not know it officially.

Q. You did not investigate that phase of it?—A. No.

Q. And did you learn that as a result of that they had rules and regulations which they insisted the soldier patients should obey?—A. Yes, they insisted that the men should obey the ordinary rule of the institution.

Q. And that insistence led to some little difficulty?—A. It led to some of the men being discharged from the institution prematurely because there were no means provided by which men could be disciplined.

Q. You would not say the men were discharged, you mean they were released from that institution?—A. They were discharged from the institution, not from the service.

Q. I have here a letter of the 3rd March, for instance from the Muskoka Hospital at Gravenhurst, signed by the physician in charge, in which he says:

"On the evening of February 27th, the men marginally named were in Gravenhurst without pass, after the hour of 6 p.m. Both men as far as I understand, were in the skating rink.

"There is a rule which reads as follows:

'Any patient who is away from the grounds after 6 p.m. without a written pass from the physician will be discharged. No excuses will be taken or second chances given.'

"Both of these patients were conversant with this rule and also fully aware that exceptions were not made. Will you, therefore, kindly forward transportation for these men.

"Enclosed you will find medical report on both patients."

That would be one of the difficulties which arose to which reference has been made?—A. That would be a case where a man would not observe the rules of the institution.

Q. And that would be one class of the cases to which you referred?—A. Yes.

Q. And the result of not obeying the rules of the institution was that he was discharged from that institution?—A. Yes.

Q. And is it not so that in consequence of that difficulty, and of the inability to make rules with respect to that institution, steps were taken to provide other sanatoria for tuberculous patients?—A. I am not prepared to admit that those were the special reasons.

Q. That would be a particular reason?—A. Probably that would be a particular reason at that particular time.

Q. And that particular reason has continued up to the present time?—A. But there were very many things that brought the situation up to that stage.

Q. But it started in on that line. I have the correspondence here and the difficulty was that they had civilian patients already in the institution?—A. Certainly

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. And they were under obligations to the Government of the Province of Ontario, by reason of receiving a grant from the province and had to continue that treatment to the civil patient?—A. Certainly.

Q. And therefore the introduction of the returned soldier patients was something supplementing their ordinary work?—A. Yes.

Q. And the difficulty arose from the very start with respect to the enforcing of the discipline in connection with the returned soldiers as distinct from the civilian patient?—A. Yes.

Q. And the letter that I have just read seems to be one of recent date showing that there is just the same sort of complaint now as you remember at the early stages, and that the same difficulty has continued from the start?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And it became necessary to provide for beds in an institution distinctively set apart for the returned tubercular soldiers where they would be governed by rules and regulations and discipline, that would be applicable to themselves alone, is not that so?—A. To a certain extent that is so, but I do not know how many sanatoria the Military Hospitals Commission have directly under their control at present, but I do not think there are very many. They have added accommodation at some of the existing sanatoria, that is to say they have been able to deal with certain sanatoria in the Dominion, but not with the oldest established sanatorium.

Q. And that difficulty at the Muskoka Free Hospital arose from the fact that they have two classes of patients there, and that the authorities were under obligations to the Ontario Government with respect to their grant?—A. There was one feature of the situation, and that is that no definite arrangements were made with this institution, accommodation could have been secured in this institution under arrangements with the Military Hospitals Commission to increase their accommodation.

Q. Mr. Gage said that they could not confine their activities purely to the Military Hospitals Commission, that is true is it not?—A. I presume they did want to keep their civil work.

Q. And the difficulty arose because of their inability to carry on their civil work and the returned soldiers' work, and the commission had to seek accommodation in other institutions?—A. The difficulty was more imaginary perhaps, than real.

Q. Well, the matter of discipline was at the bottom of it at any rate?—A. Not altogether, I do not admit that. Now here is an institution which has been established for a great many years, and which is carrying on a good work and, at no time, has this institution been able to get any satisfactory arrangement with the Militia Department, or with the Military Hospitals Commission as to what part it might be expected to take in this work. In other words, what available accommodation they had was simply used without giving them any degree of satisfaction, in the matter of future prospects, and, until such time as they could secure accommodation elsewhere.

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. Are you aware of several interviews that the Hospitals Commission had with Mr. Gage and his associates regarding the sanatorium at Gravenhurst?—A. I am not aware of those, but I am aware of certain communications which passed between myself and the physician in charge at the sanatorium.

Q. I am asking you are you aware of the interviews that took place between the members of the Hospitals Commission and the management of this institution at Gravenhurst?—A. I am not.

Q. Then you do not know what the result of those conferences would be. If I tell you that it was utterly impossible to make arrangements with this institution, I suppose you are not prepared to controvert that?—A. I am aware of the result of the first conference that was held with Mr. Gage, representing that institution, when it was arranged they would provide accommodation for a certain number of men for the first six months, and for an added number of men during the first year—I am aware of that.

Q. But are you aware that they wanted the Government to pay for the building of pavilions at the rate of $650 a bed for every advanced case, and $150 for incipient cases, and that the Government of Canada was required to put up that amount of money, otherwise they would not deal with the Commission; were you aware of that?—A. I am not aware of that, sir.

Q. Then, if I say that that is the case, you are not prepared to controvert it?—A. No, sir, I am not prepared to controvert it, but I should presume from letters that I have on the matter as late as August 25th—

Mr. BENNETT: I have a later one, the 25th November.

The WITNESS: This was August 25th, 1916.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For your information I will say now that I am unaware of any cases in which the Commission entered more frequently into treaty with an institution than we did with the Gravenhurst institution with the view of looking after our men, but we found it utterly impossible to do business with them. They wanted us to put up all the money for the buildings.

The WITNESS: The situation I refer to was when it was acute, when we could not find accommodation for tubercular patients, and that letter distinctly states that they have been unable to get any satisfactory arrangement with the Hospitals Commission; and I presume that what the Senator says with respect to business arrangements transpired since that time.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the Secretary of the Hospitals Commission should put in the whole of the correspondence, Mr. Chairman, and that will explain itself. On the 16th October, 1916, Mr. Riddell wrote that the Secretary of the National Sanatorium Association had stated that the consideration was $12 a week. (To witness): Did you know of that?

The WITNESS: No, sir, I did not.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And on the 15th November last Major Munn, your second in command, telegraphed to the Secretary of the Hospitals Commission at Ottawa as follows:—

“Major Wilson and I interviewed Mr. Gage this morning. He expresses the greatest desire to assist us in every way, but refuses to come to any agreement.”

Did you know that?—A. No, sir.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): When was this offer made, Sir James?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It continued for over a year. We had interviews in Ottawa and we had interviews here with the management of this institution, but we could not do business with them at all, and we did not consider it advantageous for the Government to spend a large amount of money on the basis of $650 a bed for advanced cases and $150 a bed for incipient cases.

The CHAIRMAN: While you were endeavouring to negotiate with them you passed by and made other arrangements?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We exhausted all efforts.

The WITNESS: When that situation was acute and when I criticised the facilities offered by the Minnewaska Sanatorium—

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What time was that?—A. That was in August, 1916. The letter sent by me to the Commission was put in my evidence. I have here two letters received about [Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

that time, one of which was written by Mr. Gage himself to me, and the other by Dr. Kendall, the physician-in-chief, and I would like to have those placed in my evidence to show what my position in the matter was. Those tuberculosis patients were being kept back on my hands. I had no means of disposing of them, and the situation was extremely acute; that is the time when I criticised, if I criticised at all—when I drew attention to the inadequacy of the facilities for treating tuberculosis patients.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No question about that; we all realize that; we all realize the inadequacy at that time.

The WITNESS: I would like to submit these letters as showing the sources of my information.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Who were those letters from?—A. Mr. Gage and Dr. Kendall.

Q. Did you transmit them to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. No.

Q. Then they remained within your knowledge only?—A. They remained within my knowledge, but I presume that the Military Hospitals Commission was fully aware of the matter.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Major Munn knew of them?—A. Certainly.

Q. He was working for the Hospitals Commission?—A. Certainly; but I would like to file these as showing the source of my information:—

GRAVENHURST, ONT., August 25, 1916.

Col. F. W. MARLOW,

A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 2, Camp Borden, Ont.

DEAR SIR,—A year ago at the request of Mr. Scammell, Secretary of the Hospitals Commission, the trustees of the National Sanitarium Association agreed to make provision for one hundred soldier patients suffering from tuberculosis.

We at once set about securing the necessary accommodation at our own expense by the erection of an infirmary building, securing forty-one rooms for bed patients. We also erected three pavilions to accommodate sixty-two more.

During the past twelve months the maximum number of patients in residence at any one time was in the neighbourhood of forty.

During a considerable portion of this period we had a long waiting list of civilian patients that could have been admitted had we not been holding beds for soldier patients.

Some time ago a committee of the National Sanitarium Association was appointed to wait upon the Hospitals Commission and with this object in view we visited Ottawa. It was felt by our trustees that if we were to carry out successfully sanatoria treatment for soldier patients, some new regulations would require to be considered to avoid scandals that were certain to develop reflecting upon the good name of our institution and might at the same time give trouble to the Hospitals Commission itself.

If patients (soldiers) could absent themselves without leave or become drunk without some means of checking—our task would be a hopeless one.

I may say the Hospitals Commission recognized the difficulties that had arisen and promised that a conference would be shortly arranged to go into the whole question. This meeting has not yet taken place.

Dr. Kendal, our physician in Muskoka, has just advised me that you have telegraphed him, notifying him that eight new patients were being sent from Camp Borden.

In view of the present condition of affairs, I have felt it wise to telegraph you that we would not be prepared to accept any other soldier patients until the whole matter was fully gone into and a solution found to the problem that sooner or later must be faced.

Assuring you of the earnest wish of our trustees to co-operate with you and the Hospitals Commission in their work, believe me,

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) W. J. GAGE,
President."

GRAVENHURST, August 28, 1916.

Col. F. W. Marlow,
A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 2, Camp Borden.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Gage visited our institution yesterday and had intended writing you, but as a stenographer was not available, he commissioned me to do so to-day.

The matter to be discussed is still in reference to the soldier question. While Mr. Gage is anxious that you should know that he is interested and ever willing to do whatever possible for these unfortunate men, and for the Militia Department in caring for them, he cannot help but feel that some definite and permanent arrangement is imperative, and must be made at once, before we, as an institution, are prepared to accept any further responsibility financially or otherwise, in the matter.

We are just beginning the erection of a forty bed pavilion to take care of the pressing needs in connection with civilian patients, and if arrangements warranted us caring for more soldier patients, it would be necessary that ground space be set apart and buildings erected for this purpose forthwith.

I received a telegram from Petawawa Camp, after my telephone conversation with you a few evenings ago, in reference to a man coming on, and I wired them to send him on.

I also received a wire from Winnipeg on Friday, stating that four men were on their way, and have two additional notifications from Borden, since the letter notifying us of eight, which was referred to in Mr. Gage's letter.

Mr. Gage further feels that after reviewing the circumstances of the past and conditions prevailing at present, that we must ask you not to have any more notified to come on, until such time as the matter is mutually and satisfactorily adjusted.

From what I understand, Mr. Gage is prepared to suggest to our trustee board that if the Militia Department is prepared to enter into a mutually satisfactory arrangement, the National Sanitarium Association, with their institutions at Weston and Muskoka, can take care of practically all the soldier patients seeking admission.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) W. B. KENDALL,
Physician-in-Chief.

By Sir James Loughheed:

Q. You know, Colonel Marlow, that the tuberculosis situation suddenly developed, and we were therefore without adequate provision to meet the unlooked for condition at that time?—A. I am not prepared to admit that the tuberculosis situation suddenly developed.

Q. You handed us over nearly all your tubercular cases?—A. There was not a sufficient amount of anticipation in the matter.

Q. Did you direct our attention to it?—A. Well, unfortunately——

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. They came from your particular district, and they represented more than 50 per cent—about 60 per cent— of the cases thrown on our hands?—A. Up till this time, at least until a short time previous to that, our camp cases were being sent direct to the sanatorium by ourselves, and not to the Hospitals Commission.

Q. Then we would not know of them, and they were suddenly thrown on our hands?

Mr. BENNETT: Those are the figures to which I am going to direct the witness's attention, commencing June 17.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Are you aware of the fact that at the first of June and in July of last year there were apparently no figures available as regards the number of men from overseas in the tubercular sanatorium, but then the Militia Department had your camp cases sent to this sanatorium?—A. Yes.

Q. And I observe that, commencing 5th August, the number of camp cases was 39, as against 59 overseas; on September 2nd, 50 camp cases and 55 overseas; October 1st, 52 camp cases and 63 overseas; and in November of last year 65 camp cases, and 62 overseas; and in December only 17 from overseas and 36 from the camp; and in January 1st of this year 45 from the camps and 32 from overseas; February this year, 47 from the camp and 42 from the overseas; and the last day of February, last month, 69 from the camp and 77 from overseas; while at the present time, the 16th, there are 63 camp cases and 73 overseas cases; now, as medical officer for the district, Colonel Marlow, how do you explain, if proper medical supervision was had over the recruiting, so very large a number of camp tuberculosis cases, absorbing the space which was thought to be available for the overseas cases?—A. Well, in my previous evidence I gave the reasons why so many men were taken into the service. I think I explained my own opinion of that in my previous evidence. In respect of tuberculosis cases particularly I would say that it is frequently very difficult to recognize milder degrees of tuberculosis and a closed state. A closed tuberculosis patient might easily present himself at the medical examination room of a recruiting office and be passed by the medical examiner, and when subjected to the strain of service these cases re-open again and are recognized. That has been so all over Canada.

Q. The family history in the hands of the medical man would indicate that?—A. Not necessarily; the family history might not necessarily show any pre-disposition to tuberculosis.

Q. But the man's own history?—A. That is probable, if it were carefully looked into. At the same time, if the physical examination does not show any active signs of tuberculosis, and if the man is otherwise physically fit he is accepted.

Q. From August 5th, 1916, there were 39 tubercular camp cases, and it had risen to as high as 63 camp cases in 1917, the middle of this month, absorbing the space that was so pressingly required for overseas men?—A. Of course these cases are more apt to become active during the winter months than in the summer months.

Q. Then finally it can be stated that the utilization of other institutions was not because you were willing to pay other institutions and not pay the Muskoka institution for similar services?—A. I am sorry to say that I did not catch the effect of your question.

Q. The endeavour to provide other institutions to take care of tubercular cases was not because of an unwillingness to pay the Gravenhurst institution for similar services resulting in their refusal to take in patients?—A. I presume, sir, it was because of the failure of the Hospitals Commission and the directors of the National Sanatorium to come to an agreeable solution.

Q. It was not because of the failure to pay them because you paid them from the start?—A. Certainly not. I presume not.

By Sir James Lougheed:

Q. Turn to your evidence at page 188, at the top of the page, you give it to be understood, or you leave the impression that you are familiar with certain cables that passed between Sir George Perley and the Government with respect to invalids in November 1916, when this problem was acute. Might I ask what your knowledge of these cables is?—A. If you refer to the paragraph a little further down you will see that I have stated there that "I have been in close touch with officials of the Hospitals Commission ever since the inception of this problem, and I am acquainted with the nature—not the exact nature, but the probable nature—of the communications that passed with respect to the rate at which these men should be sent home, as to whether the accommodation existed or not. I cannot say what the character of the information is, because I do not know definitely myself." I stated at the top of that page that I would like it to be understood that I have been in very close touch with the Military Hospitals Commission and also the Militia Department.

Q. Why do you attribute the delay to the institutions involved or to the individuals involved if you do not know the contents of the cable?—A. As I have stated further up in my evidence, the Baptie report stated that there were some thousands of men ready to be sent home. It was understood that there was lack of accommodation in Canada.

Q. I am not dealing with the Baptie report. That is something with which the overseas administration alone would be familiar. We are referring to the information which either the Militia Department or the Hospitals Commission had as to the situation in November.—A. May I say that in Col. Thompson's evidence somewhere he stated that they had been in constant communication with Sir George Perley as to the number of men that were to be sent home, and if definite information on this matter was required to clear it up, then I presume it would be a natural procedure to look for the information to the correspondence dealing with it.

Q. That is to say you have made the statement without being familiar with the correspondence, and left the impression that men were being withheld from being sent over to Canada on account of unwillingness to take them on this side of the water. However, without discussing that phase of it, may I direct your attention to this. You say in November the question became acute. What question became acute?—A. The problem of providing increased accommodation for returned soldiers both in the convalescent class and in the active treatment class.

Q. Do you mean from your answer to infer that the problem had become acute as between Sir George Perley and the Government of Canada?—A. I mean the problem—

Q. You mean the return of men to Canada?—A. The problem of returning men to Canada.

Q. Would you be surprised to learn that the question never arose until about the middle of November, and that it only had relation to about 300 invalids represented as cases for active treatment, and 12 officers? Are you aware of that?—A. It was my impression that there had been at least 3,000—

Q. Let me inform you of this, because you will probably be glad to correct any wrong impression which may have arisen from the representations which you have made. In November a cable came from Sir George Perley to the Prime Minister reading as follows:—

"Referring to former cables, from Bruce to Militia requesting that accommodation be provided for active treatment in Canada, we are now able to forward twelve officers and three hundred men requiring further treatment. May we send them? Others will be forwarded at intervals."

A. What was the date of that?

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That was on the 7th November. Perhaps the Committee will allow me to review what took place. This cable was received by the Hospitals Commission on the 13th November. Not earlier than that, and this letter was sent by me on that date to Sir George Perley, reading as follows:—

“On Saturday I took up with the Prime Minister your cablegram to him of the 7th instant, in which you say you are able to forward 12 officers and 300 men requiring active treatment in Canada.”

And at this time may I say that this is the first occasion that we had active treatment cases thrown on our hands, as you are doubtless aware.

The WITNESS: Yes.

Q. This was the first time that any intimation was given to us that we had to handle active treatment cases?—A. Yes.

Q. And by active treatment cases you understood they were cot or bed cases?—A. Yes.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Continuing this letter.

“As you doubtless know we have two classes of hospital in Canada, one known as the Military Hospitals administered by the Militia Department, and the other Convalescent Hospitals administered by the Military Hospitals Commission. I have taken up with the Director General of Medical Services of the Militia Department the accommodation of the Military Hospitals and he informs me that these are already filled with patients.”

Q. Your contention always was that the Army Medical Corps should handle the active treatment cases; that is to say, that they should be handled in the military hospitals?—A. I made that statement in my report.

Q. And consequently we were naturally expecting that you would be able to handle the active treatment cases. The letter continues:—

“I have taken up with the Director-General of the Medical Services of the Militia Department the accommodation of the Military Hospitals and he informs me that these are already filled with patients. The same may be said of the Convalescent Hospitals under the Military Hospitals Commission. We have had to take over a substantial number of cases from the Militia Department, cases which, under normal conditions, would have entered the Military Hospitals. The Director-General of Medical Services informs me this morning that he is having an extended inquiry made throughout Canada to ascertain if any accommodation can be secured in civilian hospitals. He and I are very doubtful if any space can be furnished in this direction in Canada. The Militia Department and the Military Hospitals Commission have already handed over to the civilian hospitals a number of cases that cannot be handled advantageously in the Government institutions.

“If the cases referred to in your cablegram are intended to be the first of cases to be sent out to Canada requiring active treatment and as recommended by Colonel Bruce in his report and also in his cablegram to the Militia Department we should have ample notice of what the policy of the Overseas Administration of the Canadian Forces will be in this matter.”

Q. You would not consider it an unreasonable thing that the Hospitals Commission should ask at this date what the policy of the department was with regard to the treatment of active cases?—A. Not at all, sir.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The letter continues:—

“Hospitals will have to be erected and officered, provision will have to be made for hospital cars and trains. In this latter respect we are practically without any. I have already taken the subject up with the Minister of Railways and am hopeful that ere long we may have several hospital cars fitted up. From inquiry I am also informed that it will be a difficult task to properly officer large hospitals owing to the number of Canadian doctors and nurses now at the front."

Q. You will recall that Col. Bruce's recommendation was that some five or six large hospitals of 1,000 beds each should be erected at the different centres of Canada?

—A. Yes.

Q. And that recommendation was made about that time?—A. Yes.

Q. But no effect was given to the report of Col. Bruce as you doubtless know?

—A. No.

Q. It was proposed by Col. Bruce that practically in the mid-winter of 1916 we should proceed with the erection of hospitals in these centres, and it was natural that we should point out that all this equipment should be furnished before these cases were dealt with? I wrote to Sir George Perley expressing the opinion that on the approach of winter it was rather an unfortunate time to build hospitals.—A. Pardon me. Did he advise erecting hospitals or securing the necessary buildings?

Q. I was under the impression that he proposed erecting buildings. I know that so far as Toronto was concerned the proposition was that we should buy his hospital, or the hospital in which he is very largely interested.—A. I dealt in my report with the possibility of the men being sent home at a more rapid rate.

Q. My letter goes on to say (reads):

"The main thing to consider at the present is what your overseas policy is to be on this question. If you find it is indispensable to do this please cable me as to what the requirements will actually be, and I shall take the subject up with all parties interested and personally with those associated with me, contribute in any way we can to meet the situation.

"We for some time have been in treaty with the Ontario Government to take over their cottage asylum institution now under construction at Whitby, Ontario. This is being constructed in three units with accommodation of approximately six hundred to a unit. One unit will be completed about the end of the year. The second unit in about six months. We had intended this chiefly for our convalescent work which is of course quite distinct from the active treatment cases referred to in your cable. We are exceptionally fortunate in securing the property. Up to the present time we have found that to secure accommodation for convalescent cases alone has been rather a difficult problem, hence, in my judgment, if we have to enter upon active treatment cases we have to specially build."

That letter was written by myself to Sir George Perley. You will see, Colonel Marlow that at that date the volume of active treatment cases was limited to 300, and did not amount to any such number as three or four thousand cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now it turns out—A. May I interrupt you just for a moment?

Q. Certainly. I want you to thoroughly understand the subject?—A. This was shortly after I made my report, and if you refer to that you will note that I dealt with the possibility of requiring hospitals for active treatment cases, and I advised that that was work which should be undertaken by the Army Medical Corps. I was in conference with the Deputy Minister and with the Director General of Medical Service following that, shortly afterwards in Ottawa. The matter had been brought up, believe in Militia Council, and no definite action was taken pending further information as to the policy of the overseas authorities, which was something I mentioned in my report as well. At the same time the Director General of Medical Services secure estimates from the several branches concerned as to the expense of acquiring or erecting hospitals to meet the situation, but I understand that the matter was not followed up by the Militia Department because the Orders in Council had given the Hospitals Commission authority over this whole work.

Q. How did you understand that?—A. I was given to understand that by the D.G.M.S.—that the Hospitals Commission had proceeded with the problem of acquiring accommodation for the more active cases without further conference with the Militia Department, and the D.G.M.S. did not go on any further with his arrangements.

Q. I am dealing chiefly with the impression which you have left on the public mind that there was a great volume of cases to be dealt with. Now, then, on the 25th November the following message was received from Sir George Perley: (Reads)—

“Three hundred cases invalided to Canada. These three hundred will be sent forward next week, arriving on or about December 6. All are able to walk.”

So that between the first cablegram and the cablegram which I have just read, these have turned out to be not active treatment cases at all, but practically all convalescent cases.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Had he received your letter on the date of that second cable?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I doubt it, because he does not make any reference to it here. My letter was written on the 14th and this cablegram was sent on the 25th. He goes on to say: (Reads)—

“Most require considerable surgical treatment. Would suggest their being placed in civil hospitals. Sufficient medical officers and nursing sisters will be sent forward with these cases to deliver them safely to their destination, but neither medical officers or nursing sisters can be spared to remain in Canada, as we urgently need these here. May we send an average of five hundred per month to Canada to be treated in hospitals there. All fit to travel without detriment to their health and all will do better in opinion of medical authorities by treatment in Canada than by remaining for prolonged periods in hospitals in England.”

Now, on the 29th November I cabled Sir George Perley as follows: (Reads.)

“Please cable what has been done with regard to 300 hospital patients referred to in my cablegram of November 27th.”

His reply, dated December 5th, is as follows: (Reads.)

“On receipt of your message regarding 300 ambulatory cases, instructions were given not to send them at present, but hope you can cable before long saying you can take them.”

Then, on December 5th I sent the following cable to Sir George Perley: (Reads.)

“Can now provide for three hundred ambulatory cases.”

Now, I might ask you if you know whether these cases have ever yet been sent out?—A. No, sir, I do not.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As a matter of fact they were not sent out until last February.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Is there any explanation given for the delay?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It was due to the lack of ships, or some reason of that kind. Then, on the 1st of January, the Prime Minister wired Sir George Perley as follows: (Reads.)

"For Lougheed, think three hundred per week will meet all possible requirements and probably will be more than can be got ready here. Don't think hospital ship or alteration to existing vessels necessary as ship's ordinary hospital accommodation will take stretcher cases of which proportion is small. Will give you more definite information shortly. Rates of passage should be arranged in Canada as usual. Will cable you notification whenever any cases are sailing."

On December 12th the President of the Hospitals Commission cabled that accommodation for 1,000 hospital cases had been secured. On December 16th the president of the Military Hospitals Commission cabled that accommodation could be provided for 1,500 hospital cases and that it was desirable to have information as to the approximate number to be accommodated. On December 22nd Sir George Perley cabled the Prime Minister that it was estimated that 4,000 cases requiring active treatment had better be sent to Canada. That probably was the cablegram you, Colonel Marlow, referred to. That was the first intimation from Sir George Perley that there was that number of cases. I am not speaking of the rumours that were in circulation that Colonel Bruce had reported this, or Doctor Baptie or any one else, but I am speaking of the official correspondence which took place between the Overseas Minister and the Prime Minister, or between the Overseas Minister and myself. You will observe, Colonel Marlow, that on December 22nd Sir George Perley cabled the Prime Minister that it was estimated that 4,000 cases requiring active treatment had better be sent to Canada. On December 23rd the Prime Minister cabled to Sir George Perley stating that the Hospitals Commission anticipated no difficulty in immediately providing for the 4,000 cases. Now, were you aware that these cablegrams had been exchanged between the Prime Minister and Sir George Perley, and between Sir George Perley and myself, before you made the statements you did?—A. No, sir, I was not, but in one communication, which I think came from overseas, reference is made to medical officers and nursing sisters accompanying these men to their destination, but that such medical officers and nursing sisters could not be retained in Canada.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That was Sir George Perley's suggestion.

The WITNESS: Yes, but might I ask what led up to that? Was the statement made that they should be retained in Canada.

Q. Well, I will say this to you, that in the correspondence that took place it was pointed out that if such a large number of shipments were to be made it was desirable that every provision should be made in Canada for the care of these men. You would not regard that as unreasonable, would you?—A. No, certainly not. But may I ask, in reference to a cablegram which you referred to, the first one you read after your letter to Sir George Perley, what is the date in November?

Q. This is from the Prime Minister to Sir George Perley:—

OTTAWA, November 18, 1916.

Dominion,
London.

Following from Lougheed: Your cable 16th, Military Hospitals Commission are making arrangements for first three hundred men, but will require at least three weeks' time to provide necessary accommodation and staff.

A. What is that?

Q. That is an answer to Sir George Perley's cablegram as to the 300 men.—A. What date?

Q. November 18. It was received by the Military Hospitals Commission and taken up between the Military Hospitals Commission, represented by myself and the Prime Minister. (Reads).

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Medical and nursing assistance accompanying soldiers should remain in Canada on account scarcity professional services here. Important we have ample notice respecting all shipments and specific dates when fixed as considerable time required to secure suitable accommodation.

Now, would you regard it as unreasonable that the Hospitals Commission should ask in midwinter that three weeks should be given them to make preparation from that date?—A. No, sir.

Q. For the reception of that number of men?—A. I think, sir, I would consider it, perhaps, unreasonable that they should have asked that the nursing sisters and medical attendants accompanying those men should be retained in Canada, because of lack of professional service here.

Q. Well, we suggested it, and we were being subjected at the time to many criticisms. Now, in view of the criticisms made by yourself and others, do you think it would be unreasonable that we should ask that every precaution should be taken?—A. Well, I suppose, from your point of view, it might have been reasonable. May I ask, sir—

Q. I shall be glad to let you ask later, but let me follow this up now. The first intimation was from Col. Bruce in a letter I have read of November 14. He wrote to Col. Reid. Col. Bruce had no official correspondence or communication with the Department of Militia or the Government so far as I know, it came from Col. Reid. (Reads).

We hope that we will have somewhere in the neighbourhood of 3,000 of such cases to be returned to Canada for further treatment as soon as we are able to investigate the total number of patients now in England.

Now, reduced to the final analysis, the number came down to 300?—A. Was that a letter?

Q. Yes, from Col. Reid, of the 14th of November, a quotation from a letter from Col. Bruce to Col. Reid. Now, then, in view of this great urgency, which was, in your mind, impeded by the Hospitals Commission, let me just point out the shipments that have come out from time to time from that time to the present; and the committee will appreciate the difficulty of the overseas administration in shipping these men out. Now, follow this, Col. Marlow, and you will probably see an erroneous view while looking at it in that light, that it was entirely a mistake on your part in placing the construction upon it which you did. On the 1st December, the name of the steamship is not given, a boat left England with returned men classified as follows: Gunshot wounds, 67; insane, 7; tuberculosis, 23; miscellaneous, 131; total, 228. That was the ship that should have sailed with the 300 to which Sir George Perley referred. The next ship that came in left England on the 8th December, the SS. Northland, with returned men classified as follows: Gunshot wounds, 66; insane, 12; tuberculosis, 13; miscellaneous, 57; total, 148. The next ship that sailed from England was on the 15th December, the Melagama. It contained gunshot wound cases, 15; insane, 20; tuberculosis, 13; miscellaneous, 213; in all 297. The next ship left England on the 16th December, the SS. Andania, with returned men classified as follows: Gunshot wounds, 115; amputations, 74; insane, 1; miscellaneous, 41; in all, 231. The next ship that sailed was on the 24th December, the SS. Scotian, and contained gunshot wounds, 47; amputations, 3; tuberculosis, 14; insane, 7; miscellaneous, 127; in all, 198. On the 29th December the next ship was the Missanabie, with the following cases: Gunshot wounds, 37; tuberculosis, 10; insane, 4; miscellaneous, 17; in all, 68. Now that was the time of very great urgency, the period when it was represented that active treatment cases were to be forwarded to Canada, and when the impression appeared to obtain in your mind that there were a great number of cases that were being delayed on account of the Hospitals

Commission, and so on. Now, in view of the facts, which are indisputable, and which you have heard from the official records, are you prepared to abide by what you said on the top of page 188, that men were delayed or held over in England on account of lack of accommodation?—A. Well, sir—

Q. Be candid about it. We are discussing this in a friendly way and in the public interest.—A. It would certainly seem that there is a great deal of misunderstanding somewhere between the overseas authorities and the authorities at home as to how many men there were.

Q. We are discussing the Hospital Commission and the Militia Department. I say, from the records which are produced here, would you be inclined to attach censure to the Military Hospitals Commission or to the Militia Department in view of these facts?—A. Well, Sir James, may I say that it has not been my attitude at any time to attach censure to the Hospitals Commission, but you understand what led up to this particular part of my evidence was the statement made by your medical superintendent attaching them to me, practically making me responsible for certain statements which were newspaper reports with which evidently I was credited.

Q. Col. Marlow, did you ever deny publicly those newspaper reports which were attributed to interviews with you and a press correspondent?—A. I may say that so far as I am aware the only people who attributed these reports to me were persons at Ottawa. I made one statement to the newspapers of a general nature which no one could possibly take any objection to, and there were a great many other newspaper reports for which I was not responsible.

Q. With whom was the misunderstanding, the Military Hospitals Commission, the Militia Department, or the Press?—A. It is very difficult to say, I am not sure. I cannot tell you where the misunderstanding was. I made only one newspaper statement, which I showed to the minister, and he took no objection to it, and I do not think any one could. The fact is I was credited with the whole of these newspaper reports.

Q. Is it true that all these statements were based on a misunderstanding, that is the point?—A. All these newspaper reports were put down as coming from me, but there is no reason in the world why I should take any steps to deny them.

Q. But your name was very freely mentioned in connection with them?—A. I admit that, but is not that explained by the fact that I have been very closely associated with this problem, and the reason, perhaps, why my name was so freely mentioned in connection with these reports was because of my own action in asking to be relieved of my duties, because of the intolerable situation which had arisen.

Q. But did you not understand the position in which the Military Hospitals Commission and the Militia Department would be placed, in the public mind, in view of these statements. By reason of the fact that these reports were based to a certain extent upon the statements which you had made and that apparently if they were true a certain responsibility rested upon myself and others who were connected with me in carrying out important public duties, did you not think that you should deny those statements?—A. It was not my place to deny statements in the newspapers, if they chose to make certain statements. I understand that those statements were denied by Mr. Armstrong, the Director of the Military Hospitals Commission. I did not consider it my duty to enter into any newspaper controversy on the subject.

Q. Very well, Colonel Marlow, dropping that subject for the moment?—A. Might I interrupt you, Sir James, for a moment. You refer to a cablegram there which was sent by the Prime Minister, for you, to Sir George Perley, I think the date was 11 November.

Q. November 28, is that the cablegram you refer to?—A. No, I think it was earlier than that, the 17th or the 18th, somewhere about that time.

Q. Yes, November 18, with respect to giving accommodation to 300 men in three weeks?—A. Might I ask further to what that cable constituted a reply?

Q. Yes, Sir George was quite agreeable that this staff should come out, but that they should return. We did not necessarily require them to remain here, except for some little time, but it would require at least three weeks' time to provide the necessary accommodation, and they would return at the end of three weeks?—A. Yes, but that is with respect only to that 300. Might I ask what information you had previous to that time in reference to their coming out?

Q. Sir George Perley cabled that they had 300 men and 12 officers, they would like to send out?—A. Has the substance of that cable been introduced on the record?

Q. Yes, it is here.—A. Might I ask what the date is?

Q. In November, it got here on the 8th, and was received by the Hospitals Commission on the 10th?—A. Might I ask that it be read again, sir.

Q. Certainly. What do you want me to read?—A. What I wanted was, you have a cablegram sent for you by the Prime Minister, dated November 18, with respect to the shipment of 300 men. What I wanted was the correspondence that led up to that directly.

Q. What led up to that was a cablegram of the 16th November, from Sir George Perley to the Prime Minister reading as follows:—

The Medical Service recommends that we forward two classes of patients to Canada for treatment. First those who are permanently unfit for further service, and second those who will want six months or more treatment and whose ultimate return to the service is doubtful. It is estimated that at present there are 3,000 patients in England who could be disposed of in this way, thus relieving the hospital congestion here. There are three hundred men now boarded and ready to proceed to Canada—all ambulatory cases who are permanently unfit for further service but who could go on passenger ships. At least half, probably more of the three thousand cases would be ambulatory. The remainder would be sent in Hospital ship. Am of the opinion that course recommended is wise and hope necessary arrangements can be made in Canada. Could these not be absorbed into civil hospitals. May we send over three hundred immediately.

(Sgd.) PERLEY.

Now by the 5th December we were ready for 300, and by the end of December, we were ready for the 4,000.—A. Might it not be taken from the substance of that cablegram—or might that not be taken as a notification that there were 3,000 men to be sent home if they could be taken here?

Q. Yes, but up to the present time they have not sent them?—A. I thought it was stated it was some time later you had information about the 3,000 being sent.

Q. No, up to this time they had not sent them. There are reasons I suppose of which we know nothing as to why these men were not sent out. You seem to think that in the first work of the Hospitals Commission that the Commission was committed to using small homes. You probably overlooked the fact that what led up to the appointment of the Hospitals Commission was that the Militia Department had handed this work over to the St. John's Ambulance Association?—A. No, I do not think so.

Q. Or the Voluntary Aid?—A. No sir, there was another Order in Council preceding that, by which a Military Committee was appointed, that was the first organization.

Q. That was some time later. You are probably aware that between them, the Committee of the Militia Council and the St. John's Ambulance, they had investigated between 60 and 70 houses that had been tendered for particular purposes. You are aware of that fact?—A. I am aware that a very considerable number of the houses were inspected.

Q. Are you aware that the Engineer of the Militia Department had inspected many of these houses, and had recommended that they be taken?—A. I am aware that previous to the appointment of this Commission there were five inspected by the Engineer Officer, in Military District No. 2, and that following that quite a number of others were inspected.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. Are you aware that the Militia Department, represented by the St. John's Ambulance and by the Engineers, had recommended that the St. Catherine's Home should be taken, and that they had prepared plans, and recommended that various changes be made in it?—A. No, sir, I am not aware of that.

Q. I am simply giving you that information.—A. With respect to the St. John's Ambulance Association, they have nothing to do with the Militia Department, but with respect to the St. Catherine's Home, the opening was carried out against the wishes of the General Officer Commanding the District.

Q. But the General Officer Commanding had nothing to do with it; it was for the Hospitals Commission to pass upon it; that seems to be the whole difficulty between the military and the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. But may I say that the General Officer Commanding the district advised strongly against it being done? He had received communications both from the Master General of the Ordinance and also from the Secretary of the Hospitals Commission in respect to opening it, and in reply to both of those communications by telegram and letter he advised very strongly against opening it.

Q. But his advice was not asked by the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. He was asked to open it——

Q. But I simply wanted to advise you as to the origination of those small houses being used. That is how it originated. As you doubtless know, we have to-day a list of 75 homes which it was proposed to take over?—A. Yes, sir, but in accordance with the early policy of the Hospitals Commission, certainly as recommended by the Secretary of the Commission, it was their policy to continue to use those small homes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I suppose Mr. Chairman, that the cables and telegrams that were read here to-day and referred to in the evidence of Colonel Marlow will be filed.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Colonel Marlow, let us see whether we cannot get down to what is admitted in this controversy, because it seems to me it has become very largely a question of the Hospitals Commission versus Army Medical Corps. I suppose you will admit that from the beginning of the war till June, 1915, when the Hospitals Commission was created, that things were carried on satisfactorily under the Army Medical Corps, under your jurisdiction?—A. Yes; at that time we had very few returned soldiers to deal with, up to June, 1915.

Q. Then, in June, 1915, the Military Hospitals Commission was created?—A. Yes.

Q. And as you have already stated, the reason for its creation, in your opinion, was as follows—and I suppose you will say that is true to-day—at page 227 of your evidence:—

Q. Can you suggest any reason why the Military Hospitals Commission was created if the work could be better carried on by the Army Medical Corps? Somebody must have thought the commission necessary?—A. Well, I could suggest a reason. I do not know how far it is true, but the one that appeals to me more than anything else is that it was a matter of unloading at the time.

Q. Unloading what?—A. Unloading work from the Militia Department which it should ordinarily have done, but because at that time it was particularly busy with many other matters that were pressing, the idea of a commission was conceived, and the matter was unloaded.

Q. You are of the opinion that, owing to the amount of work in the Militia Department, they thought it was necessary to give the work to the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. To create something else to handle this big problem.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

That was the reason the Military Hospitals Commission was created, according to your own evidence?—A. That is not my opinion, sir; I said they thought.

Q. You were asked: "You are of the opinion that, owing to the amount of work in the Militia Department, they thought it was necessary to give the work to the Military Hospitals Commission."—A. I am of the opinion that they thought.

Q. No; this is what you said, and swore here, whether it is true or not: "Well, I could suggest a reason. I do not know how far it is true, but the one that appeals to me more than anything else is that it was a matter of unloading at the time." You, at any rate, thought that the reason they created the Military Hospitals Commission was that they wanted to unload some of the work of the Army Medical Corps, because as you say you were particularly busy with other matters which were pressing at the time; that is true or it is not true; it is your own evidence; is it true?—A. It is still my—

Q. We have been examining and cross-examining here to-day till the public mind is so befuddled that we do not know where we are?—A. You put your questions in such a way that it is difficult to answer them.

Q. Until June, 1915, when the Military Hospitals Commission was inaugurated, you say that everything was going satisfactorily; you also say here that the reason the Military Hospitals Commission was created was because the Army Medical Corps was overloaded with work? Is that correct? Are those answers true?—A. Not as you put it in your question, that they were unloading the ordinary work which it should have done because it was particularly busy on the matters that were pressing, and the idea of a commission was conceived; I say that is my opinion as to the reason why the commission was created. I do not admit in that evidence or now that the Army Medical Corps were overworked.

Q. But it is your opinion that the reason they unloaded it was because the Government thought they were overloaded?—A. That is a matter that emanated from Ottawa.

Q. The reason they appointed the commission was because they thought it was overloaded with work?

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): The Militia Department, not the Army Medical Corps.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I mean the Militia Department. The Army Medical Corps is a part of the Militia Department.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And up to that time there was no friction—there was nobody to have any friction with?—A. Quite true.

Q. So that with the inauguration of this Commission the friction started, and you were of the opinion that the work could have been carried on better, or at least as well, by the Army Medical Corps?—A. I was of the opinion that the whole of the work in respect to the problem should have been carried on by the Militia Department. I have never changed my mind from that day to this.

Q. Answer my question—and you were of the opinion that the work should have been carried on by the Army Medical Corps under the Militia Department?—A. The medical work, but not the other phase of the work. There are other military aspects of the subject as well as the medical.

Q. And then it was because of that opinion of yours, and because, as you say in your evidence, that the Military Hospitals Commission started to take charge of this work without consulting you, that friction arose?—A. Allow me; I say here—

Q. Is that true?—A. Wait; you mention friction; I say there was no friction until the creation of the Military Hospitals Commission Command—until they started to assume the control of the men; until they went into the whole military business; that is where the trouble began.

Q. The Military Hospitals Commission Command is a part of the organization of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. It is a military organization responsible to the Militia Department; it cannot have responsibility to the civilian organization known as the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. We will take it that because there was the Military Hospitals Commission and the Military Hospitals Commission Command that you were dissatisfied with that?—A. I have not at any time expressed dissatisfaction with the Military Hospitals Commission. I say there was no friction until the creation of the Military Hospitals Commission Command.

Q. You say in your evidence at page 191:—

“As I have already said in my evidence, there appeared to be a very distinct attempt on the part of the Hospitals Commission to entirely divorce themselves from the Militia Department, and that was one of the things that, to my mind, gave rise to a very considerable amount of trouble.”

Q. That is right, I suppose?—A. I say, sir, that the order creating the Military Hospitals Commission gave them authority to draw upon the medical service, upon all branches of the Militia Department; they had that authority.

Q. I don't want to go over all this again; you were dissatisfied with the Military Hospitals Commission because of those things that you are stating; is that true?—A. Because of those things that I am going to state.

Q. I know what they are—the divided authority?—A. No, it is not that; it is a matter—may I just go on for a moment.

Q. May I put it this way: You were dissatisfied after that time because a different order of things obtained in the Militia Department than what had previously obtained?—A. After the creation of the command, very different; but that does not explain the real cause of our dissatisfaction, and our dissatisfaction has a very important bearing upon this whole problem.

Q. Of course you know that what we are investigating here is the welfare of returned soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. Turn to your evidence on page 199, the question was asked by Mr. Sutherland (reads):

“Have you had any complaint from the returned soldiers as to the lack of proper attention on the part of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. No, I do not think so; I think that ordinarily the men are getting good attention and good service.”

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If that is the case what have we to complain of? The whole object of the Military Hospitals Commission was to give good service and attention to the men. You say they are getting good service and attention. I suppose you have read all the evidence that has been given here?—A. Not all of it.

Q. With the exception of evidence given by men of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, the evidence has been unanimous that the Military Hospitals Commission has given splendid service. Is that not so? You have read the evidence?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you name me a single witness that has come before this Committee?—A. I have not read all the evidence by any means.

Q. Do you know of a single witness—I do not—who has given evidence before the Committee who has said that the Military Hospitals Commission has not performed this service splendidly?—A. In that connection may I direct your attention—

Q. What do you think now about the service that has been performed by the Military Hospitals Commission? We want to know what is best to do for the soldiers, but we want to get it honestly and frankly?—A. If you would give me a chance to put it in my own way I could jolly soon tell you.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. You have been on the stand two days and a half and that ought to be enough?
—A. I think from the evidence already given I have stated that the Military Hospitals Commission can perform a very useful function.

Q. Listen to this: "Have you had any complaint from the returned soldiers as to the lack of proper attention on the part of the Military Hospitals Commission"? And the answer, "No, I do not think so. I think that ordinarily the men are getting good attention and service"?—A. May I direct your attention to my answer to the next question? "I suppose so, but you must remember that the medical service is being carried on by the Army Medical Corps. There has never been a period when the Military Hospitals Commission has assumed responsibility for the medical service."

Q. That is not so, because the Military Hospitals Commission has assumed responsibility for medical services not in this district, but all over Canada?—A. I do not know.

Q. Is this not the only district where it has not been handed over?—A. I cannot tell you that. I am not prepared to say definitely. Colonel Thompson will tell you.

Q. You were asked, "It is the divided authority you object to" and you answer "Of course"?—A. Yes.

Q. Has the whole trouble not arisen because of either divided authority or lack of knowledge of who had the authority with respect to the respective powers of the Military Hospitals Commission and the Army Medical Corps?—A. A great deal of the trouble has come from divided authority.

Q. Notwithstanding that, the returned soldier has received care and attention according to your own evidence. Take page 185 of your evidence, and this refers to the matter brought out by Sir James Loughheed this afternoon. We were speaking of the ability of the Military Hospitals Commission to care for the returned soldier, sick and wounded, and at the bottom of page 185 I find the following question, "Dr. Thompson says that they are preparing to have accommodation in Canada to the extent of 10,000 beds. If that be so, would that, in your opinion be sufficient"? And the answer "I presume it would be, certainly"?—A. Yes.

Q. Then the examination proceeds:—

"Q. Then do you know that it has been the policy of the British Government to retain these men there, the active treatment cases until recently, they have been sending more active treatment cases to Canada that has been the policy of the British Government has it not?—A. I presume so.

"Q. So that as far as the Military Hospitals Commission and the Army Medical Corps of Canada are concerned, they did not have the patients here to treat?—A. No, they did not, but they might have treated them if there had been accommodation to which the patients might have been sent."

Then the patients who might have been sent, that you were then referring to, were the patients whom you thought were accumulating in England, but who have been shown by Sir James Loughheed to have been non-existent?—A. I do not think they have been shown to be non-existent. It has been shown they have not been sent. The cable shows they were there.

Q. Is it true according to this evidence that the only patients who have not been treated by the Military Hospitals Commission who should have been treated, are the men who are still in England? That is the effect of your answer is it not; that is what you say. You can change it if you like?—A. Well I have admitted and have said myself that all patients who have come to Canada have been treated—

Q. With regard to the consumptive patients sent up to the free hospitals in Muskoka. I am told by men who came back here who were sent up by the Military Hospitals Commission that the majority of them came back from that institution because they would not submit to being made orderlies for the civil patients. Did you hear that complaint?—A. I saw certain newspaper reports about that but I do not believe them to be true. At that particular time I made a special visit to the Muskoka hospital and inquired into that matter and I was assured by Dr. Kendall that these men were only expected to wait upon soldiers and not upon civil patients.

Q. You heard complaints?—A. Only what I saw in the newspapers.

Q. Do you know that because of their infractions of the rules of that hospital no more patients were allowed to go there?—A. It was not because of their infractions of the rules that they were not allowed to go there. It was because of that reason they were discharged from the institution.

Q. And for that reason they would not accept any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know that?—A. No.

Q. Do you know that they would have accepted more patients?—A. I have reason to believe they would, from the communications I received from Dr. Kendall and Mr. Gage.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are there any there now?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Were you consulted as to the opening of this Minnewaska institution?—A. No, I was not.

Q. You have no responsibility as to that?—A. No. The reason I stated that more patients were not sent to the institutions of the National Sanitarium Association was that the institution refused to receive more patients pending a more definite agreement with the Hospitals Commission.

Q. And you have heard Sir James Loughheed's explanation of that?—A. That is the explanation I had. I have the statement in the two letters.

Q. We will come to something you undoubtedly have the whole control of. General Logie gave evidence yesterday of 91,863 men enlisted for Military District No. 2. There have been 16,637 men struck off as unfit, or perhaps there may be some other reason?—A. A good many other reasons.

Q. Can you tell me what proportion of that 16,000 have been struck off for other than medical unfitness?—A. No, I cannot tell you that. But you asked for a compilation which General Logie said he would give if you wanted it. I cannot give you the number at the present time.

Q. Do you not know as a medical officer of this district how many men have been struck off for being medically unfit in round numbers? I do not expect it within four or five hundred.—A. I do not know the percentage.

Q. Can you tell me within a thousand of how many men have been struck off?—A. No, because we have been dealing with a large number of men. I could make a mistake of a thousand.

Q. I will give you leave to make a mistake of a thousand?—A. I will not take any such chances as that because the definite accurate information can be obtained. I can give you accurate information if you wait for it, and I will not give you inaccurate information.

Q. Did you give information before on this inquiry as to the number of men struck off in Military District No. 2?—A. In what way?

Q. For military unfitness?—A. Did I give any information as to the number?

Q. Yes?—A. No, I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. No, not in any way.

Q. If I were to tell you there were over 10,000 men struck off as being medically unfit, what would you say to that?—A. I would not be prepared to question that statement without looking up the records.

Q. What would you say as to a medical examination, conducted under your jurisdiction, that would show 10,000 soldiers unfit out of a total enrolment of 92,000?

—A. I would say that probably is not a greater proportion than is shown in any other district in Canada, and I have explained the reasons very thoroughly in my previous evidence as to why these men were taken on.

Q. Then you admit there were more men medically unfit enlisted in No. 2 District proportionally than in any other district in Canada, do you?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. Then do you say there are less men admitted medically unfit in No. 2 District proportionally than in any other district in Canada?—A. I do not say anything of the sort, because I have not the figures available to make a comparison of the districts. I simply say that I do not believe the proportion is greater in this district than in other districts.

Q. You gave some evidence the other day about one battalion, the 118th Middlesex, I believe.

Mr. ROSS: No, it was not Middlesex.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: My honourable friend resents the imputation. It was Waterloo, then.

The WITNESS: Kitchener, you mean?

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And if my recollection is correct there were over 50 per cent of the men rejected as medically unfit?—A. In the final examination there were about 50 per cent of the men held back?

Q. As medically unfit?—A. That is, medically unfit for infantry.

Q. Well, as medically unfit for infantry. When you examine men for an infantry battalion you are examining men for infantry?—A. Yes, certainly.

Q. And this Waterloo Battalion was an infantry battalion?—A. Certainly.

Q. So that there were 50 per cent of the men under you in your battalion medically unfit?—A. No, not under my jurisdiction, sir.

Q. Not under your jurisdiction?—A. No, sir, the 1st District is not mine.

Q. Well, I take that back, with an apology as well. Now, Colonel Marlow, I am told—I do not know this for a fact, but I will assume that it is true—that there are over 10,000 men in your district out of the 92,000 enlisted who have since been declared medically unfit. Do you say that is an unduly large proportion of men out of the 92,000 who have been passed through as being fit?—A. I say that it is greater than it ought to be.

Q. Yes?—A. But the reasons, I think, were fully explained; at least, my own version of the reasons, was fully set forth in my previous evidence.

Q. I understand. Colonel Marlow, I am not going to hold you responsible for a lot of men under you, but you must remember that the Military Hospitals Commission are in the same position. No man at the head of a Military District can superintend all the minute acts that are being done by subordinates, but all the same I believe you must accept responsibility for the medical examination of those men, although you may not be actually personally to blame. That is true, is it not?—A. That is true. But if certain conditions are imposed by headquarters with respect to examination all we can do is to carry out our instructions.

Q. Do you not think it is a very important thing, the medical examination of the men going overseas?—A. I do. I have expressed myself very freely in respect to that problem at different times.

Q. Who are the members of your Board here, who examine the men coming from the rural districts before they are enlisted?—A. At the present time?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, the names of the Boards with the exception of those at the Sudbury Depot are in the documents which General Logie filed yesterday, giving his orders for the conduct of these mobilization centres.

Q. How many Boards have you in the city of Toronto for the examination of recruits as they come in from the different districts?—A. The recruits are examined at the Toronto mobilization centre at the Armouries, and we have six or seven Medical Officers working there on part time duty.

Q. Could you give us their names?—A. Major Currie, Captain McLaurin, Captain Sheard and Captain Eby. Those are the four who are on most regular duty.

Q. What experience have these men had, in years, I mean?—A. Major Currie, I presume, has had probably 17 or 18 years' of practice.

Q. Now, the next one?—A. I might say that he has also been carrying on as President of the Standing Final Medical Board for Convalescent Soldiers as well.

Q. Who is the next captain?—A. Captain McLaurin.

Q. What experience has he had?—A. I should say roughly about 12 or 13 years.

Q. Now, the next one, Captain Eby?—A. Captain Eby—about three years, I should say.

Q. Captain Sheard?—A. Captain Sheard, I would say about five or six years' practice.

Q. Now, the next one?—A. Those are the regular medical officers. I might say that we have to fill in with other militia officers.

Q. That is exactly the course which my experience of these examinations has convinced me has been followed. In my opinion one of the most important positions in the whole of the army is that of the medical man who certifies to the fitness of a recruit on entering the service, because in the first place, when the recruit goes in he has the certificate of the Government that he is a sound and well man?—A. Quite right.

Q. Then if he comes back from active service unsound he is entitled to a pension if his health is certified to be impaired?—A. I think you are quite right, sir.

Q. Here you have a medical man of only three years' experience, and another of only four or five years' experience certifying to the physical condition of recruits. Now, I will admit to you that it is one of the hardest tasks that you can set a medical man, to ascertain whether a man is fit or unfit. When the recruit wishes to enter the service he is going to conceal any evidence of impairment of health which would debar him from being accepted. On the other hand, if he wishes to go out he will be prone to exaggerate any symptoms of a malady from which he may be suffering. That is so, is it not?—A. That is so.

Q. In other words, it requires a much more experienced man to tell whether a man is fit or not, regardless of what he says his symptoms are, than it does in private practice, where the patient has no object in concealing his real physical condition or his symptoms. Under the circumstances, do you think it is fair to this country to have men of only three or five years' experience admitting recruits into the Army?—A. I think, sir, that your point is very well taken, but I would like to ask you, or any member of the Committee, where we can get experienced medical officers or practitioners of say from 10 to 20 years' experience to go to a mobilization centre to examine recruits, which I admit is a very trying work when you have to go into a room with 30 or 40 stripped recruits, it is very trying work—where can you get satisfactory medical officers to come out and do that work for the sum of $3 a day, or $1 an hour.

Q. I quite agree with you. A case was brought to my notice of a medical man up in a northern town, who is getting $2 a day for this work?—A. Those are the conditions imposed upon the medical service.

Q. I blame the Government, I am not making any bones about it, for not paying a sufficient fee to medical men to insure a proper inspection, because they would save millions of dollars by a proper medical inspection in the first instance?—A. Sir, as you are aware, I dealt with that point extensively in my report, and I showed where medical officers were receiving pay of the same proportion as the pay of practically all other branches of the service. Their professional training, which is carried on at their own expense, takes at least five years. Yet we have medical officers in the service today doing professional work at the rate of two or three dollars a day.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. That difficulty does not arise under the Military Hospitals Commission.—A. This problem, as I say in my report, has not been treated as a medical problem but has been treated as a lay problem. We are drawing the pay of our rank, whereas experts, with no previous experience, are employed by the Hospitals Commission at rates of pay fixed by that body.

By the Chairman:

Q. And the returned soldier benefits?—A. No, not in respect to the whole problem. Not only the medical side of it, but the whole side of it, all aspects of the problem have to be considered.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Up to the time that you made your report in October, 1916, did you ever recommend to the Government higher pay for medical men?—A. I never had an opportunity of recommending it before, and I recommended it at that time as strongly as I could. I frequently spoke of it, because the men have always been dissatisfied.

Q. Do you know of any reports going in to the Government representing that the Army Medical officers were not being sufficiently paid for their services?—A. This is the first I know of.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If the rates of pay had been attractive enough to have secured properly qualified men, would not a lot of money have been saved to Canada?—A. There would have been millions of money saved if the medical service had been put on a proper basis.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. I suppose there are many medical practitioners who do not look upon this from the standpoint of money, but who are giving their services from patriotic motives?—A. There is no doubt about that. In Toronto I cannot get men of more experience to come down at the present rate of pay. They cannot live on the rates of pay.

Q. I say this, because I know of a man who came down from my own riding, where the local physician knew he was afflicted with a disease that would absolutely debar him from military service, but the doctors here passed him and he was admitted. Another man who the physician said was qualified was debarred?—A. That is a difference of opinion.

Q. He said that members of the board down here, not questioning their ability, did not have sufficient experience to certify whether a man was medically fit or not. That might be so with those young men that you have had to employ?—A. That might be so with some of them, although we have some senior men on our staff. These senior men have been in the Army Medical Corps Service before the war. The men who have come in more recently, we cannot get them to come down at the rates of pay.

Q. I understand that instead of having a permanent board of men, who have had experience in civil life as well as military, and instead of retaining these men permanently so that they will get more experience, they tell me that the personnel of the boards changes every day or two or every week. Is that the case?—A. Not at the present time, since the mobilization centres have been organized.

Q. Heretofore, was that the case?—A. Very frequently, there were changes in the board.

Q. You called in whoever might be available when a squad of men came in to be examined?—A. We could not determine how many were coming in.

Q. You sent out a hurried call when a squad came in. You not only had the experienced men, but you had inexperienced men also for this work?—A. Certainly, there is no doubt about that. I mean, of course, in respect to that, look at the condition that obtained over the whole country in the winter of 1915-16, when the men were accepted on one examination in every little village throughout the country. That is what gave rise to the whole trouble, one examination by civilian practitioners throughout the whole country.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. These questions and answers would indicate that each soldier was passed on the certificate of only one medical officer?—A. Not at the present time.

Q. What are the provisions to safeguard the public interest in that respect at the present time?—A. Those are all set forth in the document I have referred to, filed by General Logie yesterday.

Q. With your facility of expression, perhaps you could state the provisions in popular form?—A. Merely this: there is a certain area from which recruits are sent after preliminary examination. There are mobilization centres at Toronto, Hamilton, and Sudbury. The recruits are first subject to medical examination locally and then they are sent up before attestation to the mobilization centre for re-examination, where they are examined by three medical officers.

Q. That is, four medical officers up to that point?—A. Yes, though one of the four may be a civilian practitioner. They are examined by these three medical officers, and they are listed, their papers are signed as being fit or unfit, and they are invariably signed by the president of the medical board. At the mobilization centre, if the man is accepted as fit, he is then attested. You will see in that document that General Logie has ordered that all men be attested at mobilization centres. That is, no man can be attested anywhere except at mobilization centres, there is no chance of a man going back with a paper marked unfit being accepted locally. After attestation, he returns to his unit headquarters. Then the medical officer assigned to that unit is expected to re-examine him again, and if he considers that he is not fit, or that the other men have missed something, then he may apply for a medical board to sit on this man's case, and if he is found unfit by the medical board his discharge will be immediately recommended.

Q. Do we understand from the procedure followed now that a recruit offering for enlistment has to pass five medical officers before he can be attested?—A. Not five. He is attested here at the mobilization centres. If he comes from an outlying district he is examined by the medical officer, or the civil practitioner, in his locality. But if he comes from Toronto, for instance, he probably goes direct to the mobilization centre where he is examined by the medical board.

Q. He is examined by three, four or five medical officers as the case may be?—A. Yes.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Are there many men returned from England after medical examination, is the number decreasing?—A. Well, I think it is, my impression is that the number is decreasing but I could not state so accurately. I may say that of the men going over recently, but it is quite possible that there are a greater number of these men who went over some months ago being returned at the present time.

Q. Is the examination more rigid in England than it is here?—A. Well, it would appear so in respect to certain conditions, particularly in respect to flat feet.

Q. Do not the men develop troubles between the time they leave here and the time they reach England and during their training there?—A. There is a certain wastage occurring all the time. The longer the men are kept in training the greater will be the natural wastage.

Q. Don't you think a great deal of care should be exercised now that recruits are so scarce, that the examination might become a little lax?—A. Well, no, I do not think the examination should become lax. What I think should be arranged would be that a man presenting himself for enlistment in the infantry, should be enlisted into the service provided he can pass any standard of examination, and having passed the examination that he should be classified according to his standard. That is, a man comes up for the infantry—he may not be fit for that branch, but may be recommended for the Army Medical or the Army Service Corps. In order to retain that man arrangements should be made whereby he can be attested and classified afterwards. If a man comes up for the infantry, and is not fit for that, we cannot insist that that man join some other unit. We lose him unless he is willing to accept the lower standard service.

Q. You are familiar with the method of examination in England?—A. No, sir, I am not very familiar with the methods over there.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Colonel Marlow, you have referred to being handicapped by certain conditions imposed by Headquarters with regard to the treatment of the medical service here. I notice in your report of October 18, you refer to the administration of the service. I might just as well read it: (Reads.)

The present acting D.G.M.S., Colonel Potter, has been indefatigable in the performance of his duties. Assuming his position at a time when the work at Headquarters office began to pile up at a tremendous rate, and with little assistance and great difficulty in securing such with any degree of permanency, his responsibilities have been great and his labour arduous. To keep pace with the requirements of the office work was a difficult task, but by strenuous efforts during long hours he has managed to do so.

In doing this, however, he has been so occupied by the work of the office that until very recently he was unable to secure an opportunity of going out to any of the districts on inspectional duty. Thus it transpired that during the first two years of the war no systematic medical inspection was conducted?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you attribute the difficulties during this first year to lack of efficiency on the part of Headquarters?—A. I would not, as an officer of the Army Medical Corps, like to put it that way.

Q. Still you have put it here in your report. —A. That the work of the Acting Director General of Medical Services, as far as his office work was concerned, was very well carried on, but there was a very great deal of work throughout the various districts that was left entirely in the hands of the administrative officers of the district, many of whom were medical officers with practically no previous experience, and, during that time, they had no encouragement or help from Ottawa.

Q. You concluded this paragraph by saying “Thus it transpired that during the first two years of the war no systematic medical inspection was conducted?—A. Yes, there was no systematic medical inspection for two years.

Q. Then you continued that the Military Hospitals Commission was appointed with a view to meeting the lack of efficiency of the Medical Corps and that “their organization is progressing, and in a very short time they expect to be able to take over the whole of the medical work and relieve the Army Medical Corps, and so this semi-military organization will relieve the Army Medical Corps of the greatest military problem with which it has ever been confronted.” Then you wind up by saying:—

“It seems obvious, then, that the medical service was regarded as being incapable of dealing with this problem, which should have been its own. As it now is much duplication of ‘machinery’ will be necessary and much expense will be added to the Government to maintain a separate and distinct organization to carry on work, which should ordinarily have been performed by the Militia Department had the Medical Service demonstrated its capability of preparing the soldiers’ disposition for the administrative authorities to take the necessary action.”

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

There you practically admit the inefficiency of the Medical Corps to look after the medical inspection of the men and vocational training and practically justified the appointment of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Might I say I do not admit the inefficiency of the Army Medical Corps. I say it seems obvious that it was considered that the Medical Service was not capable of looking after the problem which should have been its own. At the same time, I admit that, as my report clearly shows, there was very considerable incompleteness of organization in the Army Medical Corps, and for reasons which my report contained.

Q. And your report shows that during the first two years of the war no systematic medical inspection was conducted?—A. That is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN: Is there any other question to be asked Col. Marlow?

WITNESS: Before I go there are just one or two matters which I would like to call to your attention for a moment. One was in respect to certain figures which were introduced this morning by a gentleman of the committee, regarding the in-patients and the out-patients and the accommodation provided for them. I am inclined to think, at the time, I could not very well understand those figures, that they do not apply to this military district. I would just like to ask whether those figures which were read apply to this military district No. 2.

Mr. BENNETT: They apply to the whole of Canada, and partly to this district, each district is given separately. The figures in the statement which I quoted apply as well to the whole of Canada as to the individual districts.

WITNESS: But it was introduced into the evidence in a way that it could be taken as applicable to this military district.

Mr. BENNETT: I gave both, that is my impression.

The WITNESS: I certainly did not take it that way, but in looking it up, the figures as applicable to this district show a very different state of affairs as to accommodation and the number of in-patients and out-patients, so that I take exception to those figures that were quoted as being applicable to this military district.

Mr. BENNETT: Here is the sheet from which I quoted and which I handed to the reporters for the purpose of the record.

WITNESS: I would also like to state that the accommodation set forth in this report which does apply to this district includes a number of beds which had not received the approval of the medical officers, and which the medical officers do not consider fit places for the use of convalescent soldiers. Also with respect to the Whitby Institution the number of beds put down there is considerably more than are at the present time available. With respect to the College street institution, at least 35 beds are in what was formerly used as a recreation and entertainment hall and which is not very suitable for beds. So that I think a reference to the actual figures will more clearly represent the true state of affairs than the figures brought out this morning. There were certain documents of mine referred to this morning from which only small extracts have been taken. I do not consider that to be a fair representation of my ideas on the subject in respect to the treatment and disposition of these men, and I would like, sir, with your permission to introduce into the evidence a full copy of the report made by me on November 24, 1915, after the work at the Discharge Depot at Quebec.

Q. Who is that between?—A. This was an official report sent by me to the General Officer Commanding, of the work done at Quebec by the orders of the Adjutant General. That is the document that has been referred to to-day in discussing the out-patient system, and I think it is only fair that the whole document should be put into the evidence.

By the Chairman:

Q. It is all pertinent?—A. Well, I might say that the first part of it might be eliminated, the part which deals with the medical report on the discharge depot; but the remarks and the memorandum of suggestions—

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Q. This is dated November 14, 1915?—A. No, it should be 24th November. There is a good deal of it along the whole line of reception of men, documents, and the dealing with the men, and so on; I think that practically the last three pages deal with documents, transportation, etc.

Q. But that was practically two years ago?—A. It was in November, 1915, at the beginning of the system which has been referred to to-day.

Q. Practically fifteen months ago, and practically most of what has been referred to here has been altered?—A. No, sir, it has not.

Q. Well, the criticisms you have here do not apply with equal force?—A. They are not criticisms. They are a discussion of the whole subject; but as an extract has been taken from that document I think it is only fair that the body of the document should be introduced into the evidence. It is an official report by me through the General Officer Commanding, and its mention to-day was the first intimation I had that it had been taken notice of at Ottawa at all; but as it has been mentioned, and an extract has been taken from it—only a brief extract—I think it only fair that the body of the document should be introduced into the evidence.

Q. There is a lot here that does not appear to have been discussed by us at all?—A. I think there is very little there that has not been discussed by the Committee at some stage or other.

On motion of Mr. Pardee, the document was admitted and filed as Exhibit "4."

The WITNESS: May I make reference to another document, which has been brought forward here as evidence—the paper read before the Ontario Medical Association? I also claim that as a part of that document has been used for particular purposes here to-day, that that document itself should go into the evidence. I claim that only a small clause was taken from this, and every one knows that a small clause taken out of a document may be taken to mean nothing.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has that document ever been printed?—A. That document has been printed in one of the Canadian Medical Journals.

Mr. BENNETT: I took the extract from it.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would it not be sufficient to state the fact that your whole document is to be found printed in the Ontario Medical Journal of such a date?—A. Only this, that the gentlemen of the Committee will not take the trouble to refer to it; and that extract has been taken and used against me, and I claim the whole of the document should go in.

Mr. BENNETT: Only the part that touches upon the point to which the examination was directed.

The WITNESS: I take exception to that. It deals absolutely with this whole problem of medical attendance on returned soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN: I think, in view of the fact that it has already been published in a regularly circulated magazine, we should refer to that magazine those who want to see the full copy. I think that would be sufficient, doctor.

The WITNESS: May I introduce into the evidence the name and the date of the Journal that is referred to?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, if you refer to the Journal and the page of the Journal on which your article may be found.

The WITNESS: All right, sir. It was published in the Canadian Practitioner of October, 1916, under the title of "Medical Problems Involved in the Classification, Treatment and Final Disposition of Invalided Soldiers."

Witness discharged.

[Colonel F. W. Marlow.]

Sergt.-Major W. ROWE WHITTON, President of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada, Toronto District; and WILLIAM EDWARD TURLEY, Secretary of the same organization, were called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. Mr. Whitton, you are, I understand, President of the Great War Veterans Association?—A. Yes.

Q. Of Toronto or of Ontario?—A. The Great War Veterans Association of Canada, Toronto District.

Q. And Mr. Turley is the Secretary?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you a member of a national organization, or the provincial organization, or the district?—A. Dominion and Provincial.

Q. You might tell us, for the benefit of the Committee, what is the recognized organization of returned soldiers, because I understand history has been made in the last few days?—A. We are simply an association of men who have left the shores of Canada to serve in this campaign.

Q. It is Dominion wide?—A. Absolutely.

Q. Who is your Dominion president?—A. He has not been elected yet. We are holding a Dominion conference at present, but not the Dominion convention.

MR. TURLEY: Tentative arrangements have been made for a Dominion conference to be held in Winnipeg on May 23rd, 24th, and 25th. A second provincial conference will be held in Ottawa on May 12th, 13th, and 14th. Provisional provincial officers were elected for Ontario yesterday. The Dominion association is in the making.

Q. And are the officers as given in this list:—

"President, C. Jenkins, Brantford; vice-president, W. R. Whitton, Toronto; second vice-president, K. C. McPherson, Ottawa; secretary, W. E. Turley, Toronto; treasurer, W. J. Addy, St. Catharines. Committee—W. M. Rabow, Hamilton; J. J. Shanahan, Toronto; L. E. Lowman, Woodstock; P. Victor, Peterboro:—

A. That is correct, only an error is made in the spelling of the president's name; it should be spelled J-e-a-k-i-n-s.

Q. Do all men who have enlisted belong to your organization? Are they eligible for your organization?—A. The qualifications of the local branch are overseas service for members of the C. E. F., active service for members of the Imperial and Allied forces; but the final qualification for membership will not be decided till the Dominion convention, as various associations have various qualifications.

Q. As far as you are concerned, then, at the present time a man who has not been overseas is ineligible for membership?—A. Yes.

Q. You speak, then, as representing men that have been overseas and have come back again?—A. Yes.

Q. I know you have followed to a considerable extent the deliberations of this Committee, and there is no necessity of our asking you any other line of questions except for you to give us your views as to suggesting ways in which the returned men can be more satisfactorily treated than they are at present; we would be glad to hear anything you have to say with regard to the care and treatment of returned soldiers?

MR. TURLEY: The main cause of trouble, I would say, sir, in the treatment of returned soldiers on this side, is the unaccountable delay in adjusting matters of pay and pension.

THE CHAIRMAN: Let us separate them; they are quite separable; delay in adjusting matters of pay?

[Sergt.-Major J. Rowe Whitton.]

Mr. TURLEY: There is really remarkable delay in the matter of adjusting the pay and allowances of a man who applies to the Military Hospitals Commission for treatment after discharge.

The CHAIRMAN: That is, reinstatement?

Mr. TURLEY: Yes, sir. Take my own case. I am on very friendly terms with all the local members of the Military Hospitals Commission. If it were possible for a man to have his case expedited I feel certain that that would be done in my case. On or about December 4 I applied to the Military Hospitals Commission for treatment for an injury, due to active service, which had been aggravated.

The CHAIRMAN: Prior to that time you had been discharged?

Mr. TURLEY: I had been discharged. I was then on pension.

The CHAIRMAN: In what degree?

Mr. TURLEY: One-fifth.

The CHAIRMAN: And after you had been discharged, and were on one-fifth pension, you suffered from the aggravation of a trouble which caused you to wish to be reinstated?

Mr. TURLEY: Which led me to apply to the Military Hospitals Commission for medical treatment on or about December 4. I applied to Major Munn. Not receiving any notification of action I made one or two telephone calls, and presented myself in person on or about the 14th day of December, as a result of which I went to the medical board for examination on the 14th; it would probably be on the 13th that I applied in person, or it may have been on the same day, but on the 14th December I was examined by a medical board. The medical board recommended that this man be admitted to a hospital for treatment and pay and allowance. The trouble was described as acute synovitis of the right knee. I returned home to await instructions. Failing to receive any instructions I presented myself to the headquarters of the Military Hospitals Commission on December 25 and was then given a note by Major Munn, advising the officer in charge of the Spadina Convalescent Home to admit me for treatment. The officer in charge of the Spadina Convalescent Home advised me to return home until to-morrow and report again at midday. I did that and at about 5.30 in the evening was instructed to proceed to the College Street Home for treatment. The officers in charge of the College Street Convalescent Home advised me to return home until to-morrow. I did that and returned to the College Street Convalescent Home the following evening and was advised to come back the next day. I did so, was examined and admitted to the institution.

(Mr. Turley's examination continued.)

Q. Were you on pay and allowance during this time when you made these calls?

—A. Supposedly I was, but there is not any evidence in support of that supposition.

Q. Nothing tangible?—A. No. A period of several days elapsed before the medical specialist who dealt with my particular case had an opportunity of making an examination. The condition was aggravated—well the acute stage really was about the 4th, 5th and 6th of December. It was considered to be an acute case of synovitis when the medical board examined me on December 14. When the medical officer examined me for treatment about the end of the month the condition was not as acute and he was not able to advise any other treatment than I had been giving it which was mainly rest, massage and occasional iodine applications. An X-ray was taken, and the treatment given was rest. Yesterday I received a notification to proceed to the Military Hospitals Commission to re-attest. I was informed there this morning that that would be necessary before I could get the pay and allowance which had been recommended by the board on December 14, so that the matter of pay and allowance may yet be decided.

Q. You have hope?—A. I have had previous experience. I waited for four months for my first pay after I returned to Canada, and a member of Parliament at Ottawa and having some influence perhaps expedited delivery on that occasion, although the local officers of the Military Hospitals Commission did all that the system permitted them to do to obtain that delayed pay and allowance.

Q. You might give us the facts of that case when you first came home; give us the dates?—A. I arrived at Quebec in the closing days of December, 1915, and, though not fully informed of the finding of the Board, came to the conclusion that I was sent to Toronto for discharge, this being the place of my enlistment.

Q. What were you classified as?—A. Class 3. On examination here the medical officers decided that mine was a case that might be improved by further treatment. I was put on treatment.

Q. You went into class 2 then?—A. Yes. At the time I was put on treatment the medical officer verbally informed me that that, of course, meant that my pay and allowance would continue.

Q. Had your pay and allowance ceased?—A. That is difficult for me to answer. I had received a cheque on arrival in Toronto which still left a balance of pay and allowance, and I did not receive any official information of my discharge or pay or pension, but within three months of my arrival in Toronto I received notice that I had been put on pension, and my first pension was at the rate of about $14 a month. There was no sign of pay and allowance, and about the end of March I applied to the Military Hospitals Commission, and after some investigation it was assumed that Ottawa officially was unaware of my being put back on pay and allowance for the purpose of treatment. Ottawa was then officially informed that that was so, and with the united efforts of the local officers of the Military Hospitals Commission, myself, and a member of Parliament in Ottawa, pay and allowance was finally delivered.

Q. Did it cover the back time?—A. Yes.

Q. You were paid all up to date then?—A. Yes.

Q. This is your own case, and the Committee will be glad to see that that individual case is investigated. You give us that as an illustration of delays in payment?—A. Just as an illustration.

Q. Do you know of other cases?—A. I have yet to meet the first returned soldier who boasted of prompt payment. I have yet to meet the first returned soldier who admitted he had been paid promptly. I never met a returned soldier who had not a complaint in regard to the delay in his pay.

Q. Do most of the soldiers have their pay book with them when they come back?—A. Yes. Mine was taken from me in Quebec. I have not seen it since.

Q. That was in December, 1915?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Who took that from you?—A. One of the officers in charge.

Q. On the ship or in Quebec?—A. I would not swear, but my impression is that it was taken by a member of the medical board. I am not positive.

Q. At Quebec?—A. At Quebec.

By the Chairman:

Q. What reason did he give for taking it?—A. I do not know that any particular reason was given. It was merely a request to let him have the pay book, and being a soldier I obeyed.

MR. WHITTON: In 1916, during my sojourn in Bath, before being sent over, it was the habit to collect the pay book and to say they had to send them to London before the last pay certificate could be made up. Mine was one that was sent to London and I have not seen it since that date.

MR. PARDEE: London, England?

MR. WHITTON: Yes.

[MR. W. E. TURLEY.]

The CHAIRMAN: Do you think that among the returned soldiers in Toronto there are many instances where they have not brought their pay books back with them?

Mr. WHITTON: Oh, hundreds and thousands of instances.

The CHAIRMAN: Do they bring the pay certificate instead?

Mr. WHITTON: Well it is made up in such an intricate manner that the majority of soldiers cannot understand it.

Mr. BENNETT: It is said the pay books are given out as souvenirs.

Mr. WHITTON: I have not yet seen a man with his pay book.

The CHAIRMAN: When the final settlement takes place, and if you are not satisfied with the amount coming to you as being the amount you expected, what document have you received from which the exact statement can be made up to your mutual satisfaction?

Mr. WHITTON: I have none.

Mr. TURLEY: I never knew a man who had anything more than the pay book, and it seems the custom to take the pay book from him, and then, of course, the only information obtainable is from the Paymaster General's Department at Ottawa.

(Examination of Mr. Turley continued).

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. When the cheque comes in, is it usually right according to the soldier's reckoning?—A. I would say it is often for the correct amount.

Q. And in some cases it has been in excess of the correct amount and in some cases it has been below the correct amount?—A. In some cases it has been in excess of the correct amount. In more cases it has been below it.

Q. On the average would it about square up to the correct amount?—A. I think the Paymaster General's Department plays safe.

Q. Is that one of the greatest sources of dissatisfaction which the returned soldier has got?—A. Yes, I think that is at the bottom of a great deal of criticism and dissatisfaction.

Q. Would you say that that is a cause of very great dissatisfaction to the returned soldier?—A. Yes, I would say that.

Q. You would put that primarily as the cause of real dissatisfaction? Would you go that far?—A. Yes, I would say it was the primary cause.

Q. I will put the question in this form: If that were done away with, and the soldier got his pay promptly, would a large percentage of this dissatisfaction disappear?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. So that we can put that as the first cause of dissatisfaction to the returned soldier?—A. I think so, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Where does the dissatisfaction commence? Were you satisfied with your pay and allowances before you left England, had the matter been satisfactorily adjusted there?—A. Yes, I had no difficulty in getting all the money I wanted on my return from the front.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If you were allowed to retain your pay book would that facilitate matters very much?—A. It would facilitate matters to this extent: that a man personally would be in a position to check up his pay and allowances. Whether that would expedite the receipt of what was coming to him, or expedite action from Ottawa, is another question.

[Mr. W. E. Turley.]

Q. Would it prevent disputes about accounts?—A. I would not say that, but it would tend to prevent mistakes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. It would enable you to check mistakes?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. When delays of this kind occur to whom can you appeal when you happen to be short of money?—A. It is a temperamental matter. If you feel like writing you will write. If you are a little stoical you will pray, and that is about all you can do. You are in the lap of the gods, as it were.

Q. You spoke of pay and allowance being withheld for a period of four months?—A. Yes.

Q. To what agencies can a man turn in the position that you were in during those four months?—A. Speaking for myself, I appealed to friends and secured loans. I did not know of any agency to apply to, as at that time the Patriotic Fund did not make payments to soldiers or their families when the soldier had returned from overseas. Then he had to exist on the charity of his friends.

Q. Not after he had been discharged?—A. On his arrival from overseas. That is my impression, sir.

Q. I think you will find that the Patriotic Fund takes care of the soldier's family up to the time of the man's discharge.—A. That may be the case now, but not a year ago, sir.

Q. At present it takes care of the returned soldier up to the time of his discharge?—A. At present yes, I believe so.

Q. If you are re-attested the Patriotic Fund takes your family on again?—A. I believe so.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What amount, for instance, was coming to you, or what amount comes as a rule to the man, that is held in abeyance?—A. My first cheque on account of delayed pay and allowances amounted to $270 and so much cents.

Q. Is that the whole of the amount owing to you?—A. That was up to the end of the month prior to that in which the cheque arrived.

Q. $270, you say?—A. Yes.

Q. And there was more after that?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Did payment come regularly after that?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. After that it came along all right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So there was held in abeyance from December 4, 1916, until?—A. Oh, no.

Q. How long ago, then?—A. Pardon me, you are confusing the two cases.

Q. Perhaps so?—A. I was answering questions regarding delay in the payment of pay and allowances on my return from the front in December 1915.

Q. What I want to get at is how long money was kept from you after you returned here until you actually received it?—A. I received a cheque for $100 on arrival in Toronto. That almost cleaned up my account until the end of December.

Q. In what year was that?—A. 1915. It was the fifth month of the year before I received any further pay and allowances, although during that period I was assumed to be on pay and allowances and took the hospital treatment.

By the Chairman:

Q. You had, however, been discharged during that period and re-attested?—A. That was the explanation given to me, that I had been discharged at Quebec. I had [Mr. W. E. Turley.]

no information to that effect until it was given to me some months later that the delay was due to my being put back into Class 2. You see, a man coming from overseas has no idea what Class 2 or Class 3 means, and no attempt is made to enlighten him. It seems to me that a simple statement to a man on his arrival as to the meaning of these various classes would do something to straighten matters out.

Q. You think that there should be a statement made then and there?—A. I think so.

Q. So that the soldier may be made aware of what is coming to him and what he can expect?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would there be any reason why, when they took that pay book from you they should not at the same time have given you a statement of what was coming to you?—A. They probably took the book to compare it with the balance sheets at Headquarters.

Q. Where is that?—A. I would assume that it is the Paymaster General's Department at Militia Headquarters, Ottawa.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. As a matter of fact, they treat the pay book in the same way as a savings bank book is treated by a bank when an account is closed?—A. Yes.

Q. And they ask you to surrender it at the time they settle your account as the balance due when the account is closed?—A. No explanation was given at the time my pay book was taken up. I assume that that is so.

Q. As a matter of fact, you get your last pay certificate, if everything is running smoothly, either at Quebec or London, but for the reasons you have just mentioned you cannot get it at London because may be you have an assigned pay account on this side, and you have been receiving from time to time small sums on account in London. Therefore, there are two ledger accounts, the Record Office account in London, and the Paymaster's Account in Ottawa. That is the fact, is it not?—A. I believe so, sir.

Q. And when you go to London to leave, you hand in your pay book for the reason I have mentioned and the additional reason that they send it to Ottawa, and I am informed by some of the returned men that they believe that the pay book will be in Ottawa nearly as soon as they get there. Then Ottawa is supposed to have the final determination of the account, having a copy of the ledger account from London together with the record of the man from the date of his going away. That is the story?—A. Yes.

Q. What you complain of is, first, the delay in transmitting from London to Ottawa the necessary information to complete the account there, and, secondly, the delay in Ottawa after they get that information in making payment to the returned soldier. Those are the two factors are they not?—A. They seem to be, sir, I know that there is delay.

Q. That is the ground of it?—A. That is probably correct, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You know it is true?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has this matter of delay in pay and allowances ever been discussed in your Great War Veterans Association?—A. Yes, frequently discussed.

Q. Have any resolutions been passed or record made?—A. No, sir, perhaps we are wrong, but the returned soldier has come to assume that getting into communication with headquarters involves further delay.

Q. Well, who do you apply to here in Toronto, in cases of that kind, where you think a mistake has been made, but where you feel that there is goodwill towards you, where do you apply?—A. You would apply to the paymaster of casualties.

[Mr. W. E. Turley.]

Q. Here in Toronto?—A. Yes.

Q. And is that known to the members of your association?—A. I believe so.

Q. Are your members, as a rule, pretty generally acquainted with the various agencies that have been established here?

Mr. WHITTON: They generally do that with the chairman of our investigating committee, who takes the whole matter up.

The CHAIRMAN: Is he here?

Mr. WHITTON: He is here, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: Possibly he would like to join you here.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Are you familiar with cases in which discrepancies arose?

Mr. TURLEY: I could not cite any cases with names, but I have heard of many cases.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: How have these matters been adjusted when the soldier lacked proof of the amount he claimed was due him? Was he dissatisfied?

Mr. TURLEY: I do not think I can intelligently answer that question.

Mr. A. E. LOWERY: Called, sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Lowery, is the chairman of the investigating committee of the Great War Veterans Association, and will join in the evidence with his colleague, and in this rather informal way questions can be answered by either of the three, whoever has the particular information that is desired. Is there any further information that you gentlemen would care to add, or that the committee would care to ask regarding delays in pays and allowances?

Mr. LOWERY: May I give you a sample case of those that come up for adjustment? The following is a letter I have just received to act upon: (Reads.)

Comrade,—I appeal to you, as you are in the investigating committee, of an injustice I received. I arrived in Canada after doing my little bit December 6, 1915. I received pay until December 31, 1915. I attended a hospital for treatment until February 21, 1916, when I was discharged by medical board, February 21, 1916. I think I am entitled to full pay and subsistence for those two months, but I did not get a cent. I wrote several times to Ottawa, but the only answer I can get is: your pension started from January 1, 1916. My pension was $22 for those two months, and you can see that would not pay my two months' board. I ask you to find out why I did not get my full pay while attending hospital.

By the Chairman:

Q. In that case, the pay continued up to date that the pension commenced, did it not?—A. Yes, but the man was not discharged from the day his pension commenced and his pay left off. Instead of that he was receiving a pension not sufficient to keep him.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Was that man in a hospital?—A. He was a patient at the hospital. Under the system that was worked on, I suppose he would have passes. From what I found on investigating the case, he felt that he should be on full pay and allowances until he was discharged from hospital.

By the Chairman:

Q. It was a misunderstanding, in his not knowing that he was no longer under pay and allowances.—A. It was a mistake of the authorities in not telling him that he was discharged.

[Mr. A. E. Lowery.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Was he a married man?—A. I do not know.

Q. How much would he have been in receipt of if he had been getting pay and allowances?—A. $62 a month.

Q. Instead of that he got $11 a month?—A. Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: Rather a castly misunderstanding.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Was he in hospital longer than he should have been?

Mr. LOWERY: I might say that this man has supplied me with his out-patient's pass for the month of February, 1916. If he was discharged and in receipt of the pension he had no need of the pass.

By the Chairman:

Q. He sent you the pass in proof of the fact that he was not discharged?—A. The fact of giving him a pass would convince a man that he was still under military jurisdiction.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How do you figure out that amount of $62 a month?—A. $1.10 a day for pay, 60 cents a day subsistence, and $20 a month separation allowance, assuming him to be married. In most cases I find that the men are married.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are most of your married men receiving assistance from the Patriotic Fund?—A. It is only lately that the Patriotic Fund have taken up the matter of separation allowance.

Q. At the present time the Patriotic Fund will look after a married man until he is discharged?—A. Only if he is an in-patient at the hospital.

Q. The out-patients get subsistence money, it would not be necessary?—A. No.

Q. The out-patients get $71 per month?—A. In some cases.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you any other cases, Mr. Lowery, you would like to bring up in regard to pay and allowances?—A. I just quoted that one case; I was hardly prepared to give any evidence on this question, because I have just come from my business. At the same time I might state the case of Private J. Martin, who was discharged by several boards, overseas and in this country. On investigation, I have found nothing which would lead to the supposition that his injuries were not received overseas and under active service conditions. He was recommended by those boards for a full pension, and after receiving that pension for several months he was sent up for re-examination to another board, and that board recommended that his pension stop at the end of six months. That man dropped from $480 to nothing. He came to me, and I had him examined by an impartial medical man, who stated that he was seven-eighths useless from the standpoint of earning a living.

Q. Is he still on pension?—A. I took the matter up with the District Pension Officer, and I was led to believe that it would be adjusted after a second examination, but I have not had it confirmed that the matter has really been adjusted.

Q. As investigation officer, are there many cases of that kind come under your notice?—A. Yes, I had another case this week of a man from overseas; his wife called at my residence and stated that the man was sick in bed in a very weak state and troubled with a racking cough. I called in a medical man, who examined him, and he reported that this man was in such a run-down condition that he needed from three to six months' treatment as an in-patient in a convalescent hospital. That man when he reached Canada was discharged, and received a discharge, dated March 24, which is Saturday next; it is all signed, that he is discharged as on the 24th of March.

Q. And he received his pay and allowances up to that time, and on that date his pension will commence?—A. Yes, but the point I wish to bring out is that the man was discharged in such a state of health which could and should have been remedied by the military authorities before his discharge. I am about to take this man's case up with the proper authorities, and I have a medical certificate in my pocket for the authorities.

Q. What you should endeavour to do in that case is to get the man recommitted to the hospital and that would entitle him to pay and allowance?—A. Yes.

Q. And if he were once in there he would be kept as long as it was necessary?—A. That is what I was working for, to get him back to the hospital, and to have him put back on the military strength.

Q. As you know, recently arrangements have been made by the military authorities in order to meet such a case as you have referred to?—A. I am not prepared to speak upon that point, because before the case was handed to me, I understand that someone tried to make these arrangements, and found considerable difficulty in the way.

By the Chairman:

Q. In a case of that kind you would, I suppose, apply to Mr. Riddell of the Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. And he would take it up with the Hospitals Commission with a view of having the man recommitted to the hospital?—A. That is the procedure I hope it will go through.

MR. PARDEE: What further suggestions or criticisms have you to make?

THE CHAIRMAN: You have been speaking with regard to pay and allowances, and if you have exhausted that subject you might deal with pensions?—A. I am afraid that pay and allowances is a subject that can be dealt with at very great length. Take in my own case I received the statement of account from the time I enlisted until the time I returned, and I wrote back and told them they were paying me too much. Then they wrote back and told me that instead of paying me anything, I owed them, so I thought it was better to drop the whole thing, for fear they would make out I owed them more than I could really pay them.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What office did you get that letter from in regard to your pay?—A. I got it from Ottawa, through the Soldiers' Aid Commission.

Q. Did they send you the original letter written by somebody in the department?—A. It was a copy of the letter received by the Officer of the Soldiers' Aid Commission in answer to my correspondence.

Q. Have you that copy of the letter with you?—A. It is not here, but I have it on file at my home.

Q. Will you let us have it here?—A. I will let you have it, but I want to keep it because it is historical.

Q. I only want you to bring it here for the purpose of giving evidence on it. Whom is that letter from?—A. I do not know, but I can find out from the correspondence itself.

Q. I would like you to bring it here?—A. Very well.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I understand that the delay in these matters arises from the fact that the Adjutant-General has ordered a certain man for discharge, and the pension becomes operative from that date and, between the date at which it actually comes into effect and the date at which the man is notified, he only gets his pension instead of his pay and allowance?—A. That is a fact.

Q. That is that the order from the Adjutant-General for his discharge is effective as from the date on which it is passed; for instance the Order might issue to-day that Private John Smith is discharged as from the 1st of March, and the hardship you complain of is that between the date on which the Order becomes effective, and the date on which the man receives the notice, he only draws the pension when he understood that he would be drawing his pay and allowances?—A. Yes.

Q. And what you ask is that the Order for the discharge of a returned soldier shall only, as far as his pay and allowances are concerned, become effective from the date he receives his notice?—A. That is the point.

Q. Is it not true that a gratuity has usually been paid to him so that the man would have compensation by way of gratuity, which would provide for the period that elapses between those two dates?—A. I have never met a man who looked upon a gratuity as being given for that purpose.

Q. I am trying to find out, because I was asking the other night about it, and it struck me that owing to the order for the discharge being effective at a date already passed and that from that time on pay was received by way of pension rather than of pay and allowances that the gratuity compensated for the loss of pay and allowances to the man. Of course the purpose for which it was given, I do not know?—A. Well, sir, seeing that the gratuity is sent through the Pensions Board, and enclosed with it is correspondence stating that it is in full payment of all claims, it hardly reads as though it were to make up the difference of the time betwixt a man being discharged and receiving his pension.

Q. But does it not rather look that way?—A. No, I don't think so.

Mr. BENNETT: Because it is paid by the Pensions Board, and is not the gratuity paid to all?

Mr. TURLEY: Pardon me; the gratuity is given in lieu of pension. If a man gets a pension he does not get gratuity. A gratuity is given where he doesn't qualify, where the Board considers he does not qualify for a pension. I have not any knowledge of a gratuity under any other circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure it applies only to cases that are less than 20 per cent disability, and in lieu of any pension whatever.

Mr. TURLEY: Yes, and incidentally there is a great deal of dissatisfaction regarding that gratuity system.

The CHAIRMAN: You might speak of that now.

Mr. BENNETT: This returned soldier told me he thought the gratuity was fair to all.

Mr. TURLEY: Never heard of it.

Mr. BENNETT: I subsequently investigated it, and I think you are right, that the gratuity is not fair to all men.

The CHAIRMAN: A man who is put on a monthly pension does not get a gratuity.

Mr. TURLEY: Speaking of the gratuity, I know a Sergeant-Major Langtry, who had about nine months' service at the front; he came out with a complication of ailments known as trench fever. He had been a police officer before he went overseas; he was discharged with a gratuity of $50 in consequence of the ruling of the Medical Board. He resumed his duties on the police force of the city of Toronto, and he is unable to carry on those duties as he did before the war. He has had to lay up. The point is this: This man accepted the gratuity of $50 in full settlement of claim; a few weeks later, or months as the case might be, he finds himself unable to follow the civil occupation he followed prior to enlistment. He has no further claim on the Government, having accepted a small gratuity in full settlement of claim, and he is in a very bad position.

[Mr. A. E. Lowery.]

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that neither the Imperial Government nor the French Government nor the Government of our own country set up any such release as an answer to further claims, if the claims be of a character that might not have been readily apparent at the date the gratuity was paid.

Mr. TURLEY: It seems to me, sir, that the final Board of a soldier for discharge should deal with his condition in total. Take my case. My outstanding condition was defective vision. I am not examined by the Medical Board for anything else, but as a man suffering from defective vision, and discharged on a small pension because of defective vision. A few months later an old injury, due to active service, recurs, and I apply for treatment for that injury. Following that, I made an attempt to re-enlist. I was rejected because I had a bad heart. No knowledge of it, and as far as the medical records of my military service go there is nothing to show in those records that there was anything wrong with my heart.

Mr. BENNETT: But was it not to meet that situation that it was provided that a returned soldier might apply for a new board at any time within twelve months? I remember that very question being raised; and hence it was that there was a period of probation, so to speak, of twelve months, and it was believed that any ailments from which he might suffer and which had not been apparent would assert themselves within the year and he could be re-boarded. Is not that right?

Mr. TURLEY: I believe that is the system in the case of a man discharged on pension.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, a man under 20 per cent disablement who accepts that gratuity in satisfaction of any claims is never confronted with that, is he?

Mr. TURLEY: He is not acquainted with the knowledge, if it is a fact, that he has a right to make an appeal and demand a further examination.

Mr. BENNETT: In practice have you ever heard of a case in which the Government—not only our own, but any Government—has set up the signing of that release or that satisfaction as a reason why they should not consider his case? I have not, but I am anxious to hear?

Mr. TURLEY: No, I can't say that I have, but I have not heard of a man who accepted a gratuity in full settlement of claim ever having secured a re-adjustment.

The CHAIRMAN: Have you ever heard of cases where they have tried and failed?

Mr. TURLEY: No, sir.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Take the case of your police officer who received a gratuity and has become ill again; has he endeavoured to be re-boarded?—A. I believe so, sir.

Q. Has he been refused?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. What is being done in his case?—A. It is under consideration.

Q. How long has it been under consideration?—A. I don't know.

Mr. PARDEE: Mr. Lowery, could you take this matter up with Mr. Turley as to the police officer, and between now and to-morrow get the particulars of that and bring them here? That is: What steps have been taken, and how long it has taken them, and just what position that is in at the present time?

Mr. LOWERY: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And bring the man here himself.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Under what class would a man come who had lost one of his fingers?—A. Gratuity.

Q. No matter what finger it was?—A. I would think so, according to their present system.

Q. Then he is injured permanently for the balance of his life?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he would be paid off with a gratuity?—A. Yes.

Q. Perhaps $50; not more than $100?—A. No.

Q. He cannot get more than $100?—A. He could not.

Q. Then that is because he is supposed to be injured less than 20 per cent, whereas a man who is injured 21 per cent gets $8 a month for the balance of his life?—A. My understanding is that those pension awards are for twelve months, subject to re-adjustment at the end of 12 months.

Q. If he is put in Class 5 and is permanently injured for the balance of his life, according to the Pensions Act he gets $8 a month for the balance of his life.

Q. In discussions along this line in your association do you think that a man who is injured 21 per cent should get $96 a year for the balance of his life provided he is injured permanently, and the man who is injured, say, 19 per cent, with his finger off, which is certainly permanent for the balance of his life, gets $50 and is paid off?—A. We don't like the gratuity system. We think a man qualifies for a pension or he does not, and this gratuity system is not in favour.

Q. Do you think there is any good reason why a man who is injured 19 per cent of his capacity should only get $50, while a man injured 20 per cent gets $100 for the balance of his life?—A. No, I don't like the system.

Mr. LOWERY: On this subject the general feeling of the men, so far as I can judge, is that a man if he is disabled should receive a pension. For instance, if he only loses a finger which does not interfere with his work, that man is scarred, and he is not the man he was previously; there is a disfigurement, and that man feels it; and then along comes someone else, and they have nothing to show, and they draw a pension for six months. It does not seem to compare. The man is going around, a permanent witness to his wounds.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Have you ever had any gratuity men who have been so permanently injured that they are not able to follow their previous vocations?

Mr. WHITTON: We have men in that condition, any amount of them.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: You know men in Class 6 who are in your opinion entitled to gratuities, but nevertheless because of permanent impairment have not been able to follow their usual occupation?

Mr. TURLEY: There are such cases. I have not myself the names and particulars of any such case, but they have been frequently mentioned in meetings. A man may have followed his trade or calling, but finds himself quite unable to follow with a minor injury which does not qualify him for a pension, but yet debars him from following the occupation at which he formerly made a better salary than he is now able to make in his substituted occupation.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Is there any reason why that man should not receive a permanent pension, any more than the man who was injured 21 per cent.

Mr. TURLEY: No reason whatever.

The CHAIRMAN: Would you be satisfied to say that a man under 21 per cent should get $4 a month or $5 a month, and have it scaled down that way?

Mr. TURLEY: That would be the most satisfactory method of dealing with it in my opinion, to continue that graded system.

[Mr. W. E. Turley.]

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Grade it down to a dollar a month, rather than give him a gratuity.

The CHAIRMAN: You probably are aware that the pension is paid for children?

Mr. TURLEY: Yes.

Mr. WHITTON: Only for total disablement.

The CHAIRMAN: No, it runs first, second and third class now. If a woman has three children she gets $6 a month for each of the three children for the first, second and third class pension, but it stops at the end of the third class. If it is a fourth class disablement he gets nothing for the children. There is a drop there between the third and fourth class. Would you prefer that should be graduated, six, five, four, three, two, one?

Mr. TURLEY: That is a just way to do it.

The CHAIRMAN: Rather than six, six, six?

Mr. WHITTON: I do not see why they should not recognize the wife all the way down.

Mr. TURLEY: Grade according to disability; that is the logical way.

The CHAIRMAN: You would prefer that method?

Mr. TURLEY: Yes.

Mr. WHITTON: In the matter of pensions of course they cannot please every one, but the greatest complaint about the present pensions is that they are totally inadequate all the way through. Take a single man drawing $480 a year, how can he help himself—I mean totally disabled?

The CHAIRMAN: He gets an additional amount if he is totally disabled—$730 a year.

Mr. WHITTON: If he is a married man with six children and he is totally disabled, he will get $480 a year disablement, and $250 for someone to wait upon him, and if he has three children he will get $18 a month for the three children, which is $216 more a year. So that a totally disabled man with wife and three children gets $946 a year.

Mr. TURLEY: That is the height of the pension scale. How about the man with or without a wife who, prior to enlisting for overseas service, followed an occupation which brought him from $100 to $200 a month?

The CHAIRMAN: How about the officer who had an occupation which brought him $10,000 a year?

Mr. TURLEY: I think the pensions should be based to some extent on the earning capacity of the soldier prior to enlistment.

The CHAIRMAN: No flat rate?

Mr. TURLEY: No, because in the first division we had men in the ranks who threw up positions worth two or three hundred dollars a month to go over, and they come back disabled, and they get four or five hundred dollars a year. They have given all but life itself.

The CHAIRMAN: Don't you think that would be a pretty severe discrimination against some? Take a boy of 18 who has not commenced to earn anything, or who perhaps earned $20 a month, and you put him on the basis of continuing his present earnings?

Mr. TURLEY: I will admit the plan would have great difficulty, but I feel it would give more general satisfaction.

The CHAIRMAN: Do you not think the plan of giving a basic amount, presumably sufficient to support him comfortably, and then undertaking to re-educate and re-train the man in the hospital, and fit him for making a better use of what faculties he has left, will meet the difficulty?

[Mr. W. E. Turley.]

Mr. TURLEY: It may, somewhat.

Mr. WHITTON: If you have a man coming back who is about 45 years of age, he has not the same facilities for learning a new trade as a man of 20. A man of that age would have a wife and perhaps a large family, and he would receive the same pension as the young fellow under class 3. He has a wife and children to maintain, and has to learn a new trade, and he is twice the age of the young man.

The CHAIRMAN: The probability is that some of the children are pretty well grown up.

Mr. WHITTON: They may be 14, 12 and 10.

The CHAIRMAN: Do you think, in view of the difficulty which must always attend the pension arrangement, it must, after all be carried on according to fixed rules and regulations, do you think there is need of an outside organization similar to the patriotic fund to supplement pensions in extreme cases.

Mr. WHITTON: The pensions certainly need supplementing. I do not know where they will be able to get it.

Mr. LOWERY: A man who is totally disabled and unable to care for himself, with two children, will receive full pensions, $480, $144 per year for his two children and $250 per year for his wife, which will make $874, and that man is in a position at the time of enlistment, with life before him, say at the age of 22 or 23, he is earning $800 or $900 during the period that is past. Now times have advanced and salaries have advanced on account of the high cost of living. That man at the present time would be worth at the least $1,000 a year, not allowing for improvement in his ability and experience. In other words a man because he is a returned soldier and disabled, is going to be living with his wife and two children on $874 per year, while the man who never went away is going to have an opportunity to go ahead and improve his position and that man is put on a lower financial status on account of going away and fighting for his country. I think that shows that the pensions are not large enough. In regard to the question of an outside association supplementing the pension, we do not believe in that. The pension must be made adequate; it is most undesirable to be seeking the help of any outside association.

Q. Take the case here, where a totally disabled man with two children gets $874. I suppose there would be cases known to you where that was less than the disabled soldier was getting before?—A. In almost every case.

Q. There were other cases where it would be a good deal more than the man was getting before?—A. Very few, sir.

Q. Would you say that where it was less than what the man was getting before he should receive more, and that where it was more than he was getting before he should be given less?—A. I would say that the pensions in all cases should be such as would place the returned soldier in a position similar to what he would have enjoyed had he not gone to the war and suffered on behalf of his country.

Q. Suppose for the sake of argument, that every soldier, out of the 350,000 men, should be totally disabled, and that every one of them should have two children?—A. Do you mean to take the average for the whole number?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir, I do not think that it would.

Q. Do you know that evidence has been brought before the committee showing that out of the first 200,000 soldiers enlisted there were 142,000 manual labourers?—A. At the present time labourers are drawing wages of 30 cents an hour for eight hours work, making $2.40 a day, and all kinds of overtime.

[A. E. Lowery.]

Q. Not for life, and a man over 45 years of age cannot get any such pay. In this case the disabled soldier gets his pension if he lives to be 100.

Mr. BENNETT: This is an annuity.

A. Then simply because of the fact that a number of returned soldiers would better their conditions by being pensioners, you are going to prejudice the claims of men who have had to forfeit their ambition in life by reason of going on active service and getting disabled.

Q. You are referring to men who have still some capacity for work?—A. No, I am referring to totally disabled men.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Of course totally disabled men will have to be supported by the State.

Q. But, Mr. Lowery, have you ever considered this point: That the payment by the State represents the interest on $15,000. It is like giving the man the use of $15,000 at 6 per cent for the rest of his life. That is not bad, is it?—A. You are looking at the matter from a business-like or a financial point of view.

Q. That is how we are viewing it.—A. Yes, but if you do, see what will happen: I have been very active in recruiting for the last two or three weeks, and I am afraid such a prospect as you hold out would not appeal very strongly to possible recruits.

Q. That is not the point.—A. Yes, it is, sir. It crops up the moment the subject is broached of keeping the man on a level with what his position was before he was injured. Now, if the subject is good to be looked at from a business point of view wholly, that is to say, that it will take such and such an effort on the part of the country, and you argue we can only go so far in the right direction, men will look at the proposition askance and will have no desire to be returned soldiers.

Q. You do not catch my point. We desire to treat the men generously, but we want to get at the point that is generous, and I have just given you an illustration to show you what this means. When I give you the illustration it indicates just what is involved in dollars and cents. (No answer).

The CHAIRMAN: After all, Mr. Lowery, you are the country just the same as we are, and whatever is given to the soldier has to be raised by taxation. If $874 a year represents the interest on $15,000, and it should happen that we had to provide for 50,000 returned men, that would be $750,000,000. We have to consider these things, much as we may desire to be generous to the returned soldiers.

Mr. WHITTON: May I ask you how the pensions paid by Canada compare with those paid by the United States.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not know.

Mr. WHITTON: The United States had no difficulty in raising the necessary $900,000,000 for the payment of pensions resulting from their civil war.

The CHAIRMAN: I would not like to see the conditions which characterized the United States pension system, introduced into this country.

Mr. WHITTON: The United States, in spite of its pension demands, today enjoys greater prosperity than it ever did.

The CHAIRMAN: I trust that the features witnessed in connection with the United States pension scheme will not be repeated here.

Mr. WHITTON: I should like to know why there should be any discrimination in the rates of pension paid. For example, an elevator man gives up his job, or an office man gives up his job, to go on active service as a private. Now, the total disablement payment for the rank and file is $480, whereas for a captain it is $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the proposition universally accepted under all pension schemes.

[A. E. Lowery.]

Mr. WHITTON: But why discriminate in a country where every man is deemed to be as good as his neighbour and all discharge the same duties; that is, they go overseas and fight for the country. Take the case of the non-commissioned officer. He is recognized as the backbone of the army, the man upon whom all drill instruction and the maintenance of discipline falls. Now, the Sergeant-Major of the battalion gets $680 for total disablement.

—Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Why should he get more than the private?

Mr. WHITTON: That is what I want to know. Why should the captain get $1,000 a year? I suggest that there should be a maximum and a minimum. What that should be, although I have my own view, I am not prepared to say. I would suggest a maximum and a minimum pension for all ranks.

Mr. PARDEE: What do you mean by that?

Mr. LOWERY: I mean that there should be a maximum and a minimum pension for disablement in the case of all ranks.

The CHAIRMAN: There is at present a maximum and minimum disablement through all ranks.

Mr. LOWERY: No.

The CHAIRMAN: And this percentage is 80, 60, 40; it goes down through all ranks just the same.

Mr. LOWERY: Yes, but take the regimental Sergeant-Major with $680 a year, and the private, with $480. You discriminate between the private and the regimental Sergeant-Major.

The CHAIRMAN: It has always been done.

Mr. LOWERY: It has always been done, but that is no reason why it should be perpetuated in this country.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Where a man is in the habit of making, say, $100 or $200 a month before he goes into service, should he have a higher pension than the man who is only making $60 a month? The officer, as a rule, draws a higher pension than the rank and file.

Mr. TURLEY: And what about the position of a man like this: we will say it is a man who ran a store and enlisted as a private in the First Division. He may get $600 a year less than the man who sold ribbons for him and went over as a Lieutenant-Colonel in a later division. That is why I am in favour of the pension being adjusted to the earning capacity of the man before enlistment.

Mr. BENNETT: That would deprive some men of anything at all, as the Chairman has pointed out.

Mr. TURLEY: There are no men in this country who can live without receiving an income.

Mr. BENNETT: But the Chairman directed your attention to the case of a young man of 18 or 19 who had not yet an earning capacity.

Mr. TURLEY: A fair estimate could be given of the earning capacity in view of the man's education and physical condition and possibilities. Of course, conditions vary greatly. A young man of 18 years of age may go to college and be educated for a profession and afterwards earn a salary of $5,000, $10,000, or $15,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN: Would you like to accept the task of pension commissioner to make such adjustments?

Mr. LOWERY: Yes, under certain conditions. Now, I would suggest $100 per month as a maximum for all ranks.

The CHAIRMAN: You think that the pensions that are paid to officers in Canada are too high as compared with the pensions paid to the rank and file?

Mr. WHITTON: I do not consider the officers any more than the privates, or the privates any more than the officers. I regard them all as men who have gone to fight for their country. In civilian life there is no such distinction made. I have had 23 years of military experience in the Imperial Army and have served several colonial governments. I possess a long service and good conduct medal, although not in receipt of any pension. I gave up my position at Appleby College as professor of physical culture and gymnastics and had the misfortune to be shot through the wrist in Belgium. I am now receiving a pension of two-fifths and have got a wife and two children to support. My earning capacity is diminished.

Mr. BENNETT: To what extent is your earning capacity impaired?

Mr. WHITTON: I am totally incapacitated from following my previous employment.

Mr. BENNETT: As a gymnast, not as an instructor?

Mr. WHITTON: Yes. I can do no more swinging around of bars. I have had to seek other employment. That is only one instance.

The CHAIRMAN: Are you able in any way to avail yourself of anything offered by the Military Hospitals Commission?

Mr. WHITTON: No, I have not gone to the Commission. I have employment through my own personal influence, in the Imperial Munitions Board. They recognize the worth of the returned men, I am very glad to say, and they do not cut down the wages when they hear what pension a man is receiving. In many factories, where a man is in receipt of a pension, he is paid so much less because he is getting a pension.

Mr. TURLEY: One of the first cases that occurred was with one of the largest concerns in the city of Toronto. A man who had had charge of a department in that factory at $100 a month returned from the front minus an arm. Practically and technically he was the best man in the city of Toronto for the position he had formerly occupied. His position had been filled in the meantime. The loss of his arm was no handicap in filling the position in the department of which he had formerly had charge. His technical and practical knowledge would carry him through. The average wage of men employed in that department on the same work was $80 a month. This man was in receipt of a pension of $20 a month, and the firm declined to pay him any more than $60, although they knew as well as everybody else did who was familiar with the circumstances that he is the most valuable man in the department.

Mr. BENNETT: He is receiving less than he did before.

Mr. TURLEY: $20 a month less for a period of five or six months, but the firm has since seen fit to make an increase of $10 a month. But he is now doing the work at less pay than the men who did not go, and he has superior qualifications to any of them, and the loss of a hand makes no difference to him at all.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): Is that man working in a munitions factory?

Mr. TURLEY: No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: Does your experience as a whole go to show that the manufacturers and employers of Toronto pay less wages for the same service to a returned soldier with a pension than they do to a civilian?

Mr. WHITTON: In many cases.

Mr. TURLEY: Not as a whole, but there is a tendency to consider the pension.

Mr. WHITTON: An employer will simply pay a man for what he can do. Patriotism does not enter into it at all. A man goes there with an arm off, and the employer will pay what he thinks the man is worth. While we have the sympathy of the employers, they will tell a man: "I can only employ you for what you can do for me."

The CHAIRMAN: If that man applies for a job where two men are required, in that case would the returned soldier find that less pay was given him?

[Mr. A. E. Lowery.]

Mr. WHITTON: Less pay is given a man on account of his being disabled in that way.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the manufacturer fear that the man will be liable to injury in the machinery?

Mr. TURLEY: There is no risk in that way, the province assumes the risk.

Mr. WHITTON: I have been interested in hearing the different troubles of the boys, and I have had them tell me that it is practically a bye-word in Toronto that if an employer needs an elevator operator or anything of that kind he will try to get a returned soldier because he can get him much cheaper. I have investigated cases in ammunition factories. The usual rate of wages is 35 cents an hour. These men would complain that because they were in receipt of a pension of $8 a month they would be given 8 or 10 cents less per hour.

The CHAIRMAN: Could they turn out as much work in an hour?

Mr. WHITTON: Yes, they do, they have both their hands. I asked the factory manager if certain men I had in mind were employed. He said they were. I asked him now they were doing, and he replied: "Very well, indeed." "Don't you think they should get the same wages," I asked. He answered: "They are in receipt of a pension already." I might say that eventually they got the same rate of wages as the other employees. Since that little investigation both men have improved their position in the same place.

Mr. BENNETT: The labour organizations will be able to take care of such cases as that.

Mr. TURLEY: I presume that the Trades Unions will do their utmost to see that members of the union capable of performing work receive uniform rates of pay. But that will not convert the selfishness of some manufacturers who think it right to share the pension a man earns.

The CHAIRMAN: On the other hand, will there not always be a certain number of disabled men, who, for their own good, might better be employed, and whose wages will necessarily be less than those of whole men.

Mr. TURLEY: That is quite right.

The CHAIRMAN: You have no objection to that when it is understood frankly all around?

Mr. TURLEY: What we object to is the tendency that has been shown by the manufacturers to take advantage of a man's pension by cutting his salary down to that extent when the man was performing his work as well as other men doing the same work.

Mr. PARDEE: Do you know whether or not the Ontario Compensation Board will allow a manufacturer to employ a disabled man where there is machinery?

Mr. TURLEY: I could not say so. I do not think a manufacturer would take the risk of employing a disabled man.

Mr. PARDEE: I have been told that they will not allow it on railways, that is to say they would not permit disabled men to handle trains. Where they come under the Workmen's Compensation Act, you might possibly look into that.

Mr. TURLEY: That is quite likely to be so.

Mr. BENNETT: What you say is, that for equal service there should be equal credit?

Mr. TURLEY: Yes.

Mr. WHITTON: Where a man is slightly injured and he happens to be in receipt of a small pension of 50 cents a day, it should not be for a certain period, but for life if permanent.

The CHAIRMAN: We are meeting here again to-morrow afternoon and all day Friday and if you wish to come before us again we shall be glad to hear you. We shall be hearing to-morrow soldiers' delegations from the Western provinces.

Witnesses retired.

Committee adjourned until 2.30 p.m. Thursday.

MEMO. Presented by Mayor T. L. Church, of Toronto, re Returned Soldiers, Presented to the Special Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, in Session at the City Hall, Toronto, Tuesday, March 20, 1917.

(1) I desire to officially welcome the members of the committee to Toronto. As I take it, you have been appointed to make a survey of conditions and decide what shall be done. I must congratulate you on the business-like way you are proceeding and welcome you to our city, which is not surpassed by any city in the British Oversea Dominions in its contribution of both men and money. Everybody is proud of what Canada has done in this war, and the Parliament of Canada is to be congratulated on having appointed this Committee. I know that your work will bear fruit abundantly. You have a great work before you, and as President of the Union of Canadian Municipalities for three years of the war, I promise you the united support of the municipalities in your work.

I have written down some suggestions, which, while you may not agree with them all, are worth discussing.

I hope that it will be distinctly understood that I am not criticising herein any one personally, but simply dealing with principles. As I have already said, these questions are very hard matters to deal with in a great war like this, but the Government and the various public organizations who have had charge of war matters have on the whole made a good start in the way they have dealt with the problems before them.

(2) ALL HONOUR TO OUR HEROES.

I regret I cannot agree with Lieut.-General Sir Sam Hughes, when Sir Sam told a Toronto audience the other night "Not to pamper the returned soldiers." I wish that such warnings were needed. There is no danger of the returned soldier being pampered, either in Toronto or any place else. Under our Militia Department, everybody in sight was pampered but the soldiers on active service. An officer could go overseas, and come back wounded to find that he is junior in rank to some officer who was junior to him when he left Canada and has been promoted to high military rank, without sacrifice of comfort or hazard of life or limb. I hope that Sir Edward Kemp will make a change in the direction of greater consideration for returned soldiers. I am proud of what Toronto has done. There is a fine spirit among the people of this city.

But the best of us do not need to be warned against the sin of pampering the returned soldier. We have got to improve a whole lot before we need any such warnings or begin to do as much for the returned soldiers as these soldiers and their comrades have done for us.

(3) WANTED MORE HEART.

We want more heart, more consideration, more sympathy in the hospital and medical service rendered to the Canadian soldiers in this country, and especially to the returned men. The authorities should remember that these men are citizens and civilians and in distributing returned soldiers should not wantonly tear a man away from the home of his wife and children and friends. It is all wrong to send men, whose friends are in Toronto, to Whitby or some other outside point, and to keep men who have no friends in this city in Toronto. The comfort and rights of the men should be studied as far as possible.

(4) GET RETURNED SOLDIERS TO HELP.

I believe that the immediate problems in connection with the returned soldiers can be best handled with the help of the returned soldiers. The garrison police in Toronto and every other military centre should be made up of returned soldiers. The employment commissions should be directed by returned soldiers and the treatment given to returned soldiers in the hospitals and convalescent homes should be inspected and checked up by the personal representatives of the Minister of Militia chosen from a list submitted to the Minister by the Great War Veterans Association in each military district.

(5) RE EMPLOYMENT.

As to employment the leadership and operation of the Soldiers' Aid Commissions should be kept open for returned soldiers. The returned soldiers will know how to meet the needs of returned soldiers better than these needs can be met by civilian officials. An organization in Toronto recently got itself together and decided to abolish the spoils system. There won't be any more spoils system. "To the victors belong the spoils" and the victors who come home from the triumph that saves Canada will have at least something of what they deserve in the form of a first claim to appointment, to every office under Dominion, provincial or municipal governments. Government jobs and municipal jobs will not go very far in payment of this country's debt to the returned soldiers.

(6) A NEW FARM PLAN—SIR ADAM'S VISION.

I am glad to see the Ontario Government taking hold of the work of providing farms and equipment for returned soldiers who might want to go on the land in New Ontario. There will be more returned soldiers who might be attracted to poultry farming, fruit farming and market gardening if they had a chance to get started. I hope the Ontario Government will invite Sir Adam Beck to work out a scheme by which soldiers who want to get on the land in older portions of Ontario will be able to get on the land along the line of the Hydro Radials. The main responsibility for a large solution of the problem of taking care of Canada's returned soldiers and other British and allied soldiers is upon the Dominion Government that has charge of this country's tariff policy and upon the Ontario Government that can make or mar Ontario's power policy. Is Canada to have a tariff policy that will compel the men who have saved Canada to leave the country they have defended at the risk of their lives and seek employment under a foreign flag? I want to see the tariff against Germany and Austria put up so high that we will never see another dollar's worth of German goods in this country. I want to see the tariff against all neutral nations so adjusted that Canadian soldiers and British soldiers and allied soldiers will find industrial employment in Canada, because many of these soldiers are not ambitious to undertake agricultural employment and have no aptitudes in that direction.

(7) ADVANCED HYDRO POLICY.

The only movement to deal with this returned soldier problem in a large way is Sir Adam Beck's movement to establish a 1,000,000 horse-power source of electricity at Niagara Falls and another 1,000,000 horse-power source of electricity on the St.

Lawrence River. Sir Adam Beck estimates that these two sources of electrical energy will give Ontario power equal to the power produced by the consumption of 44,000,000 tons of coal per annum. A policy that can endow Ontario with an advantage equal to the output of 44,000,000 tons of coal per annum means employment for the returned soldier and means prosperous industry and agriculture in this Province. Canada and Ontario and Toronto are all in the same boat, the problem of taking care of the returned soldier, the problem of making the most of our obligations to the returned soldiers is the problem of making the most of our opportunities.

(8) GREAT WATERWAYS—INLAND—WANTED.

Deepen the St. Lawrence waterways and complete your new Welland Canal. Let us have ocean shipping from Liverpool to Fort William, and build a great national highway from coast to coast. Help Sir Adam Beck to build his Hydro Radials and establish sources of 2,000,000 horse-power of electrical energy in Ontario. Then we will have begun the work of making this Province the home of 6,000,000 instead of 2,500,000 people. And then we will have begun to solve the whole problem of the returned soldiers. The only way the problem can be solved is by the vision of our leaders, the strength and unity of their followers in working out a policy that will prove how in some small way the civilian people of Canada can be worthy of the men who have fought, bled or died for them, and that the civilian people of Canada can approach in peace the greatness that the soldiers of Canada have achieved in war.

(9) RE VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

Canada's army is a civilian one and has had very rough work in Flanders and France, mostly in the country. Many of the men are tired of country life, and after the war is over they will all want to flock to the cities. We have had evidence of this since the first returned soldiers came home. The returned soldier is only human, and we must not forget all he has gone through. I do not believe 5 per cent of them will want to engage in farm pursuits. In the first place, before the war, rural Ontario was depopulated 500,000 in ten years. One of the main reasons for the under-production in Ontario is the fact that there are no adequate conveniences on the farms today. The Province is without a proper system of good roads, Hydro radials, Hydro telephones and cheap light and power. Sir Adam Beck should be encouraged to bring the boon of cheap light and power to every farm in the Province, with its attending conveniences. If civilians will not stay on the farms, owing to the lack of conveniences, how does the Government propose to get returned soldiers to stay there, after all they have gone through for the good of the country? Other classes of labour should be secured for farm work from those who have done nothing in this war. "Vocational training" is a very high-sounding name and the theory of it is all right, but it will be found that when the great body of soldiers come home, it will be of little effect, unless the country is prepared to keep the men on the pay-rolls at full pay until they learn some other suitable pursuit. It may, however, in special cases, be of some advantage in the larger cities.

(10) A SURVEY.

The Federal Government, with the assistance of the municipalities, should prepare forthwith a survey with the names of those on active service overseas, their units, residence and former employment. I think the municipalities can act in the matter for the Government, with the assistance of the various Military Divisions. The old employer of each soldier can be approached and asked what he is prepared to do for his old employee when he comes back from the front, and under what conditions he left his old employment, and in that way each municipality will know how many men are unprovided for. A local publicity campaign in each municipality along these lines would do much to further encourage the old employers to do their duty. The time to do this is now or never, and if some drastic action is not taken at once the soldier problem will get beyond us. In actual practice it will be found that the larger municipalities will be a dumping ground for most of our returned soldiers after the war, and if the Federal Government does not cope with the situation at once it will get beyond us, and the result will be that the municipalities will have to bear the burden of the whole matter. It is a most difficult problem to deal with, and one requiring the united effort of the Governments of the Dominion, the provinces and the municipalities.

In this connection I may say that the city of Toronto has appointed a commission of five, consisting of the mayor, two controllers, our city treasurer and the commissioner of works, "to report on preparing Toronto to meet conditions after the war," and also to take care of the returned soldiers. This commission is meeting weekly in order to be ready for the declaration of peace.

(11) THE MANUFACTURERS.

An educational campaign should be undertaken with regard to those soldiers who are employed by the manufacturers of Canada. Many of the manufacturers of Canada are reducing the pay of their old employees after they come back from the war because the returned soldier has not one hundred per cent of efficiency. It will be a decided injustice for them to deal with the returned soldier in this manner, because if it were not for the soldiers the Germans might be here and there might not be any factories. They should be encouraged to do their whole duty to the returned soldiers, as many prominent manufacturers are doing by paying them their full wages. They should not require one hundred per cent efficiency as before the war in order to secure for the soldier the pay he got before the war.

(12) KEEP SOLDIERS ON PAY-ROLLS.

The returned soldiers should be kept on the country's pay-rolls for two years after the war, until industrial conditions readjust themselves and until the dislocations brought about by the war are solved.

(13) CONTINUE PATRIOTIC FUND AFTER THE WAR.

The Patriotic Fund should be continued for one or two years after the war to assist the relatives of the returned soldiers, until the men are placed in permanent positions and have a seasonable chance to recover from the severe work they have been in. They should not be asked to start work too early, and those unable to work have won a well-earned holiday at the expense of the country for a reasonable period of six months or a year after the war.

(14) RE PENSIONS.

More liberal pensions should be given all round. The maintenance of the returned soldier and his family should be a first charge on the country for the services rendered to civilization. There should be a revision of the scale all round with greater liberality. While this will cost a lot of money it must not be forgotten that Canada's Army is a civilian army, and the men in the ranks should have equality of treatment with the officers and the same rate of pay should apply to one and all. If necessary some revenue should be provided to meet these pension charges by a Federal tax for a period of ten years after the war on those who have not enlisted and are fit. The National Service Record could be used as a basis and a Federal tax should be imposed on shirkers for the benefit and the care of returned soldiers and their families. The country expects that Parliament will act liberally towards its returned heroes.

(15) THE HOSPITAL WORK.

In my opinion the Hospitals Commission should be abolished, and their duties transferred to a department of the Government. There were too many commissions appointed in time of peace, and this policy seems to have been continued unnecessarily in war time. The tendency of these commissions is to shift responsibility from the Government, and the returned soldier should be able to deal directly with the Government. Many of these commissions are out of touch with the municipalities. I do not intend this in any spirit of criticism of the splendid and public-spirited men who compose the Hospitals Commission, who have on the whole done good work, but many of them have had no practical experience in hospital work, and some of the officials are more or less amateurs. As everybody knows, the hospital business is highly technical work and requires the best brains that the country has in this connection.

I may also say that the Patriotic Fund, and in addition, the care of the wounded and missing soldiers overseas should never have been left to private organizations, but should have been assumed by the Government itself. The soldier who is a prisoner of war should not be left to the mercy of private organizations, but should be a direct charge on the Government.

(16) RE CONVALESCENT HOMES.

The wounded soldiers and those convalescent should be housed in the best buildings in the country, and not in some of the ramshackle buildings secured by the Hospitals Commission. The men should be kept in their own home towns and not moved to outside places, where they have no friends. It has already proved a burden on the men and on their families also, owing to the expense. Public buildings of all kinds, where necessary, should be commandeered by the Government, including University, Civic, Y.M.C.A. and other buildings, many of them exempt from taxation. Notwithstanding the fact that the city of Toronto offered to give the Hospitals Commission the use of new schools and dozens of other proper buildings in the city, they have opened hospitals at Whitby and Guelph, to which hospitals the men object to go. Thousands of these disabled men are in England to-day who should be brought home to be with their families. There is abundance of accommodation for them here. If the Hospitals Commission do not do better, this problem will get beyond them and the Government will be blamed for it. As I said before, it should be a department of the Government and not left to a commission who have no responsibility. The use of Sunday Schools, and, if necessary in some localities, some of the churches (as in England and France) and the best buildings in the land should be procured for the men, and not unsanitary old buildings. In Ontario many good hotels are closing because of the new law—many of them are comfortable homes well furnished, and the Hospitals Commission has declined them.

(17) FREE TRANSPORTATION.

Returned soldiers should have the right to travel free on all electric railways in the province. Many of these roads got subsidies and bonuses and obtained their charters for nothing from the municipalities, and they should be required for all time to carry our returned soldiers free. The city of Toronto's own civic car lines, since the war started, have allowed them to ride free. If public ownership does this, so should private ownership.

A one cent per mile fare, if not free transportation, should be obtained for returned soldiers from the steam railway throughout Canada, under certain fair and reasonable conditions. These roads were largely built by the credit of the country. They have all secured large subsidies and cash grants and should be patriotic enough to do something for the returned soldiers. They should be allowed to travel free. This rule should also be applied where applicable at certain times to all public amusements, for certain performances during the war, and for a year or two afterwards. I may say that some of the theatres in Toronto have been patriotic enough in this connection. I can also speak of the very patriotic stand of the Toronto Baseball Club, the Canadian National Exhibition and the Arena Rink here in this way.

(18) HONOUR THE HEROES.

There is a lack of proper respect shown to returned soldiers. The school children should be educated to honour them, applaud them and salute them. They should have precedence on all public occasions. Should be given seats in street cars and other public places. It is deplorable to see so many young men who are slackers riding around in automobiles who pass soldiers on the street who have been through amputations and decline to pick them up and give them a ride. The public generally should be educated in this connection and a campaign of education is necessary. Much has been accomplished in England, France and Russia in this connection and Canada should get into line also, and not lag behind.

(19) BETTER TRANSPORTATION WANTED.

Better accommodation should be provided on the ocean trip back from St. John and Halifax to Toronto for the returned soldiers. I knew of a case of a young soldier who contracted tuberculosis 18 months ago while crossing the ocean steamer. He was buried in Toronto and was a deplorable sight. The best Canada can give is none too good. They should not have to come in on regular trains which are often several hours late, but should travel in comfort and on special trains. Civilians at home should do without special trains and they should be utilized as far as possible for the returned soldiers, where they travel in large numbers. I desire and I deem it my duty to here publicly thank Brigadier-General Biggar for all he has done to improve the transports and trains, and the zeal and fidelity and interest he has shown in our heroes. Automobiles should be provided for them at various depots. It is too bad the various automobile clubs in the country are not responding as well as they might, although some of them have done pretty well. The various clubs should be organized to meet the returned soldiers at the station and drive them to the hospital or homes. In the summer time they do not do badly, but in the winter time hardly anything is done in this connection.

(20) RELATIVES OF RETURNED MEN.

Some additional measure should be taken to assist the relatives of the returned soldiers at various stations in meeting their men. Better accommodation should be given. More liberal leave should be given and delays between the seaboard and Ontario towns should be cut down. The relatives of the soldiers should be allowed to see them at will and they should be treated generously. Conveyances should be at the depot for the soldier and his relatives, and where possible breakfast should be given. Receptions in question take too long as many of the men are waiting for their breakfasts and often the trains are very late. These matters should be better regulated.

(21) PREFERENCE IN EMPLOYMENT.

All public positions should be given to returned soldiers only. Those who are occupying public positions and have failed to do their duty during the war should vacate them at the war's conclusion, if they have been eligible for service. If necessary to some extent at least some should make way for the returned soldiers. At the present time the returned soldier is getting very largely only menial positions, when the best should be given him, including all vacancies in the Senate, judgeships and the higher positions in the civil service in all its branches, by the Dominion and Federal Governments and municipalities. The City of Toronto is engaging no one except returned soldiers, and we intend to continue this policy.

(22) GREAT WAR VETERANS.

The Government should itself organize the Great War Veteran's Association. The Great War Veterans' present organization could be utilized in this connection and the Government should deal directly with the soldiers through this Great War Veterans' Association. In this way an organization similar to the Grand Army of the Republic could be formed, with Federal, provincial and Civil help and assistance.

The returned soldier himself also can do more than any other agency if utilized and given a chance to solve the difficulty of the returned soldier problem. In the City of Toronto the Great War Veterans have a club house. The city has contributed $5,000 towards its expenses, and we propose to utilize this agency as a civic bureau to assist, aid and help returned soldiers. The first duty of the municipality is to look after its own soldiers, with whatever federal and provincial help they can get, it should be a direct municipal charge as well as a federal one, as this problem is three-fold, and can only be satisfactorily worked out by the Federal and Provincial Governments and the city working harmoniously in united effort for the mutual benefit of the soldier.

(23) SOLDIERS AND TAXATION.

Returned soldiers should be exempt from business assessment and income tax for a period of two or three years after the war, and while on active service, if unable to pay his municipal taxes, should be given time until after the war. While this depletes municipal revenues the deficiency could be capitalized with short-termed bonds of five or ten years. Many of our returned heroes are in arrears of taxes on their homes, and Toronto has been giving them time—although in some places some have had the bailiff put in on them for arrears while absent. There should be a Provincial law to stop this and a law passed to postpone payment for those in default of payment of moneys overdue on mortgages (held on property on which the soldier actually resides.)

The power of sale in these mortgages should not be enforced for twelve months after the war, and the Statute Law should be so amended.

(24) PATRIOTIC FUND.

The Separation allowance should be increased and the Patriotic allowance in some cases. Owing to the hard rules established by the Patriotic Fund in some small number of cases injustice has been done, although the grand work done on the whole by the Fund has been exempt from criticism, and properly should be, owing to the heroic work this organization has done. I cannot speak too highly of them, but I often have cases of hardship brought to my attention, and there should be some way of dealing with these special cases by the Government if the Patriotic Fund cannot entertain them.

(25) DELIVERY OF TELEGRAMS.

I think it would be well to arrange for the municipalities, the Great War Veterans, the clergy to receive all telegrams from Ottawa notifying the relatives of soldiers killed in action. Often these telegrams come in late at night and the method of their delivery causes hardship in breaking the sad news.

(26) THE UNFIT RETURNED.

Could not some better system of medical inspection be adopted? Last Sunday morning half of those returning were those who had passed as medically fit here, but were rejected in England. Some of them lost their civil positions and could have been utilized in making munitions and other war work. Many of these men, I understand, will not get pensions, as they are returned as unfit, and it is a great injustice to them, as they have to start civil life all over again, and many of them have no funds. In this connection some very deserving cases have come under my notice since the war started; their families also suffer accordingly.

(27) CENSUS OF NATIVE BORN.

Could not a census be taken or a survey made by the Government of the birth place of those serving in the Canadian Expeditionary Force and totaled up so as to show the net results by provinces of the native-born and the British-born, and other component parts of Canada's Expeditionary Force.

(28) NEW UNIFORMS OR SUITS.

Some of those who come back complain about their clothing. I understand the Government give the men a proper suit of clothing at Quebec or $13, or the equivalent in money. Many of those who are now home have no overcoats, and some of them come in at North Toronto without a bag or kit for their baggage. Some complain that they are held too long at Quebec at the discharge depot, and that they have no proper entertainment. In this connection it is only fair to say that I have heard a great many others speak fairly well of the entertainment there. I think the men ought not to have to buy another suit of clothes, but should be given one free. I understand that the regulations call for this, but the public criticise the policy of having wounded heroes going around the streets, many of them without proper clothing. It may be that they prefer to get the money and utilize it in other ways, but I think free suits might be given them if at all possible.

(29) MORE HOSPITAL ACCOMMODATION NEEDED HERE.

There is a lack of proper accommodation at Toronto here. A case in point came to my knowledge the other day. Three men bound for London took the wrong train and were returned here, and it was very difficult for me to get them into the Spadina Hospital. Accommodation should be ready for several thousands, and the Hospitals Commission should keep in advance instead of behind the accommodation. The City is willing to assist the Commission to secure all the buildings they require in Toronto, and many suitable places are already available.

(30) RETURN SLACKERS.

The Government of the United States should be asked to deport slackers as undesirable and return them to Canada. Many have left Canada for the States to escape war duties. These men should be pressed into the Canadian Expeditionary Force if fit.

(31) PREFERRED CLASS.

Relatives of those who have lost their lives in action should be properly compensated. Grants of money and active aid should be given them, also liberal pensions and they should be in a preferred class.

The returned soldiers, and some representatives of the families of those who have lost their lives, should be appointed to the Senate.

(32) ALIEN ENEMIES.

The returned soldiers expect the Government to do something to disfranchise alien enemies who have now the franchise in Canada. Why should an alien enemy's vote be equal to a returned soldier's? I would disfranchise all those alien enemy voters in Canada who have not resided in Canada for twenty-five years.

(33) DELAYS RETURNING.

There is considerable criticism among the returned soldiers about the delay in getting back from England. Many of these men who have been wounded and are still in England should be brought back, as many are unfit for further service. Returned soldiers who have been wounded three or four times should not be sent back to the front. Others should take their places. With so many slackers around, why should men who have been wounded three or four times go back?

(34) OFFICERS GET PREFERENCE.

There is also considerable criticism about bringing home able-bodied officers because they will not revert in rank, and while it is difficult for the men in the ranks to get leave, some of these officers, who have never been to the front, can get home.

(35) Re UNIFORMS.

I suggest, although it may not be possible to work out, that a different uniform should be provided for the members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force and those who are serving in the Militia Department and its branches throughout Canada on home service—who are fit for overseas service. There are dozens of young officers in Canada's Permanent Force in Canada kept here against their will when they should be at the front.

(36) CLOSE SCHOOLS FOR OFFICERS.

The present Officers' Training Schools for Artillery, Infantry and other branches of the service should all be closed up and vacancies for officers given to returned soldiers. No further courses should be opened in Canada—there are plenty of available returned soldiers.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Treatment and prophylaxis of Venereal Diseases in respect to the problem of Returned Soldiers.

In view of the importance of this aspect of the returned soldier problem, it is recommended that special consideration be given it along the lines suggested below:—

1. Care should be taken to see that all entries regarding periods of stay in hospitals are carefully made on the "medical history" sheets of all soldiers.

2. In the case of all soldiers suffering from venereal disease careful details regarding treatment and progress should be prepared by the overseas medical service to be forwarded with the soldiers' documents when invalided or otherwise sent home. Special care should be taken to have concise entries made as to the dates and results of any bacteriological or blood examination.

3. Careful following up of all cases of venereal disease by the overseas Canadian Medical Authorities so as to prevent their being invalided or otherwise sent home to Canada without knowledge of their condition on departure.

4. Careful examination of all soldiers embarking for Canada, as late as possible, prior to embarkation, for the detection of venereal disease.

5. Re-examination of all soldiers while "en route" for Canada, for the detection of venereal disease. This should be done on the third day after embarkation and again on the day prior to expected disembarkation.

6. All soldiers known to have venereal disease prior to embarkation for Canada, and all others detected with such disease while "en route" should be duly listed and handed over at the point of disembarkation by the officer in charge of the party to the officer in charge of disembarkation, in order that they may be properly dealt with by the medical authorities.

7. All invalided soldiers undergoing treatment in military hospitals or convalescent hospitals should up to the time of their discharge from the army be subjected to examination at least once in two weeks at an unexpected time for the detection of venereal disease.

8. It should be made obligatory on the part of all soldiers suffering from venereal disease to undergo satisfactory treatment by the medical authorities until pronounced cured. Failure to do so should be regarded as an offence for which suitable punishment should be awarded. Under no circumstances should a soldier's refusal to submit to treatment for venereal or other communicable disease secure his release from the army.

9. All soldiers suffering from venereal disease should be treated as hospital patients.

10. Special facilities for the disposal and treatment in transit, or more permanently, of soldiers suffering from venereal disease should be arranged for at Halifax, St. John, and Quebec, the three points of disembarkation.

11. Special hospital arrangements for bacteriological and blood examinations and for treatment of all classes of venereal disease should be put in effect at such centres as Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg and wherever else might appear advisable in order to fairly meet the demands of the problem of detection, treatment and prevention of dissemination.

12. Regulations regarding "hospital stoppages" in respect to venereal disease should be amended in such a way that soldiers reporting exposure to disease or earl signs of approaching disease and who undergo satisfactory and completed treatment and otherwise observe military discipline, will not be subjected to hospital stoppages of pay.

Soldiers whose discipline is good and who are discovered to be suffering from latent syphilis and where apparently no attempt to conceal the disease has been made should not be subjected to stoppages of pay while undergoing treatment.

The application of hospital stoppages of pay should be reserved as a form of punishment in cases in which there has been a failure to report early, an attempt to conceal the disease, refusal of satisfactory treatment, or breaches of discipline while undergoing treatment.

J. H. ELLIOTT,
Hon. Secretary.

Resolution passed by the Academy of Medicine of Toronto, on March 9, 1917.

Moved by Dr. Charles J. Hastings, seconded by Dr. Edmund E. King, That the Academy of Medicine of Toronto, in general meeting for discussion of the subject of venereal diseases with a view to securing legislation affecting the treatment and prevention of dissemination of such diseases, endorse the principles involved in the memoranda prepared by Colonel Marlow for presentation to the Parliamentary Committee on Returned Soldiers in respect to treatment and prophylaxis of venereal diseases.

EXHIBIT No. 4.

Remarks and Suggestions, contained in Report, dated 24th November, 1915, respecting the medical aspect of work at the Discharge Depot, Quebec, etc.—Submitted by Col. F. W. Marlow.

Remarks.

1. A workable and probably satisfactory system was put into action at Quebec, and if the Discharge Depot is retained there, the system can be elaborated and modified to meet varying requirements, and possible contingencies.

2. The desirability of maintaining a permanent Discharge Depot at Quebec is open to question, particularly as ocean traffic is closed there for a considerable period of each year, during which time it would be necessary to transport invalids from other points of disembarkation to Quebec, to be dealt with by the Depot.

3. Approximately 75 per cent of invalids returning are likely to be benefited by treatment, and as their discharge cannot consistently be arranged until they are reported upon later by Divisional or District Medical Boards, the proceedings of the Boards at Quebec in such cases are of no practical value, provided that copies of the proceedings of the Overseas Boards, or extracts therefrom, are available for reference.

4. Many cases appearing before Medical Boards require special examinations and prolonged observation before satisfactory opinions regarding their estimated disability can be made.

5. In a large percentage of cases, the opinions of Medical Boards, given without special and repeated observation, do not furnish sufficient reliable data upon which to base claims relating to disability.

6. Medical Boards held at Divisional or District Headquarters, would have the advantage of time and various methods of investigation unavailable at the Discharge Depot at Quebec.

7. At Divisional or District Headquarters there are medical officers of high standing in the profession, whose services would be available to act on Medical Boards. The most notable exception in this respect is Quebec, where, at present, three of the most efficient officers on duty under the A.D.M.S., 5th Division, have been temporarily detailed from the 2nd Division, viz., Major Winters, Captain Carrick, and Captain Eyres.

8. To have all invalids seen by a permanent Medical Board at Quebec might mean a greater amount of uniformity in the proceedings, but when large numbers arrive at once, it is most unwise to detain them at Quebec sufficiently long to be passed by one Board.

9. All Medical Board work in connection with returned invalids could be more satisfactorily carried out divisionally. Adoption of such a plan would facilitate early transportation of the invalids to centres adjacent to their homes, and so eliminate many discomforts, and would afford the divisional authorities an opportunity of becoming conversant with all cases returning to the division. Besides, it is certain that with time and special means of investigation at hand Divisional or District Medical Boards should be able to give more intelligent opinions in the matter of a man's disability, and to make more consistent recommendations on which claims for compensation or pension might be based.

MEMORANDA OF SUGGESTIONS FOR DEALING WITH INVALIDED SOLDIERS FROM OVERSEAS.

(By Lieut.-Colonel Marlow, A.D.M.S., 2nd Division.)

MEN INVALIDED FROM ENGLAND.

1. Should be sent to Canada at the earliest possible time consistent with sailing accommodation.
2. Care should be taken to have all papers affecting the men forwarded with them, especially the Medical Boards and last pay certificates.
3. At least two copies of proceedings of any Medical Board should accompany men's papers, one for divisional or district headquarters, and one for transmitting with other documents to Militia Headquarters.

AT POINT OF DISEMBARKATION.

1. A distributing depot for invalided soldiers should be established to take place of so-called discharge depot.
2. On arrival, any men requiring hospital treatment should be sent to military hospitals at once, or in the absence of such, to a civil hospital, and be under supervision of the A.D.M.S. of the division in which the depot is located, to be forwarded later to divisions or districts.
3. All other men should be grouped according to the division or district to which they are to be returned, and their accompanying papers should be similarly grouped.
4. Medical boards at point of disembarkation should be dispensed with. They detain the men unnecessarily and in 75 per cent of cases serve no useful purpose, in as much as they do not provide the Militia Department with information that will allow a man's case to be consistently terminated without reference to a further medical board.
5. When men and papers are sorted divisionally, nominal rolls in triplicate for each division or district should be prepared. These should give the number, rank, name, unit and address of each man. One copy should be sent to Militia Headquarters, one retained at the discharge depot, and the other should be forwarded to the headquarters of the division or district concerned. All last pay certificates should be forwarded to Militia Headquarters with such nominal rolls, if the practice of paying all invalided soldiers from headquarters is continued, or to the division or district headquarters, if arrangements are made to pay the men divisionally, until discharged or pensioned.
6. While at the depot, the men's pay to date might be adjusted by paying them a small amount in cash, and forwarding cheques for balances to divisional headquarters, along with statements of their accounts.
7. As soon as possible, men should be forwarded to divisional or district headquarters full particulars of departure, route, and expected time of arrival being wired to officers commanding divisions or districts.
8. The men's papers should be forwarded to the officers commanding the divisions or districts forthwith.
9. All men proceeding singly or in small groups should have written instructions as to the proper place to report themselves on arrival at divisional or district headquarters.
10. Large groups of men should be accompanied by a proper escort, whose duty it should be to hand them over to the proper divisional or district authorities. Selection of non-commissioned officers from the returned men to keep the others in order would not likely give good results. Ordinarily the N.C.O.'s are the most disabled of the lot, are broken in spirit and incapable of maintaining discipline amongst other ranks with whom they have been so closely associated in hospitals during their illness.

11. A special train carrying invalided soldiers and requiring more than 24 hours to reach its destination, should invariably be accompanied by a medical officer.
12. Undischarged men should not be provided with civilian clothing.

AT DIVISIONAL OR DISTRICT HEADQUARTERS.

1. Adequate arrangements should be made at divisional or district headquarters for receiving invalided soldiers, and caring for them in such a way as will afford them such treatment as will allow their cases to receive every consideration, and also permit of them being disposed of intelligently, and without undue delay, and in a manner consistent with the service they have rendered and the disability they have sustained.
2. There should be in each division or district, a central clearing military convalescent home, together with suitable smaller convalescent homes as required.
3. The provision, furnishing, maintenance, and general welfare of these homes should be in the hands of the Military Hospitals Commission, aided by voluntary aid committees.
4. All medical arrangements should be under control of the A.D.M.S.

DIVISION OR DISTRICTS.

5. If considered necessary for the convoy of invalided soldiers to their proper destinations, or for the maintenance of order and discipline in and about the homes, officers commanding divisions or districts should be authorized to supply guards or pickets for such duties.

6. On arrival at the Central Home, invalids should be formally admitted and checked over, and, where circumstances warrant the procedure, might be given passes for a stated time in each case to visit their friends at home, at the termination of which they must report back to the home for observation and treatment, or other disposition of their cases as may be deemed best. Men, and particularly single men of uncertain or undesirable addresses, should not be allowed out on pass until their cases are investigated and their requirements determined.

7. There should be a medical officer A.M.C. in charge of the Central Clearing Home; whose duties should include: 1. Attending all ordinary medical needs of men in the home. 2. Administration of the home from a military aspect. 3. Care and compilation of all progress notes concerning the men from the time of their arrival until their disposition is recommended and arranged.

8. As such central homes should be the bureau of information concerning all invalided soldiers, arrangements should be made for a filing system subsidiary to that in divisional or district headquarters. All reports from smaller homes in the division or district should be transmitted through the central home.

9. In the matter of staffs, arrangements should be made, and can readily be made, with civilian practitioners, living at divisional or district headquarters, with specialists' standing in their various departments, to attend in the same manner as in all large general hospitals, without expense to the public, except under very unusual circumstances. Such men would consider it a privilege to serve in this way. At smaller homes a medical officer A.M.C., if available, should visit and furnish a report in accordance with requirements.

10. In the central homes the cases should be carefully checked over by the staff, and those who appear to have no disability resulting from service should be brought before a medical board, in order that their discharge may be carried out promptly, the proceedings being forwarded with all other papers concerning them to Militia Headquarters. Cases in which there appears to be permanent disability, the result of service, and which is not likely to be lessened within a year by treatment, should also be brought before a board and reported to Militia Headquarters promptly, with all attending papers, in order that their pensions may be arranged and their discharge carried out. Cases requiring observation and likely to be benefited by rest or treatment should have the previous estimation of their disability, and the recommendation of the Overseas Medical Board checked over, but need not be brought before a further medical board until such time as it appears they can be discharged without disability the result of service, and consequently able to earn a full livelihood, or, on the other hand, it is determined that there is some permanent disability such as will constitute a claim for pension. At such times the board might be held, disability intelligently estimated, discharge recommended and the proceedings, with all attending papers, be forwarded to Militia Headquarters.

11. All invalided soldiers should be taught to realize that they are subject to military discipline until such time as their discharge is carried out, and should not be allowed to absent themselves from any military hospital or convalescent home except on pass.

12. From the Central Convalescent Home cases may be discharged to the smaller homes, to sanatoria, or such other places as is deemed advisable. When no treatment is required and a man's home is considered a suitable place for him to convalesce, and his progress is not likely to be retarded by his being there and his habits at home can be checked periodically, such cases should be allowed to go home, but only on passes, covering a definite period. On the expiration of their passes these men should report at the home to be checked over by the staff. If their progress is satisfactory their passes may be renewed, and if not they should be re-admitted to the home. When deemed advisable, they should be brought before a medical board for disposition. Men on pass, who are reported to be misbehaving themselves, and so possibly retarding their progress, should be brought back to the home at once, and be kept under supervision. Failure to report in accordance with orders, or misbehaviour in a convalescent home, should be dealt with in accordance with headquarters instructions in this regard.

Such an "out-patient" system is capable of expansion to any degree, and while still keeping the men under observation and control, would avoid the necessity of providing homes for men who can convalesce satisfactorily in their own homes, and would permit of their being dealt with in a consistent manner and satisfactory, not only to the men, but to the country for whom they have served.

COUNCIL CHAMBER,

THURSDAY, March 22, 1917.

The Special Committee on Returned Soldiers spent the morning of Thursday, 22nd March, in visiting various institutions devoted to the care of disabled returned soldiers. The places visited were:—

Spadina Military Hospitals Commission, (Old Knox College).

Central Technical School, Lippincott and Harbord Streets.

Central Military Hospitals Commission, (Old Bishop Strachan School, 35 College Street).

Artificial Limb Institute, (Orthopaedic Hospital, 100 Bloor Street West).

Booth Memorial, St. Clair Avenue West.

Base Hospital, Gerrard Street East.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

CITY HALL, TORONTO.

COUNCIL CHAMBER,

THURSDAY, March 22, 1917.

The Committee met at 2.30 o'clock, the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

MEMBERS PRESENT: Sir Herbert Ames, Chairman, Mr. Bennett (Calgary), Hon. Charles Marcil, Mr. McCurdy, Mr. Middlebro, Hon. Charles Murphy, Mr. Pardee, Mr. Ross (Middlesex), Mr. Sutherland, all of the Commons Committee; Brigadier-General Mason and Senator Ross of the Senate Committee.

Sergt.-Major J. ROWE WHITTON and WILLIAM E. TURLEY, president and secretary, respectively of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada, Toronto District, recalled and further examined.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You told us yesterday that your first cause of complaint was a lack of arranging satisfactorily about your pay and maintenance; the second we took up was as to pensions; now, what other complaints are there besides those two—if not complaints, what would you like to have remedied?

Mr. WHITTON: With reference to the military authorities, or civilian employment, you mean?

Q. I mean as to the lot, generally, of the returned soldier?—A. I should like to see the manufacturers take on a man discharged from the service, at the union rate of wages, irrespective of the pension he gets.

Q. We spoke about that yesterday; I do not know whether this Committee can get you such a thing or not; that is more a matter of internal economy with the manufacturers themselves; I suppose we cannot make them pay what they do not want to pay; but leaving aside that, what else is there?

Mr. TURLEY: We were speaking yesterday of the gratuity system. I had a man all in to see me this morning, who had no knowledge of the Parliamentary Committee being in session, so this is not a prepared or stated case. This man received a letter from the Board of Pensions reading:—

“I have the honour, by direction of the Board of Pensions Commissioners for Canada, to enclose herewith cheque for $25, being a gratuity awarded you by the board under paragraph 13 of the pension regulations. This is a final settlement in respect of your disability.”

No mention of any possible court of appeal.

Q. How much was that man's disability?—A. I am coming to that. From the finding of the board his disability was this:—

“General weakness; pains in arms and legs; neurasthenia, following operation for hemerroid contracted on active service.”

The man concerned is George J. Slack, who was a year at the front. He is obviously in a weakened condition; it does not need a medical man to see that. He is discharged, and informed that he has no further claim for greatly weakened condition after receipt of $25 gratuity. There is no intimation conveyed in these official communications that he has any place of appeal or any means of appeal. This is in final settlement.

Q. Who is that from?—A. The Board of Pensions Commissioners.

Q. By whom is it signed?—A. F. J. McAland.

Q. That is illustrative of what you consider to be an injustice of the gratuity system?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And also some notice of the fact that he has an appeal?—A. Some notification that if you are not satisfied with this award you have your court of appeal through such and such a channel.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. That still relates to gratuity, pension, and so on; what else would you suggest?—A. There are complaints regarding the case of a man coming up for readjustment for pension. This case is referred to a specialist. Specialists never fail—I have yet to hear of a case where a man referred to a specialist was not reported to improve as a result of that—and as a natural outcome of that his original pension in most cases would be reduced. There was also something else which might have been a mere coincidence but back in the early part of the summer an increased scale of pensions was awarded. Every man I have heard who received any notification regarding that pension was informed at the same time that he had been lowered in grade. With regard to myself, I was a two-fifths pensioner under the old clause, in receipt of $14 per month. I received an intimation that under the new regulation my pension had been increased, and would now be $8 a month, but the information contained was a decrease instead of an increase. That was the wording of the circular, and I had heard of many such cases. You must remember a man does not talk about an increase as he does about a decrease. There may have been an actual increase made of pension. I have not heard of one. I have heard of many who received an intimation of an increase, and at the same time they were notified of an actual decrease, so that the increase of the scale of pensions was more apparent than real.

Mr. WHITTON: A man going before the Pensions Board, or the medical officer who has to certify as to his capacity, going before the board, the man is put down in a certain class, say two-fifths. He goes in front of three more medical officers here, who examine him and O.K. the previous medical officers' decision. He is awarded the pension in that class. After hearing from Ottawa, in nine cases out of ten, we find the pension has been lowered one class lower. Where a man is recommended for two-fifths, by the time he gets his reply from Ottawa it is generally a quarter. The Ottawa officials do not see that man at all.

Mr. PARDEE: That is the pension man.

Mr. WHITTON: That is the pensions people.

Mr. HURLEY: There is another point. The Board of Pensions regulations, as amended on December 12th, paragraph 7, reads as follows:—

“All pensions awarded to members of the force shall be determined by the disability of the applicant without reference to his occupation prior to enlistment.”

Paragraph 8 reads:—

“Each case shall be subject to review at the end of the year from the time when the pension is first granted, except in those cases where the disability is obviously permanent.”

[Sergt.-Major J. Rowe Whitton.]

And then there shall be no further review. In spite of that assurance that the man's earning powers do not sway the finding of the medical board, it is a fact that a good deal of stress is laid in the examination on the man's earning ability, on the number of his dependents, name, birthplace, every detail is required, and although it may be true that the pension is not awarded with a thought as to the man's earning capacity, be it great or small, the feeling among the men is that it undoubtedly does, or there would not be so much stress laid on those particular circumstances. He would not otherwise be called on to give such a detailed statement as to his earning powers and dependents.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Outside of that, can you speak as to the returned soldier, whether they are satisfied with the provisions that have been made with regard to them, such as convalescent homes, hospitals, medical treatment and so on? Is there any complaint along those lines?—A. There have been complaints regarding the medical treatment in this form, that it does not seem medical officers treating returned men are under sufficiently strict discipline in this regard. A returned man is warned to appear at a certain place. He is an out-patient and is told to appear at a convalescent home for treatment at a certain time. He will usually find he has to wait after the time appointed for anything from two to three hours before getting an opportunity to see the medical officer.

Q. Is that by reason of the fact that there are so many others ahead of him, or that the medical officer is not there to attend to his duty?—A. Both. It often happens that there is a large number to attend to, and the medical officer arrives late. These men, as far as my experience goes, are mainly in civil practice. A man has his living to consider, and the civil practice comes first, even among the most zealous of the medical men engaged in that voluntary work.

MR. PARDEE: Is there anything else?

MR. TURLEY: It does come to this: a man may go days or weeks without medical attention because there is not an enforced attendance of medical officers at certain times and places.

MR. WHITTON: There is one other subject I would like to bring up with your permission, and it is this, I will quote my own case: For instance, a young medical officer of, say, 24 years of age, has to state the amount of a man's earning capacity according to the labour market. Now, I fail to see what a medical officer of that age would know about the labour market.

MR. PARDEE: I suppose a medical officer ought to know a man's earning capacity from the physical state he was in.

MR. WHITTON: If he knows, how is it that the Pension Commissioners at Ottawa put the pension down?

MR. PARDEE: What else is there?

MR. TURLEY: I know of nothing else, sir, myself.

MR. PARDEE: You are satisfied with the convalescent homes and with the treatment the men get there, are you?

MR. WHITTON: Speaking of the convalescent home at Whitby, the situation is extremely good, it is one of the finest hospitals I have had the privilege of inspecting but two things have to be borne in mind, a man's health and his amusements. He is sent to such a place for his health, primarily, and it is an ideal place to recuperate, but the providing of amusement for him should not be overlooked.

MR. PARDEE: Do you not think there is sufficient amusement provided?

MR. WHITTON: No, sir. I would also draw attention to this point. There is no over overhead for the men when they walk from the cottages in which they are located to the dining room, a distance of about fifty yards. In consequence, the men are exposed to rain or snow as they walk across that space, and are liable to get wet. I would suggest that a covered way be provided, leading from each of the cottages to the dining room.

Mr. PARDEE: Have any reports been made to the authorities of the Whitby institution by the War Veterans' Association along those lines?

Mr. WHITTON: We have not made any representations as an association, but on the occasion of my visit to Whitby I suggested that such a thing was absolutely necessary, otherwise complaints would be received from the men.

The CHAIRMAN: Are you aware that the authorities at Whitby have recently made arrangements for an amusement officer whose sole duty it will be to provide recreation for the men at that institution?

Mr. WHITTON: No, sir, I am not.

Mr. PARDEE: To whom did you make your recommendation when at Whitby?

Mr. WHITTON: To Major Wilson.

Mr. PARDEE: And did Major Wilson say he would take it into consideration?

Mr. WHITTON: There were several officers present at the time and they thought it would be advisable to have such a thing.

Mr. PARDEE: When did you make your recommendation?

Mr. WHITTON: I made it three months ago, it was a verbal and not a written recommendation.

Mr. PARDEE: You do not consider the amusements there sufficient for the returned soldier?

Mr. WHITTON: No, sir.

Mr. PARDEE: What would you suggest?

Mr. WHITTON: I do not consider it any officer's duty to look after the men's amusement.

Mr. PARDEE: Yes, but what would you suggest?

Mr. WHITTON: Get the Regimental Sergeant Major, or some other returned man, to look after the men's amusements if they cannot look after them themselves.

Mr. PARDEE: What would you suggest?

Mr. WHITTON: You cannot lay down any strict rule. Billiard tables and a few things like that would be appropriate.

Mr. PARDEE: You are only referring to the Home at Whitby?

Mr. WHITTON: That is the only one I know of personally.

Mr. PARDEE: You do not know anything about the Convalescent Homes here?

Mr. WHITTON: The men at the Convalescent Homes here have plenty of amusements. Not only that, but they are taken out to theatres during the week by ladies or gentlemen who feel disposed to entertain a few wounded soldiers. In Toronto the men, I think, are treated remarkably well.

Mr. PARDEE: In Whitby, then, what line would you suggest?

Mr. WHITTON: They have not the facilities there that we have in Toronto.

Mr. PARDEE: What facilities do they lack there?

Mr. WHITTON: There are no theatres there.

Mr. TURLEY: The point is this that in the city a man gets ample opportunity of amusement through voluntary offers and so on.

Examination of Mr. Whitton resumed.

By the Chairman:

Q. When you were at Whitby, had they installed moving pictures in the home?—
A. No.

Q. They have them now. Had they an amusement officer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had they billiard tables?—A. No.

Q. They have them now. Did you know that they are arranging bowling alleys?
—A. No, sir.

Q. And as soon as spring opens for outdoor field sports, football, baseball, and so on. When these things are done they will improve the situation?—A. Without a doubt.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You would not want all your convalescent homes to have these things?—A. You cannot get a man entirely well in the city. It is all very well for him to be among country surroundings but I would suggest that they have some means of transporting the man's relatives up to Whitby, even if they went to the extent of a free train once a week. It is the mere fact of his being away from his friends and relatives—

Q. He convalesces more quickly when he is with them?—A. Yes.

Q. And it is absolutely a necessity to see them?—A. Yes.

Q. You think he should see them once a week?—A. Yes. The train might arrive on Saturday and leave Saturday night.

Q. Outside of that, so far as Whitby is concerned, is it satisfactory to the returned men?—A. As far as I know.

Q. As for the rest of the various convalescent homes, you are content with them?—A. Quite.

Q. And you think that the returned men are contented, you speak for them?—A. I think they are, sir.

Q. And you would suggest nothing further than what you have done at the present time?—A. I do not think I could suggest anything further.

By the Chairman:

Q. From the men's point of view, do you think the vocational training is appreciated?—A. Oh, yes, I know of many instances where men have greatly benefited by vocational training.

Q. I am going to ask you to solve one of the problems that come up. This morning we went to the bureau of the Provincial Soldiers' Aid Commission. I was shown the card of one man who had been given eight jobs and every time he had thrown up the job. What would you recommend them to do in a case like that?—A. May I ask what wages was he earning?

Q. He had an assortment of jobs, I do not remember the wages. He had been a labourer originally. I cannot repeat what the jobs were, but they were quite an assortment.—A. Every man that we have placed in our association so far who has applied to us for any work has always managed to suit at that work. I do not know of any instance where he has not stayed there and improved his position.

Q. Would you suggest that when the provincial organization fails to suit a man after six or eight attempts that they should consult with you?—A. I would strongly advise the returned men to consult with us straight away.

Q. The Soldiers' Aid Commission has been created by the Provincial Government for the purpose of procuring employment for returned men, which is a very large problem. Do you not think that the re-employment of men is too large a proposition for a voluntary organization like your own?—A. We could work in co-operation with them. Finding a man a job is one thing and seeing that he gets adequate wages is another.

[Sergt.-Major J. Rowe Whitton.]

Q. How can your association co-operate with the Soldiers' Aid Commission in the case of the man they find it very difficult to suit with a job?—A. Let them apply to us to send up that man. We will take the man up that will be the most suitable for that work.

Q. Put it the other way: supposing they have a man that they have been endeavouring six or eight times to place and have been unsuccessful in doing so, would you advise their sending that man to you?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Have you any objection to working in connection with the Soldiers' Aid Commission?—A. We are only too happy to co-operate with the Soldiers' Aid, we have done so all along.

Q. I just wanted to ask that question for this reason: In Ottawa there is some friction between the Soldiers' Aid and the Veterans' Association, and the question was asked their president whether or not they could work together, and he replied that the returned soldier did not want to go to the Soldiers' Aid Association, and for that reason he did not think the two bodies could work together.—A. That might be true in a great many instances.

Q. But you do not see any difficulty in the way of harmonious work between the two?—A. The aspect of the question is this: A man goes up to the Soldiers' Aid here looking for a job, and the first man he sees is apparently a healthy, sturdy man occupying the chair as secretary.

By the Chairman:

Q. And he is not wearing a returned soldier's button?—A. No.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Who is the Secretary here?—A. The Secretary here is Mr. Warwick, an apparently healthy specimen of manhood, and the returned soldier has to go to him to ask him for a job; he does not care about doing that; he would rather come to us.

By the Chairman:

Q. The first person the man meets on entering the building wears a returned soldier's button?—A. Yes, in the outer office, but that is the only man there who is a returned soldier; I would suggest that more men who are returned soldiers should be employed there. We have any amount of our men employed at the munitions factories, the Imperial Government Board especially, and every man we have sent down there so far has obtained employment at the proper rate of wages, irrespective of what pension he may get.

Q. Do you find that when you send a man he sticks to the job?—A. Yes. We don't send a man down unless we feel absolutely certain that this man is going to make good, because we point out that it is for the good of the Association and for the honour of the Great War Veterans, and that man tries to make good.

Q. Have you any man who has been placed in five or six successive jobs?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Then you see no reason, nor Mr. Turley, speaking for the War Veterans' Association, why the Soldiers' Aid and the Association could not work side by side?—A. Oh, no reason whatever. We have a great friend in Mr. McPherson; we know very well he is doing everything in his power to help us.

MR. TURLEY: There are no complaints regarding the methods used by the Soldiers' Aid, and the case of a man who has several jobs is not remarkable, for that man is in an unsettled condition; he is looking for the best job; he wants the best wages he can get and the best position. I had ten positions in the first eleven weeks I was in this country, because they wouldn't pay me in the first ten, and I had not come from the war.

[Sergt.-Major J. Rowe Whitton.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You were not any worse afterwards than before?—A. Much better. My eleventh position was one I stayed at for nearly three years.

By the Chairman:

Q. I may say that the secretary at the Soldiers' Aid, when I asked if they got tired finding jobs for a man, said, "No, we will keep on"?—A. We find them very willing and able.

Q. We had a man in Montreal who tried fourteen jobs in three weeks, and was still looking for something; there is such a thing as wearing out the patience of the volunteer organization that is trying to serve the soldiers?—A. Certainly. They have an able and willing staff in the Soldiers' Aid Commission here, and we have no trouble. As the sergeant major said, some of the men object to the idea that an able-bodied civilian should be in charge of the Department—apparently able-bodied, and a man who doesn't seem to have offered himself for military service. That does perhaps cause a little suspicion in the minds of men first applying.

Q. Would it ever occur to you that possibly that man might have a very accurate knowledge of industrial conditions in a city like this, and that it would be very difficult to find a returned soldier who would have the same?—A. It does occur to us, but it does not alter the fact that a man who does not know anything about it and goes up there as a stranger and finds that the head of the department is apparently an able-bodied civilian, it does not remove the impression from his mind that the other fellow should be where he has been; that is all. It is an unfortunate thing.

Mr. WHITTON: If the man should have happened to be wearing the rejection button instead of the Y.M.C.A. Central button there would not be so much kick coming; it would look as if he had tried then.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have no fault to find as to the examiner, or the work he accomplishes, and his willingness to co-operate with you?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. With reference to your complaint about the ruling of the Medical Board as to a man's disability, have you anything to suggest that will overcome that, an appeal board or anything of that nature?—A. Yes, I suggest that in making the award, the man should be informed in the same communication as to the office or officer to whom he should address a request for re-consideration.

Q. Those men are not up before a permanent board; the board does not always rule exactly the same; medical men differ in their opinions, as other men will; and you would suggest that the soldier, if not satisfied with the ruling of the Board, should have the right to appeal to another Board; or would you suggest the appointment of another Board by the War Veterans Association?—A. I think every case of re-consideration should come up to a different board. I would suggest the establishment of a permanent board in every military centre to reconsider appeals in regard to pension awards during the period when the pensions are being awarded.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. A permanent appeal board like a Court of Appeal?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITTON: If a man in the army is punished by court martial he has a right to appeal to a higher tribunal, or he can take exception to any member of the board.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would your idea be that subsequent to the award of the pension by the board at Ottawa, say three or six weeks afterwards, or at the time when application might be made, you wanted that case reopened and reconsidered? Now, supposing in that time the man had improved in health so materially that the board on reconsideration cut down his pension, what would you think of that?—A. I don't think a man, if he thought he was improving, would apply to a medical board for re-examination.

Q. He would not want to run that risk, would he?—A. No.

Mr. TURLEY: It works both ways.

Mr. WHITTON: A man does not want his pension if he is well.

By the Chairman:

Q. What the country wants is to give you what you are entitled to, not less?—A. That is all a soldier is looking for.

Sergeant LOWERY, Chairman of the Investigating Committee of the War Veterans Association, recalled: said: Speaking of the Soldiers' Aid Commission, I was noticing that in their remarks my comrades forgot to mention that the returned soldier wearing the button that was mentioned is getting $14 a week, while the young lady in the same office is getting $18 a week.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you know the relative value of their services?—A. Well, we can supply a man with executive and administrative ability the same as that young lady has; and if it is to assist returned soldiers, the best place to start with them is to have a staff of returned soldiers.

Q. Can you supply returned soldiers who have taken a special course in card index work?—A. I would undertake to supply him, but not at a moment's notice. I have had the opportunity of supplying more than one who has had training in that. As a matter of fact we have placed from 16 to 20 men who are doing work in the Customs, and among them there are several that would undertake the duties that that girl is doing.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Is she a stenographer?—A. I don't think so. We have had stenographer come to the association.

By the Chairman:

Q. I think the committee would really rather hear serious grievances of the soldiers than a criticism of the staff office, and consequently if you have serious grievances that the committee can remedy we would hear them?—A. Well, there is a case of Private F. Goode, of the 19th Battalion, that was placed before the Medical Board on the 28th November; discharge to date from the 28th December; recommended for pension, I understand, at $16 per month, class 4; has not yet received any word of his pension.

Q. How long ago was that?—A. Three months ago, the 28th of this month. I have here the correspondence in regard to the pay and allowances that I mentioned yesterday. I interviewed Mr. Warwick in regard to pay and allowances, and he consulted Ottawa.

Q. Is that in respect to a specific case, or on the general question?—A. This is upon my own case which was quoted, where they sent me a statement that was absolutely incorrect.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. That is the case in which, in the first place, they claimed you were not getting enough, and in the next place they claimed you were indebted to them?—A. In one case they gave me a balance of $21.23, I think it is, and in the next case they turned around and informed me that they had instructed the paymaster of No. 2 Division to stop out $3 from my pay—debit instead of credit.

Q. What office does that come from?—A. I think it is no department specially mentioned, but Mr. Warwick states:—

“With reference to your recent call here, I have now received the following statement, being a copy of your last English pay certificate furnished by the Paymaster General’s Branch.”

By the Chairman:

Q. And that does not correspond with your own understanding of the case?—A. It doesn’t correspond with mine, and their two statements do not correspond one with another.

Q. Will you prepare a specific statement in regard to that and we will have it thoroughly investigated, referring to files of correspondence?—A. Very good.

Q. Have you any further cases similar to that which you would like to have investigated?—A. The case of Private Gough of the Princess Patricia Light Infantry, paid a pension of $132 from January 5 to April 26, During the above-mentioned period Private Gough was a patient in the College Street Hospital. Part of that time he was a patient in the Toronto General Hospital, and had an operation performed on his nose.

Q. That is another case where the pension was paid prematurely?—A. Yes.

Q. And where you think he should have pay and allowance instead of pension?—A. Yes.

Q. File the facts of that and we will have the matter investigated?—A. Then there is the case of William Whitaker, 95th Battalion, returned from Great Britain, discharged to date from the 24th of this month, medical certificate states that he is in a very bad condition, and the doctor informed me personally that he should be given convalescent treatment as an indoor patient from three to six months.

Q. Is he discharged?—A. The discharge dates from the 24th of this month. The grievance is that he was discharged in a condition which could be improved by treatment, and which we consider the military authorities should have taken up.

Q. Where is he now?—A. At home, ill in bed.

Q. He has been a bed patient since he returned home two weeks ago?—A. Yes.

Q. Has he made application to be re-received in the hospital?—A. He made application to Sergeant Scott, another returned soldier, and I understand nothing was done about it. The man’s wife called upon me, and I sent my own doctor up, and this certificate is by my own doctor and it will be at the expense of the association.

Q. Have you communicated with Major Munn, the chief medical officer?—A. I am going up to see what I can do personally.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Will you report that case to the secretary of the committee?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that man on pension?—A. No pension at all.

Q. And no pay and allowances?—A. No.

Q. Did he get any gratuity?—A. I think he received $40 for his last cheque. I would not say whether that was gratuity or not.

Q. Is he a married man?—A. Yes.

Q. Children?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just a wife?—A. Just a wife.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Up to what time has he been paid?—A. Up to the 24th of this month. Then there was the case of the late Private Knevett, now discharged. He received a communication that he was granted a pension of $132 for one year from April 1, 1916. Later he was informed that his pension is increased, and instead of getting $132 he will get a gratuity. There are several cases on record of men receiving notice that their pensions are increased under the new scale of increases but instead of that we find they have dropped considerably, and that they are worse off than they were previously.

Q. In a case of that kind do you report the matter to Mr. Crocker, the Chief of the Pensions Board here?—A. That matter has been taken up with Mr. Crocker at the present time.

Q. That is a case that was pending?—A. Yes.

Q. You have made complaints and are awaiting answer?—A. Yes.

Q. They used the stereotyped form and perhaps the clerk did not notice whether it was an increase or a decrease?—A. Yes. It was poor satisfaction for a man when he was given to understand he was receiving an increase to find that he was receiving less. Then there was the case of Private James Martin: at the time he was discharged he was recommended for full pension, and was examined by five or six medical boards. Later on he was re-examined, and was informed his pension would be stopped, the board claiming carelessness in regard to his disability. He saw service in France, and was overcome by some kind of an attack in that country. This man returned to Canada, and was examined by several boards in the usual procedure before coming here. When he reached Canada he was discharged and recommended for full pension at $480 per year. Shortly after his return he received a communication to report to be examined, and was re-examined. I had all the correspondence between the different departments and I returned the correspondence to him, but the medical board at Toronto informed him that after the 12 months that his pension had already been granted for he would receive no further pension, as they considered the accident due to negligence. We took up this case. It was one of those cases where he required an attendant he was in such shocking condition. He was examined, and I have seen the medical board's certificate. It was in technical terms, but it simply amounts to this, that his body and mind are affected, and the right side more or less paralyzed from the shoulder down, including the right arm. That man's pension was cut down just because this one board at Toronto came to the conclusion that he had been negligent. I have more of the facts at my disposal than they had, although they were in a position to see them, and they were placed before them later, and amongst these documents that the board had the opportunity to examine was the statement of the first doctor who saw him, and there was no question of negligence at that time. The point raised is this: how was it a board in Toronto raises a plea of negligence in regard to a man's disability, and five or six boards who had examined this man previous to his return never thought of such a thing and never raised the objection.

By the Chairman:

Q. Where was it alleged the negligence occurred?—A. Well they did not specify any accident. They just put it down as negligence.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. They did not say what kind or what way?—A. No.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What was the cause of his injury?—A. He was working on a wagon wheel, and medically I could not say what the injury was. I saw the medical practitioner who examined him, and I told him the Convalescents' Association did not want to back up any false case or cases that had no claim, and he told me he could not do anything; the man was negligent.

Q. Was he on duty at the time he was hurt?—A. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I do not think the question of negligence makes any difference [Sergt. A. E. Lowerv.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Was it alleged the injury was due to his own negligence?—A. That is the case stated from Ottawa.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: As long as a man is on duty, under the Ontario law it makes no difference whether he is negligent or not, he can recover.

The WITNESS: It was paid by the board at Ottawa on recommendation of the board at Toronto.

The CHAIRMAN: You do not know what the negligence consisted of?

Mr. TURLEY: No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Was he on duty at the time?

Mr. LOWERY: The man states he was on duty working on a wagon wheel, probably oiling it.

The CHAIRMAN: Do you know what the man's medical condition was at the time he was doing that work?

Mr. LOWERY: I have no idea, but acting on the presumption the man must be medically fit. He was examined before leaving England for France very strictly, and he had only been two weeks in France, and it would therefore appear that he would be medically fit.

The CHAIRMAN: You do not know the facts with respect to the allegation of negligence in that case?

Mr. LOWERY: No. I can find no reference to the question, with reference to what the negligence was.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Can you point to the section of the Act which says that a man is not entitled to compensation if the accident is due to his negligence?

Mr. LOWERY: No. They say the pension will be discontinued as the accident is due to negligence.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That will be a case where you would like to have him appear before another board?

Mr. LOWERY: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: I think it all depends on what constituted the negligence. It may be the accident was due to the negligence of the man. If so the pension board would not accept the full responsibility. As to that we do not know.

Mr. LOWERY: The point I would raise is this: What evidence is there, what assumption, why should they assume here in Toronto that the man is suffering through his own negligence when at least five previous boards have never raised the question?

The CHAIRMAN: Only this, that previous boards did not examine for pension, and the official board that did examine for pension, which imposes a $15,000 obligation on the state, had to be satisfied in regard to the facts.

Mr. LOWERY: Some of the boards did examine for pension. I was examined at Folkestone, at Bath and Quebec for pension, that is three boards, and recommended for pension by them, those boards believing their recommendation was necessary in regard to the pension.

Mr. WHITTON: I should like to know how it is the Board of Pension Commissioners can lower the rate as recommended by the medical officer? The medical officer's examination fixes the amount of the pension, recommends you for a certain amount of pension, and on receipt of the notification from Ottawa you find it has been lowered.

Mr. TURLEY: Lower than the pension board at this end estimate.

[Sergt. A. E. Lowery.]

The CHAIRMAN: The pension board regards this as an independent tribunal. They have access to all previous documents but are not necessarily bound by them. Just what evidence the Pension Board may have had which was not in possession of the previous board, we do not know. The pension board have all the evidence and information before them and they go through it before coming to a conclusion. We are going to hear Mr. Crocker, who represents the Board of Pension Commissioners in Toronto. If you gentlemen like to remain a few moments longer, and if there is anything you want to ask Mr. Crocker after his examination is concluded, you will be at liberty to do so.

Mr. WHITTON: There is one thing I should like to submit, and that is that there should be a more experienced medical officer to judge as to the extent of a man's incapacity.

The CHAIRMAN: You mean the medical officer by whose finding the Pension Board is largely guided?

Mr. WHITTON: Yes. This medical officer fixes the man's incapacity, but it does not at all follow when that report gets to Ottawa that it will be acted upon. There may be a far less pension given than the local medical officer has already awarded. I do not know of any instance yet where a man has not had his pension cut down from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Is that done as a general rule?

Mr. WHITTON: Absolutely. The man may be recommended for a two-fifths pension and it will be reduced to one-quarter after reaching Ottawa. We think also that the age of the man whose pension is being fixed should be taken into consideration. A man of 45 years of age, with a wife and large family, is entitled to greater remuneration than a single man of 20.

Mr. PARDEE: Quite so.

Mr. WHITTON: A single man of 20 will hardly have a wife and a large family to support. The incapacity may be the same in both cases, but the older man will have greater responsibilities. Also the older man has not the same facility for learning another occupation.

Mr. PARDEE: What you say is that when you are recommended by the medical board here for a pension it is always reduced at Ottawa?

Mr. WHITTON: Invariably so.

Mr. PARDEE: The applicant for the pension does not appear in Ottawa?

Mr. WHITTON: No, he does not appear in Ottawa. That is why the reduction is unintelligible to me after a certain recommendation has gone forward from here.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Was any explanation asked in any of those cases?

Mr. WHITTON: No, not that I know of.

Mr. LOWERY: Might I mention the thing that has come before our Investigation Committee and been the subject of much discussion. A lot of complications and difficulties arise by reason of there being so many different departments and different sources of administration in regard to the returned soldiers. What we suggest is that there be established some central agency for returned soldiers where we can go and promptly adjust any matter whether connected with pay and allowances, pensions or any other branch of the service, and that some person be there with whom business could be transacted, a returned soldier, possibly, because I think one could be found who has the necessary ability. That would mean we would simply have to go to the one place to adjust any matter which came up. At present such adjustment involves going to four different places. For pay and allowances we have to get into touch with General Logie; in connection with pensions we go to Mr. Crocker, District Pension Officer; in the matter of employment we must consult the Soldiers' Aid Commission. This shows you the number of loose ends that are running about. We consider that these different organizations should be in the same building under an officer thoroughly conversant with the affairs of the returned soldier, whom we could consult.

The CHAIRMAN: Just to make that very clear, because it is an important point: If it is the case of a pension, where do you go?

Mr. LOWERY: To Mr. Crocker, the District Pensions Officer.

The CHAIRMAN: Where is his office.

Mr. LOWERY: 59 Yonge Street.

The CHAIRMAN: If it is a question of pay, where do you have to go?

Mr. LOWERY: To General Logie or right to Ottawa.

The CHAIRMAN: Where do you go when you want to consult General Logie?

Mr. LOWERY: To the Exhibition Camp.

The CHAIRMAN: How far away is that from the first place?

Mr. LOWERY: 25 minutes on the street car.

The CHAIRMAN: Where do you go if you have to deal with a hospital case?

Mr. LOWERY: We have to go to Mr. Riddle, Secretary of the Hospitals Commission.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Where is Mr. Riddle's office?

Mr. LOWERY: No. 1 Queen's Park. These institutions form a triangle, with each one about 25 minutes distant from the other.

The CHAIRMAN: And when you have four different places to visit, how far do you have to travel?

Mr. LOWERY: It takes two thirds of the day and probably more.

Mr. PARDEE: To whom do you go with respect to employment for returned soldiers.

Mr. LOWERY: The Soldiers' Aid Commission.

The CHAIRMAN: And where are your own quarters?

Mr. LOWERY: At the corner of Church and Carleton Streets.

The CHAIRMAN: Is that near any of the places you have alluded to?

Mr. LOWERY: No.

Brigadier-General MASON: Do you have to go to these places to adjust the cases of more than one man?

Mr. LOWERY: Yes, sometimes I have the cases of three or four men at the one time. This is all honorary work, we do not get any pay for it, and it amounts to a lot of trivial expenditure which you hardly feel like putting in a claim for, but which nevertheless in the aggregate makes an inroad into a man's income.

The CHAIRMAN: Have you got to pay rent?

Mr. LOWERY: We have a building which we pay rent for, and in that building there is an office with different comforts for returned soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN: Would you be willing to have an office in combination with these other agencies if they should be put under the one roof?

Mr. LOWERY: As regards a man being under the same roof with all these other agencies and giving his whole time to the work, that man would need a salary.

Mr. PARDEE: Is there sufficient work to justify a man in your position being paid a salary?

Mr. LOWERY: Yes, and it is increasing all the time.

Mr. PARDEE: To what extent is it increasing?

Mr. LOWERY: I have had one night at home in seven weeks, with my wife and family, as a result of doing this work.

[Sergt. A. E. Lowery.]

Mr. PARDEE: How long does it take in the day time.

Mr. LOWERY: In the day time my luncheon hours are taken up, about 60 per cent. Then I call upon other members to assist me. I rely upon them to help me out seeing that my time is taken up with my business.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Were you able to get the attendance of Langtry, the man you spoke of?

Mr. LOWERY: No, sir, the man is sick and unable to come down here.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Will he be able to come to-morrow?

Mr. LOWERY: I do not know. I think not, because he has been sick for some time.

Witnesses discharged.

Brigadier-General MASON: Unfortunately there is in Toronto no permanent military headquarters. The authorities use the exhibition building in the winter and go into camp in the summer. Toronto is very deficient in that respect. There ought to be permanent buildings for headquarters in this district.

The CHAIRMAN: In view of the criticisms that have come from the War Veterans' Association of Toronto in regard to the payment of pensions, I think it would be well to hear Colonel Forbes, paymaster of No. 2 District, and Mr. Crocker of the pensions office. The witnesses now on the stand may, if they have concluded their evidence, stand aside and later on, if there are any questions they would like put we shall be glad to put them.

Brigadier-General MASON: Would it not be well for this committee to make a recommendation that Toronto should be provided with something in the nature of Military Headquarters, incorporating under one roof all the different departments?

The CHAIRMAN: I think that will receive consideration when the committee meets to form its recommendations.

Brigadier-General MASON: I understand that there has been offered free to the Militia Department a suitable building which will only require a small expenditure to put it in proper repair. It might be well for this committee to recommend that this offer be accepted.

Lt.-Col. J. R. FORBES, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you occupy here, Colonel Forbes?—A. Paymaster of Military District No. 2.

Q. And you report directly to whom?—A. The Accountant and Paymaster-General at Ottawa.

Q. Through General Logie?—A. No, sir.

Q. Directly at Ottawa?—A. Directly. Excuse me, that is as regards returns and technical matters.

Q. Will you explain, Colonel Forbes, for the benefit of the Committee, as you know it, the course that is followed when a man who is a casualty over at the front starts on his homeward course, the course with respect to his pay and allowance?—A. The man is returned—

Q. Take him right from the Ypres salient, for example. He becomes a casualty and is sent back to a base hospital.—A. We know nothing of him until he lands here in Canada, and he comes furnished with a last pay certificate.

Q. By whom?—A. By his former unit, or the Chief Paymaster overseas.

Q. Which he brings with him?—A. Yes.

[Lieut.-Col. J. R. Forbes.]

Q. Has he a pay book?—A. Yes, in nearly every case.

Q. Is that universal, that he has his pay book?—A. He should have it.

Q. A good many men have claimed that they do not have it. Why would that happen?—A. A number have come to me and claimed that their pay books have been taken from them when they landed at Quebec. For what reason I do not know.

Q. And not restored?—A. No.

Q. Does that put him at a disadvantage in determining what is coming to him from the department?—A. No, sir.

Q. What has he to show?—A. His last pay certificate.

Q. Is that made up from the pay book?—A. The pay book simply shows the sum of money paid to that man; it does not show a statement of his account.

Q. It is easy, is it not, to calculate what is due him?—A. Yes, you can take a man's pay book and calculate what is due him approximately in Canada.

Q. Now, when a man comes home with only a certificate and no pay book, and claims he has been underpaid $6, how can you satisfy him that that is not the case?—A. I cannot. That man when he comes, if he is brought back here, becomes a casualty, or rather goes to the Hospitals Commission. That man's last pay certificate is forwarded to Headquarters at Ottawa, his account is adjusted there, and a fresh last pay certificate is forwarded to Toronto. He is then taken on the pay list of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Do you find delays in that work at the head office at Ottawa?—A. Well, I would not say that they were very prompt. Of course, they have a large number to handle there.

Q. As an actual fact, are delays frequent?—A. Yes, sometimes.

Q. In respect to these casualties?—A. Yes, sometimes.

Q. And are disagreements with the men as to the amount frequent?—A. Not very; we find very few complaints.

Q. Supposing a returned soldier is discharged and he feels that he has not received the right amount, who does he go to for rectification?—A. Well, complaints have been made to me. Whether these are all the cases I cannot say. I have written to Headquarters asking that the matter be gone into in those cases.

Q. Do you, or does any officer under you, make it a specialty to be at the disposal of the returned soldier who regards his pay sheet as defective?—A. Certainly, we are always there.

Q. Where is your office?—A. At the Exhibition Grounds for the present.

Q. That is a long way from the discharge depots here, is it not?—A. The discharge depot here?

Q. A man is discharged from the Spadina Hospital, let us say?—A. Well, we would not handle him, he would come under the Hospitals Commission, he would receive his discharge and his pay through the Military Hospitals Commission.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. Where are you to be found at exhibition time, in the summer?—A. Sometimes at Niagara Camp, sometimes at Camp Borden.

Q. And a man has to go there to hunt you up? (No answer.)

By the Chairman:

Q. Are casualties paid off by you?—A. No, there is a casualty paymaster dealing with that matter all the time.

Q. Then we are examining the wrong man. I want to know about the payment of returned soldier.—A. I can tell you something about it.

Q. Who is the man primarily responsible for the adjustment of the account of the returned soldier when he is discharged?—A. The casualty paymaster.

Q. Who is he in this district?—A. Capt. L. W. Nurse, to be found at the Exhibition Grounds, either he or the paymaster of the Military Hospitals Commission, "D" Unit, at No. 1 Queens Park.

[Lieut.-Col. J. R. Forbes.]

Q. Well, I do not wonder that the returned soldier gets mixed up. Now, supposing I was discharged from Spadina Hospital today, and felt that I had a grievance in the matter of my pay, who would I go to, to get it adjusted?—A. To your own paymaster, the paymaster of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Who is that?—A. Lieut. M. A. Chadwick.

Q. So there are three paymasters? Am I right? Yourself, Capt. Nurse and Lieut. Chadwick?—A. I am the district paymaster, and I supply these officers with their funds.

Q. You supply Capt. Nurse and Lieut. Chadwick with the funds, and they pay them out?—A. They distribute them.

Q. Which belongs to the returned soldier particularly, Lieut. Chadwick?—A. Yes. The casualty paymaster here deals mostly with men not physically fit to go overseas. These are transferred from their units before going overseas to the casualty paymaster.

Q. They are not returned soldiers, they are camp cases.—A. Practically camp cases.

Q. Who is the man that settles up and gives the final cheque to the returned soldier when he is dismissed?—A. Lieut. Chadwick.

Q. Is it to him that they should apply, if they are not satisfied with the amount they get?—A. They should. Again, on the other hand, I can give you a little information.

Q. We will be glad of anything you can tell us.—A. Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men come from overseas on leave, sick leave or perhaps to recover from wounds, or maybe they have been over there for a couple of years and have a few weeks leave. They come over here, and bring their last pay certificate with them.

Q. When they are on leave?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Does the last pay certificate show the balance due them?—A. It shows the date up to which they were paid inclusive.

Q. From that certificate can you ascertain what their balance is on a given date here?—A. To the cent. If they are in need of money, they can come to me and I give them a cheque for advances on account of amounts due them.

By the Chairman:

Q. On account?—A. On account, inside of five minutes.

Q. You enter that advance on their certificate?—A. Yes.

Q. Like a letter of credit when one is travelling in Europe?—A. Practically the same. If in any other district, they can do the same thing, it is just like a letter of credit. It is the same way with the non-commissioned officer and man. He has his pay book and last pay certificate and we enter on these any advances we make. If these officers, non-commissioned officers and men are not able to return, we recover these last pay certificates and pay books from them, send them to the Paymaster General, who adjusts their accounts in Ottawa and settles up with them.

Q. In final settlement to the date of discharge?—A. Yes.

Q. And for fifteen days more, or do they get paid that beyond the day of discharge?—A. I think so, I am not quite sure.

Q. Does the pay book go back to the man?—A. I do not think they send the pay book back.

Q. What evidence has the man on which to dispute the account, if he is not satisfied with what he receives; he has given up his pay book?—A. I will not be sure whether they send the pay book back or not. I have had various cheques come to me to be passed to various non-commissioned officers and men in settlement of their account, without any pay book.

Q. Do you think any detriment would be done to the service if the man, after his discharge, were given back his pay book, as a memento or as a record of what he had received.—A. Not at all.

[Lieut.-Col. J. R. Forbes.]

Q. There is no special reason why it should remain with the Government?—A. None at all.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. At the same time is it not possible that a discharged soldier can get a copy of his account if he desires it?—A. Yes, it might take a little time and trouble to get it, but it could be got.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. If a man wanted a statement of account, would he get it as a matter of course?—A. Yes, I would think so. If anybody came to me and wanted anything like that, I would write to Ottawa for it.

Q. And you have had occasion to do that?—A. Not for a man's full account, but I have had occasion for a statement of account covering, say, a certain number of months, or perhaps a year, something like that.

Q. And that statement was given you without any trouble?—A. That statement was given without any trouble, yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. What do you think of this idea that has been recently suggested, that there should be some central place in Toronto where representatives of all these services could be found under one roof, so that a man could be certain to get his case dealt with by some one in authority at that one place?—A. I think that is a good idea.

Q. You think that would be in the interest of the returned soldiers as well as of the department?—A. In the interests of the returned soldiers and the department.

Witness discharged.

Mr. JAMES H. CROCKER called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are, I understand, the Toronto representative of the Pensions Board of Canada?—A. Yes.

Q. When were you appointed?—A. In January of this year.

Q. Were you at the front yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your appointment came from Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you any experience prior to your appointment in the matter of pensions?—A. Indirectly with the Government, through the Patriotic Fund.

Q. You had considerable experience in Toronto in connection with that fund?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Prior to your appointment, in what business were you engaged?—A. In the banking business.

Q. What banks were you connected with?—A. The Bank of New Brunswick and the Bank of Toronto.

By the Chairman:

Q. Where is your office?—A. 59 Yonge street.

Q. Is it thoroughly known by all the soldiers, as a result of the steps you have taken, that you have opened an office here on behalf of the Pensions Board? Have you taken steps to notify all the soldiers' institutions?—A. We have.

Q. So that they should all know that the office has been opened?—A. They should all know.

Q. Is your office conveniently situated with reference to the various hospitals used in the city?—A. It is centrally located as far as the city is concerned.

[Mr. James H. Crocker.]

Q. How far is it from the Spadina and from the Bishop Strachan Hospitals?—
A. About ten or fifteen minutes in the car.

Q. And the soldiers in both these institutions know of the opening of your office?—A. I believe orders have been put up to that effect.

Q. Have you put out any posters or sign, anything of that kind?—A. We have written to the authorities of these hospitals to the effect that we have opened an office asking them to put up the posters.

Q. What staff had you in your office?—A. A stenographer and an investigator.

Q. The investigator calling at the homes I suppose?—A. Calling at the homes.

Q. Do you deal with all classes of pension cases including widows and disabled men?—A. Yes.

Q. You deal with all classes?—A. All classes.

Q. And you have a good many men come to see you about their pensions?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you find their principal complaints to be?—A. At the first opening it appeared to be that they could not get a reply from Ottawa; I found that to be on account of the rush of work at Ottawa, due to the lack of staff, but this now has apparently been overcome. Another grievance was the delay in getting their pensions after discharge. That grievance has since been eliminated by continuing the pay and allowances until the pension is awarded.

Q. And until the first cheque comes?—A. Quite so, and the same thing applies in the case of a widow.

Q. Do you think from your experience that Patriotic Fund assistance should be given to families in special cases after the discharge of the man; that the time in which the Patriotic Fund can give assistance should be extended in that way?—A. After discharge.

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, in a few cases.

Q. You think there are some exceptional cases where it will be well for the Patriotic Fund to help the family?—A. Yes. There is one particular case that was drawn to my attention a few days ago, where a man died three weeks after his discharge leaving a wife and a child in very poor circumstances.

Q. Was there nobody to look after them?—A. Nobody at all, they had no money at all, and the funeral expenses were $100; the widow has to go to work earning an average of $6 a week at day work.

Q. Would she be qualified for a pension as a widow?—A. I am taking that question up now. He was over age, and she has lost his discharge papers. I called on her last Saturday, but as yet I have been unable to trace the case very far.

Q. Your principal trouble has been in tardiness of adjustment?—A. Yes.

Q. How many cases have you at present in which complaint has been made to you of delay in adjustment at Ottawa?—A. I have not any record.

Q. Do you suppose you have twenty?—A. Yes, all of that; I will probably have list of about fifty cases.

Q. Of which complaint is made and you have not yet got adjusted?—A. No, would not say they are not adjusted, but I have that number altogether.

Q. How many pending cases have you?—A. At the present time, I would not have probably more than a dozen cases pending.

Q. How long have these cases been pending? What delay has there been in connection with these cases; have any of them been pending for a month?—A. Yes, some of them possibly for a month.

Q. I wish you would file with this committee a list of those cases which have been pending a month or more. We would like to see what delays there have been in adjusting these cases.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Before the pension is granted does that investigator look into the facts cited by the soldier and try and verify them or discredit them in any way?—A. The Inve tigating Department is employed more in the case of dependents of a soldier that has been killed.

[M. James H. Crocker.]

Q. To find how many there are?—A. Quite so, and assist them in sending forward any paper. The office acts more as an information office in that respect.

Q. Does the investigator try to go into the facts and investigate whether the soldier is shamming, or anything of that kind?—A. As yet we have not had occasion to.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Who is your investigator?—A. Mrs. Lawson.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Her occupation mainly is to find out how many dependents there are?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Are you appointed by the Patriotic Fund for this work?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. What particular district do you cover in your operation, or are you confined to any particular area?—A. Well, we will be eventually, but it has not been definitely decided yet.

Q. You are free to adjust all claims that come before you, no matter what part of the province they come from?—A. Quite so, at the present time.

Q. Are there any other adjusting officers in connection with the Board in Ontario—in Western Ontario, for instance?—A. There is an office in London which was recently opened.

Q. How recently?—A. Some time in February, I believe.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. What is the expense attending the running of your office, your own salary, your investigator's salary, your stenographer's salary—your total expenses per month?—A. About $275 a month.

Q. That includes everything?—A. That includes everything.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have never been in active service.—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you try to enlist?—A. I did.

Q. And were turned down as medically unfit?—A. Medically unfit.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you hear any complaints as to the grades of pension being 20 per cent instead of 10 per cent?—A. Well, I have not had any direct complaint; I have had suggestions that there should be some intermediate.

By the Chairman:

Q. Just for the benefit of the committee, can you tell us how many agencies there are here in Toronto that are endeavouring in one way or another to help the returned soldier or his family? We know of the Hospitals Commission, the Soldiers' Aid Commission of the Province, the Pensions Board, the Patriotic Fund, the Great War Veterans Association; now, how many more are there? Are there not khaki leagues, the I. O. D. E. (the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire), and a lot of other organizations as well?—A. There are a lot. I don't know whether they take so much interest in the returned soldier, but I think the most of them are interested in the dependents and the soldiers who are at the front.

Q. What we had in mind was to ascertain what co-ordination there was between these various bodies to prevent overlapping?—A. As far as returned soldiers are concerned, I think what you have mentioned would fairly cover it.

[Mr. James H. Crocker.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. That is, if you have one common office where every soldier could take every complaint he had, there could not be any overlapping because they would all go through the same conduit pipe?—A. Yes, I see.

Q. What is your opinion as to the grading of the pensions into tenths instead of fifths?—A. Well, in the case of anything under 20 per cent my personal opinion is that there should be some sort of a permanent arrangement.

Q. That is, a man 19 per cent is entitled to some permanency as well as the man who has 21 per cent of injury?—A. My personal opinion would be so.

Q. What is the opinion of those whom you have met—returned soldiers?—A. Off-hand I have not had any direct complaint regarding that point either; I don't remember.

Q. You have not been long enough on the job yet?—A. No, but so far the number of complaints I have had, I have always found some good cause for the delay. The main complaints, I believe, have been greatly eliminated by the recent Orders in Council.

Q. That is, the hiatus between the pay and the pension?—A. Yes.

Witness discharged.

Mr. L. E. LOWMAN, representing Oxford County Returned Soldiers' Association, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand you represent the Oxford County Returned Soldiers' Association?—A. Yes, and I am secretary of the Soldiers' Aid Commission for the district as well.

Q. You were good enough to come here yesterday and to-day, so you have heard the general run of the testimony; we will leave it to yourself to add what you think will be helpful to this committee.—A. My chief trouble has been with employment after the men are discharged.

Q. You come from Woodstock, I suppose?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. How many men enlisted in your county?—A. I couldn't tell you. I find that the manufacturers of Woodstock are willing to help as far as ever they can, but it appears to me that when they take a man who is not perfectly fit physically and give him a job and pay him the rate of wages that another man who is physically fit is getting that that returned soldier is getting charity, and I don't believe that it will last very long after the war, and there will be considerable trouble, because now only a few men are coming home and the employers are taking them, and it is a matter of charity in lots of cases, so that when a great number come back the employers won't be so willing to do it, and you will have considerable trouble.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you mean by that that the men do not render service equal to the value they receive?—A. In lots of cases.

Q. Less efficient?—A. Less efficient.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are they going back to farm?—A. No, they won't go. I had seventy men return to Oxford county, some of them had worked on farms previously, and not one of them has returned.

Q. To what do you attribute that?—A. I think the men have been used to practically seeing life for some considerable time, and they don't like the quietness of the farms afterwards.

[Mr. L. E. Lowman.]

Q. Don't they find farm life a paying one?—A. I think the hours are too long for them, and they have not got enough excitement.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I understand that in the cases of large numbers of men returned the employers absorb them in their industries?—A. I am certain of it.

Q. And you attribute to the fact that possibly they do not get sufficient for what they have been through, their indisposition to go on farms?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your experience has been entirely with men who are no longer fit for military service?—A. Yes; a man is not discharged when he is fit.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You would hardly be warranted in coming to a general conclusion when you are dealing only with disabled men; or do you mean to refer to the large number of disabled men?—A. Well, most of the men that come back are affected in some way. Take for instance a man I had back last week; he was a piano finisher by trade previous to enlistment. He was gassed out in France. When he returned he was advised by the doctors to keep away from varnishes and turpentine and things of that sort. I found that previous to enlistment he was earning $2.75 a day. He was awarded a pension of $8 a month, and the best job I could get him was in a shell factory at $2 a day.

By the Chairman:

Q. Was he a married man?—A. Yes, two children.

Q. Formerly lived in Woodstock?—A. Yes.

Q. Consequently wanted to engage in Woodstock?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that was lack of appreciation on the part of the manufacturers or lack of lucrative positions in Woodstock?—A. I do not know. My suggestion would be that a committee be appointed in each district, similar to the Soldiers' Aid Commission, to be represented in each district by a committee; that there should be some returned soldiers on that committee and that that committee have power in a commercial capacity to estimate the disability of that man, and for a certain period, say from six months to a year, that that man be granted a certain amount of money on top of his pay until he is properly re-instated in the commercial world.

Q. If he has been discharged with a pension, he already receives?—A. This man I was speaking of was getting $2.75 before enlistment, and he is getting $2 a day now and a pension. The majority of my work has been confined to Woodstock up to the present time.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Do you not think there are too many organizations? Do you not think it would be better in the hands of one organization?—A. I think it would make it quite a bit easier.

Q. And make it better for all the soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. And that association would have a secretary, like yourself, who had been overseas, and would be composed of representatives from all the municipalities and towns and returned soldiers. Do you think you would get better results?—A. I think you would have an ideal committee if you had the money to spend.

Q. There are too many organizations now performing the same work?—A. Yes, they are overlapping.

Q. And there is no co-relation of effort. They do not relate the efforts of one body to the other?—A. No, that is the real trouble.

[Mr. L. E. Lowman,]

Q. And in your view the only way to accomplish anything for the benefit of the men is to have a central organization, everybody represented, and all exerting themselves in an endeavour to procure work for the men?—A. Yes.

Q. Employment, help, pay and everything in one association?—A. Yes, I think it is the only way.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are the secretary of the Soldiers' Aid Commission for Oxford county?—A. Yes.

Q. And likewise of the returned soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. So that you really are the point of unification?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any committee to back you up? Have you any local committee in Oxford county?—A. Yes, there is a committee composed of the mayor and six other prominent citizens of Woodstock.

Q. Are they active in helping you?—A. No.

Q. They leave it to you?—A. They have agreed to leave the work entirely to the Returned Soldiers' Association which was doing it for six or eight months previous to the time the association came there.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. How long since the branch of the Returned Soldiers' Aid Association was established there?—A. Not more than seven or eight weeks, I think.

Q. When men are returned home do you receive word from headquarters that these men are about to arrive?—A. No. The Toronto Branch of the Ontario Returned Soldiers Association promised to inform me, but it is hard to keep track of them.

Q. Very often there is no one to receive them and not having received an enthusiastic reception at the port of landing, after arriving home there is no one to receive them?—A. No.

Q. They feel the matter keenly?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. In the case of casualties, how does the news reach the family?—A. It goes to the wife.

Q. Not through you?—A. No.

Q. Do you not think it would be better to have the news sent to some one in the locality?—A. There is no doubt about that.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Have you known any cases where the news was sent at midnight?—A. No.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. It is supposed to be sent before midnight?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you know how many of the men who came from Oxford county came from the farm originally?—A. I do not know.

Q. There may not have been any who came from the farm?—A. Oh, there was some.

Q. But none of them wanted to go back on the land?—A. No.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. As a matter of fact have not a number of men returned to various parts of the county who have not reported to you?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Take those from Ingersoll?—A. There is quite a number in Ingersoll, but they have a separate association of their own in Ingersoll.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Oxford is an ideal farming county?—A. Yes.

[Mr. L. E. Lowman.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Have any of your returned men been given employment in any official position in the county?—A. One has a position in the county jail.

Q. Do you find there are a number of men disabled and not able to do work?—A. Quite a number of men are taken sick after they are discharged, not badly sick, but have to lay up two or three days at a time.

Q. What do you do in their case?—A. The association lends them money.

Q. And it is repaid?—A. If possible, but we do not press them for it.

Q. Have you made representations to the Government in regard to the matter?—A. No. There are only two or three anyway.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Have you any suggestions to offer with regard to the matter of assistance to the association? You have to finance it yourself at the present time. Have you applied to the Provincial or Federal Government? Do you consider that you ought to receive some assistance from the Provincial Soldiers' Aid Commission?—A. Oh, I think so. I have been able to do the work myself and have had lots of time to spare in the day time, but I think the man in charge of that work in Woodstock should be paid a salary. It takes me about 8 hours a day. I have to keep steadily at it for 8 hours every day of the week. In fact those are my office hours.

Q. Do you see anything to prevent a notice being sent to some one in authority in the various towns and villages throughout the country when soldiers are returning? Would it not create a better feeling on the part of the returned men if something of that kind were done?—A. It certainly would.

Q. How many returned soldiers are there in the county?—A. About seventy-five.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What was your occupation previous to enlisting?—A. I was a restaurant-keeper.

Q. What is your opinion about the desirability and feasibility of returned soldiers going on the land?—A. They do not seem to want to go on the land.

Q. Do you think they should go? Do you think there is an opening there to make a profitable and satisfactory living?—A. I should think probably some of them would prefer to go on the farm if the matter were put to them properly.

Q. Have you put it to them?—A. I have not anything to put at present.

Q. Is there any demand for farm hands in the vicinity of Woodstock?—A. I guess there is quite a bit of demand for farm assistants.

Q. Mr. Sutherland leads us to believe that Oxford is a great farming section and that there is quite a demand for farm help.—A. There is quite a demand for farm labour but the men will not go to work on farms. Some of them would take farms of their own if that were possible, and if the scheme were developed in the right way.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would they take them in the North country?—A. I don't think so.

Q. They would want ready-made farms in old-fashioned settlements?—A. We have had one or two gentlemen address the returned soldiers on the subject of farms in the North country and they have not given the boys a very good opinion of that country. As a matter of fact they tell me they would be eaten up with sand flies in summer and frozen in the winter.

Witness discharged.

The CHAIRMAN: There are four witnesses present from Winnipeg. We would like to hear first from Mr. Pearce, Secretary of the Returned Soldiers Manitoba Commission.

Mr. A. PEARCE, Winnipeg, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand you are the Secretary of the Provincial Association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That looks after the interests of the returned soldiers in Manitoba?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you incorporated by charter of the Provincial Government?—A. No, sir, through an Order in Council.

Q. Does the Order in Council create a Committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are the members of that Committee?—A. Sir Daniel MacMillan, Mr. A. M. Nanton, Mr. R. W. Waugh, Mr. J. H. Ashdown, Mr. G. V. Hastings, Mr. G. W. Allan, K.C., and Mr. J. S. Wilmot of Brandon. There are also two members who are ex-officio of the Returned Soldiers' Association, T. H. Hooper and F. J. Baker—and the Manitoba Representative of the Military Hospitals Commission, Lt.-Col. C. W. Rowley.

Q. Is there any representative on the Committee of the Great War Veterans' Association?—A. No, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What is the name of your association?—A. The Returned Soldiers Manitoba Commission.

By the Chairman:

Q. These gentlemen are all leading citizens of standing in the Province of Manitoba?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what your Provincial Association undertakes to do?—Has the Provincial Association taken over the responsibility of finding employment for all returned men and caring for them?—A. It has not taken over, sir, the whole responsibility. It only undertakes as far as is possible to find employment.

Q. Are you the only agency that undertakes to do that in Manitoba?—A. No, sir. The Great War Veterans' Association are to some extent finding employment for returned soldiers also.

Q. That is for members of their own organization?—A. Yes. I might also add that they work in conjunction with myself. If they have a situation vacant and have no man to fill it they immediately call my office up. If we have a situation vacant which we cannot fill, we call them up.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You co-operate in the matter of finding employment?—A. Yes, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you find that two organizations doing the same work are preferable to one?—A. I think that the efforts in regard to employment should be centralized.

Q. You think that one or the other ought to assume the entire duty of finding employment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell us something regarding the situation in Manitoba? How many soldiers have returned from overseas to the province?—A. Up to February 8th, 1,304.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. How many have returned to the city and how many to the country?—A. I cannot give you that information sir. A great many of the men who enlisted at country points, being single men, did not return to those country points where they enlisted, but stayed right in Winnipeg.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is Winnipeg the Distributing Centre for Manitoba?—A. Yes, sir.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

Q. So that all Manitoba men who come back should report at Winnipeg?—A. Every one.

Q. That represents the total number who have returned to Manitoba?—A. To Manitoba.

Q. What disposition has been made of them?—A. 496 are still on the pay roll.

Q. Are they in hospital?—A. No, sir, some are out-patients and some are in the Hospital. I can give you the number in hospital if you wish.

Q. I think that would be advisable.—A. Although I might add that that work really comes under the Military Hospitals Commission.

The CHAIRMAN: If you are able to do so give us information regarding all these activities.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. When you say that a certain number of men are on the pay roll, what do you mean?—A. On the pay roll of the Casualty Department.

By the Chairman:

Q. They are not yet discharged?—A. Not yet discharged.

Q. You do not mean men on the pay roll of your Association?—A. No, sir. Now, in Convalescent Homes and Hospitals, there are about 220 men.

Q. The remainder, I suppose, are out-patients?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you sufficient bed accommodation in Manitoba for all returned soldiers who are active patients?—A. I could not give that information. We have never taken that matter up at all, but it is being dealt with by the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. I am asking you, as an impartial authority who knows the situation, for a frank opinion?—A. We will have, sir, in about a week or ten days' time, accommodation for more men than have come back at the present moment. I am now referring to the Agricultural College buildings, which will be ready for the reception of patients in about a week or ten days—in fact I would not be surprised if the buildings were ready now—and these alone will accommodate 750 men.

Q. So that on or after the 1st of April you will have accommodation for 750 men at least?—A. We will have accommodation, sir, for 900.

Q. Accommodation for 900 men at least?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you consider that ample for present or immediately future needs?—A. Well, I do not know as to that.

Q. I mean as nearly as you can judge from past requirements?—A. Yes, from past requirements.

Q. Please continue to tell us about those men who have come back?—A. Out of the 1,304 who have returned, 812 are men who have returned from France and 492 men who have returned from England.

Q. You do not bother yourself with camp cases?—A. No, sir.

Q. I mean men who have been discharged after a month or two of service in this country?—A. We do not officially look after them, sir. If any of them come in and we have a situation which we are not able to fill with a returned soldier, we give it to them.

Q. The man from overseas has the priority claim?—A. The man from overseas.

Q. Do you make any difference in your treatment between a man who has gone overseas to England and the man who has gone overseas to France?—A. If there is reference we give it to the man who has been to France.

Q. Now, go on with your statistics please?—A. I would like to say that the commission started on January 1, 1916. From that date to February 28, 1917, we found 16 positions.

Q. That was in fourteen months?—A. Yes, sir. I should say that 617 men filled those 916 positions.

Q. On an average you require three positions to suit two men?—A. That is it, sir.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Were those positions all in Winnipeg?—A. No, all over Manitoba, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Now, you can classify those 617 men you placed as to the character of the employment you obtained for them?—A. No, sir, I cannot, not here.

Q. Do you know what proportion of them went onto the land?—A. Not one per cent, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Why?—A. Fortunately, we have had plenty of situations offering in Winnipeg, and the men prefer, I find, to stay around large centres where there is more company, more life, and where there are shorter hours of labour than on farms.

By the Chairman:

Q. What has been your experience with employers as to their attitude towards those returned men?—A. Regarding the salaries they offer, sir?

Q. Yes, their general attitude?—A. Of course, you will always find that some men want men to work for nothing, or under the scale.

Q. You find that attitude in Manitoba also?—A. Yes, sir. As a rule, the positions have been fairly remunerative. They have not really taken into account the extra cost of living in the West.

Q. When giving employment to a man does the employer want to take into account that he is getting a pension?—A. No, sir. As soon as he starts in to mention pension we have nothing whatever to do with him.

Q. You tell him that is none of his business?—A. That is none of his business.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you find employers making any difference in the case of returned men?—A. No, sir, not the large employers. I know that Eaton's in Winnipeg are employing a man with a total disability, and although that man does not do more than one or two hours' work per day he receives the same salary now as prior to enlistment.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Was he previously employed by that firm?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. You heard the representative from Oxford say that these positions often were given from a feeling of charity. Do you think the men whom you have placed have been placed on their merits so that they can hold their positions if that feeling should cool off?—A. Strictly so, sir.

Q. Do you feel that any lessening of sympathy would put these men out of the positions?—A. I do not think so, as long as the men act as they are acting to-day. You will find N.G.'s wherever you go. I went through my reports about two months ago to find out the men who were really no class, and I am pleased to say out of the 617 men there were only two really that I would care to classify as N.G.

Q. Those two men you tried to find employment for over and over again because they had left their jobs on some trivial excuse?—A. Only two out of 617.

Q. That is a splendid record. After you ceased trying to find positions for the two men what did you do with them?—A. I think one ceased because I told him what I thought of him.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Of those 617 men placed by your Commission how many have been placed in public positions, either municipal, provincial or federal, approximately how many?

A. You would not care for me to include those placed in the Post Office during the rush season.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

Q. No.—A. About 70, sir, in the Customs, Post Office and other federal and provincial departments.

Q. From the figures you give us a strange deduction may be drawn. You say that 804 of the men who returned to Manitoba have been to France, and if I remember the figures, 492 have never seen France. That is a large proportion, 33½ per cent never reached France. Why was that?—A. Various causes, flat feet, tubercular trouble.

Q. Mostly unfit?—A. Absolutely all medically unfit to proceed to France.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Were flat feet made an objection to enlistment in Manitoba?—A. I have seen, or rather known, of men being turned down for that. I have been told of a woodsman, strong, healthy, robust, who, on being before the Medical Officer, was turned down on account of flat feet.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. He was a good man?—A. Absolutely the very best manhood that could possibly be.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. I want to find out if I can how much there is in this "back to the land" proposal. I suppose the 617 men were principally those who left with the first contingent?—A. Yes.

Q. Would they be men principally recruited from the city districts?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you be safe in saying that 90 per cent would be recruited from the city districts?—A. Yes, sir. If there was a suitable land scheme adopted whereby the Government would take paternal care of these men, I think 10 per cent of the men would go back to the land.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has the Provincial Government developed any scheme of that character?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you know the number out of the 617 recruited from the farms?—A. No, sir, it is a very hard matter to get it. A man will class himself as a labourer, and that is all his paper shows when he comes back.

Q. You cannot say then that a single man of those 617 had been on the farm before he enlisted?—A. I can say that some of the men to my own knowledge were on farms before they enlisted.

Q. But only six out of 617 have expressed a desire for farming or have gone back onto the land?—A. That is all, sir.

Q. In your opinion do you think that is going to be the proportion all the way through unless some special inducement is made?—A. I honestly think so, sir.

Q. I see. Have the men in any way intimated what kind of inducement they would require in order to go back on the land?—A. They are talking of financial assistance all the time.

Q. In what way?—A. The Government either making them a grant or furnishing the money for them to buy their homes and to erect their buildings and seed, and to buy stock, horses and implements.

By Brigadier-General Mason:

Q. In other words, present them with an outfit?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Give them the land and a complete outfit, do they want these out and out or is a loan to be repaid?—A. No, sir, a loan, financial assistance.

Q. To be repaid at some rate of interest?—A. Yes.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Even those who have had no previous experience as farmers want these inducements?—A. I have had several of those, sir, making inquiries.

Q. Would you advise putting men on the farms who had no previous experience?—A. Decidedly not. I mentioned the Government taking a paternal care of the men; in any land scheme it seems to me there would necessarily have to be a distinction drawn between a man who is a qualified farmer and a man who has not been on the land before. You could not treat them on the same basis.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. Have you an agricultural college in Manitoba?—A. Yes, sir, a very fine one.

Q. So you have all the facilities to give returned soldiers agricultural instruction before putting them on the land if they require it?—A. Yes.

Q. Has that fact ever been brought to the notice of the returned soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. And notwithstanding that they do not care about it?—A. Well, they want to know what will be the use of their taking that course without—

Q. Without any capital?—A.—without some scheme being evolved whereby they can make a success of it.

Q. You do not know whether your Government have any such scheme in contemplation?—A. I cannot answer, sir.

Q. In this province, I think, and in New Brunswick, there is no land legislation for returned soldiers specially, but there are inducements for any one desiring to take up land. You do not know whether your Government has undertaken, or intends to undertake, anything of that kind?—A. No, I believe the Rural Credit Bill is under consideration.

Q. You spoke just now of the large number of soldiers that you have looked after, who have never gone to the front, and spoke of them all as rejected men. Did not some of these cases occur on account of accident or illness contracted in camp during training? That is, healthy men became disabled on account of accident or illness contracted in camp?—A. Yes, sir. There is a large number included in those figures.

Q. Have you any idea of the proportion of men that will come under that class?—A. No, sir, but I would say there would be about 40 per cent.

Q. So that about 40 per cent of them would not be classed under medical rejects but would be cases of illness contracted during training, etc.?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have, in your capacity, a great deal to do with the departments at Ottawa, have you not?—A. Yes.

Q. What experience have you had in getting matters rectified?—A. Regarding any particular branch?

Q. Regarding any matters affecting the welfare of the soldiers. Naturally when a returned soldier comes to you looking for employment or anything of that kind, if there is any other service you can render him, you do it?—A. Yes.

Q. And you undertake to straighten things out for him if you can?—A. Naturally we are practically a clearing house for the whole of the man's troubles.

Q. Tell us about these troubles, what they are, and how many of them you have handled?—A. The greatest trouble we had was the non-arrival of the last pay certificate, it would sometimes take a month or six weeks after the man's arrival home before his cheque came there. When the men arrived back in Canada it seems to me that there should not be that unnecessary delay.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

Q. When a man arrives back in Canada, discharged, he brings his pay certificate back with him?—A. His pay sheets and papers are supposed to come back with him.

Q. Do many men arrive in Manitoba without those papers?—A. Those papers are sent back on the ship with him, they go direct to Ottawa.

Q. Does his last pay certificate go to Ottawa?—A. That goes on to Ottawa.

Q. And do the men arrive in Manitoba without their pay book?—A. In the case of a Class I man, his cheque is generally given to him.

Q. That is because he is discharged?—A. Yes, but in the case of Class II and Class III men, their pay certificates have been held up.

Q. It does not make much difference to the Class II men, because you put them in hospital as soon as they arrive?—A. But a good many of them are married men.

Q. But he has the Patriotic Fund?—A. The Patriotic Fund, as soon as a man arrives back, cuts him off the list. If he is still in Class II, they claim because he is in receipt of 60 cents a day as subsistence it should not cut him off the list.

Q. That is a case where the man is an out-patient, but if he is sent to the Hospital?—A. On two occasions I have gone to the Patriotic Fund and asked that he be reinstated.

Q. The man who is an out-patient gets certain allowances which total $71 a month, for the man and his wife without children. Is $71 a month too little for him to subsist on?—A. Prior to that time the man's wife was receiving more than that when he was away.

Q. She was receiving more than that from all sources?—A. From the Patriotic Fund, and Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance.

Q. But should he suffer any hardship on $71 a month?—A. $71 a month does not go very far in the West at the present moment.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. How long has your organization been in existence?—A. Since November, 1915.

Q. And since that time your organization has been engaged in the work?—A. The Returned Soldiers' Association existed prior to the formation of the Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Association.

Q. You are a provincial corporation?—A. Yes.

Q. Authorized by Statute?—A. By Order in Council.

Q. There is a Veterans' Association?—A. Yes.

Q. With different branches?—A. Yes.

Q. That is a voluntary association, not incorporated?—A. The Returned Soldiers' Association is incorporated.

Q. I was struck with the fact the other day that apparently the organizations are not uniting in their efforts to obtain a common purpose?—A. There was a case in which a conflict occurred, the facts in which I am intimately acquainted with. I have handled Private James Laidlaw from the day he returned to Winnipeg, and the treatment he received from the day he came back did not redound to the credit of the Militia Department.

Q. What I want to ask you is this, is it not quite clear that it would be in the interest of the returned soldiers, and of everybody else, if these two organizations could harmonize their efforts in some way?—A. It would be better decidedly. Friction never produces satisfactory results.

Q. And does it not strike you sometimes that there is danger that the multiplicity of organizations has a tendency to produce friction and thereby prevent the best results being obtained. Has not the returned soldier been "exploited" sometimes?—A. We have had several occasions in Winnipeg where the Commission has put its foot down strongly. It would be decidedly better if there were one body dealing entirely with the returned soldiers.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

Q. And the Returned Soldiers' Association is composed entirely of returned soldiers?—A. No, the directors of the association are all civilians.

Q. And the membership is also indiscriminate, returned soldiers and civilians?—A. Yes.

Q. Does it not strike you that some method could be devised by which we could get harmony among all the organizations in Manitoba?—A. Yes, there are only two organizations in Manitoba working along these lines, but we have a large number of local associations who look after the men from their own locality when they return.

Q. But they are not branches of this central organization?—A. No.

Q. Does it not strike you that it should be under central control in Manitoba, if possible, if we are going to get the best results—of course, with branches throughout the entire province?—A. It could hardly pay, because there has to be an element of financial assistance given to the men after their discharge, and also to the widows and children.

Q. One organization surely could do that, with branches throughout the province, to prevent overlapping and duplication all over?—A. The funds that they have have been subscribed by the public, whereas we on the Provincial Government body do not distribute any funds whatever.

Q. That is just what I was going to get at. Your organization has no control over money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Of any kind?—A. Of any kind.

Q. And it cannot render any assistance to the soldier at all?—A. No, sir. The offices of the Returned Soldiers' Association are in my building, and as soon as a man comes into me for transportation or financial assistance I at once turn him over to the Returned Soldiers' Association.

Q. All the directors of whom are civilians?—A. Yes.

Q. And then we have the Great War Veterans' Association, composed wholly of men who have fought in this war?—A. Not wholly, I believe; I believe they take men who have been overseas.

Q. Your observation leads you to conclude that a central effort would be better, would it not?—A. I would like to qualify that and say that the assistance now in force seems to be working, as regards financial assistance to the men.

Q. I am talking of the benefit to the soldiers as a whole, not merely about financial assistance?—A. I hold a rather individual position. As you know, Mr. Bennett, there has been somewhat of a friction there, and I would rather not answer your questions, if you excuse me.

Q. Have you any suggestions to make as to how a case like that of Laidlaw could be dealt with, how difficulties of returned soldiers could be overcome?—A. I may say to the Committee that this is the case of an unfortunate young man who lost his leg at the hip, and who is still without an artificial limb, and who was pensioned on a very small pension, and really could not live for a month on what was given to him the last two or three months before he came back; what have you to say as to what should be done to overcome a case like that? Owing to the change in the Pension Board, in the amount of pensions, such a case could not occur again. He was a married man with three children, with the loss of his left leg from the hip, being sent out onto the streets with the miserable sum of $16 a month, unable to work, sick, having to go into hospital. It was a downright, crying shame.

Q. By whom was that done?—By the Pensions Board?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are there many cases, or is there only one?—A. That is the most flagrant one. We have several cases, not quite so bad.

Q. What are they getting?—A. Since the new regulations have gone in force their pensions have been increased.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

By the Chairman:

Q. You have no cases at present?—A. No.

By Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw):

Q. What is Laidlaw getting now?—A. $50. He is taking vocational training at the Military Hospitals Commission, who augment his monthly allowance by $26; he gets $76.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. He was put in class 4, 40 per cent injury?—A. I don't know what class he was put in.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The new regulations providing that pay shall be continued up to the date of the delivery of the first pension cheque, plus the new pension provision as to local representation, you think have done a great deal to cure the defects that were apparently in the early part of the administration?—A. Will we be guaranteed that that man will not be discharged until the delivery of his pension cheque?

Q. Oh yes; there will be no interval of time when he is not on pay or pension; there is no interval of time on which a man ceases to be on pay until such time as his pension begins; there is no hiatus.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the new Order in Council.

The WITNESS: Why I raised that point was—

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. If the facts are as I have stated, that would seem to overcome the difficulties that you have raised?—A. It would seem to.

Q. If there was no interval of time when pay ceases there would be very little difficulty?—A. There would be very little difficulty.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you find many of your men really dissatisfied by the pensions that have been awarded to them?—A. Yes, a certain few.

Q. What class, particularly?—A. Mostly those that have been discharged with a gratuity.

Q. That is not a pension; I meant in the pension class do you find many really dissatisfied?—A. There are quite a number that have been discharged without any pension, you might say; with a gratuity. I have a case of a man here, a married man with seven children, who was discharged last August with a gratuity of $75.

Q. Is there any objection to giving his name?—A. No; it is Corporal W. Stirling, No. 51440, P.P.C.L.I. After this man was discharged I reported this case to the A.D.M.S., Major Riley, who at once ordered this man's removal to hospital. He was kept in the hospital for six solid weeks, and at the present moment is only able to do a job where there is no responsibility whatever. He is suffering from loss of memory, general lassitude—well, general debility, you might say.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do I understand his pension has been settled?—A. He has no pension.

Q. Do you understand that it is possible to make application to have a man like that reboarded and sent back to the hospital, in which case his pension will be reconsidered?—A. One of the questions I have down on my list was: "Men reboarded, given medical attention; will the new Order in Council be retroactive?" If that new Order in Council is retroactive, then it will take in cases that I have here.

Q. The understanding at present is that if a man's pension has been settled, or a man has been dismissed without pension on the understanding that he is not going to get a pension and he breaks down he has a right to be re-boarded and sent back to the hospital, he has a right to have his case considered again and is entitled to be repensioned?—A. Yes, but will that order be made retroactive?—It was only last week I had to go to the D.O.C. in Winnipeg and apply for the release of a soldier in the Expeditionary Force from Winnipeg to have him come back so as to be able to support a brother, a returned soldier and his wife and mother, simply because the man had been reboarded and operated upon, and for four months has not received a dollar

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. When this man is finally discharged, after having gone back, the matter is over; his pay will run no longer?—A. We have had no definite instructions as to that, and that is the reason I am raising the question so as to get some assurance in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN: When a man breaks down after he is discharged, he can be sent to the hospital and reattested, and he comes back and can receive an allowance, and obtain a benefit from the Patriotic Fund the same as before, and when he has run his second course he comes up again for consideration.

The WITNESS: In reference to reboarding men I would like to pay a tribute to the officer commanding the M.H.C. and the A.D.M.S. In every case when we have asked for a man's reboarding we have had it, and medical attention is given to him at once.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have no complaint to make as to the co-operation of the representatives of the military authorities in that respect?—A. None whatever.

Q. Quite the contrary?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. I understood you to say that you had not endeavoured to find any positions for men on the farms in the West?—A. No, sir. I beg pardon, we have endeavoured to find positions. We have awaiting 50 or 60 positions, ranging from $40 to $50 a month; awaiting on the books for men to fill them.

Q. Do you find the men take kindly to going on the farms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any reason for that at all that you can give?—A. Except simply that whilst there are situations offering in Winnipeg, the men would prefer to take those and stay around the city, where they meet their fellow companions and comrades, and where there is company and life.

Q. Did some of these men who are now taking positions in Winnipeg enlist originally from the farm?—A. I cannot say definitely, because our information does not give us that.

Q. You get no complaints of ill-treatment on the farm?—A. No; there is a general complaint of long hours, but the men who go on the farms must make up their minds they will accept the conditions.

Q. In your opinion are men who have been gassed and that sort of thing desirable men to send on a farm, or do you care to give an opinion on that?—A. I am not a medical man, but I have seen the results of gas, and we have had several deaths of men who have been gassed dying from tubercular trouble, and drawing an analogy, I would say the two were going hand in hand—gas and tubercular trouble.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are there any Provincial Government provisions giving special opportunities for men going on the land in Manitoba?—A. No.

Q. Any talk of passing such legislation?—A. No. I believe our attorney-general was attending the conference here a week ago.

Q. Do the lands generally belong to the province or the Dominion?—A. To the Dominion.

Q. There is not much land belonging to the province to be disposed of?—A. No.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

Q. It would be a Dominion project?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think the talk about the free farms and that sort of thing has caused the returned soldiers to hold back from agricultural employment, waiting for other terms?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Just along that line about the lack of interest in farm work on the part of the returned soldier, would you attribute it to unsettled conditions of the men who have taken an active part in the war, the war still being unfinished, and their having an intense desire to keep in close touch with events as they occur for instance at the present time, to know almost to the minute or the hour what is happening at the front? Do you think that has anything to do with it?—A. I do not; because the men do not seem to want to talk about what they have seen and gone through. Their whole idea seems to be to forget it and get away from it.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you know of any indiscriminate or unauthorized appeals for money on behalf of those who should not be soliciting?—A. Yes. As I said before, we have had to put our foot down several times. In fact I locked one woman up. I went after her and had her arrested myself and took her into the police court.

Q. Do you think there should be some legislation making people register or get some legal authority for doing this?—A. In the city of Winnipeg—I am not speaking for Manitoba—we have a civic charity bureau, that any church or any other society asking for subscriptions must first come and obtain the consent of the Civic Charity Bureau.

Q. That is a splendid idea I think?—A. In fact these business houses of the city do not give any contributions unless the scheme has been endorsed by the Civic Charities Bureau. You will see notices in the stores and banks.

Q. What would you think of a general Dominion law covering the whole Dominion?—A. I would like to see it.

Q. Do you think it would be a good idea?—A. Yes

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is there not a tendency among the younger people of Canada to leave the country and go into the cities? It is not confined to the military class, but generally?—A. I have never yet found it, and I have lived in Manitoba 16 years.

Q. Is there not a movement towards the city from the country?—A. No, sir, not to my own knowledge. I think when the serious problem of demobilization comes into force and we will be crowded out with the men in the city who cannot find employment, perhaps a large proportion of these men who have been used to the country and farm life will go back to the country.

Q. There is a serious shortage of farm labour in Manitoba?—A. Most decidedly, when you know that the wages there are offering to-day are $50 a month and board.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. The wages are better than those paid in town, so far as that goes?—A. Better than those paid in town.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. When many of these men enlisted, was the promise given to them that their jobs would be kept open for them upon their return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you found that promise has been generally kept?—A. It has been kept.

Q. The promise has been well kept no matter what the man's position was in private life?—A. Yes, sir. The C.P.R. sent to my office a notice that they had printed themselves, to this effect: "Any man who worked for this Company prior to enlistment and is desirous of re-entering our employment, will apply to Mr. Gray, Superintendent of Records." That notice has been printed by the C.P.R. and is hung up in my office.

Q. Is there a way by which the returned soldier can post himself exactly as to what the pension regulations are, and the various amendments which have been made from time to time?—Is there any place where he can get documents showing what the state of affairs is?—A. Yes, sir, at the office of the Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission.

By the Chairman:

Q. Which you represent?—A. Which I represent.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you find that the returned soldiers apply for this information? Is the information pretty well disseminated throughout the country?—A. Yes, sir. Up to a short time ago we handled at the office of our Commission at least 75 per cent of the whole of the pensions granted in Winnipeg. Then the Pension Board appointed another gentleman over our heads. I qualify that by a statement that to a large extent we have handed the work over to them, that is, of looking after the pensions for the returned boys.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who now represents the Pensions Board in Winnipeg?—A. Mr. Solandt, Secretary of the Manitoba Patriotic Fund.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Can any man with a grievance, or a fancied grievance, get a hearing?—A. Every time, whether it be man, woman or child.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is Mr. Solandt still connected with the Patriotic Fund?—A. I believe so, sir. There are one or two points more which I would like to raise, if I have your permission. One deals with increase of pension, if you will allow me to discuss that at this meeting.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well, let us hear your views.

The WITNESS: The sum of $32 a month seems totally inadequate to maintain a woman in that Western country.

By the Chairman:

Q. When she has any children, do you mean?—A. Even when she has no children. You must remember that a good many of these men who have given up their lives on the battlefield, or otherwise, during this war, were in good standing. Men who gave up salaries of from $200 to $300 a month. I am giving you facts when I say this: and to ask these women to come down and live on $32 a month, why, it is a sum which will hardly pay for a room. I can tell you of numbers of cases in Winnipeg where men prior to their enlistment had been purchasing houses and had perhaps $1,000 or $1,500 or $2,000 locked up in those houses. Those men have been killed and the money which they invested has gone to the mortgagor, and $32 a month seems a terribly small sum to keep a woman respectable on.

Q. Do you feel that there is any necessity in Canada in view of the differing cost of living in the several provinces, of an organization to take care of widows similar to the Patriotic Fund?—A. That savours too much of charity. I would rather see the pensions increased.

Q. How would you manage to increase the pensions, would you adjust the pensions in accordance with the cost of living as it obtains in the several provinces?—A. I would adjust the pensions according to districts but not according to disablement.

Q. You would adjust the pensions according to the districts?—A. Yes, sir.

[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. But the cost of living would be fluctuating all the time?—A. Or there might be some other solution of the difficulty.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. The payment made is too low for Manitoba, bearing in mind the conditions there?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you say that the payment is too low, bearing in mind Manitoba conditions?—A. Well, I should say for western conditions. I am not alluding to Manitoba particularly, but to the country west of the Great Lakes. Take a payment of $6 a month for a child, and it is insufficient to feed it, let alone buy boots, clothes and school books. Then there is another point: We feel that a widowed mother's pension should be the same as a widow's. At present the rate of payment to the widowed mother is only $24 a month, whereas you give the widow $32. Does the widowed mother, may I ask, eat less than the widow?

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Have you a western man on the Pensions Board?—A. I cannot say, sir.

Q. Do you think it is in the interest of returned soldiers that the Pensions Board should hold meetings periodically in one place at least in every province?—A. No, sir, I would like to see a permanent Pensions Board in a central position.

Q. For instance, the present Pensions Board sits at Ottawa?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would it be to the advantage of the returned soldier that meetings of the Board should be held in Winnipeg, where a man who has a grievance could appear and state his case?—A. That would be better.

Q. Has that been suggested?—A. I don't know that it has.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: The conditions, I understand from your statement, are different in the west from what they are in the east.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you be good enough to continue your observations?—A. I see by the press that the English Government has instituted a new system of pensions, whereby they have graduated a man's pension according to his earning capacity before he enlisted. Under that system a private's pension has been raised from 27s. and 6d. to 75s.

Q. Not for a private?—A. Yes, sir, for a private.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Not that much per week?—A. Yes, sir, I have a cutting here from a newspaper—

The CHAIRMAN: I think I would not put in evidence anything you are not absolutely sure of. A newspaper clipping is hardly evidence which we could accept with regard to British pensions.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Unless you know positively yourself.

The CHAIRMAN: We have written over for a copy of the British Pensions Act, and when we get it we will insert it in the evidence.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Surely it must occur to you that the statement as applicable to pensions to privates is wrong?—A. That is as I read the cutting from the newspaper.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think I would put in a clipping from a newspaper on this side of the Atlantic as evidence. Now, your idea is principally that each man's pension should depend upon what he earned before the war?
[Mr. Albert Pearce.]

The WITNESS: Yes, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Very well, we shall take that as your opinion.—A. Would it be possible, sir, to have an industrial survey made of the whole of the Dominion and obtain the results of that industrial survey.

Mr. BENNETT: That is being done.

The WITNESS: What I am asking is to have the results of that Industrial Survey turned over to the Secretary of the Commission for each province.

Mr. BENNETT: The survey is confidential, otherwise we could not get the information. It may be possible to get a summary of it.

The WITNESS: When the war is over, when the demobilization takes place and we have these men thrown on our hands, it will be quite a problem to get them placed. We have known to our cost that there are thousands of men eligible for military service who have never enlisted or offered their services. Now, if we could have this information we could bring pressure on their employers.

Mr. BENNETT: That information will be available to any province if it is prepared to accept the responsibility, but you will observe the tendency is that the Dominion should accept the whole responsibility.

The WITNESS: I think that is about all I have to say, sir. I wish to thank you very much for your patient hearing.

The CHAIRMAN: And we desire to thank you for coming to appear before us and for the valuable evidence which you have given.

Witness discharged.

The CHAIRMAN: Lieutenant Chadwick is here and has come down at our request to clear up the matter of the pay.

Lieutenant CHADWICK called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you occupy in this city?—A. I am Paymaster to the returned soldiers, sir.

Q. We have had evidence not only here but in other places that men are dissatisfied with the delays and the inaccuracies which occur in connection with their pay. Will you describe please to the Committee how you keep track of what is due a casualty starting from the time, if you can, when he is wounded?—A. I have not had any experience in an overseas pay office, therefore I cannot start from there. I can start from the time the account is transferred to me from headquarters, Ottawa.

Q. From the time the account is transferred from Ottawa to you?—A. From Ottawa to the local unit.

Q. Do you know anything about the transfer of the account from England to Ottawa?—A. All I know is that the soldier's documents and account, or his last pay certificate, come with the man on the boat he comes to Canada.

Q. In whose custodianship?—A. I cannot say.

Q. In that of the man himself or with the officer accompanying him?—A. Probably the officer accompanying him.

Q. When a man comes to you here in Toronto does he bring with him his last pay certificate?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does he bring with him his pay book?—A. All he has is his pay book.

[Lieut. Chadwick.]

Q. Does he return from overseas with his pay book?—A. Invariably.

Q. What does that show?—A. That shows his account, balanced in England, on the date he sails for Canada. When he arrives at Quebec he is given an advance of about $10 cash.

Q. Is that charged in his pay book?—A. That is charged in his pay book, and when he is transferred to the unit he is going to, an additional cheque of between $50 and $100, which varies according to the amount of the balance to the man's credit, is sent to the unit the man goes to accompanied by his documents.

Q. It is sent from where to whence?—A. From Quebec to the unit where the man goes.

Q. From Quebec to Toronto?—A. Yes, Toronto.

Q. Not from Ottawa to Toronto?—A. No, not from Ottawa. And the man receives that cheque on arrival here.

Q. And what does that represent?—A. That is merely an advance pending the adjustment of the man's account.

Q. Intended to be less than the amount due to the man?—A. Yes, intended to be less than the amount due him.

Q. That is paid him on arrival at Toronto while he is still down as a casualty?—A. Yes.

Q. And undischarged?—A. Undischarged, yes. Class 2. His account goes to Headquarters and the period of time varies from four to six weeks from the time the man arrives in the unit to the time that his account is transferred to me for payment.

Q. That is four to six weeks' time are consumed?—A. From the time the man arrives in Toronto or at his destination.

Q. Before you know just what is due him?—A. Before I have authority to pay him any further money.

Q. Is that delay unnecessarily long?—A. It does seem unnecessarily long.

Q. What are the necessary things that have to be done during that delay?—A. His account goes to Militia Headquarters, Ottawa, and is adjusted by the Accountant General's Department there; assigned pay and separation allowance cease, and are continued when the account is transferred to the casualty paymaster of whichever unit he goes to.

Q. Do you have many complaints from the men regarding their pay and allowances?—A. Yes, we have had some.

Q. And after you investigated them, have you found many instances where the man was wrong?—A. No, very few; they are usually under a misunderstanding.

Q. A misunderstanding that the man would lose by if he did not make complaint?—A. No, in the majority of cases the man has not figured his account out, and he thinks he has more money coming to him than he really has.

Q. Do you take the trouble to figure the account carefully with the man and satisfy him?—A. Whenever I have a case of that kind I have him come in the office, and go over his pay book with him.

Q. Is it well understood in all the military institutions here where discharged soldiers are that when they come forward to be discharged they are entitled to come to you and have full consideration from you in definitely determining the amount that should be paid them?—A. Certainly, every time a man comes to me he gets complete satisfaction.

Q. What happens when you cannot satisfy the man?—A. He has to accept the figures, the figures are right, that is all a man can expect.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is there any one to whom he can appeal if he is dissatisfied?—A. Yes, he can appeal to the officer commanding the Military Hospitals Commission Command, "D" Unit.

[Lieut. Chadwick.]

Q. In this district?—A. Yes.

Q. Have there been any such cases to your knowledge?—A. There may have been one or two, sir, but they are very infrequent.

Q. Do you know if the results were in favour of the men or against them in those cases, to your knowledge? Did those men succeed in their complaint, or were they overruled when they appealed from your decision?—A. Well, the explanation given to the O.C. is that the account is correct. If his account is correct, that is all there is to it.

By the Chairman:

Q. You assume that the account is infallible?—A. The final payment on discharge is made up here.

Q. You assume that the department is infallible. Supposing the man insists upon it that he has not been fairly treated in the matter of pay, is there any attempt to recheck his account in Ottawa or in England to make sure that there has been no mistake? Mistakes sometimes happen, you know.—A. Frequently for past payments, but I was referring to payments computed in this district.

Q. Computed only in this district. I do not suppose we get so many complaints as to just what he has earned after he arrives in Toronto, but about what is owed him while on overseas service, or in hospital abroad. Are such complaints retraced back to the ultimate sources with a view of checking the figures and finding out if there is any mistake?—A. His pay book is taken away from him and a list made and sent to Headquarters with the complaint a man has made, and frequently I get it in writing.

Q. How long does it take Headquarters to investigate?—A. Between two and three months.

Q. In the meantime the man is out of his money?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you suggest any way in which an improvement can be made. We have received, not only here, but at other points, many criticisms from the soldiers about the dilatoriness, and in some cases, the incorrectness of the statement of their pay and allowances. Can you suggest anything to this Committee that we can recommend to the Government whereby there can be an improvement along that line?

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I think one suggestion that would occur to you, Lieutenant, would be to get more men to do the work promptly?—A. That is what I was going to suggest, sir. But, I was thinking of something else to add to it, but I am afraid I cannot.

By the Chairman:

Q. Out with it?—A. There certainly seems to be a lack of swiftness in Ottawa, a lack of dispatch, in Ottawa.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In other words, this L.P.C. goes from Quebec to Headquarters in Ottawa and it takes from four to six weeks to come back to you?—A. That is it.

Mr. Ross: That is absolutely absurd.

Mr. BENNETT: In many instances, owing to the present condition of transatlantic mails, these certificates do not come on the same ship as the men, and delay is caused by that fact. In Ottawa we do not get mail now from the other side for two weeks or longer. That is one explanation that should be borne in mind.

The WITNESS: I have one case of a man back from England for two months, and his last pay certificate did not come with him. That man has applied to me several times for money, and I have not the authority to pay him.

[Lieut. Chadwick.]

By the Chairman:

Q. In the meantime he may be starving?—A. He is receiving treatment in a convalescent home, of course he is not living out. But I always refer these men to the Soldiers' Aid Commission, who advance them money from time to time. I explain the circumstances to them and they advance them a small amount of money.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I suppose the cables are still working. Would you let a man starve to death for the sake of a two-dollar cable bill?—A. I have word from Headquarters that they have cabled, and letters have been written.

Q. Officialism has become played out, the machine has worn down, that is the story, is it not? Speak without your uniform.

The CHAIRMAN: I think we cannot compel the witness to answer that question.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The system wants more electricity?—A. That is it exactly, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: I think you have got us to the bottom of things, Lieutenant. Unless you have something further to add you may retire.

Witness discharged.

Mr. A. C. HAY, President of the Great War Veterans' Association, Winnipeg, and Mr. F. W. LAW, Secretary, Great War Veterans' Association, Winnipeg, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. Mr. Hay, will you as President of the Great War Veterans' Association, Winnipeg, tell us something about the position of that organization and what you undertake to perform?—A. At the beginning, on the return of the men from the front, there was dissatisfaction amongst them from the fact that the civilians have not that sympathy with the returned soldiers that they should have. The consequence was that the returned soldiers originated a movement whereby they could come together, and promote their social welfare, and the friendship that was cemented during the most trying circumstances through the war. In that way, we removed the feeling that when a returned soldier went to a civilian it was made to appear in that he wanted charity. The boys would come to a man who had served alongside of them in the trenches and put their story before him, but they did not want to have civilians digging into their private affairs. Our membership exceeds 700, all returned soldiers; with the exception of one or two that were hit with a Zeppelin when in England, or injured by being kicked by a horse, or something like that, the larger number of our men have been at the front.

Q. You mean they have all been across the channel?—A. They have all been to England, and with the exceptions I have named they have been at the front.

Q. You have been here, I think as an interested listener at some of our sessions, and you know pretty well the kind of evidence that the committee is anxious to secure. We will be very glad if you will tell us now whether you think the treatment now being accorded in Manitoba to returned soldiers could be improved upon?—A. There is one thing about the returned soldier, you have to get in touch with him thoroughly, in order to know him and to know his wants.

[Mr. A. C. Hay.]

Q. That is what we are trying to do here.—A. That is what is not done by civilian bodies. I think that if officers who have returned from this war were kept in these positions where they would come into contact with the returned soldiers, the men knowing that they were officers who had been to the front would have confidence in them and would freely place their needs before them, but the soldier has a strong objection to the civilian probing deeply into his affairs. Then another thing is there are too many slackers employed, and the returned soldiers are not appreciated to the extent of giving them employment in connection with the various patriotic organizations. There are several patriotic organizations in Winnipeg, and I have tried, but failed, to find the first one that has employed a returned soldier. Major Buchanan came to Winnipeg on a visit, and through Mr. Solandt asked for permission to address our meeting one night, for half an hour on the pension scheme. I replied to Mr. Solandt, "We would be only too pleased to have Major Buchanan address our meeting if you will tell me that I can announce or give notice to the members that you intend to employ returned soldiers." His reply was: "I am sorry, the Patriotic Fund is going to handle that." I said to him: "Tell Major Buchanan, officer and gentleman as he is, not to come to address our meeting, if he is not prepared to tell us that returned soldiers will be given the preference on this work."

Q. Who is Major Buchanan?—A. He is an officer, late from the 4th Battalion, 1st Canadian Contingent. He came to Winnipeg to promote the Pensions Board there, and handed over the work of the Pensions Board to the Rev. Mr. Solandt and a couple of civilians and, I understand, that reverend gentleman is still handling the Patriotic Fund and also the Board. Our auditor is a chartered accountant, a man with a Distinguished Conduct Medal, he could do that work, and I could do it myself, I am an accountant, and we have several intellectual men in our association, and they have had no recognition in the way of being placed in positions which they could fill. There seems to be an awful feeling against the returned soldiers.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What you say is that while the people there are generous in giving their money they do not employ the returned soldiers in places for which they are fitted?—A. Yes. Another thing is that these organizations are run by civilians, although there are men who have been to the front who could be employed by them, whereas the secretary of our association and myself have spent night after night, until two in the morning sometimes, trying to help the boys along.

Q. You have, among your 100 members, a large number of men who are of superior education and training?—A. Yes.

Q. Men who have taken professional courses in various walks of life, and who are now occupying positions in which they find no field for their activities?—A. Yes.

Q. And your contention is that these men could find positions in carrying on the work in connection with the various departments, and the pensions, where they would come into contact with the returned soldiers?—A. Yes, and in some places the returned officers were frozen out in some manner.

Mr. LAW: From the D.O.C. down, the medical officers, with only one or two exceptions, are men who have never been overseas and, I think, never intended to go overseas.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would it occur to you that as the pensions have to be paid by the tax-payers, that is by the people of Canada, that any board which should determine how much those pensions should be should be composed of representative citizens of Canada?

Mr. HAY: Do we not come under that head? Are we not citizens of Canada now?

[Mr. A. C. Hay.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Undoubtedly you come under that head?—A. And if every man were doing his share in the war, we would all be returned soldiers, would we not?

Q. But does that answer meet my question? Do you think that the determination of the amount of the pensions should be entirely in the hands of the returned soldiers?—A. Certainly not, there should be co-operation at all times.

Q. I understood you in your testimony so far, you had been rather protesting against the personnel of the various organizations in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. LAW: The Great War Veterans' Association represents over 700 men, and the membership is increasing at the rate of 40 or 50 a week, yet we have not a representative on the Hospitals Association or the Returned Soldiers' Association, which is purely a war-relief body. We have six men on the Returned Soldiers' Association, but they are just there as dummies, and nothing else.

Mr. HAY: I asked the president, if I, as President of the Great War Veterans' Association, could vote, and he said: "Certainly not." I asked him how I could get a vote, and he replied that I could do so by paying $5, which was according to their charter.

Examination of Mr. Hay resumed.

Q. They are an incorporated body; what would happen if they transgressed their Act of incorporation?—A. My point is that money was subscribed for the returned soldiers and that at the very least we had a right to criticise and vote if we did not agree to everything that was going along.

Q. So far, your evidence has consisted mainly in a protest against the personality of the other organizations that are working in Manitoba for returned soldiers?—A. Exactly so.

Q. For example, you speak of Mr. Solandt, have you been acquainted at all with the work of the Patriotic Fund in Manitoba?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know whether it has been satisfactorily performed or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Solandt was connected with the Patriotic Fund for a long time?—A. He is a minister—the Rev. Mr. Solandt.

Q. I admit that might be a handicap, in the judgment of some, but is it not a fact that Mr. Solandt has in connection with the Patriotic Fund given very excellent service?—A. He succeeded Mr. C. Roland. I am not very much in sympathy with the Patriotic Fund.

Q. Do you not think it has been a good thing for the help of the wives and families of the soldiers?—A. My wife and family did not take any help from the Patriotic Fund, because it savors of charity in my opinion.

Q. But in the case of others who did find it necessary to take the benefit of the Patriotic Fund; don't you think it was of value to them?—A. I think if the Government had handled the Patriotic Fund and made the allowances out of the patriotic moneys subscribed by the citizens it would not have savored so much of charity; but when independent people come in and tell you to sell your piano and move into rooms in order to get your $20, that is another matter.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. You would approve of a greater allowance being made by the country?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You mean that the whole country should pay that, and that it should not be done by charity?—A. Yes.

[Mr. A. C. Hay.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Still, you think it is a splendid thing to have men give voluntarily, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. And it has had an excellent effect?—A. Yes, I like to see a man giving a subscription.

Q. These separation allowances would have to be made double what they were in any country in the world if it were not for what is being done by the Patriotic Fund?—A. Yes, but you understand my point is that I don't approve of it, but I think it is abused in many ways. I can see both for and against it.

Q. And your personal view is against it?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have carried your conviction to the extent that your wife and family have not taken advantage of it?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you be good enough for the time being to waive your objection to officials connected with other organizations in Manitoba, and tell us from the general experience of your organization what you think can be done to improve the lot of returned soldiers, and what other agencies might help?

Mr. LAW: If I may answer that question, there was one point brought up in the evidence yesterday about doctors. Now, the men are willing to take all the risks that are going, but they expect that all other branches of the army are willing to do the same; and the medical services should be of the very best. We ask the Government to get the best doctors available. The point of that is this, that doctors on Boards send men to specialists, thereby acknowledging that they are incompetent themselves to treat the case. When a report is rendered by such a specialist it is usually over-ridden by the Board, or by the Pension Board at Ottawa, who have never seen the man. Now, the specialist says, this man is suffering from a certain thing. He takes this report to the Medical Board, say at Winnipeg; the Board sits on it and says, "Tut, tut, nothing doing." They forward their evidence to Ottawa, and Ottawa again decides, in quite a number of cases, to lower whatever the Medical Board at Winnipeg have voted, and those at Ottawa have never seen the man. Now, if there is not some clairvoyancy or something at Ottawa I do not see how they can lower those pensions.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Then you say it is lowered in two ways: first, by the Medical Board in Winnipeg, and then the Pension Board does not accept their finding, and it is lowered again?—A. Yes.

Q. You think if a specialist is employed to investigate that man's case that his recommendation should be followed?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know cases where that thing has occurred?—A. Yes.

Q. Are there many cases of that kind?—A. I might give one right here. A. C. Hay, our president, 8th Battalion, discharged medically unfit, and awarded on January 26, 1916, by an Order in Council, $132 per annum, under the old scale. The document in question said:—

"I was incapacitated, to the extent of one-quarter, from earning a full livelihood."

The injury was described as permanent disability by the Board. Permanent disability—mark that. One year later, on January 16, 1917, he was again boarded, with the result that he was awarded a gratuity of $50, informing him that the pension was discontinued. How could permanent disability ever be applied in the first place if twelve months after he was supposed to be just temporarily disabled?

Q. Whose case is that?—A. This is our own president. He is married, with three children. He cannot follow an occupation, except where he can sit, owing to having bones in his feet broken from being buried in the trench, and being gassed also. I believe he has lost 28 pounds since coming home from the front.

Mr. HAY: The Order in Council speaks as to being wounded, gassed and buried.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: What was your occupation?

Mr. HAY: Accountant.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: How much did you earn a year?

Mr. HAY: I was only working temporarily before going to the front.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: What are you getting now?

Mr. HAY: I am earning the same money now.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: You are getting the same as you did before you left?

Mr. HAY: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Did you get your own position back?

Mr. HAY: Yes, but I had to fight to get it.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Do you work for a private firm?

Mr. HAY: Yes. When I returned I was offered $10 per month less than I was receiving previously and I refused to take it. I contended that as I did not get shot through the head and it was the head they wanted, that I should get the same money. My superior officer made the offer to me as I say of $10 less than I had previously received and I put up an argument. I may say that my superior officer does not feel very kindly towards this war, as he comes from another country than Canada and they are not inclined to fight these people, but in any case he made me this offer, and I argued that as I had not been shot through the head and it was the head they required I was of the same value to them and he asked me to start in and if I made good all right, and I started in.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: How as to those people in the employ of the corporation?—A. They all got back.

The CHAIRMAN: I think we had better allow these gentlemen to leave with the Committee the cases they desire investigated and we will deal with them.

Mr. LAW: Mr. Laidlaw, the man with the leg off, got his transportation down to Toronto two weeks ago this coming Saturday, and this man was without a leg for about 15 months. Once more his transportation was cancelled the day before he was to start, the excuse given was that there were 70 amputation cases in Toronto. If that course is to be kept up there may be 70 cases next month and 70 cases the following month and he will still be without his leg. I say they should give him his leg and let some of these later cases wait. He should not be put off any longer. It is a pity to see a man going through the snow of Winnipeg on two crutches. This man should be attended to at once. We have another case. I will read the letter from the man himself.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Was the attention of the Department drawn to this case?

Mr. LAW: There is a file about the matter which is of considerable dimensions.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Is he still in Winnipeg?

Mr. LAW: Yes, and he will likely be there for some time if things go on in this way.

Mr. BENNETT: I was endeavouring to find some individual responsible for the way this man has been treated, but I have been unable to do so. The man is back or how long do you say?

Mr. LAW: Fifteen months, and they started him at $16 a month.

Mr. BENNETT: The department arranged about the transportation and so on.

Mr. LAW: The man objected to being landed in Halifax with nothing in his pocket and a leg gone.

[Mr. F. W. Law.]

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw): There was a mistake made in that case.

Mr. LAW: There was a young man called Cooper in Winnipeg who got a leg made by the Carson Company.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Did he order it himself?

Mr. LAW: No, it was by the authorities.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Was that the Carson Company in Winnipeg.

Mr. LAW: Yes, I do not like to knock our own townspeople and tradesmen, but this leg creaks when he walks. People know he is coming. The screws fell out of the leg and it came off on the street in Winnipeg. Another time the leg came off and he was quite a distance from the house and the boy had to crawl on his hands and knees in order to get to a house to be taken home. If these are the legs they get in Winnipeg, I think we should get them somewhere else. I think this man's case should be brought down here.

Mr. BENNETT: I think so.

Mr. LAW: The legless men seem to drop into most things. I met a young fellow on the street the other day and he said, "Mr. Law, look at this". It was a mistake of course. He drew out a letter and the letter stated "Please find cheque for $70 and some cents." He said "Look at the cheque." It was made out to H. Barber for $9 and something. That is gross negligence. He waited three months for his cheque, and now perhaps he will have to wait another three months.

Mr. BENNETT: Barber was out $9 and your friend was out $70?

Mr. LAW: Yes. I would like to bring another case before the Committee. In this case the cheque was lost.

The CHAIRMAN: By him?

Mr. LAW: No, in the mails somewhere. I wish to state that I have just received a letter from Ottawa, in which the officials inform me that they have taken up the matter and that if we don't hear from them in two days we will write them again. Now this is over a month ago and the man is still waiting for his cheque. This is from the main office of the Patriotic Fund people in Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: It is not from the Department in Ottawa?

Mr. LAW: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that man on his permanent pension of so much a month?

Mr. LAW: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Then it is perfectly obvious that the matter could be adjusted?

Mr. LAW: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: What would meet the case would be this: if the man at Winnipeg were permitted to make the advance himself and be recouped?

Mr. LAW: That comes back to the old pay system. A man comes back with one two or three hundred dollars credit, and he cannot get any money because the matter is not put through. In three or four weeks he may get a small advance from the paymaster of the Winnipeg District.

The CHAIRMAN: He takes a risk in doing that?

Mr. LAW: Yes. It is the old thing. These old P.C.'s come through in far less time than they do. About the pay books, that is a real and solid complaint. I have asked many of the men, "Have you got your pay book?" And in only one case the man did have his pay book. He said, "I think it is in my other pocket."

The CHAIRMAN: These pay-books are taken from you?

Mr. LAW: Yes, mine was taken at Folkstone.

Mr. HAY: Mine was taken in England, and I went up to draw some money and the man said "You are marked for Canada, you are going to be discharged. I will [Mr. F. W. Law.]

keep your book," and I said, "Can I not get some money? I have a wife and three children." And he says, "You will get some money on the steamer. You will get two pounds."

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): Who took it?

Mr. HAY: The Paymaster at the Canadian Camp at Shorncliffe.

The CHAIRMAN: Did you get it on an L.P.C.?

Mr. HAY: No, I got two pounds from the paymaster at the boat.

The CHAIRMAN: Where did you get more?

Mr. HAY: At Quebec.

The CHAIRMAN: Where did you it? On an L.P.C.?

Mr. HAY: I do not know. I had to sign my name to get it. I was pensioned and discharged.

Mr. LAW: There is no doubt these pay-books are the only receipt we have got, and it is a funny thing to say, but the idea occurs to me, why do they keep your pay-book if they want you to have a receipt for what you have got?

The CHAIRMAN: It tends to create a suspicion in the minds of the men that they are not being treated fairly?

Mr. HAY: Yes, and another matter I want to bring up that may benefit some men not yet back. These men are charged with extra clothing they have not got from the old country. I am speaking of returned soldiers. These sheets are made out in squares, serge trousers, shirts, socks and so on. You sign your name at the bottom and what is to prevent any unscrupulous man from putting in the word socks or anything else he likes? Men have found that they have been charged for things they never got. It has been filled in, and what can the men say? The document is produced and their names signed to it. Then why should they keep the pay-books if there is not something wrong about it?

The CHAIRMAN: Your contention is that it is all jug-handled. All the documents which prove the facts are retained by the Government?

Mr. HAY: Undoubtedly. When I was coming away I had a tunic and it was full of shrapnel holes and I had to get it darned. I was supposed to get a uniform. We always get the uniform, and the man said to me "You have already got a tunic, and all you want now is a pair of trousers." I was entitled to a pair of trousers. My previous experience was that I never got one without the other. I always got the suit.

Mr. LAW: There is another matter regarding the delay in pension. If a pension is delayed for a certain date, say, for one, two or three months, should not this man draw full pay?

The CHAIRMAN: He does now.

Mr. BENNETT: He gets it straight up to the time his pension cheque comes.

The CHAIRMAN: If the man is entitled to pension, his pay and allowances will continue until his first pension cheque comes.

Mr. LAW: I would like to ask you, sir, how long the Government proposes to allow re-attestation to continue after the war?

The CHAIRMAN: I suppose you are referring to the case of a man who is discharged, breaks down subsequently and goes back into hospital again. I do not know that the question has been raised before.

Mr. LAW: The man may perhaps have a wound which may not re-open until the war has been over 12 months.

The CHAIRMAN: What period would you suggest during which the man may be re-attested?

[Mr. F. W. Law.]

Mr. LAW: I think it should be at least two years.

The CHAIRMAN: You think that if a man breaks down within two years of the time of his discharge he should within that time be permitted to be reattested.

Mr. LAW: I think so.

Mr. PARDEE: Is not that a little too long?

Mr. LAW: I do not think so.

Mr. BENNETT: It might not be in the case of men who had been gassed, but is not it too long in the case of men suffering from gunshot wounds?

Mr. LAW: A gunshot wound is a bullet wound.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. But regardless of whether the wound be caused by gunshot or shrapnel.

Mr. LAW: Well, I have the case of a man here (referring to memoranda). He was discharged on the 27th of November and was marked for pension. (Class 3.) The man says: "I have not heard anything regarding same since. I should be glad if you would look into this matter for me and see what can be done."

Mr. HAY: In the case of a man being wounded and wanting to save his limb; The doctor may say to him, I think I had better take your leg off. The man may ask, Is there any possibility of saving that leg? The doctor may say: Yes, I believe there is, but it may be slightly deformed. The man declines the operation. After he gets around on sticks, he naturally thinks the leg will come all right, will get straight in time. Later on he may have a leg with his ankle down on the ground, and he is walking on the side of his foot, and he still has to have sticks because he cannot balance himself. That man may have been in a hurry to get out of the army and to get home, and he refused this operation because he knew it would lay him on his back for a long period. We have a case in Winnipeg where the man would be only too pleased now to have his foot taken off.

By the Chairman:

Q. How long has he been discharged?—A. I could not say, but for some time.

Q. You would like that such cases should have the privilege of going back into hospital, being reattested and if necessary having their legs amputated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think two years would be ample time?—A. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: In the case of the Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk Pacific, and Canadian Pacific Railways the law requires that such operation shall take place within the year. I think two years is a little long.

Mr. LAW: The doctor should certify that the trouble is due to the man's military service.

Mr. BENNETT: Is attributable to his service, and it does not matter whether it is one or two years. In connection with the railways it is the law that the injury must result from the accident.

Examination of Mr. LAW resumed:

The CHAIRMAN: Please proceed, Mr. Law.

Mr. LAW: I have a case here which I would like to bring to your attention. No. 71680, Pte. J. Cummings, 27th Battalion (Reads):—

"I would like you to take up my case in Toronto, in regard to insufficient pension. I had a thorough examination on or about February 15, by Dr. Halpenny, and he sent me to the General Hospital to have an X-ray on my side and leg. The report from the X-ray was, the side negative but numerous pieces of shrapnel in the right leg. I have five large wounds on my side and they give me considerable trouble, the doctor said the pain was caused through the effects of a piece of shrapnel that had penetrated my lung, and he thought the pain would decrease materially but that it would take a long time. Also the muscle of the left forearm is gone and he did not think the arm would ever get much stronger, also part of the tissues of the right leg are torn out, and causes considerable swelling of the leg. My discharge papers from the clearing station at Quebec to Military district No. 10, gave me credit for having 30 shrapnel wounds but in all I had 42. I am in receipt of 8 dollars a month pension for one year from December 27, 1916, till December 31, 1917. Hoping you will look into this case for me and let me know on your return how you succeed."

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What was his disability estimated at, 20 or 40 per cent?—A. I will tell you what pension he is receiving. He says: "I am in receipt of $8 a month pension."

Q. That is 20 per cent

Hon. Mr. Ross: For 42 wounds.

Mr. LAW: That is a case that should be taken up. This man has shrapnel still in his leg, and he has the munificent pension of $8 a month.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is he a married man?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has he children?—A. I do not know.

Q. Because he can get $6 a month for each child if he is in the first three classes.

Mr. HAY: He is not in the first three.

The CHAIRMAN: Then he is under 20 per cent. Have you other cases, Mr. Law. We will have to investigate them.

Mr. LAW: There is the case of a man, No. 420833, Pte. John Campbell, 43rd O.S. Battalion, transferred to 16th Battalion, discharged February 7, 1917: (Reads.)

Complaint was stomach trouble consequent on gas inhalation. No pension. Says often sick and weak. Frequent attacks of coughing which are very weakening accompanied with giddiness. Claims Government should give medical treatment and if necessary some support till completely recovered. Board at Folkestone gave six months. Was discharged in two months.

Either some of those medical officers at Folkestone are incompetent or the officers of this other board are incompetent.

By the Chairman:

Q. That case you cite as a sample where you consider that the successive examinations for pension have differed from one another, and the English and Canadian boards have not agreed?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. How do you know the decisions of the boards?

By the Chairman:

Q. Does a man always know the decision of the board?

Mr. HAY: No, sir, I do not know in my own case to this day.

The CHAIRMAN: How are you able to allege then what the British or the Canadian Board decide on?

Mr. LAW: Sometimes there is a leakage.

The CHAIRMAN: The man tells you himself?

[Mr. F. W. Law.]

Mr. HAY: The fact of having to be before a board in France—all the hospitals I was in were in France. You must go before a board, and they are very strict. I may say the British Tommy has to be all in before he gets his ticket, it is a hard job to get it.

The CHAIRMAN: We are better over here?

Mr. HAY: A little, I will say that much for the Canadians.

Mr. LAW: They do not know what they have got, but I am not in a position to say how they got that knowledge.

Mr. HAY: You get a notice to appear before the pension board, that is how a man first gets to know that he is incapacitated to some extent, other than that it is guess work, unless you have a friend at court. If you have he will let you know something.

Mr. BENNETT: I should think you would always manage to have one.

Mr. HAY: I generally do.

Mr. LAW: There is another case, Pte. G. H. Gouch, 27th Battery, 6th Brigade C.E.F.: (Reads.)

SIR: I was discharged on the third of November, 1916, but my discharge reads from the third of December, 1916. On the third of January, 1917, I received a cheque for $50 as gratuity in lieu of a pension, so on the third of January, 1917, I wrote to the Secretary of the Pensions Board at Ottawa asking permission to be reboarded, but I have not received an answer yet, and since my discharge I have been examined by a private doctor. Enclosed you will find his certificate of my health. During 1916 I had 13 bottles of serum injected in my arm, and when I had had about nine or ten bottles, I asked Captain Cadham when I should begin to feel the benefit of the serum, and he said he did not know, he was just experimenting on me, and it made me worse, I am sure, for I can hardly walk about sometimes. I have been to Captain Macdonald since my discharge (that is the medical officer at Winnipeg) and he said he did not know what was the matter with me. There is two months separation allowance for January and February, 1916, and when my wife wrote about it, they sent word that a pension had been granted from February 11, 1916, and Mr. A. Pearce, Secretary of the Manitoba Hospitals Commission has taken that matter up with them.

That covers his case, as regards a gratuity; he only got a gratuity. I certainly think he is entitled to more than that.

By the Chairman:

Q. You think that under the regulations he is entitled to more than that?—A. I think so. The doctor's certificate states the disease from which he is troubled, and this certificate is given by a man who is a specialist in that treatment who certifies as follows under date of January 29, 1917:—

“DEAR SIR,—In conformity with your request I have this day examined G. H. Gouch, and find that he is suffering from chronic muscular rheumatism, and a pyorrhoeal condition of the teeth.

Yours respectfully,

(Sgd.) FRED. J. HART.”

Then there is another certificate from a doctor in the same case, dated January 27, 1917, as follows:—

G. H. Gouch, Esq.,
1621 William Ave.,
City.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.,—After carefully considering your case I have decided that you are suffering from chronic muscular rheumatism, the focus of infection being possibly in the condition of the teeth or tonsils. I find your heart in a fairly good condition, and certainly not permanently damaged from the rheumatism. You are perfectly justified in seeking help from the Militia Department until such time as you are completely recovered, but I feel certain that time and proper treatment will bring about this result.

Yours fraternally,

(Sgd.) M. F. IRWIN, M.D."

The CHAIRMAN: Is there any other question you would like to bring up?

Mr. LAW: There is the question of a widow's pension, supposing she happens to remarry?

Mr. BENNETT: She loses her pension.

The CHAIRMAN: And gets one year's gratuity.

Mr. LAW: Does not that bring it to a question of barring this woman from maternal comforts for the remainder of her life. If this woman remarries she loses her pension, and my scheme is that in such case the money would revert to the children until these children are able to work for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN: As a matter of fact the pension to the children remains in that case?

Mr. LAW: Yes, but $6 a month is not sufficient and they have been getting the benefit of a part of her pension.

The CHAIRMAN: Your idea is that the mother's pension should go to the children?

Mr. LAW: Or be held in trust for them to give these children, for whom their father died, a start in life.

The CHAIRMAN: As it is now, if I remember rightly, a widower's child gets a larger pension, than is given for the child of a widow, and your idea is that if the woman remarried the children should be regarded as widower's children?

Mr. LAW: That is the idea.

Mr. HAY: It is the children we are fighting for.

Mr. LAW: Put the money in trust for them and, when they are eighteen years of age, we will say, give them a start in life.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Your suggestion is made on the assumption that the mother will not do as much for them after she remarries as she did before.

Mr. LAW: Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Is that a fair assumption? Would she not be better able to care for them after she remarries?

Mr. LAW: There are so many different aspects that are liable to crop up in connection with a matter of that kind. There may be other children come into the family and it is often the case that when the younger ones come in the older ones are pushed out. There is another point I would like to bring up and that is the Federal, Provincial and Municipal authorities are not doing enough for returned soldiers. In the Post Office in the city of Winnipeg, I have seen the Assistant Postmaster, and they say there: "We must keep some experienced men on the staff, we cannot employ returned soldiers to write postal orders, and so forth." Now the postmaster at Brandon, when interviewed on the subject, said just the opposite; he said: "Oh yes, we can employ returned soldiers and women to write postal orders, etc., it does not require much headwork to do that."

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: How many returned soldiers are employed in the Winnipeg Post Office, can you tell us?

Mr. LAW: There are many returned soldiers employed in the post office, but they are given the dirtiest work, sorting dirty, dusty mailbags. The returned soldiers have not a friend in the assistant postmaster at Winnipeg. Then there is another matter in which the Federal, Provincial and Municipal authorities are not doing all that they might do for the returned soldiers. You have vocational training to enable the returned soldier to earn his living, but what is the use of that if you do not find the positions for these men in the provincial and other Government offices after they have gone through the course.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: You know, I suppose, that an Order in Council has been passed giving returned soldiers the preference in appointments in the public service.

Mr. LAW: Yes, but do the officers carry that out? If an amalgamation of the two associations in Winnipeg took place, it would be to the benefit of the returned soldiers, and we would then know what our returned boys are getting, but at the present time we do not know what they are getting in the positions in which they are placed.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: Have you called the attention of the Postmaster General, or the heads of the other departments, to the failure of their officials to carry out the provisions of the Order in Council giving preference to the returned soldiers.

Mr. LAW: It is the assistant postmaster.

Q. You are not asking that men employed in the service should be displaced to make room for the soldiers, but that when vacancies occur the positions should be given to them?—A. Yes, any of those civil positions in the Government, civil servants. We know that there are slackers, and slackers in abundance, in Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa; wherever the Civil Service is there are slackers.

Q. But you admit that you cannot exercise any power of compulsion over one class of men who have a contract with the Crown which cannot be lightly broken, under the Civil Service Act; do you follow me?—A. I am not deep in that Act. I will tell you; due consideration should be shown to the man; he should be treated white. We had a man from the British Army who resided in Canada and paid his taxes here, and he was called up by the British Army, but he came back to Winnipeg and got a job in the Post Office as caretaker, but he has not got the free flat yet.

Q. That is, the janitor's premises he has not yet got?—A. No.

Q. Why not?—A. Well, there is another man there I suppose.

Q. Is he entitled to that as of right?—A. Yes, he was engaged for that.

Q. Why not complain to the Postmaster General?—A. They have done that, and to the Government too. The wife and family of this caretaker still reside in a suite of rooms, but they engaged another caretaker, and this man, instead of getting remuneration in place of that suite of rooms just got the wage without the suite of rooms, and he has to live outside and pay rent and fuel and everything else. The suite of rooms would have been equal to about $30 a month at least.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: I would suggest that you bring those grievances before the head of the Department that is responsible. The policy of the Government is well known, that all the Departments shall make appointments among returned soldiers.

Mr. HAY: But if we were going to take up all these grievances with the different agencies we would have to give a salary in some way. I have an occupation that makes comforts for my wife and children, but I have to give a return for that money. Mr. Law and myself have given our time and help and strength to that work up to this time. We cannot do that, while there are other associations paid by contribution; in fact the biggest part of the contribution in Winnipeg goes to pay the salaries of those associations.

Mr. BENNETT: And your suggestion is a very admirable one that there should be some central authority and some man in charge who would be able to communicate with all the departments and have it maintained without trouble to you men?

Mr. HAY: That is my point.

Mr. LAW: Just one point. We find the men of the west are very much interested in the land scheme. Unfortunately the time at our disposal before coming here was very limited, but there is a large number of men in our association. When these schemes are taken up there will be 50 per cent of these men go out to the farm. There is going to be a land scheme taken up by the men of the prairie provinces, and I think if we can only have time to prepare this land scheme and send it to Ottawa or have a deputation wait on Ottawa with this land scheme it would be very beneficial.

Mr. BENNETT: You might prepare your report on that as soon as possible and send it to Dr. Roche, Minister of Interior.

Mr. LAW: I know Saskatchewan and Alberta are deeply in favour of this land scheme, and one thing must be understood in the land scheme. The land must be close to transportation. You do not want the C. P. R. or other big land companies to have all the land near the railway and put the soldiers in the backwoods.

Mr. BENNETT: You know the only free land in the country is away from the railway. Do not misunderstand that and do not be unfair.

Mr. HAY: Could there not be legislation enacted to make the railways—

Mr. BENNETT: There are between 25 and 30 million acres of land in the three prairie provinces within a radius of 12 or 15 miles of the railroad, but it is being held at a price of approximately $15 at an average by private owners. Apply your common sense to that and let me have your views.

Mr. HAY: I thought perhaps the railways might be built through the cheaper lands.

Mr. BENNETT: This has been alienated from the Crown to the railways and the Hudson's Bay Company, and the problem is how to deal with it.

Mr. LAW: How are we going to benefit returned soldiers by giving them land which is so far from transportation?

Mr. BENNETT: They should not be allowed to go there.

The CHAIRMAN: This Committee has a double reference. The first reference is with respect to the care and treatment of disabled men coming back from month to month, and the second reference is the larger problem of demobilization. We are only dealing with the first problem now, and if you will prepare a statement when we are dealing with the second phase of it we will come to you, or you may come to us.

Mr. BENNETT: The Government has that in hand and measures will be introduced at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. HAY: We had an interview with Mr. Flumerfeldt, ex-Minister of Finance in British Columbia, and he is doing that throughout the province, to ascertain the view of returned soldiers on the land scheme.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Flumerfeldt is a high-minded citizen.

Mr. HAY: Why should he ask the president of the association how many soldiers are willing to go on the land?

Mr. BENNETT: Just in the public interest.

Witnesses discharged.

The Committee adjourned until 10 a.m. to-morrow.

[Mr. F. W. Law.]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS.

CITY HALL, TORONTO,

COUNCIL CHAMBER,

FRIDAY, March 23, 1917.

The Committee met at 10.30 a.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

MEMBERS PRESENT: Sir Herbert Ames, Chairman; Mr. Bennett (Calgary), Mr. McCurdy, Mr. Middlebro, Hon. Mr. Murphy, Mr. Pardee, Mr. Ross (Middlesex), Mr. Sutherland, Commons Committee, and Senator Ross, of the Senate Committee.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the first matter to be taken up by the Committee this morning is a vote of thanks and an expression of appreciation for the facilities gratuitously placed at our disposal by the mayor and corporation of the city of Toronto, and all the courtesies extended to us not only by him, but by other citizens, which have made our stay here so agreeable. The secretary will be good enough to insert in our minutes a resolution to that effect.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of a letter sent to the Chairman by Colonel Marlow, M.D., A.D.M.S., District No. 2, with reference to certain statements made by him when under examination on Wednesday, 21st inst. During the examination Colonel Marlow objected to a question put to him by Mr. Bennett, which was ordered by the Chairman to be expunged from the record. Before retiring Colonel Marlow again made reference to the question and entered certain protests in regard thereto. In his letter, Colonel Marlow asked that his explanations be allowed to remain in the record, notwithstanding the decision to strike out Mr. Bennett's question. The Committee decided that as the Chairman had ruled against the question referred to, and as Mr. Bennett had accepted the ruling and abandoned further examination, the subsequent statements of Col. Marlow could not be permitted to appear.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. JOHN McRAE, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand that you are the treasurer of the Returned Soldiers' Association at Winnipeg?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you kindly correct that designation?—A. Chairman of the Relief Committee.

Q. Of the Returned Soldiers' Association of Winnipeg?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is that a civic committee?—A. No.

By the Chairman:

Q. You might tell us the power under which that Commission was issued and its composition?—A. We received a charter from the Provincial Government on April 19, 1916. It is composed of nine directors.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Did we not have that yesterday?—A. That was the Manitoba Commission you had yesterday.

By the Chairman:

Q. It is composed of whom?—A. Ex-Mayor Waugh, Capt. T. H. Hooper, A. E. Ham, F. J. Baker, George J. Dodd, A. H. Smith, John McRae, J. D. Pratt and L. C. Wilson.

Q. Are any of these gentlemen returned soldiers or representatives of the Returned Soldiers' Association?—A. None.

Q. For what purposes was your organization incorporated and what powers have you?—A. It was organized for the purpose of looking after the returned soldier after he returned to Winnipeg, or, in other words, to take up the work where the Patriotic Fund left off. Perhaps it would be better for me to refer to the last report.

Q. You might file a copy of that with us and it will be incorporated in our report?—A. Briefly, the association was the first one of its kind organized in Canada to take care of and look after the returned soldier. Since its organization branches have been formed in nearly all the towns in the province.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. When was it organized?—A. In April, 1915. The work of this association has been commented on and complimented by the Dominion Government and also by the Military Hospitals Commission. The following will give you an idea of the work performed by this association during the past year (referring to printed documents):—

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: Please omit the parts which are not of importance.

The WITNESS: Very good, sir. The association has distributed, since its organization, over 130 tons of provisions, produce (including 100 cases of eggs), and so on, among the families of returned soldiers and the widows and children of those killed at the front. It has also distributed over 100 tons of coal.

[Mr. John McRae.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Free?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To people who did not pay for it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a rule?—A. Yes, sir. Also 500 cords of wood. In addition to the above, large quantities of clothing and boots and shoes, bedding, etc., have been distributed to needy cases.

Q. Being the families of returned soldiers?—A. Absolutely. We do not deal with any person else. We also bought and distributed at Christmas, 1915, 7½ tons of Christmas fare, such as flour, meat, poultry, fruit, and so forth. There are just a few more points I want to refer to. The Relief Committee, to attend requests for assistance meets every day at noon, and there is not the slightest delay in attending to the wants of those making application. The association has furnished to the returned soldiers at least 150 suits of clothing, 250 suits of underwear and other articles of clothing, etc. It has its own professional nurse and she has made 3,000 visits to returned soldiers and their families, and to the homes of returned soldiers and to find out their conditions and needs. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the Relief Committee makes use of the nurse to investigate cases we do not know of or have no information about.

Q. Do you deal with single men also, or only with married men and their families?—A. Both. We have paid over $500 for drugs, medicine, etc., and with the patriotic assistance of physicians and surgeons, have been able to give medical assistance absolutely free of charge in considerably over 100 cases. At the present time (that was March 12) we have dealt with 211 widows. Since then we have dealt with 244 widows and 275 children.

Q. You are helping them in a manner similar to that used by the Patriotic Fund when the men were at the front?—A. Yes, sir. Our fund has been raised from voluntary contributions only. It has received no grant from any council or government, with the exception of $1,000 from the Provincial Government. Our revenues are raised largely from the sale of these buttons (exhibiting button) which we sell at five dollars each, which constitutes a membership in the association, or its equivalent in cash.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What is inscribed on the button?—A. (Reads) "Returned Soldiers' Association, Winnipeg, Active Member." And at the top here are the figures "17" indicating the year, because we have to change the button each year.

Q. By the use of the words "Returned Soldiers," the impression is left on the mind of a man who does not know anything about it that the person wearing the button is a returned soldier. That person would have about as much right to do that as I have.—A. It only relates to assistance to the returned soldiers.

Q. Yes, but the words "Returned Soldiers" would be interpreted by anybody as that the man who wears the button in his coat is a returned soldier, when as a matter of fact he has paid $5 and got the button without authority.—A. Of course, that mistake could very easily be made.

Q. I should think it could.—A. But you will understand, Mr. Chairman, that when this association was organized only a few men had returned, in fact I do not think the number would exceed half a dozen.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are organized, I suppose, primarily for the relief of the widows and children, and to continue carrying on the work of the Patriotic Fund?—A. No, not necessarily. We saw the necessity for an organization of this kind, because the first two or three men who returned home were in a very serious condition. In fact, one man was found in a box car after he had been there for two or three days. Consequently we deemed it necessary to establish some organization to look after these men. Now, we have various committees, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. John McRae.]

By the Chairman:

Q. I do not think you need to give the names of the members of the committees?

—A. Yes, the finance committee, relief committee, auspices committee, invalids committee.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What amount of funds have you collected to date?—A. The total amount of funds collected from the 18th December, 1915, when we had a proper system of record, was $65,201.60.

Q. Up to what date?—A. Up to March 12, 1917. And the total amount spent during the same period was $47,903.19.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you been able to meet all demands?—A. Yes, sir. There may appear to be a discrepancy there for the simple reason that we have bought Dominion war loans to the extent of $30,000, but the difference comes in the funds that we had on hand when these records began. The institution was organized some time in July or August, and from then up to the 18th December, 1915, there were no proper records kept of just how the money came in. On the 18th December, I took charge of the finance committee's affairs. I am chairman of that committee also.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Did you have $10,000 or $12,000 on hand when you took charge?—A. We must have had.

Q. Have you had cases of public bodies and private persons soliciting subscriptions when the people thought that they were subscribing to your fund and were not?—A. We have had a few cases of people going around soliciting privately with a statement that it was in aid of the Returned Soldiers' Association; but that did not go on very long because we advised the public through the press immediately to call us up or ask for the authority. We allow no person to solicit funds for our association without the authority of the auspices committee.

By the Chairman:

Q. Of what assistance are you to the returned soldier who is not in extremes financially, who is self-respecting, and who simply wants advice or assistance in getting matters straightened out, but does not need coal or vegetables?—A. Well, I cannot say that we are of very much assistance in that way, because there are other organizations that take that matter up, for instance, the Manitoba Commission for Employment. We turn all our cases over to them because their office is in the same building with us, and when men come in about positions we simply turn them over to the Manitoba Commission.

Q. You are, I understand, a relief organization?—A. Pure and simple.

Q. Which takes care of the man who is down and out, or the family of the man who is down and out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you confine your benefactions to those connected with the great war?—A. Absolutely.

Q. Have you any suggestions or recommendations to offer to this committee as to how the treatment of the returned soldier or his dependents can be improved?—A. The matters of complaint, Mr. Chairman, principally deal with, as far as we are concerned, where it affects us financially. The last pay certificate has been one source of great annoyance, we have heard a great deal about the L.P.C. (Last Pay Certificate).

Q. That is that the loan is to be repaid?—A. Yes, anyway we call it a loan and deal with it in that way. When a soldier comes in and says he is up against it, we say to him: "Well what is the matter?" And the reply is "My last certificate has not come." And we immediately call up the paymaster and find out whether the statement is correct, or we send him up a form like this (producing document) which contains the man's name, rank, etc., and ask the paymaster to fill it in. The form is as follows:—

RETURNED SOLDIERS' ASSOCIATION.

Application for Advance.

Date.....

Name.	Rank.	Number.	Battalion.	R.S.A. Remarks.	Paymaster Casualties Remarks.
				"States no L.P.C. Kindly verify."	Certified :— "L. P. C.'s not yet to hand." (Sgd).

Q. That is the way the money is advanced to the man by way of loan?—A. Always, we make it distinctly clear to the man that we are not giving him the money, but that we are lending it to him. But there is a thing that I noticed the other day, when the Hon. Mr. McPherson was giving his evidence, he said that he got an order on the paymaster. We tried that, but the Government would not recognize that order in any way, shape or form. That was the reason Mr. McPherson was able to make that $1,000 go so far.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Have you had any large portion of this money which you advanced by way of loan come back to your association?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you have lost money by that?—A. We have had returned to us since we organized, out of this $47,000—of course you must deduct from that amount the necessary expenses incurred—we have received in returned loans, $209.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What did you say was the total amount of advances?—A. Probably it would amount to $40,000 anyway.

Q. And you got $209 back?—A. We got $209 back.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Did you give the men to understand, when the money was advanced to them, that it was a loan?—A. Absolutely.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. When you tell us that this money was advanced in the nature of a loan, did you tell the man that whilst it was advanced by way of a loan you were not going to press to get it back?—A. Of course we are not going to press the matter. The reason that we made it clear to the man when advancing the money that it is not a gratuity is that we do not want him to think that he is getting something for nothing, because if you give the man that impression you are making a pauper out of him.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Would it not be better to let him know that it was a gratuity at once, rather than to make it by way of a loan, which it was not intended he should pay back?—A. We give him the opportunity of paying it back. The most of these boys that come back, are not fit to assume their former occupation for one reason or another, and another strange thing about it is that there are very few of them who, when they go back to their employment receive the salary that they should in competition with the civilian.

[Mr. John McRae.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many returned soldiers does the total amount of $40,000 represent?—A. It represents advances to 475 soldiers.

By the Chairman:

Q. Out of how many, all told, that have come back?—A. There are probably about 1,000 men.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And 400 of those have got advances of approximately $100 each?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Can you tell us, Mr. Pearce, how many men have come back?

Mr. PEARCE: 1,304, up to February 20.

WITNESS: That is the total number who have come back to Manitoba, but we do not deal with every man who comes back. We do not pretend to take care of those from outside our own city, although we have had to do that in some cases.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Do you give assistance to the widows or dependents?—A. Quite frequently.

Q. And are those advances made in the form of a loan?—A. No.

Q. And those advances are included in the $40,000 to which you have referred?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you then wish to modify your statement with reference to the advances being made to 475 men?—A. The information that I have here is the number of cases we have assisted, whether those cases are widows or not.

Q. You told us a moment ago that the $40,000 was advanced in the form of a loan?—A. Here is a statement from January 20 to February 22, of this year, covering practically a month, evidently brought forward from a previous statement:—

“January 20, Landridge, $10.”

That is cash, there are small items that the widows' committee expended.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. How much money have you disbursed to returned soldiers or their dependents?—A. I have stated that.

Q. $40,000?—A. Approximately it would be $40,000 in round figures, because the total amount that I have here is $47,903, but we have to deduct our expenses out of that.

Q. How much of that went to living men, soldiers, and how much to their families, the families and dependents of those who have come back?—A. Probably $40,000 I should say.

By the Chairman:

Q. Can you divide it?—A. No.

Q. What proportion of your payments go to soldiers, and what proportion to widows and orphans?—A. I should say 90 per cent of it would go to soldiers and their families.

Q. But the families where the man is still living—90 per cent?—A. Yes, there are quite a number of those men that have families of from five to eight children.

Q. Is there anything that is demeaning for a returned soldier to come to your association for assistance?—A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. Have you anything that would offend his susceptibilities if he is a self-respecting man?—A. No, I don't think it.

[Mr. John McRae.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you take from him a note or an I. O. U?—A. No, here is what we take from him, but it is a mere application form, and he signs a receipt for it.

Printed form filed as Exhibit "2."

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything to offer us by way of suggestion for the improvement of the condition of returned soldiers?—A. There are a few cases that have become what we call chronic with us, that is, a man that comes back repeatedly.

Q. What should be done with them?—A. There is just the point. We have got several cases here that are mental defectives—what we call mental defectives. They are unable to hold any position for any length of time. While they are perfectly willing to work they do not appear to be able to concentrate their mind, from shell-shock or other source, and these are the men that something must be done for.

Q. What do you recommend?—A. Well, we have had this matter under discussion several times, and the conclusion we came to was that the very best way to deal with them is to get a tract of land convenient to a railway, or some place handy, give them an acre or half an acre, build their little cottage, and then let the balance of the land be cultivated, under proper supervision, by those men.

Q. A community farm?—A. A community farm.

Q. Would that be carried on by your organization, or by the Manitoba Government?—A. We would not undertake anything like that; it would have to be carried on by the Government, either Provincial or Dominion. That is outside of our jurisdiction altogether.

Q. Has the Manitoba Government taken up that proposition at all?—A. Not yet. I have had a conversation with the Attorney-General there, and he was going to come down, and I was going to submit to him some of these cases, but up to the present he has not come. Several of these cases had been referred to yesterday, so that it will not be necessary for me to repeat them.

Q. Is there anything further you care to add?—A. The cases of amputation were referred to yesterday. I was requested to call the attention of the Committee to that matter. Here is a private letter received from a soldier in Switzerland, evidently interned. One paragraph I wish to refer to, which reads as follows:—

"There is a great deal of discontent among the boys by the local authorities insisting that our boys do certain kinds of work. The boys all think and not without some grounds either that in doing this work they are throwing some civilian out of employment which he really needs, and has always depended on. Most of the people here are dependent on the tourists for a living and since the war started they have been having a pretty rough time. One night last week some of the boys met a civey at the railway station and he was crying because he could not get work. He said that since the soldiers came they do all the work for nothing. The next morning the boys refused to do any work, the result is that 9 are to be sent to a punishment camp for the duration of the war, the remaining 28 are to do from 20 to 30 days' imprisonment in some place at a place called Interlarken. This seems pretty stiff considering all these men are supposed to be invalids. Another reason for their refusing was that the day was very stormy and it was snowing so heavy that the work they did had to be done over again in a few minutes.

The system of discipline here is very unpopular because they punish every one for the actions of a single individual. No doubt a certain amount of work is good for the men but the most think its very much overdone. There are always two sides to a thing, but it is a safe thing to say that 90 per cent of the men are very much disappointed in this place."

That is a matter that might be taken up.

[Mr. John McRae.]

Q. We will see that it is taken up. Have you anything further?—A. I have rather a voluminous correspondence here from Mr. Ewart who has been looking after the interests of the returned men. I think in order to save time I will just file this with you.

Q. Is it a series of letters?—A. Yes, and complaints. I will not take up time with it.

Q. Our secretary will look through it and see if it is of value to us. Have you anything further?—A. I think that is all.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. To put it in concrete form, you are a charitable institution?—A. Absolutely.

Q. For returned soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. And for returned soldiers families?—A. Yes.

Q. And for widows and orphans?—A. Yes.

Q. And the man who comes back and is absolutely no good for anything—you also help him?—A. We do not make any distinction. If that man has been overseas, comes back and is up against it, we help him.

Q. If he has not been overseas do you give him any help at all?—A. Sometimes we have to. That is a matter about which there has been a great deal of discussion. He is not actually a returned soldier. We are supposed to deal with the men who went overseas and not the camp men, and yet we have had camp cases which we had to deal with.

Q. And in that way you have distributed the amount of money that you spoke of, and it practically means that any man that comes to you and signs the application form you have shown here can get an advance of money?—A. Yes.

Q. And as a matter of fact when he gets that money it is a gift?—A. Well to all intents and purposes.

Q. He gives you a receipt?—A. Yes.

Q. And you never expect to get that money back?—A. No.

Q. So that when you tell us it is impressed on the man that it must be paid back, the man is really winking the other eye and knows he is getting something for nothing?—A. Well, he does not know.

Q. You think he has not heard from the others, because that kind of news spreads quickly. All the funds you get from voluntary subscriptions?—A. Yes, and entertainments we put on. We have a company of juveniles that bring us in a lot of money.

Q. And these subscriptions are taken up in Winnipeg?—A. Yes.

Q. Is your committee accountable to the civic body for the expenditure of money or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. To the city council?—A. No, we are responsible to no person.

Q. You are a law unto yourself?—A. Yes, we have a charter and we have to obey the provisions of that charter.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Is your charter a joint stock charter or under the provisions of the Companies' Act?—A. It is under the provisions of the Benevolent Aid Act.

Q. Can you file a copy of your Act of incorporation?—A. I have not it with me.

Q. Will you have one sent to us?—A. Yes.

Q. You can file a copy of that application for aid?—A. Yes.

Q. How many members have you?—A. That would be difficult to say.

Q. I would like to know how many pay five dollars?—A. Probably during 1916 there would be somewhere from ten to twelve hundred who paid $5, but we have only started to sell our 1917 buttons very recently.

Q. How many have you outstanding in 1917?—A. I could not tell you that; less than 500.

Mr. John McRae.]

Q. And they cannot wear a 1916 button after the year 1916 expires, which is not the calendar year?—A. No.

Q. The membership is just for one year?—A. Yes.

Q. Does it not occur to you that an effort should be made to correlate the activities of these societies in some way in Winnipeg? You have men who pay $5 a year wearing a button with Returned Soldiers' Association on it as compared with the Great War Veterans' Association, who have actually been overseas, and with the Provincial Aid Association created by the statutes of the province of Manitoba?—A. There is no provision of the Act, except the Manitoba Commission.

Q. What is your position?—A. I am chairman of the Relief Committee.

Q. What sort of organization does this institution maintain? Does it keep offices open?—A. Yes.

Q. Pays rent?—A. No, we are indebted to the Manitoba Commission for rent and light. We do not pay any rent or light.

Q. You just keep office room in their place?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you pay your secretary?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you pay him?—A. $120 a month.

Q. And is he the treasurer as well?—A. No.

Q. Do you pay the treasurer?—A. No.

Q. He is an honorary treasurer?—A. Yes.

Q. Who takes the applications? The secretary?—A. Yes.

Q. So that it comes down to a purely benevolent charitable institution?—A. Yes.

Q. Maintaining its funds from two sources, first the contributions of the public to the Returned Soldiers' Association—and do you not think many of them believe they are giving it to the returned soldier, when as a matter of fact they are giving it to a civilian institution?—A. I do not think so. I have never heard of any case only one, and that was not to the Returned Soldier, or the Great War Veterans, it was intended for the Army and Navy Veterans but came to us, although when the matter was brought to our attention we immediately made out a cheque and sent it to the proper quarter.

Q. Do the men who get the money from your association always feel that they are under an obligation?—A. No.

Q. Does not this sort of thing lend itself to an effort to exploit the soldier?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Is that not one of the complaints that is now being made by the veterans in Winnipeg?—A. I do not know.

Q. If you are going to give 30 or 40 thousand dollars out of charity to men with an understanding that is not an understanding that they will pay it back. Does it not simply lend itself to an effort to exploit politically and otherwise?—A. It is quite possible, yes.

Q. There have been some complaints about that, have there not?—A. Only where private individuals run about soliciting in the name of the Returned Soldiers' Association.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you think there should be some legislation in the direction of prohibiting or regulating the taking up of subscriptions on behalf of the returned soldiers?—A. I think there is a regulation now, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. For the city of Winnipeg?—A. For the city of Winnipeg and the province.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you think it would be a good thing to make such a regulation applicable to the whole Dominion?—A. I think it would be a good thing, there is not the slightest doubt of that, because we have returned soldiers' jitneys, returned soldiers' barber shops, and returned soldiers' all the rest of it operating at present.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The exploitation of the words "Returned Soldiers" has been very vigorous, and it began when your association was inaugurated.—A. I do not think you should charge us with exploiting the name of "Returned Soldier."

Q. Well, is it not the fact, Mr. McRae, that large numbers of men who were eligible for military service, have paid $5 and got that button, which they are wearing to-day in their coats?—A. Would it not be better to pay $5 to aid the man who has gone overseas and done his part and returned, rather than not pay anything at all? I would not be prepared to make that statement.

Q. You are on the Relief Committee, you do not know the details of membership? —A. No, I do not.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. At any rate, you were the first organization in Canada to get together and look after the returned soldiers in the early days when there was nobody else to do it?—A. Yes, sir. I would be very glad to go out of business at any time myself if the Government of either the Province or the Dominion will take the work in hand and do what we have been doing.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You are not anxious to handle it?—A. Not by any means.

Mr. BENNETT: Nobody suggested that he was.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. There is no personal profit in it for you?—A. Absolutely none.

Q. It is a sacrifice for you?—A. A pure sacrifice. I sacrificed at least 50 per cent of my time last year in connection with the work of this Association, besides—

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): Mr. Bennett says it is not a sacrifice.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. There may be a sacrifice of time on your part, but is there any doubt about the fact that rightly or wrongly the men themselves believe they are being exploited? I am putting the question to you frankly.—A. If they believe that they are incorrect so far as this Association is concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: I am only pointing out the fact.

Mr. PARDEE: For my own information I would like to know what is meant by the words "exploiting the returned soldiers."

Mr. BENNETT: Putting the returned soldier under a sense of obligation with respect to one particular Society, so that body might thereafter say that they have a hold upon them to do certain things politically or otherwise.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: That is an obligation the returned soldier need not put himself under unless he wishes to.

Witness discharged.

The CHAIRMAN: We will now hear a witness from Saskatchewan.

Mr. G. HARMON JONES, General Secretary of the Saskatchewan Returned Soldiers' Employment Commission, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you occupy in connection with this Commission?—A. I am the General Secretary.

Q. For the province?—A. For the province.

Q. Was your Commission appointed by the Provincial Government?—A. Yes.

Q. Are the members spread throughout the province?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is your head office?—A. Regina.

Q. Who are the members of your Commission?—A. The present members are: Hon. Mr. Justice Elwood, Chairman; Dr. W. D. Cowan, mayor; Jacob W. Smith, Regina; W. W. Davidson, M.L.A., Moosejaw; R. H. Chadwick, Moosejaw; J. A. Maharg, Moosejaw; Dr. A. MacGregor Young, Saskatoon; William Knox, Prince Albert; Malcolm Henderson, North Battlefield; Levi Beck, Yorkton; W. Jones, Swift Current; Charles F. Moore, Weyburn.

Q. These are all citizens of note in your community?—A. Yes. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that these gentlemen have formed the Commission up to the present time, but on March 10 a Bill was assented to incorporating the Saskatchewan Returned Soldiers' Commission, with a list of 40 or 50 men who will constitute the Commission in future.

Q. That will replace the present organization?—A. Yes, they are replacing it.

Q. Will you please file for record the Act incorporating the new Commission?—A. I will do so.

(Documents filed by witness.)

Q. Your work, then, primarily is finding opportunities for employment throughout Saskatchewan for returned soldiers? Have you any record of the success that has attended your efforts in that respect?—A. Only in this regard, sir, that we have no unemployed in the province.

Q. How many men have come back to Saskatchewan?—A. According to our last record, 698, but since coming here, perhaps, 30 more have arrived, making a total of something over 700.

Q. Have you found employment for them all?—A. Yes, practically.

Q. What class of employment have the men gone in for? Have you any statistics regarding those cases?—A. Not available, no. We have placed them as far as possible in Federal and Provincial Government employ, where positions were available—in fact, in any position that is open.

Q. That class of employment, of course, is limited?—A. Yes.

Q. What steps are you taking to replace these men in civil life? What is your modus operandi?—A. I may say, in regard to the Bill which has just been assented to, the first duty named is to make a careful and comprehensive industrial and commercial survey of the available sources of employment for returned soldiers, in the province. That, of course, will be as stated in the Bill, a comprehensive survey.

Q. Will that be done by the Provincial Government?—A. Yes. Let me say in that connection that I have had a conference with Mr. A. L. Haning, Director of National Service for the province, and we have agreed not to duplicate the work, but to work in conjunction with each other.

Q. So your survey practically will correspond with the Dominion survey of the province?—A. As far as it goes industrially and commercially.

Q. Your idea being to ascertain the opportunity for employment throughout the province?—A. Exactly.

Q. With a view of placing returned soldiers when they come back to the centre?—A. Yes.

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

Q. Have you had any difficulty in placing them?—A. We have had lots of difficulty but none of an unsurmountable nature.

Q. Will you tell us some of your difficulties and make any suggestions that may tend towards remedying them?—A. Do you mean in regard to the industrial or other features?

Q. Whatever you think will be of benefit to the committee with respect to the treatment of returned soldiers in Saskatchewan?—A. I would like to state, sir, that while our specific duty has to do with employment, we have accepted responsibility for any trouble which any man may have sent in, regarding the returned soldiers.

Q. You are practically a trouble department?—A. We are, sir. We have advertised for troubles and we are getting them. We carry a constant ad in twenty-two of the different papers in the province drawing attention to the need of employment for returned soldiers, and closing the ad with the words, "Tell your troubles to our association."

Q. Have you twenty-two branches scattered throughout the province?—A. We have over 400.

Q. How many offices have you opened?—A. We have a branch office in the city of Saskatoon and a staff, that is, of course, a branch office and assistant secretary to me, in addition to which we have some four hundred odd officially organized Returned Soldiers Welcome and Aid Leagues.

Q. All voluntary?—A. Yes, when I say officially organized, I state that these were organized by officers from our central office for these specific purposes, and who call together public meetings and address them.

Q. Did you build on the Patriotic Fund timber to some extent?—A. We found it advisable in some instances, but not often. In addition to these leagues, which number, I think, 415, we get into communication with the officers of all the rural municipalities, and I doubt if there is a single exception where they have not accepted responsibility for carrying out our work as set forth in this handbook of instructions (exhibiting) which we have printed and furnished.

Q. Will you send each member of the committee a copy of that handbook of instructions?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel that you are prepared for a larger influx of men than are coming in now?—A. I think we will be prepared after this industrial survey is made.

Q. That survey is keeping in view the larger problem of demobilized fit men after the war.—A. Well, it may be of value to us, but I doubt if, with the few facilities we have for industrial employment, it can be looked upon as any great assistance. The land is the chief factor in Saskatchewan.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Of the 700 who have returned, can you give us an idea how many have gone on to the land?—A. Gone on to the land?

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Who are willing to go on to the land?—A. That changes the question entirely.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. First of all, how many have gone on to the land?—A. I have not definite figures, but possibly 5 per cent have gone back to the land, of those fit to go back.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Would that include those originally coming from the land as well?—A. Possibly

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you think they have gone back to the land in as great a proportion as they have enlisted?—A. Yes, I think that is a fair assumption.

Q. You think they have?—A. I think so.

By Mr. Pardée:

Q. Do you find an inclination on the part of the returned soldier to go back to the land?—A. I find an expectation, Mr. Pardée. They expect the Government to come through with some definite policy that they can investigate and look into and then make a decision.

Q. Have you laid down any policy in your own mind as to what that should be?—A. I understand that an arrangement was made for an interprovincial conference on the whole land settlement question.

Q. For returned soldiers?—A. Yes. In that connection I made a survey of all the available untenanted lands in Saskatchewan, at the same time sending out about four thousand circulars to the leading business men, farmers, and all those related agencies, asking them about eighteen or twenty questions; and the boards of trade and the labour unions and all such organizations were requested to bring them before their separate bodies and discuss this matter and send us their findings. They have done that.

Q. Have you any scheme in your own mind as to what should be done?—A. I have.

Q. Do you want to lay it before this Committee?—A. I do not know whether I ought to do that or not. I would not suggest it in detail.

Q. Have you put it in the shape of a report?—A. No.

Q. Can you give it to us in brief concrete form?—A. Yes. I think that any land settlement scheme, so far as it affects soldiers, should be part of a general immigration or colonization scheme.

Hon. Mr. Ross: Hear, hear.

THE WITNESS: I think, as was suggested yesterday, that it should be a paternal scheme, that the attitude of the Government should be a paternal attitude extending over a considerable term of years, so that a man who is faced with the question of returning to the land will have some sort of guarantee that he can marry, take his wife there and raise his family without being molested, and possibly for twenty-five years that will be his habitation, and that he may expect to make good or at least gain a livelihood.

Q. Would you give him a title to the land?—A. No, I would not.

Q. For how long?—A. Until such time as the land had paid for itself.

Q. I see. He has to improve that land for the purpose of doing that?—A. He has to make good to the satisfaction of the Commission who would investigate the whole circumstances in connection with it.

Q. Should that Commission be federal or provincial?—A. I think it is a federal question. The assistance of the provincial government in this connection may be invaluable.

Q. It is a federal matter, you think?—A. Exactly.

Q. And ought to be undertaken by the Dominion?—A. Exactly.

Q. Is that as far as you have gone in your land scheme?—A. I have certain other things. I think no one land settlement scheme is sufficient, there ought to be two or three different land settlement schemes.

By the Chairman:

Q. To give the soldier an alternative?—A. Yes, under direction. In addition to the matter of rural settlement, that is the separate farm of 160 acres, or a definite unit, another scheme would be the community centre farm, possibly for a limited time during which these men are undergoing an education in agriculture under supervision.

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And a special class of men as well?—A. Exactly. These would be classified, that is the reason I qualified my statement by saying, "under supervision." The third would be a scheme of practically truck farming.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Before going on with that, let us follow up the second scheme. How big would your plots be, your unit farm, how many acres to each man?—A. Possibly 80 acres.

Q. The first scheme you say is for 160 acres?—A. Yes. I would suggest that these settlement farms be simply training stations, where a man is taught practical agriculture, and that he be given a certain amount of acreage to work out and experiment upon, of course, to the best advantage.

Q. The second class, you say, is the community class?—A. Yes.

Q. How many would you have in a community, forty or fifty?—A. That is a matter I have not carefully gone into.

Q. You would not give each one in that community an 80-acre farm?—A. I say it should be provided for them for a definite term of years, possibly five years, until the man has learned the art of agriculture.

Q. Would you put them on one tract of land without allotting them a unit?—A. Without giving title to the unit. This is a continual training school practically, an experimental farm.

Q. Following that up, in your community farm how would you pay the men for their employment?—A. They would be on a scale of pay to be arranged by this commission.

Q. And what they took off the land would be sold for their particular benefit to go into the community at large?—A. That would be a matter of arrangement, too. For instance, the Doukhobor colony at Veregin was established something on that line. It all goes into one common pot. Unfortunately, one man gets the large end of it there.

Q. Your third scheme is what?—A. A small truck farming scheme, that is a piece of ground should be secured adjacent to every city of consequence, divided into five or ten acre lots, possibly less, small cottages built there, and these men definitely set down to a task, and supervision should also obtain there. They should be given the benefit of some practical instruction. Then as each man improved he begins to establish himself in a home.

By the Chairman:

Q. He would have the benefit of a central organization to help him with advice and with materials, and if he should fall sick there is someone else available.—A. Exactly.

Q. And would he get the proceeds of the produce on the land?—A. I think so. I think in that case the title should be given him so that he begins at once to establish a home and to make the necessary improvements.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. He never would go on another farm, that would be his permanent place of abode?—A. Exactly; that farm of course would be available for special cases. For instance, where a man could not undertake the more strenuous duties of a larger farm.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you studied the statutes in the Australian Commonwealth on this subject?—A. I have, but I have not the details of them in my head, although I have a general knowledge of them.

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. In connection with your second scheme, community farming, have you considered the possibility of applying such proposals in connection with the existing Government Experimental Farms?—A. You mean the Dominion Government Experimental Farms?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, I think as far as possible all this work should be done under the direction of the different government departments.

Q. But I mean that special feature of your suggestion. Would it be possible to work that out in connection with the Dominion Government Experimental Farms, and have you considered the question from that point of view?—A. I have considered it.

Q. And having considered it, do you see any objection to it?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. Would there not be a decided advantage in having the work carried on in that way from the fact that these farms have all the necessary equipment for experimental and demonstration purposes?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. With the exception that you could not get much more than 80 acres adjoining the Dominion Experimental Farm?—A. When I say Experimental Farm, I do not mean to carry on work on the University scale.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. At these community farms you could make a man a farmer so that if he desired to do so he could take up a bigger farm later on?—A. Exactly, and not only that but a man might be a good instructor in farming who is not a university man.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Have you considered the proposal that established farmers on existing farms should be asked to take a returned soldier so that the returned soldier could learn farm work, for a year; the returned soldier would of course be asked to agree to remain there for a year. I suppose that has also been brought to your attention?—A. There is only one difficulty in connection with that, and that is that the men with whom I have discussed that question do not care to be farmed out in that way.

Q. Certainly, the discussion on that proposal, as I have seen it, was that the men should go there in the first instance from their own choice, but that when they did go there they should bind themselves to remain for a year. Do you see any reasonable objection to that proposal?—A. Not if you can get them to consent to it, in the first place. But there again you have to guard against the men being "exploited" by persons who would try to take advantage of them.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is the Hospitals Commission of Saskatchewan undertaking the re-education and training of the returned men on agricultural lines?—A. They are, somewhat.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The Agricultural College of Saskatchewan, are undertaking that work, and are sending out lecturers on the University Extension plan. You have a project of that kind in course of formation, have you not?—A. I do not know whether any definite scheme has been worked out.

Q. You have an Agricultural College in connection with your University?—A. Yes.

Q. And it has been the policy of the Government from time to time to send out lecturers on the various branches of husbandry and a plan is under consideration to extend that to the returned soldiers, is not that so?—A. Yes.

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

Q. How many acres of farm land did you find were tenantless, contiguous to the railway?—A. I recall the statement, but these were totalled up by a clerk in the office, and I am not positive but there has been some mistake:

Q. How many acres do you think there are?—A. There must be about a quarter of a million of acres.

Q. Contiguous to the railway?—A. Within about ten miles of the railway.

Q. Is it not more than that?—A. The returns may not be complete, I have not gone over them myself.

Q. There is a definite opinion in the East that there is a great deal of untaken Crown Land in Saskatchewan near the railway. You might state what the facts are.—A. I suppose if any man were to apply for a homestead there he would soon understand what the situation is.

Q. Exactly. The Crown Lands near the railway are practically all taken up.—A. Yes.

Q. There are some school sections, a few Hudson's Bay sections left, and some railway lands, far distant from the railways, that is the condition is it not?—A. Exactly.

Q. In view of these conditions the difficulty would be to get the land for the purpose you mentioned in a central situation?—A. Why might not the school lands be taken over for that purpose?

Q. Because, as you will remember, they are to be held for the common school funds of the province. The only real difficulty in carrying out your scheme is in getting suitable areas for the location of the farm?—A. Exactly.

Q. That is the most vital difficulty at the present moment, is it not, to get lands for the purpose contiguous to the railway?—A. I think it might be purchased.

Q. And the purchase price of good land in Saskatchewan has gone up to $25 and $30 per acre.—A. I think perhaps $22 per acre would be an average price.

Q. So that if any community scheme of settlement were to be carried out to any considerable degree it would be necessary to acquire the lands by purchase, because all the lands contiguous to the railway have been taken up.—A. Exactly.

Q. I think that your figures of 250,000 acres are entirely erroneous?—A. I imagine they are.

Q. Mr. Price made a survey as well, and his figures are very much larger than that.—A. Yes.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. What is meant by the term "tenantless farm"?—A. Those that are not in use.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. But the titles in those tenantless farms have passed from the Crown?—A. Yes, some of them are held by speculators.

Q. They may have been homesteaded and on some of them improvements have been made, have they not?—A. Yes, but the homesteaders have left them and the farms have gone back to their original conditions. Might not this land be expropriated by the Government?

Q. Well, the province is the only party that could exercise that power.—A. There is the difficulty in Saskatchewan the province has no land.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. All that land they are selling for $20 per acre would be cheaper than to expropriate these farms.—A. Mr. Chairman, I would like to set before the Committee this idea, that there will be strong objection to the settlement of these men on any farms on lands remote from the railway. You must consider that these men have done their duty to the Empire already, and that they would be called upon to do a second duty, if they had to do pioneer work.

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

By the Chairman:

Q. It has been sometimes said that the returned men are not so anxious to get land upon which to live as they are to get land to sell?—A. I do not suppose that desire is more general in their connection than in ours. .

Q. It is not a characteristic of theirs?—A. Not a special sin.

By Mr Sutherland:

Q. You have stated that about 5 per cent of the men who have returned have gone back to the land, and that a considerable number are living in expectation of some policy being adopted?—A. Exactly.

Q. What proportion of the men would go back to the land under some such system as you have described, do you suppose?—A. If the scheme were made attractive I should say between 10 and 20 per cent. It would depend on the policy exactly.

Q. You heard Mr. McRae's suggestion as to the mental defectiveness—that they should come under some fraternal influence such as you have suggested; do you think that those people would naturally gravitate to a condition where they would be able to look after themselves afterwards?—A. I think the farm is the place for them.

By Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw):

Q. The truck farm is the place for them?—A. Yes, I think the whole farm life, where there are few excitements, lots of sunshine and fresh air, and everything of that kind that makes it ameliorating for them.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You recently had your society incorporated?—A. Yes.

Q. By statute passed at the last session?—A. Yes.

Q. So that now you have a statutory existence, whereas it was a voluntary association before?—A. Yes.

Q. And as a matter of fact, all the efforts to deal with the returned soldiers in the Province of Saskatchewan are corrolated under the direction of your Committee?—A. Exactly.

Q. And everything is done there with one single, simple organization, with such splendid results that I believe when you called them together to send a delegate down here they said they had no complaints?—A. That is quite true. I may say that when the matter was submitted to the Army and Navy Veterans' Association, they held two executive meetings, and the deputation met in my office, and they called on me afterwards and stated that they had no particular kick coming, and I intimated to them that if there were not some sufficient reason why they should come, they ought to save the Government that expense. They delegated me to bring to your attention the points I have named, which I already had on my agenda.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. They are strong on the land scheme?—A. They are. I may say this is a very vexed question, a live question in Saskatchewan. They are studying different settlement schemes, and writing into the office about C.P.R. settlement plans.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And without flattering yourself, in your opinion the fact that everything has been conducted from the very inception under one control and one jurisdiction, and all funds have been correlated under one body, have brought about this result?—A. That has been our policy.

Q. And to that you attribute a very considerable degree of the success, apart from the personal equation?—A. As a matter of fact, the first thing the organization is supposed to do after we have organized it——

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

By the Chairman:

Q. That is, one of your branches?—A. One of our branches—is to be on the watch for returned soldiers and have them put on their committee. If a man comes back, if he has anything at all to contribute, even if it is nothing more than being a returned veteran, he is immediately asked to take a place on that committee.

Q. They have representatives on your provincial executive?—A. Provision is made there to add to the number. I may say we approached several men, but on account of their official positions they turned down the proposition, perhaps five men. I was asked to name from my files the names of men that I thought would assist. I did this, and in every case they turned it down. Now, it is a matter of selection.

Q. How do you propose to select your representatives that you intend to include in your provincial executive?—A. We might do a little lobbying.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Of desirable men in the locality?—A. Yes. Possibly some men might be nominated from the floor whose name as a representative might not be popular in their own organization. For instance, in the city of Saskatoon there are no less than seven returned soldiers on their league committees.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. That is a branch of your organization?—A. No, our office is different from that; this is what we call the local League of Returned Soldiers—the Welcome and Aid League. That is apart from the provincial office. We have organized every one.

Q. Their efforts are corrolated with yours?—A. Yes.

Q. And they give account of everything that is done?—A. Yes.

Q. And you try to keep advised as to the branches, the Patriotic Fund, the Red Cross Society, and all those in the rural communities?—A. Yes, we link up with those.

Q. And in practice your central organization has become a clearing house for anything connected with the war?—A. Yes.

Q. So far as funds are concerned, and employment, and so on?—A. If a man has any difficulty whatever he may come there, and he may know that he gets satisfaction. If he does not get it he may come the next day and demand it, and so on and so on.

Q. And he need not come there, because you have more than 400 branches scattered throughout the province?—A. Exactly.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What was the nature of the results of the attempt to settle soldiers on the land after the South African war?—A. I am not familiar with that.

Q. Only with regard to Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw): A very small proportion.

The WITNESS: A very small proportion, and very unsatisfactory. The soldiers abominate the idea of any script issuance; and even in that circumstance I don't think there is any criterion to go by. The Government have not yet up to the present time offered any very attractive land settlement scheme, in my opinion, and the introduction of this paternalism is the solution of the whole situation.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. You have touched on a very important matter, and you seem very familiar with this land settlement for soldiers; you say that about 5 per cent of the men who have returned to your province have voluntarily gone back on the land, and with exceptionally attractive inducement, possibly 15 or 20 per cent more of them might be induced to go?—A. Yes.

Q. We in this part of Canada understand that the great province of Saskatchewan offers exceptionally good inducements to any one to settle in that province, and we consider that those soldiers who go back on the land in that province should have some paternal care exercised over them, for a considerable number of years?—A. Exactly.

Q. Do you consider that you would get a good class, or the best class, or the average class of the soldiers to go back on the land under those conditions?—A. Exactly.

Q. And you admit, as Mr. McRae from Manitoba does, that those that were not mentally up to the average should be sent on the land as a proper place for them?—A. Oh, that is a mere incident.

Q. How long do you suppose the paternal care would have to be exercised over people in that condition?—A. I would hope the Government would not accept that suggestion in that way, that all the men who would settle on land there would be in need of direction, being mentally deficient. The idea I had in mind was simply this: A man going on the land must have some guarantee. For instance, that if there is a succession of crop failures, or things of this character, that he can still stay there; that there is somebody at the back of it, and that it is not a case of emergency at all, but it is a definite understanding with the Dominion Government, a definite policy. If that were known, if a man knows that in case he loses his crop by hail, drought or anything at all, there is a come-back and a continuity to his life, that is the point.

Q. Would insurance against conditions of that kind be sufficient?—A. Possibly. You are perhaps aware that in connection with all the Prairie Provinces there is now passed a Rural Credits Act, and splendid advantage might be taken of this Act in connection with returned soldiers.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you not provincial hail insurance also?—A. Yes; it is rather chaotic just now. One more point, if I may be allowed—this, too, comes from the veterans. The veterans returning have difficulty; once a man has entered for a homestead and has yet a little time, possibly six months or more, to put in on duties, he has a little difficulty in getting his patent. Now, there is a very strong opinion—and I concur in that opinion—that unless there are exceptional circumstances any man who comes back here more or less a physical wreck—a man, for instance, who has been gassed or gone through the trenches—has no right to be compelled to put on six months more labour, and his patent should come through forthwith. That would enable us to solve our problem. The point is this, that if this man had a patent he could immediately apply to the Government for rural grant or loan and get it, and thus one difficulty would be pushed aside.

Q. You think overseas service should be accepted by the Department of the Interior as equivalent to a portion of time?—A. Sure.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What you have in mind is that when a man returns physically unfit, having put in all his time but six months, that six months should be allowed to him in the same way as you would give him a small amount of money for meritorious service?—A. Exactly. I am looking at it from the angle of my own work.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. In that way these difficulties as they arise could be met and done with and you could close so many cases?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You would get rid of that man?—A. Yes.

Q. He is able to take care of himself then?—A. Yes.

[Mr. G. Harmon Jones.]

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What steps has the Saskatchewan Government taken with regard to delaying debts falling due or protecting the titles of soldiers on active service?—A. The Moratorium Act. I have not had any difficulty at all in that connection. All those difficulties are dealt with, at once, because where a man's land is to be sold for taxes he makes report to me, and we make the wires hot and get it through. There is no case of hardship that has not been dealt with.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And you have passed an Act at the last session by which the taxes are remitted entirely on a portion of his land while he is overseas?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Have you had cases where perhaps they have been sold under court proceedings?—A. I only recall one case, and I may say I drew that matter to the attention of Judge Elwood, who of course is competent to judge, and on hearing the whole circumstances he expressed the opinion that nothing could be done.

Q. Nothing could be done?—A. Nothing could be done: it was considered that the circumstances were such that it was not a hardship.

Q. Is there any provision where a case of that kind could be dealt with by the association?—A. I do not quite understand.

Q. There have been cases of pressing debt and threatened loss of personal property left behind by soldiers on active service. Is there any machinery in your association which would give relief to such soldiers?—A. In what way? Giving financial relief?

Q. Yes?—A. No, we have no funds to disburse.

Q. Or would you deal with the creditors?—A. Yes, that is the point. I have taken up scores of cases.

Q. A number of cases have gone under your attention?—A. Yes, they have been all cleaned up by our office without reference to anything else. I have gone personally to loan companies in one or two cases and put the facts before them, and made representations that we want the thing amicably settled and if not, further proceedings will follow, which is quite sufficient generally.

By the Chairman:

Q. With reference to the reception and treatment of returned soldiers, what is the procedure?—A. At present the local leagues undertake to aid, as well as welcome these men. They have instructions from our office to investigate every case, so as not to interfere with the work being done by others.

Q. What provision is there for the down and out man, the one who is stranded?—A. Ordinarily he is given a little local relief. We have not anything like the problem that is met with in other provinces.

Q. You have not to go into the problem that Mr. McRae describes?—A. No, and wherever these problems arise they have been met in a quiet way without publicity.

Q. In a quiet way?—A. Yes, they are not heralded.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You said you thought the returned soldier should get his patent irrespective of whether he was on the land the proper time?—A. Yes.

Q. There are certain regulations as to a house of a certain size or stable?—A. There is no provision as to that.

Q. Oh, yes, he must have erected on his homestead certain buildings before he can get his patent. Have you suggested that that provision be abolished?—A. That is more or less a matter of fiction. The mere matter of putting 30 acres under cultivation and letting them go back—that is a detriment.

Q. He cannot get his patent until these provisions are performed, and cannot get anything from the local government. In addition to eliminating the time element, do you think they should eliminate the provisions as to building?—A. I think the attitude of the Provincial Government is that in all cases encouragement should be given to returned soldiers to definitely settle on the land.

Q. If you did that you would give the man his patent and he would not be obliged to apply for a loan and would dispose of it as he pleased. Do you think that would be safe?—A. It might be safe under the circumstances. The point is to clear the deck. The man himself, and those who have charge of his affairs get tired of repeatedly making representations to the Department of Interior and receiving nothing back but stock letters.

Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw): You give a man a patent and he sells it: what harm is done?

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. He must have a house and barn on the land before he gets his patent?—A. That is not a war-time measure.

Q. Of the two arrangements, would you prefer that the man should get his patent without the house and barn so that he would have a chance of selling it?—A. Yes; in a great many instances these men have sacrificed everything to go to the war.

Q. You would take chances on what he would do with it?—A. Yes.

Witness discharged.

Mr. G. H. HERBERT, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I believe you are a member of the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry?—A. Yes.

Q. What position do you occupy with respect to the Returned Soldiers' Association?—A. I hold the position of second vice-president.

Q. And you were delegated by them to come here and meet this Committee?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you tell us something about the formation of that organization, what it consists of?—A. The Saskatchewan Veterans' Society is composed of veterans of the present and previous wars, and the main purpose, as far as interests this Committee, is to look after and generally forward matters that are conducive to their interest. I cannot tell you anything about the funds, because there are very few funds.

Q. You do not need them?—A. When we do get them we generally have plenty of places to put them where they are needed. I received a notification on Friday to come to this meeting, and I had no time to collect the evidence as I should have had. I had to leave on Monday to get down here, and arrive late, as you know.

Q. If after you return you would like to submit stated cases of hardship which you want rectified, if you will send a memorandum to us we will deal with it?—A. In addition to these?

Q. Yes?—A. I will do so. I have drawn up here under the heading of suggestions and complaints a little memoranda and with the permission of the gentlemen present I will read it, because if you start asking me questions I might get out of my depth. This is what I know, and I want to know what I am talking about.

Q. Read your statement?—A. I will do so. If any gentleman wants to ask me any question with regard to this—

Q. We will ask you after you get through?—A. With regard to the proposed land settlement, 50 to 60 per cent of men coming back to Saskatoon are in favour of some grant, and the chief proposition seems to be a kind of community system of about 160 acres per man if possible, but in conjunction with this, the Government grant a long term loan with small interest, because it is no use some of the men getting the land if they cannot comply with the provisions of the grant. A man with a grant like that would do the best he could to get the thing in working order.

The next thing I would suggest is that men who are disabled and are not able to work the land the same as men who are fit, should be granted the same privilege, because they could get relatives or other people to do the work for them, and they should not be debarred from any benefit arising from this land settlement scheme.

Another question that crops up in connection with these matters relates to homesteaders who are in financial difficulties owing to their having gone to this war and come back in a disabled condition owing to wounds or who are suffering from illness. It is suggested that financial assistance be given, as far as possible, in the shape of a loan on easy terms. You gentlemen know the need of producing as much grain as possible to supply the wants of the people in Europe at the present time. It looks as if the people of this country were going to prove the mainstay of the people in Europe in that regard.

Another question which has arisen, gentlemen, is: How would a land grant affect men in possession of homesteads? It is suggested by our society that no distinction should be made.

There is a further question with respect to men holding pre-emptions, who are unable to make payments on account of disablement or sickness resulting from their having to go to war, and leaving everything to take its own course. Some suggest that the money due be waived in lieu of the land grant, but we should like to have these gentlemen discuss that subject. It is a subject that will need to be discussed because there are men who otherwise will be unable to make their payments for this land, and it is not right they should lose it.

Q. You are speaking of pre-emptions?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. That question arises in certain portions of the province only?—A. Yes.

There is a question coming before the Government at the present time, dealing with the shortage of labour on the land. There will be a certain percentage of men who would go on the land and work for farmers if they could get sufficient inducement. We suggest that men who are willing and able to work on the farm be granted a separation allowance the same as they are in the Army, because if they go into the country to work they are unable to take their wives and families with them but must leave them in the city.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are speaking now with respect to discharged men?—A. Yes. If the returned soldiers in the province who went to work on farms were given their military pay in addition to the pay they would earn from their farm work, it would meet with the wishes of quite a number of men who would then go to work cheerfully on farms.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What you suggest is that the returned soldier should be paid by the farmer for the work he did on the farm and that his wife should continue to draw the separation allowance?—A. Yes.

Q. You would not want a man's military pay to be continued?—A. No, sir. He would be paid by the farmer for whom he worked.

Q. In addition to the wages given to him by the farmer his wife should continue to draw the Government allowance?—A. Yes. There has been a lot of money spent in getting labour from the United States, but if sufficient inducement were granted, the aid of returned soldiers could be secured. You could not expect them to leave their wives and families in the city to exist on the wages the husband might get from the farmer.

[Mr. George H. Herbert.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You are perfectly aware, I suppose, that there are not sufficient returned soldiers west of the Great Lakes to appreciably supply the demand for farm labour this year?—A. Yes, but I am dealing with the future. All these matters must be looked after with respect to the future.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How long would you expect the separation allowance of $20 to be paid to the wife in the case you are speaking of?—A. The scheme is this: It is with a view of getting more men interested in the land scheme and getting them on to the land too. These suggestions would help the men to take up farming as a profession and also meet the present need for an increased production of grain.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How long would you suggest the separation allowance of $20 a month should be paid?—A. It should be paid as long as the returned soldier works with the farmer.

By the Chairman:

Q. What does the Saskatchewan farmer now pay the man who works for him?—A. At the present time the farmers are offering about $45 a month.

Q. And keep?—A. And keep.

Q. You want the returned soldier's wife provided for in the meantime?—A. Yes, provided for in the meantime.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. And there is this fact also to be borne in mind, that the returned soldier would be learning to farm?—A. Yes, he would at the same time be learning to farm. It gives him an inducement to take up farming which the Government is anxious to see, in any event.

Now, with respect to men who have been discharged from the Imperial Forces and have come to Canada, we suggest that they be afforded similar privileges as regards the land question.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. That is where they had not previously enlisted from Canada?—A. Yes.

Now we come to the matter of subordinate positions in the Civil Service and in municipalities. We suggest that such positions be given to competent men without the necessity of undergoing the Civil Service Examination. There are certain positions in the Civil Service capable of being filled by men who are not able to pass the Civil Service Examinations.

Q. But men who can discharge the duties just as well as others?—A. Yes, just as well.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. There are certain positions which can be placed at their disposal?—A. There are lots of such positions.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you leave it to the discretion of the Government to determine whether the position could be filled by a man who had not passed his Civil Service examination?—A. I do not feel altogether able to answer that question. You see, sometimes we do not get the right kind of deal.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. It is very easy to make a condition that the applicant for the position should be the right kind of man. What we suggest is that the returned soldier should be given six months' trial wherever possible. If at the end of that time he proves himself capable of filling it he should be given the position permanently.

[Mr. George H. Herbert.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Regardless of the examination?—A. Yes, regardless of the Civil Service Examination. I am speaking now of the subordinate positions.

Q. Is not that being done now in some branches of the Public Service?—A. Take the men in Saskatchewan. They are not being given permanent positions.

Q. The reason of that is because they have been temporarily appointed to take the place of men who are at the front, and have not yet returned. Is not that the real reason?—A. It is the real reason but it is not very satisfactory to the returned man.

Q. Yes, but to carry out your suggestion would be pretty hard on the man who is overseas.—A. Very well, we will take up that question right now. What we say is that the attention of the Government should be drawn to apparently fit men who are still filling positions at home.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you suggest that such men should be discharged to make room for returned soldiers?—A. Yes, sir, I think they have a right to be. They are holding these positions at the expense of the men who have been at the front and suffered the seven plagues of Egypt, combined. Every day they are suffering and their sufferings cannot be realized by the people at home. That is what these men have gone through and they have the right to demand these positions.

Q. You are thinking of the Civil Service then from the point of view of the men who suffer rather than from the standpoint of the efficiency of the Civil Service?—A. From my experience of the returned men, after allowing a certain period for a man to get broken in, they can do the work just as efficiently. He is blessed with the same amount of intelligence as the man that is in there now. Now, I come to pensions. We suggest that pensions be equal for officers and men.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What is that?—A. We suggest that the pension scheme should be equal—

Q. Equalized?—A. Equalized for officers and men.

By the Chairman:

Q. You would cut the officers down to the men's pensions?—A. No, raise the men's pensions up, strike a medium. The reason is this: Private Tommy Atkins comes home, he is a labourer, not able to take advantage of any educational scheme because he is not capable of taking it. He has a leg or an arm off. Compare him with the man who is a lawyer, who has a profession, that man is able to carry on his business to a lot better extent than this labourer is. That man with the leg or an arm off, the labourer, is condemned to an excuse of a pension of $16 a month, and what he can make.

Q. As far as the returned soldier is concerned, you are a socialist?—A. Yes, sir, I am. The question of this Pensions Board—I have to fire these bullets, and I have been instructed by the men in Saskatoon to bring them up.

Q. That is what we want to get. Have you cases of hardship?—A. Yes, as far as I know, this is the evidence of the men. I will leave it to you to get the evidence from the doctors. I do not know what the report on this case is.

Q. Wherever a case is specified to us, we will get the full details regarding it, and see that you get a copy of them. Please give the name of the man first in every case.—A. This is a man, No. 81098, Pte. F. O. Brault, 10th Battalion, boarded at Ottawa, October 9, 1916, discharged at Quebec, November 17, 1916, with a gratuity of $55. Now, this man, as far as I can see from his physical condition, apart from the doctor whose report I have not got, is a physical wreck. He has two fingers of his hand taken off, and the hand is drawn in. I have a photo here, gentlemen, (producing) and I would like you to see the extent of his disability. He was discharged with a gratuity of $55.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Without any pension?—A. Yes, in full settlement of his claim. That is a case that should have some investigation.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The photograph shows that the disability is in his right hand?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. You would like to see that case reboarded?—A. I would like to see him reboarded, and if his complaint is just I would like to ask the board for what reason they gave him that gratuity.

The CHAIRMAN: We will have the facts regarding this case looked into.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What was this man before he went overseas?—A. I do not know. I did not have time to get much information. I had to leave within a day after receiving notice to come here.

Q. Had he other wounds besides this one?—A. No, sir, he did not, as far as I know.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you any other cases?—A. I have three or four. No. 114537, Pte. E. Ball, 1st C.M.R. I met this man on the car, he is a returned soldier, he is working on the car to-day with a piece out of his skull two and a half by two inches; he has no protection. We do not think a man should be discharged from hospital in that condition; he should have some protection on his head.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Has he no silver plate?—A. No silver plate at all.

By the Chairman:

Q. It would seem as though that man should be recommitted to hospital and probably trepanned?—A. Yes, sir. There is also the case of Pte. Middleton, No. 81590, badly gassed, discharged October 15, 1915, at Quebec. The man was walking the streets a physical wreck, and was accosted by Dr. Munro, who was then organizing the Saskatchewan Hospital unit on April 14, 1916. He was sent into the hospital on that date, and after a while operated on for appendicitis and stomach trouble, and he does not think he had either. The Government paid the bill to September, 1916, and discharged him again. His discharge was signed by Major Andrews. The man was not fit to come out of the hospital and stayed until November 5, 1916, and came out with a bill against him of $100.50.

By the Chairman:

Q. He had no pay during that time?—A. No pay between that time.

Q. How long was he in the hospital without pay?—A. From September, 1916, to November 5, 1916. These are the facts as given me by the man.

Q. That is right, two months?—A. The man says he will never pay this himself, and we would like to see the Government take some steps to have this man's bill paid. Next we come to the case of Private ———

Q. How much money would that man have received if he had been drawing full pay and allowances during those two months?—A. I cannot tell you that; I do not know whether he is a married man or not. The next case is No. 21552, Pte. G. Bimson, of the 10th Battalion, discharged at Quebec, October 14, 1915. The bullet pierced this man's throat and opened the jugular vein and came out in his collar bone. He certainly had a miraculous escape. The British medical journals have a photo of this man's case, and they have wondered at the man being alive to-day. He was lying eight hours, and a clot of blood formed in the hole. He was taken to England and operated on. They fixed his throat in some way. The man at present is subject to terrible fits. If he gets excited it sends a rush of blood to his head. He got a pension of $8 per month, and we think that is not just. He was under observation by Dr. Kyles, of Saskatoon, and this doctor will give you a full report of this man's case.

Q. You know that if a man is discharged and subsequently falls ill as a result of his injuries during the war, he can be re-committed to hospital, re-attested and pay and allowances will go on as they used to all the time he is in the hospital. Are there any cases you know of where that was required?—A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. It is in operation in Saskatchewan?—A. I am going to quote the next case where this was necessary but was not done, but I will not mention the man. This has only come up lately.

Q. I wanted you to know that this provision has been made?—A. I am satisfied with that. But I want to do whatever I can to remedy it for men who have been paying their own expenses and who have been suffering.

Q. You mean that you would like to have that provision made retroactive so that any man who incurred expense before this new legislation came in may take advantage of it?—A. Yes.

Q. You think that the Government should bear the expense?—A. That is only fair. I am not going to state the name in this case, but I will just give you the facts by way of illustration of what happened. A certain private was discharged on October 7, 1915, and started work at the post office on April 4, 1916, in bad health, had to quit on May 22nd up till July 2nd. Now this man had a rash that broke out on his shoulders, just where the equipment was carried, where vermin and everything had been biting, while marching for miles and miles. This is what is known as the trench rash out there. Nothing was stated in his discharge about the trench rash, but he was discharged because his eyesight had been affected by the war. When he got back to Canada this rash broke out again, and developed into abscesses. I know for a fact that man was walking about the streets of Saskatoon with holes in his back one of which was large enough you could put a small apple in. But he had to continue at work because he had a wife and two children to keep so that he had to go to work again in order to keep things going. He was boarded again in October and the Government refused to put him on pay owing to a difference of opinion between the Medical Board as to whether it was caused by service in the trenches. If we had the men who are over in the trenches here now they could prove that the man had it over there, and this man could prove that on his return to England that it broke out again whilst he was there, and it also broke out again when he got back to Canada. He had to go to the hospital in Saskatoon, ordered there by Dr. Peterson who saw that he was unfit. All the time he was subsisting on a pension of $8 per month for probably two months in the first case, and for another month later on.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Was he not paid whilst he was employed in the post office?—A. He did not get paid whilst off work because he was a temporary man; if he had been a permanent man he would have got his pay for the time he was off. He was apparently well, but was badly run down. He was re-boarded by this Board at Saskatoon, and was pronounced fit, and the pension stopped, but at the present time the man is far from well.

By the Chairman:

Q. I think you should give to the Secretary of the Committee the name of that man, so that it should be investigated at Ottawa. It would not be necessary to put the man's name in the minutes?—A. I shall be very glad to do that.

[Mr. George H. Herbert.]

Q. You are aware of these new regulations providing for a man being allowed to go back to the hospital after being discharged; secondly, that provision is made for re-boarding men if the pension is not properly adjusted in the first place, and, thirdly, that arrangements are now made by which the pay and allowances continue until the pension cheque is received?—A. Yes.

Q. Do not these new regulations, to a considerable extent, meet the difficulties to which you have called attention?—A. It stops a lot of the difficulty. The case I have just quoted will, I think, be met by those regulations. I would like to say that everything is satisfactory regarding other matters; we are working well with the Soldiers' Aid, the Welcome League and the Hospitals Commission; in Saskatoon every man is at work. We have seven or eight members on the committee of the Soldiers' Aid and the Welcome League, and we are allowed to select our own men who are suitable for the work.

Q. So that there is full co-operation in that province between the provincial authorities, appointed to take care of the returned soldiers, and the returned soldiers themselves?—A. Yes, we believe they are doing the best possible. The trouble has, from the beginning, been down at this end.

Q. What were your principal troubles?—A. Some of these cases I have quoted to you.

Q. Matters of pension and matters of pay?—A. Yes.

Q. And your principal complaint is of the delay at this end?—A. Yes. I want to tell you, gentlemen, that all these complaints I have brought before you are just as I got them from the men themselves; and, as far as I know, they are true.

The CHAIRMAN: I am quite sure of that.

Witness discharged.

Mr. HOWARD STUTCHBURY, Central Provincial Committee, Edmonton, Alberta, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you copy?—A. Secretary of the Provincial Committee of the Hospitals Commission.

Q. You are the secretary and organizer?—A. Secretary and organizer.

Q. Of the Central Provincial Committee for the Province of Alberta?—A. Of the Central Provincial Committee for the Province of Alberta.

Q. How is that committee appointed?—A. By order in council.

Q. Have you a copy of the order in council?—A. I am sorry, I have not.

Q. Will you make a note and send a copy of it on your return?—A. I will.

Q. Can you give us the names of the men who constitute the committee?—A. Yes, I can give you that now.

Q. You might file it with the secretary. Are the members composing that committee scattered throughout the province of Alberta?—A. Yes, the committee is composed of the mayors of the four cities, Mr. Wood, the president of the United Farmers Association, Mr. Ross, representing labour, and the speaker of the Provincial House.

Q. Have you any returned soldiers on that committee?—A. We have on our local organization.

Q. But not on the central executive board?—A. No, I may say frankly that the Central Executive Board meets only occasionally, the work is left largely to the secretary and the local organizations.

Q. How many local branches of your organization are there?—A. There are 518 branches, in all, covering 578 different points.

Q. All linked up with the central organization at Edmonton?—A. All linked up with the central at Edmonton.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

Q. You might tell the committee about the work taken up by your organization.—A. Perhaps it might be well to say that of those 518 branches we maintain offices at Edmonton apart from my own head office, and in Lethbridge and Medicine Hat, and we are opening an office at Red Deer; those are the five cardinal points.

Q. You have the province divided into five main districts, each with a central office, and all co-ordinating with Edmonton?—A. All co-ordinating with Edmonton.

Q. These five offices are permanent, and always open?—A. Yes, with paid secretaries; the central organization pays the salary of the secretary in each of the offices, the municipality caring for the accommodation and other incidental expenses.

Q. Where does the money come from?—A. From the Provincial Government, by grant.

Q. Do you do any relief work?—A. Not directly, I have a small contingent account, but that is very small.

Q. Who takes care of the "down and out"?—A. That is being done by the local organizations, in Calgary, entirely by the men themselves. We have had very close collaboration with the men we are not a part of them, you understand what I mean, but they are keeping in very close touch with us; we do not attempt to collect any money ourselves.

Q. You do not make any appeal to the public?—A. We make no appeal to the public, but we work in co-operation, and we can go to the men's association, and I always feel that any funds that may have to be dispensed in that way would be much better dispensed by the men than by the civil organizations.

Q. Any cases such as those described by Mr. McRae of Winnipeg, will be dealt with by the soldiers themselves?—A. Yes.

Q. How do they raise money for that purpose, from the public?—A. By concerts, socials, etc.; Calgary raised money by collecting the waste paper, and by other methods. The Chairman of that organization, who is here, can tell you better about that.

Q. Will you now describe your work?—A. The Alberta Committee originally was formed as an employment association, that was supposed to be our original duty, but we found that in the province there were only two or three organizations, that had to do with soldiers of any kind, whether returned soldiers or not, the Department of Militia, the Red Cross, and the Patriotic Fund, and they had their own peculiar function. Of necessity our duties have become more complex; we have assumed all the other troubles, not only of the man who has returned, but of the wives and families of those who are still fighting; we are a sort of clearing house.

Q. Have you taken steps to let it be known by the public generally the nature of the work you are doing?—A. Yes, we have advertised in every paper in the province.

Q. That any matter which troubled a returned soldier can be dealt with?—A. We don't say we will adjust them but we do the best we can.

Q. You offer to do the best?—A. We offer to do the best. We trace missing men, and all that sort of thing, as far as possible. We traced 160 missing men last year.

Q. How many have come back to Alberta, all told?—A. To the end of December, 1,009; that was not counting reservists, but we assume the same obligation to the reservists of any of our allies as we do to the Canadian Expeditionary Forces.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. How did you trace those missing men?—A. That is quite a long story.

Q. In a general way?—A. I first wire to the Clerk of Records in Ottawa; then I cable to the International Red Cross in Geneva; I give them a description; we send it to the papers in the Old Country, and to the hospitals, and we find out, perhaps, the names of some of the comrades who were with him. We send out on an average from 60 to 75 letters asking for information. Sometimes it takes a long time. I got information just as I left of a man who had disappeared nearly seven months ago. We unfortunately only got proof of his death, but even that was sufficient to clear up the estate.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Speaking in another capacity for a moment, would you feel that there was any necessity for the Patriotic Fund to extend the time during which it should help a soldier's family?—A. Just what do you mean there?

Q. At present, as you know, as soon as a man returns the Patriotic Fund gives nothing more to the family?—A. Well, now, that is not in effect in Alberta; until a man is discharged in Alberta he gets his Patriotic Fund.

Q. Yes, until he was discharged; do you find that there is any need of the Patriotic Fund helping the family longer than that?—A. Oh, there may be.

Q. You see, by their charter they are prohibited from helping the family after a man has been discharged; do you think there is any call in Alberta for giving them discretionary power for a month or two months more?—A. I certainly think they should have discretionary power. We have found cases of real need that should have been taken care of.

Q. Where, though a man has been discharged, you have not been able to place him again?—A. Not so much in the case of the man and his family as of the dependents.

Q. The dependent suffering?—A. The dependent of a missing man, perhaps, or of the killed.

Q. Of those 1,009 you speak of as having returned to Alberta, how many passed through your hands?—A. All of them.

Q. How many of them have you found employment for?—A. When I left there were probably not more than eight or nine, so far as I knew, out of employment. Mind you, we must say this, that men will get into temporary positions, and be out for a short time and probably come back again, and perhaps are not quite satisfied with the position they secured. In Calgary the employment is done very largely by the men themselves, through co-operation with the board of trade and other organizations. Every position is phoned to the Veterans' Club itself.

Q. That is, when you find a vacant position you telephone to the Veterans' Club?—A. My secretary telephones the Veterans' Club, because the men congregate there.

Q. And they determine which man is adapted for it?—A. Yes. The endeavour out there has been to put the round peg in the round hole as far as possible. The men themselves have felt their responsibility to employers as well. That is, those who had charge of employment have been very, very careful to choose as far as possible men who were able to carry out the duties they were asked for.

Q. Do you find that a man who is recommended for employment by the Soldiers' Association itself is more liable to hold a job than if you sent him to employment?—A. No, I would not say that.

Q. Have you a great number of men who come back to you after you place them?—A. Yes.

Q. Repeatedly?—A. Yes. It might perhaps be well to follow these.

Q. We would be glad to have any statistics you have on that point?—A. What I wanted to show you specially was the way the men are reviewed as they come back. The minute a man arrives at the discharge depot we not only review him industrially, but vocationally; that is, any man who may possibly come under the scope of the Military Hospitals vocational scheme, we get all the information. We try to get first-hand touch with the man, that is, the first re-action. In fact, as far as vocational work is concerned, and the other work of my office, if we hear of a boy who has lost his leg, as we do in the list of casualties, we write to him ahead; we write to him in the hospital at London and tell him what we hope to have the opportunity of doing for him when he gets back, so as to get in touch with him at the earliest stages of the game.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Before he crosses the water at all?—A. Before he leaves England. This has only been in operation three or four months. I find the men are very grateful for that. They feel that there is somebody that cares for them when they come back.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is being done by the Hospitals Commission in the way of educational training?—A. I can give you a report of that. Fortunately I got that before I left. We are very proud of that out there, the way the men have responded to it; it is perfectly wonderful. We are training there in these subjects—general office work and stenographers, book-keepers, civil service—preliminary and qualifying examinations, sanitary inspectors, building inspectors and clerk of works, draughtsmen, motor mechanics, gas engineering, steam engineering, mine surveying, fire boss certificate—coal mining, electrical working, teaching, mixed farming, cattle raising, poultry raising, gardening, carpentry and joinery.

Q. Do you find the men keen to take this work?—A. Very keen. In the convalescent homes we found last year, when we opened out our work there, that it had a wonderfully fine effect on the man himself; he was better mentally and physically; he slept better and felt better, because we must remember this—that those men who have been over there, for six, twelve, or eighteen months become more or less cogs in a wheel, and we cannot expect them to come back and drop right down into the same spot that they left. They must get back to some extent their individuality and their power of concentration and that sort of thing; they have lost that to a great extent.

Q. You have then, perfect co-operation between the Hospitals Commission in their vocational training, your Soldiers' Aid, and your War Veterans Association?—A. Yes; I think the War Veterans Association are all friends of mine.

Q. Can you say that those three organizations, co-operating, cover the ground?—A. I think so.

Q. Is there any sort of clearing house for the three?—A. Well, no, they have each got their own peculiar functions.

Q. Have you a trouble department?—A. Well, my department is really the trouble department.

Q. It is really the clearing house?—A. Yes, the boys if they have any trouble in regard to their pay or anything like that, come to me. I travel all the time, I sleep on the train about four nights a week; I try to visit and keep in individual touch with the men as much as possible.

Q. Are you the bearer of any suggestions to this committee as to where the services for which you are responsible can be improved?—A. Yes, there are some suggestions. As far as the land settlement schemes are concerned, I only desire to say one thing, if I may be permitted: before the land settlement scheme is evolved definitely there should be a conference in the west by western men and the men themselves who will be asked to go on the land should have an opportunity of discussing it with the members of the Government or the land settlement committee.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What do you say about the members of the Government or the Committee?—A. Well, whatever committee will have charge of the settlement scheme.

Q. That they should do what?—A. Should have a conference in western Canada.

Q. With the men?—A. And with farmers.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You differentiate between the soldiers' colonization scheme and any other?—A. Well, it might be necessary, because we must look at demobilization and the general disruption which will come after the war, as well as the disruption there is now.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

Q. That is the reason I ask the question?—A. I do not think any one scheme could possibly fill all requirements.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you feel that if an adequate scheme were proposed in Alberta that the returned men would be inclined to take advantage of it in large measure?—A. Oh, I am quite sure of it. Of course, we have not many men on the farms now. Most of the men who went from the farms have gone back to their own farms, but they do not like the idea of farming out.

Q. That is working for another man?—A. Yes; then another thing, you must consider: that a very large bulk of our men are married men, and, while farm wages are higher than they have ever been, still $40 or $50 a month will not maintain a man while his family is living in another place.

Q. Do you approve of the suggestion that there should be some outside provision made for the family when a man goes and works on a farm during the season?—A. Oh, it may be necessary.

Q. Would that not tend to depress the wages the farmer would pay?—A. Oh, I do not know. There would not be enough men involved among the returned soldiers.

Q. The great majority of the returned soldiers who have come back so far are not fit for the heavy work required on a farm. (No answer.)

By Mr Sutherland:

Q. You say most of the men who have gone on the farms have been men who owned their own farms?—A. A great majority.

Q. A small proportion of those employed as farm labourers have gone back?—A. Very, very few. The scale of wages in town is better.

Q. Is that due to a higher wage being paid by manufacturers of munitions and other manufacturers?—A. That does not affect us in the west to any great extent.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Did I understand you to say you were in favour of the land settlement scheme yourself?—A. Oh, yes, very much so, but I would not be prepared to say what that scheme would be because I am not a farmer and I think it would be a mistake for anyone but a farmer to evolve a scheme of this kind.

By the Chairman:

Q. All you ask is that before it is determined the western farmers have a chance to discuss it?—A. I think that would be wise, because the land that would be valuable is nearly all in the three western provinces.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. We have some lands in Ontario?—A. But your Ontario land is provincial.

Q. That is the distinction you are drawing?—A. Yours would have to be a provincial scheme.

By the Chairman:

Q. I suppose your contention would be that a land settlement scheme for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would have to be a Dominion scheme, applicable alone to those three provinces?—A. I would think so.

Q. In some cases the provinces are working out a land scheme?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think there should be a Dominion land scheme for those provinces where the land has not been taken over by the provinces?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. You heard Mr. Jones' statement that he thought some specially attractive incitements would have to be offered, and if those were offered that possibly 15 or 20 per cent of the returned men would go on the land?—A. Yes.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

Q. If those special inducements were offered, would it possibly not be unfair to some of the other provinces, by taking men from those provinces and attracting them to the particular provinces where the special inducements were offered, that those other provinces would lose a great many men by this scheme?—A. That might be so. We have plenty of room.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many vocational schools have you?—A. We have the Institute of Technology, in Calgary; that is where most of our technical training is being done.

Q. That is just established?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that the only place where there is vocational training?—A. Oh, no, we are doing some work in Edmonton.

Q. Where else?—A. Those are the only two points.

Q. Is there vocational training in connection with the convalescent hospitals?—We have it in the convalescent hospital at Calgary as well as in the school.

Q. How many convalescent hospitals have you now?—A. We have three hospitals.

Q. Is the accommodation quite sufficient?—A. Quite sufficient.

Q. And quite sufficient in the event of there being a sudden rather large influx?—A. If there were a rather large influx, Mr. Pardee, arrangements have been made for getting buildings into which we could move in five minutes.

Q. Have you special isolation homes for tubercular cases?—A. Yes, we have an institution in the Crows Nest Pass at Frank.

Q. How many beds have you got down there?—A. 61.

Q. Is that hospital full?—A. No. We added 11 beds there on the 8th of March.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And you have made arrangements for putting up huts if necessary also?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You have further provision for increased accommodation if it becomes necessary?—A. Yes. We have also arranged with the city hospital in Calgary to admit tubercular patients.

Q. How many beds have you in Alberta altogether?—A. 420.

Q. With provision for an increased immediate accommodation for how many more beds in the event of an influx?—A. We could house another 400 very comfortably inside of three or four days.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You could provide accommodation up to 1,000 if you wanted to?—A. Yes, easily. We could make provision for that number in three or four days. We can cover any eventuality.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Have you adopted the system of leasing hotel properties in order to provide hospital accommodation?—A. Not yet.

Q. Do you contemplate doing so?—A. It may be necessary. Of course that is a matter that is entirely out of my province, Mr. Pardee.

Q. Oh, is it?—A. That would be a matter for the Military Hospitals Commission, but we work in close co-operation with them.

Q. Then, speaking as a resident of Alberta, do you think the province has sufficient accommodation for returned men?—A. Oh, quite.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is there anything further you would like to bring to the attention of the committee?—A. There are one or two things I would like to mention, which are causing some annoyance. Really, I should not say annoyance, because the annoyances have been largely cleared up by the passage of the two orders in council relating to pay. What I have in mind are pay troubles, but I am going to Ottawa and hope to have those satisfactorily dealt with there.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What are these troubles?—A. Those are pay troubles (pointing to file).

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Have the soldiers who have returned to your province had any difficulty in getting their pay?—A. There has been delay in the past, but it is disappearing very materially now. The difficulty, I think, is more largely with the overseas paymaster than with the headquarters paymaster on this side. It is there, apparently, that most of the difficulties arise. There are, however, some changes in connection with the separation allowance which I would like to bring before the committee if I may.

Under the separation allowance regulations these are the dependents: Married men, widowers with children dependent on them, and single men who are the sole support of a widowed mother. Now, there are others equally dependent whose troubles I have taken up, and in some cases I have managed to get a ruling, but they are always special case rulings.

Q. The Patriotic Fund is not quite so limited as the Government is in that respect. Sometimes they assume the whole cost of maintaining the family where they can get no Government aid?—A. If it were not for the Patriotic Fund, I do not know what we would have done. I have a case of a dependent sister, entirely crippled with rheumatism. She is a charge on the public, other than the $20 allowed her by her brother who is overseas. Practically, the boy should not have gone because his obligation to his sister was as great as his obligation to the country.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. If you make the sister a dependent for separation allowance you raise thousands of cases?—A. I know you do, Mr. Bennett, but I was going to put it this way, where satisfactory proof of dependency can be secured; it would depend entirely on the proof of dependency.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would it not be better, where you have an aggravated case like that, to have it treated as a special order in council case?—A. That takes a long time.

Q. You are going to Ottawa and can take it up there?—A. These are all cases of that kind.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): I know a more deserving case than that, a widow on a farm whose only boy has gone to the war. They refused to give her separation allowance although she has had to hire men to do the work of the farm.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is there anything further, Mr. Stutchbury?—A. Yes, there is the question of pensions. Mr. Guilfoyle is also going to speak on that subject. But I do think, and it is very largely the feeling of the men, that the widow's pension should not be 80 per cent, but 100 per cent, that the loss of the husband is quite as much as the loss of two legs or two eyes. That should be a total disability no matter what the pension may be, it should be total for a widow; and it should also be for the widowed mother.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. She only receives 60 per cent?—A. Where total dependency is proven there should be no difference in the pension. There are cases of really extreme hardship. I have a case now of a mother who is very sick. The poor old grandmother is taking care of the children. They have $44 per month to educate and maintain those two children, the grandmother and the sick mother.

[Mr. H. Stutchbury.]

Q. Do you think in case the Government does not raise that pension that the same end could be obtained by the continuation of an organization like the Patriotic Fund to supplement special cases of hardship in the case of widows?—A. I do not think so; I do not think that would be fair.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. It would in that case have to be a permanent Committee?—A. That is only one side of it. These women are not receiving charity. Why should my wife, if I am killed have to go to the Patriotic Fund to have her pension supplemented? Particularly in the West men have given up good positions to go, they have forgotten their future and in many cases have forgotten their obligation to their families. I know of several cases there where men were earning $200 or $300 a month, but have their real estate obligations as everybody has in the West, and their dependents are living on a pension of from $32 to $50 per month.

Q. I understood you to say that the pension of a wife and of a widowed mother should both be 100 per cent disability?—A. And that there should be an upward tendency in the matter of pensions. There is another thing, if I might say it right here, I think it would be infinitely better if the pensions were graded on a 10 per cent basis instead of as at present with a spread from 20, 40, 60, 80 and 100. It should be from 10 to 20 and from 20 to 30 per cent disability and so on.

Q. There is, you think, too wide a spread?—A. Too wide a spread. Another feature of the present scale is that a medical board may say that the disability should be 30 per cent, the Pensions Board at Ottawa cuts down that disability to the next grade and the man is only given a 20 per cent pension. In other words the revision instead of beginning downwards should be upwards.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You say there are many cases where a man's disability comes just under the maximum percentage of that grade, and he only gets the same pension as a man who is just above the minimum, for instance with a 30 per cent disability will receive the same pension as a man with a 31 per cent?—A. Practically.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Under the Ontario Workman's Compensation Act, a man who received an injury while in his employment is given compensation, according to the extent by which his earning capacity is reduced owing to that injury, during the balance of his life. You think there is no reason why the same principle should not apply in the determination of the amount of the pension?—A. There is no reason whatever. I would be rather interested, myself, in the utilization of municipal waste. I have discussed the matter with a chemist out there who has been working on photographic waste and it has been discovered that 95 per cent of that waste can be rendered profitable. I was going to suggest to this Committee that the Federal Government put in its Department of Trade and Commerce, an Industrial Research Department.

Q. There is one there now.—A. There is one there? I want to see it when I go down. You take the straw, and all that kind of thing that we have in our Western Prairies, there has been a waste of an enormous amount, that ought to be of value and the manufacture of which would give employment.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I saw the whole details of the matter of gathering up all the waste products in the Western provinces and utilizing them again which has been under discussion. I think we might save many things that are now wasted and which in the aggregate represents an enormous sum of money.—A. In Alberta we have now an industrial survey being made by the Department of Education of the Provincial Government, we are working in harmony with the National Service Commission.

Q. The survey was commenced last September?—A. Yes, but we work together not only with regard to demobilization, but the greater expansion of industrial training, and it seems to me that with vocational training and technical training not only of soldiers, but of immigrants generally who are coming in; men should not be allowed to go haphazard into the work, but every opportunity should be given them. Take particularly the returned soldier. I think every man, whether his disability brings him under the scope of the educational plan of the Military Hospitals Commission, every man who has ambition enough to want to better himself and to get a look ahead should get the opportunity.

Q. You heard what Mr. Jones said as to the difficulty of telling men to do what they don't want to do?—A. We have not had that difficulty up there.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your idea is that not only the unfit men who fall below the percentage of full efficiency should be getting the opportunity of re-education, but also the fit men?—A. Yes; we found men come back here who were common labourers before they went over, but they got very, very close to the heart of things, and they have realized their obligation as citizens more than they ever realized it before, and are very keen, most of them very, very keen, to say, "Well now, how can I make myself a little better than I was before?" We want to give them that opportunity. We are doing it wherever it is possible; but I think as it is a national question, it is worth consideration.

Q. Do you think that the work of technical re-education is a Provincial question or a national question?—A. Not altogether; I think it is a joint question.

Q. You have technical institutions under the Provincial Government?—A. Oh, yes.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You have seen the report of the Technical Education Commission?—A. Yes, but I really think it is a joint question. I suppose there are some legal difficulties, and that sort of thing.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has the province of Alberta the facilities for giving technical education to a large number of men at present?—A. No.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. They have spent for technical education about $100,000?—A. That is the provincial expenditure, about $100,000.

Q. This special effort was only made since this time last year?—A. Yes.

Witness discharged.

Committee adjourned.

The Committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Sergt-Major J. A. GUILFOYLE, representing the European War Veterans' Association, Calgary, Mr. G. WELLS and Mr. HAROLD HODGSON appeared before the Committee.

Sergt-Major GUILFOYLE examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand Sergt-Major Guilfoyle that you are appearing before us, with Private Harold Hodgson and Private G. Wells, representing the Calgary European War Veterans' Association?—A. Yes.

[Sergt-Major Guilfoyle.]

Q. You are the president of it?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you give us a description as to how your organization or your incorporation took place, and the membership and objects of the association?—A. The objects of the association are to promote the welfare of persons who have served in the naval and military forces of His Majesty or the Allies in the European war, and have returned to Canada from Europe. We have not a charter at present.

Q. Are you applying for one?—A. Yes.

Q. You only include in your membership men who crossed the ocean?—A. Overseas members.

Q. Not men who have only been in camp in Canada?—A. No, sir.

Q. How large a membership have you?—A. We have about 300 members on our books who have paid their fees.

Q. Do you speak for southern Alberta, or for Calgary?—A. I speak for Calgary.

Q. Were there similar organizations at Lethbridge and McLeod?—A. They are organizing.

Q. Do you intend to endeavour to form a provincial organization eventually?—A. Yes, in the near future.

Q. What do you do for returned men?—A. We look after their welfare in every way that is possible for us as European war veterans to do, in obtaining employment for the men, if necessary to give them temporary assistance on loan, which we have done to the extent of some $1,500 or $1,800.

Q. You work in harmony and in connection with the other agencies in Calgary?—A. They are harmonious, sir.

Q. You are fully acquainted with the work of the Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes, I am.

Q. Is that satisfactory from a soldier's point of view?—A. They are doing very good work, sir.

Q. How about the Soldiers' Aid Commission of the Provincial Government?—A. We have none that I am aware of in the province.

Q. Referring to the Central Provincial Committee of Alberta, represented by Mr. Stutchbury, do you work with them?—A. We are a distinct and separate organization, but the spirit of harmony exists between us. They co-operate with us and we co-operate with them.

Q. As far as you are concerned, do you find the existing agencies in Alberta are sufficient to deal with the returned soldiers?—A. In my opinion, yes, sir.

Q. Do you think they would be sufficient after demobilization if large numbers come back?—A. That is a question I am not in a position to answer, because I doubt their resources are sufficient to handle the large numbers of men who will come back after demobilization.

Q. Hitherto you have had plenty of hospital space?—A. Yes.

Q. And no returned soldiers have been neglected from lack of hospital care or space?—A. None that I am aware of.

Q. And your employment agencies are working satisfactorily?—A. Yes.

Q. Any considerable number of your returned soldiers out of employment?—A. No, sir. I may mention as a matter of illustration that we handle practically all the employment for returned soldiers in Calgary.

Q. When you say you handle it? Do you mean you find jobs for the soldiers or soldiers for the jobs?—A. The secretary of our association is informed when a vacancy occurs, and we pick out the most suitable man we have on our list for the position. I may also add in connection with this movement that I am an honorary member of the Board of Trade through the position which I hold as President of the European War Veterans' Association, and in that board there is a committee which deals with returned soldiers, and we meet weekly for the purpose of discussing any subjects which we can further to benefit the returned men, such as employment. At the present moment we have a scheme by which Mr. P. Burns, who is a member of the board, is giving to returned men 100 acres of land within the city limits for the purpose of raising truck garden stuff.

Q. Giving them the use of that piece of land?—A. Yes, and we propose as an association to take up about 20 acres of that ourselves, so as to be able to produce a revenue for our association. The remainder will be divided amongst individual men who are discharged from convalescent camps, and are practically back again into full privileges of civil life. They will take up some little tracts of that and cultivate it for garden plots, and I find the returned men are very keen on such schemes as that. It was not very long after we put the scheme before the members that we had a list of names of men requiring from 2 acres down to a quarter of an acre for the purpose of cultivating.

Q. Now you have come in contact of course a good deal with returned soldiers as they have come back. What has been done that, in your judgment, might be better done? What complaints have the men to make of the services that are being performed for them?—A. There have been many complaints in reference to pay and pensions that are now being adjusted. No doubt previous to January of the present year the Pensions Staff was either inadequate or incompetent, but since the Government has organized local pension offices, with power to take action, and the different amendments to the Pension Act since January, 1917, the complaints have been less.

Q. How many pension offices are there?—A. One only in Calgary.

Q. Is that kept open all the time?—A. That is open during office hours for any complaints from any soldier in reference to his pension.

Q. He can go individually and talk the matter over?—A. Yes.

Q. What have you in Alberta that may be termed the trouble department for the returned soldier?—A. Well, sir, up to the present, Mr. Stutchbury, the Secretary of the Hospitals Commission had a lot of that trouble work, and I am not aware of any other source through which the men voice their troubles, with the exception of Major Daniels, who is the representative of the Dominion Hospitals Commission in Calgary.

Q. Do you think that there is adequate provision at present in Alberta for an immediate airing of the grievance of the soldier and for securing prompt redress?—A. We believe that the local centralized pension office has removed 90 per cent of the difficulties which existed previous to the organization of this body.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Who is in charge of it?—A. Private Alsdorf, a returned soldier.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is there a similar office in Edmonton?—A. A similar office in Edmonton.

Q. You have two offices then in Alberta?—A. Yes, two in Alberta.

Q. Have you any further suggestions to make by which we could improve the lot of the returned soldier or his dependents?—A. I have, sir.

Q. We would be glad to hear them.—A. As regards asylums for the insane soldiers, there should be an asylum for the care of demented soldiers as it is not desirable to place a man in provincial institutions where, in many cases, they have to mix with criminal lunatics and born alien enemies. Also a state asylum would be in a better position, medically and otherwise, to care for them and make their surroundings more comfortable, which would be self-supporting, as the pensions to the men which are now given to the provincial institutions would revert to Government institutions.

Q. You think then that the care of the hopelessly insane should still be maintained in the hands of the Dominion Government?—A. Yes, sir, as I believe the men would receive better care and the Government would be in a better position to provide the most up-to-date treatment for men who are mentally defective. Also it is not desirable that men who have become demented, through injuries or otherwise in this great war, should be housed with and receive the same treatment as a lunatic or a born alien enemy.

Q. You have in Alberta a Provincial Insane Asylum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a satisfactory institution?—A. I cannot give you any information relative to it, but it is the wish of a great many soldiers that the demented soldiers should be cared for by the state in a separate and distinct institution.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many returned insane soldiers are there in Alberta?—A. That I cannot tell you.

Q. Have you any idea at all?—A. Quite a percentage of men are coming back at the present time who are more or less insane.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you make any distinction between the insane man who has served overseas and the man who had been found to be insane on this side of the water?—A. A man who, in the opinion of the Medical Board, became insane through active service in this war should receive a distinct and separate treatment from a man who goes insane through his own personal neglect or abuse on this side.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you know of any returned soldiers who are now in asylums in Alberta?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know of any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any of them have been found there or not?—A. That I cannot tell you, sir.

Q. Then you are making the suggestion merely as a preventive measure before anything is done at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not by reason of any complaints of the treatment of returned soldiers in the Provincial Asylum?—A. No, sir. It is a suggestion for the future.

Q. This suggestion is not founded on any concrete instance of any mal-treatment of any returned soldier?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know the number at all, nor can you give it to us approximately, of the returned insane soldiers?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. How many soldiers have returned, altogether, to Alberta?—A. The Hospitals Commission is in a position to give that information. I believe somewhere in the neighbourhood of 1,100.

Q. And of that 1,100 do you know where each one is located at the present time?—A. We have the addresses of the men who joined our club.

Q. And there are how many of them?—A. We have over 300 in Calgary district alone.

Q. That is all that you can speak of?—A. All that I can speak of personally.

Q. Among that 300 there are no insane?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any insane cases in Alberta at all?—A. There are some in the Provincial Asylum, but I am not aware of the facts concerning the individual cases.

Now I wish to bring up another matter.

By the Chairman:

Q. You do not mind our interrupting you?—A. Not in the least.

There should be a soldiers' childrens' orphanage established, where children can be cared for, educated and trained. This orphanage could be used where the guardian was not a desirable person to take charge of the children. Such institutions exist in Great Britain and Ireland, and to them are sent children who are taken from, in some cases, undesirable surroundings and environments. Take a case where the widow dies. The oldest children are entitled to a pension until they arrive at a certain age. The guardian who will take charge of those children may do it out of sympathy or with the object of getting that pension, and the education and training those children will get will not be conducive to their welfare in future life.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who would you think should determine whether those orphan children should be kept with the guardian or should go to the institution?—A. Where it was proved that the guardian was not a desirable person the children should be taken charge of and put into such an institution.

Q. Through legal process?—A. Through legal process. Of course, the majority of cases of that sort would arise out of police court proceedings through neglect.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Are there any children in that position now in Calgary?—A. There are the two children of a man who recently was killed who are being taken charge of by the grandmother. I am not in a position to state whether the grandparents are prepared to keep those two children, who are infants, practically speaking. The grandparents are getting very old, and I am not prepared to say whether they are in a position to keep those children for a period of 15 years and give them the training they should get, and which they could get in an institution controlled by the Dominion authorities.

Q. You would not make it at all compulsory that those orphan children should go to that institution?—A. I would, if they had no guardian, or if the guardian was not a desirable person.

Q. Quite so, but in the first instance?—A. As long as the guardian is a respectable person doing the best he could for the children, I should undoubtedly leave them in his charge.

By the Chairman:

Q. Now, give us your next suggestion.—A. In the case, sir, of a man dying from causes due directly to service, after discharge, his dependents should receive a pension similar to that of a man killed on active service, as it will be seen that the cause of death was due to injuries received while fighting for his country. For instance, a man may come back and be discharged from the army, receiving, we will say, a total disability allowance. He re-enters civilian life with his total disability allowance, and six months afterwards he dies. He leaves a widow and children, but I am not aware that any provision is made in the present Pensions Act for such a case.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. How long a time should such a provision be effective? One witness yesterday said he thought provision should be made for two years.—A. In the case of total disability?

Q. Yes. Directly attributable to the man's war service.—A. I do not think it is possible to define a special term in that case.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. In the case of total disability you would make it an unlimited period?—A. I would make it unlimited because the man's death was directly due to the injuries he received on active service.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is if the man has total disability and dies you think that his wife and family should be just as well off as if he——?—A. As if he had died on the field. That man has prolonged his agony by living; as will occur in many cases.

[Sergt.-Major Guilfoyle.]

Q. And he has been of no value to his family in that condition?—A. No value to them. The widow's position should be exactly the same as if he had died on the field of battle.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You would put it more broadly than that? You would include the man's disability, no matter from what cause he had died?—A. I would, because the man's life has been shortened through injuries received on active service. I would, undoubtedly, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Supposing he died of old age?—A. He would not die of old age, because the injuries he has received would undoubtedly shorten his life.

The CHAIRMAN: That is a good suggestion, we will have that looked into.

Mr. GUILFOYLE: The gratuity system is the next point I wish to take up. A man should receive a pension for injuries received under 20 per cent, not a gratuity. Take, for instance, total deafness in one ear, the present Act only provides a gratuity although that man has a disability that will hamper him always, and is deprived of a great many of the joys of life on account of his ear being impaired. It also places him in jeopardy at times and would deprive him from following many occupations where keenness of hearing is absolutely necessary. The American pension scale provides $10 a month for total deafness in one ear up to $25 a month for total deafness in one ear and partial in the other. Deafness is an injury that will form quite a large percentage of the casualties in this war, and those classified under 20 per cent should equally receive pensions and consideration. Take the case where a man receives an injury to his ear which causes total deafness, that man has a disability which places him at various times in very awkward positions, he jeopardizes his life on many occasions, and the doctors will tell you that it is hard for him to locate the direction from which noises are coming. Take, for instance, a man having important legal proceedings, that man may miss a point, he cannot grasp it, and may lose his case through it. Take the man attending church, he cannot hear the sermon; going to the theatre, he cannot enjoy the play. These are instances where deafness is certainly a severe disability to a man.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Crossing the streets, he might not be able to avoid an accident?—A. No.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Under the present Pension Act, he has to be deaf in both ears before he is entitled to 40 per cent disability. He may be nine-tenths deaf in both ears under the present regulations and in that case would get only a gratuity?—A. Yes, that is a man deaf in one ear.

Q. He may be nine-tenths deaf in both ears and yet only get a gratuity, and no pension?—A. In Class 4, Disability, 40 per cent and less than 60 per cent—pension 40 per cent of Class 1, the following examples are given: Loss of one eye, loss of one foot, total deafness, loss of two thumbs.

Q. Look at the next class?—A. (Reads): "Disability, 20 per cent and less than 40 per cent—pension, 20 per cent of Class 1. For example: Loss of one thumb, ankylosis of elbow, knee, shoulder, wrist or ankle. Class 6, disability under 20 per cent, a gratuity not exceeding $100. For example: Total deafness in one ear, partial deafness in both, loss of index or other finger."

Q. That is what I say, for partial deafness in both ears all he gets is a miserable gratuity?—A. Yes.

Q. That is what I mean. Take another case: We had this morning a case where a man lost two fingers off his right hand, and he is only entitled under these rules you are reading—A. To a gratuity.

[Sergt.-Major Guilfoyle.]

Q. And in the case specified he got $55 of a gratuity. I took the trouble to telephone to the Workmen's Compensation Board in the city, and they told me that, under the Workmen's Compensation Act of Ontario, if the man were injured to the extent of more than 10 per cent of his earning power he would be put on a permanent pension and not given a gratuity. You claim that the soldier should be entitled to the same consideration as that?—A. I claim, sir, that my disability, or a man's disability with the loss of hearing, is at least 20 per cent—

Q. Of his earning power?—A. Yes, because you are deprived of many occupations you might like to take up; for instance, telegraphy or anything in connection with railroad work. May I follow up now with regard to artificial limbs, sir. It is an injustice to the western men to have to come to Toronto for artificial limbs.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): That is right.

The WITNESS: Western factories should be used as far as possible to provide men with artificial limbs, and if found necessary, Government factories should be started which would save congestion here in Toronto and remove the extreme annoyance, inconvenience, loss of time and expense to the men and the Government.

By the Chairman:

Q. If you and your friends should remain over in Toronto until to-morrow, I would suggest that you visit the artificial limb factory here. You will be very much interested in learning what they are doing and what their difficulties are?—A. I quite understand. We have a limb factory in Calgary, and we have sent men from Calgary to Toronto when the limbs could have been made there. Also I became very interested in artificial limb making since I heard the evidence given before you and have questioned several men on the street in Toronto with regard to it. They were satisfied with the legs that are turned out, and I have been told on more than one occasion that they are not getting satisfaction in the case of the arms. They favour the Carnes arms, which allow a man to use his fingers independently, and in the limb that they are making here the man can only use the thumb. In the case where they give the men the Carnes arm they have to make special application and they have a certain amount of difficulty before they get it.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. To whom do they make application?—A. I presume to the A.D.M.S. or the Military Hospitals Commission, whichever is taking charge of the work.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. That is, when they make application they specify what they want?—A. No, sir, but they are so satisfied that this Carnes arm is the best arm that they are aware of. I have no knowledge of it personally, but they are very anxious that they should be supplied with it, as it is more practical and lighter in weight. There is a patent attached to the Carnes arm which is not attached to the arm usually supplied.

Q. Is there any agency representing the manufacturer of that arm in Toronto?—A. They are already securing some of these in the city through the Hospitals Commission.

Q. Are there any other manufacturers of artificial limbs in the West except the one in Calgary?—A. I am only aware of this one in Calgary.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many hands are employed there?

Mr. HODGSON: Ten or twelve men.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. When speaking to those soldiers and listening to their complaints regarding limbs supplied here, did you get any complaints regarding the legs supplied?—A. As [Sergt.-Major Guilfoyle.]

regards legs they apparently have no complaints. I believe the patent on the Carnes only has reference to the arm.

Q. Have you any complaint regarding the legs supplied at all?—A. Some men have been here for some considerable time. I do not understand the congestion. For instance, we have some cases where a man goes back to the West who has not already been supplied with an arm. Now, that man has secured suitable employment which he is anxious to retain. Now, that man has to leave his employment to come down to Toronto and he probably will be kept here for three months and his position will not be held open indefinitely for that time.

Mr. Ross: I think your point is well taken, not only with regard to the West but for the Maritime Provinces as well.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Have you ever seen a hand constructed so that a man can use a pencil? I have a man in my riding who made two hands himself. He has a bicycle repair shop. He can do bicycle repairing, and can write with a pencil as legibly as a man with his own hand.—A. I know in the illustrated papers, like the Sphere and the Illustrated London News they show wonderful performances by artificial limbs at present being used in France and the Old Country. I am quite sure the men are satisfied the Government is prepared to give them the best arm possible.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Scammel tells me that there are already 30 of those Carnes arms on order for men in Toronto and he also states that not only you gentlemen, but any gentleman who comes here from Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan or British Columbia will be welcome to-morrow morning to go over that limb factory.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What do you think of the proposition that the Commission advertise a prize, for the best model of arms or legs?—A. I think it is a good idea, it might bring out an invention that would not otherwise be thought of.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I notice that there are advertisements to that effect in the London, England papers.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. How many men are there in your district with only one leg or one arm?—A. There are about 12 or 15 without arms and I think possibly the same number without legs. We have a large number at present in the Convalescent Homes, such as Ogden, that are limbless, and who will eventually, unless the system is changed, have to come to Toronto to receive their limbs. As regards the teaching of a trade, I submit for your consideration that tailoring be taught; I suggest that the Government take over the military tailoring, where large numbers of men can be employed in making the clothing for the army, and these factories could teach tailoring to anybody and the men there would practically become wage earners from the start. The same remark would apply to shoe-making, saddlery, etc. Similar factories to what I have suggested in England are working successfully. I know that the military clothing for the British Army, previous to this war, was done in the factory called Pimlico, in London, exclusively. The uniforms are cut and made by soldiers who are trained master tailors in the different regiments, and I do not see why a similar institution should not be successfully operated in Canada. If it were started here, it would be the means of employing a large number of men, and there would be the additional advantage that a large number of men would be taught the trade there, and they would afterwards go outside into commercial life and become practical tailors. This idea of teaching men to "cobble," to mend boots, and to put on a patch, is not enough; teach him the trade, so that he will become a good workman, and he would have a splendid opportunity of doing well. In those trades which I have suggested, the men without legs or arms would be able to find employment in the factories.

[Sergt.-Major Guilfoyle.]

By the Chairman:

Q. You think that after the war the Government should make all its own clothing for the militia?—A. Yes, and these factories would become schools in which to teach the men the trade. Barbering is another trade that could be taught in these technical schools and also telegraphy.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. A man with a wooden leg could do the barbering or telegraphing?—A. Yes, sir. Now, sir, I am coming to a subject with reference to which I would be obliged if you will allow me to finish my remarks before giving me an examination on it. There is a considerable amount of discontent with the present Pensions Act, as discrimination has been made between the officer and the man. Take $480, the amount you allow for total disability—I am quite aware of the additional allowance of $250 for those who are unable to attend to their physical want, but the large percentage of totally disabled will be able to look after themselves therefore they will not be entitled to the additional allowance. Also that an allowance has been provided for children but the great percentage will have no children, so that the $40 per month is far too small an allowance for the totally disabled soldier. Any man knows that with the present high cost of living it is impossible for a man to live on that allowance with that reasonable degree of comfort with which the country should provide our disabled soldiers. Previous to 1914 we had very few professional officers, and those that we have now have been trained at the country's expense. The rank and file of the Canadian Army are drawn from all branches of professional, commercial and industrial life, the same as the commission rank, and a very large percentage of the commission rank got their office through social pull, and not through their military qualifications; therefore it is not fair to the rank and file to discriminate against them in the matter of pensions. I would make an exception in the case of the higher command where there are men of exceptional military ability, the majority of whom were professional soldiers. Cases can often be quoted where the company commander was socially on an equality with a private in his company and, previous to the war was, in some cases, dependent upon this private for his living. Also cases can be quoted where inexperienced officers got wounded shortly after getting to the seat of hostilities and where they received the pension for their rank although they had no experience or exceptional qualification. When speaking of total disability I am also bearing in mind the other disability though this would create a precedent, this war has been a series of precedents; I do not want to bring the captain down to the level of the private, but I would respectfully suggest that a pension which would permit a soldier, commissioned or otherwise, a reasonably sufficient supply of the comforts of life should be given. Unskilled labourers are, in the West, getting 35 cents per hour, or $84 per month. That is the average pay of the unskilled labourer in the West, and, may I state that the large percentage of our men have come from other ranks than the unskilled market. I respectfully place these suggestions as regards pensions before you, knowing that the present Act is not favourably received by the rank and file and that the object of this Commission is to remove the genuine grievances of the returned soldiers.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your main objection is that $40 per month is not enough for the totally disabled, but not helpless soldier, who has no children?—A. A man totally disabled is totally helpless, his living afterwards is very precarious, he may be able to do work for a month, or a week, and he may probably be sick for six weeks or six months, and unable to do any work, so that the allowance made to a totally disabled man must be sufficient to provide the ordinary, reasonable, comforts of life for that man.

Q. The man that you regard particularly in the West as being in need of further assistance is the man who is totally disabled and who gets his $40 per month, but who is still able to wait on himself and does not get $250 for attendance?—A. No, sir.

[Sert.-Major Guilfoyle.]

these remarks are also applicable to other disabilities. Take for instance—I can give you a case in point, that of a man who, to my knowledge has lost his right arm from the shoulder, not leaving a sufficient handle upon which to put an artificial arm or it can only be done with great inconvenience. That man according to the present rate of pensions would receive $24 per month, and that man previous to the war was earning $5 and over per day, as a mine-boss in a coal mine. Now that man will come back to this country, you may give him technical instruction to be a chaffeur, or a mechanical engineer, but you are not giving that man any security that he is going to receive, for the remainder of his life, employment in that particular line. It seems to me that you must bear in mind that that man has been deprived of following up his usual employment or profession, through the loss of his arm and is compelled therefore to choose or select another occupation which he will be allowed to follow, but he hasn't any security of continuous employment at that particular work which he adopts.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. It was suggested here that that type of man might become a pit boss?—A. But there is no guarantee that the man will get a position as a pit boss?

By the Chairman:

Q. There is no guarantee that he could have kept his old job all his life?—A. Apparently the man could have in the ordinary course of events.

Q. You are aware, of course, that in cases such as you describe a man will be entitled to re-education, and might take six months or a year getting a new education to make up to him by education what he had lost in his arm; you understand that?—A. I understand the drift of your remarks.

Q. The Hospitals Commission undertake to receive a man of that kind and give him a new education to fit him for a new employment of equal lucrativeness to the one he has been following?—A. But there is no guarantee the man will receive employment at that particular branch.

Q. But the probabilities would be that they would endeavour to train him towards an employment for which there was a demand?—A. And the new technical knowledge that the man got might not bring the man's wages anything near what he was previously earning.

Q. But the endeavour would be to have it so turn out?—A. But by raising the present pensions you would compensate the man better for the loss of that arm, and he would be better able to provide for himself, and that additional provision would be made for his future life. Another thing I will take up is the reimbursing of men. There have been cases where a man has been discharged from the army and he has to spend money in doctor's fees for treatment of injuries received through which he was discharged from the service. The fees incurred by a man suffering from disease or injuries caused by active service, subsequent to discharge, and afterwards re-attested for further treatment, should be allowed. We have been very glad to see that amendment has been made to the Pension Act whereby a man can be re-attested and brought on the strength of the army for treatment; but there have been cases where men have had to spend quite a considerable amount of money in the treatment of those diseases; therefore I would say that where a man can produce his doctor's bill to show that that money was spent for that particular disability, that amount should be allowed by the Government.

MR. MIDDLEBRO: Provided it is reasonable.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your idea is, then, that if a man is discharged and afterwards becomes ill, and endeavours with his own money to pay his doctor's expenses, and runs up a bill, and finally appeals to the hospital authorities, and is put back into hospital, that the bill incurred in the interval of discharge should be also assumed by the Government?—A. That is my idea.

Q. Now, would it be satisfactory if an order were passed by which all attested soldiers might have the right for a given period to call upon the A.D.M.S. for medical advice and assistance?—A. That would provide for the case, but these cases have already occurred.

Mr. HODGSON: Last summer I was taken sick in Calgary; I applied to Major Johnston, A.D.M.S. He gave me a prescription, and I went to the druggist and had to pay $4.50 for my own medicine.

By the Chairman:

Q. Were you eventually re-attested, and did you go back to hospital?—A. No, I could not get a board.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Did you apply for a board?—A. Yes.

Q. Through whom?—A. The A.D.M.S.

Q. What did he say?—A. He was too busy; he didn't have time; I was to go back; I am still going back yet.

Q. Have you got a board yet?—A. No, I got tired of it.

Q. How long is it since you made the application?—A. I was discharged just a year ago this month. I was discharged on half pension, as we called it at that time; I waited three months for my pension, and it did not come through. I then applied to the Hospitals Commission. They notified the A.D.M.S. The A.D.M.S. said that I was discharged without pension. The Hospitals Commission at once took the matter up with Ottawa. Ottawa said that my case, they had never been notified of my case. Later on I got a letter from Ottawa through Major Johnston, A.D.M.S., to say that they had found my papers in an old box, thrown to one side with a lot of others, and they would take the matter up immediately.

Q. When was that?—A. This was last summer; I haven't got the exact date. Then a few days after that I got a letter from the A.D.M.S. to say I was to go up and have my case re-opened. I went into the Board room. I was never examined; I was just told to get out, and that my case would be looked into. I then waited another two months. Altogether I waited eight months before I got any pension.

Q. Before you got a pension?—A. Before I got any money at all. They acknowledged that I had been placed on pension, later on. Then they put me back on pay for six months. I gave up my discharge paper and received another one; it is dating to September. I got my $8 a month; they reduced me down from what it was, $16 a month, to $8 a month. I never was examined. I was told to go up different times, and every time I would go up there they said they were too busy; and it is still the same way yet.

Q. You have never been examined yet?—A. No, sir. I was just told to go in, and they looked me over with my clothes on. Mine was a gassed case, and at different intervals I used to have bad spells, as much as two a week, sometimes twice a day. In Calgary many a time I dropped down in the street. I got my first pension cheque in November. Two days after I got my first pension cheque, which I was supposed to have a pension for a year, I got another letter from the A.D.M.S. saying I was to go up and have another medical board. Of course I am working; I have to work for my living, and I can't afford to run up there every half day in the week. I spent 5 half days in one week, and never got any satisfaction, and I got tired, and I have never been back since.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Who is that A.D.M.S.?—A. Major Johnston.

[Mr. Harold Hodgson.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Where does he live?—A. In Calgary.

Mr. GUILFOYLE: Another matter I would like to bring to the Committee's notice is this. We have a large number of men who are joining and have been accepted in the Civil Service. Now, men who have joined the Civil Service should be allowed the time since they joined the Canadian Expeditionary Force, as though they had been in the service, to count for pay and pension. I think you will find such a system existing in Great Britain and Ireland, where one branch of the service is allowed time in that way; and especially in the Canadian Expeditionary Force I think it would be a nice recognition of their services if they were given that privilege.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is, their time as Civil Servants should count from the day of their enlistment?—A. They should have this time to count towards pay and pension. Another matter which is very often discussed by returned men, and which was a subject of a resolution at one of our ordinary meetings recently where 300 were present, and that is that alien enemies should be disfranchised. For example, if those men have any influence in the Government of the country they would undoubtedly introduce bills detrimental to the returned soldiers. I believe if such an Act were put into the statutes by the Government it would be joyfully received by the whole of the people of Canada.

Q. Whom do you mean by alien enemies?—A. Such as Austrians and Germans—persons born in enemy countries. Those men at the present time in Saskatchewan have the majority of votes, and those men would introduce bills detrimental to the returned soldiers.

Q. How far back would you go with that?—A. I would leave that to the discretion of the Government.

Q. You are laying down the principle only?—A. Yes.

Q. Men born in countries with which we are at present at war?—A. Should be disfranchised.

Q. During the war?—A. Yes, and afterwards, and the next coming election, whether provincial or Dominion, because they will have the majority of the votes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Even if they have been naturalized?—A. If they have been naturalized previous to the war I would place a limit of five years, because it will show them the men intended to become genuine Canadian citizens.

Q. You would let him vote?—A. I would leave that to the discretion of the Government.

Q. Supposing an alien enemy has become a naturalized Canadian before the war broke out, you would not put penalties on that man, would you?—A. Well, sir, a man who did not become naturalized before the war—we can only look on him as an alien enemy pure and simple.

Q. But I am speaking of the case where he becomes naturalized?—A. Once a German always a German and I believe these men will vote in a way detrimental to the interests of the returned soldiers.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. You would not allow anyone who had become naturalized under five years to vote?—A. I would not.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Your legislation would correspond with the British legislation in taking away the titles from the Duke of Cumberland and Duke of Albany?—A. That should have been done long ago. A great deal of delay has been caused by keeping men hanging around waiting on board. The men should be allowed travelling expenses.

Q. Do you mean the medical boards?—A. The men should be allowed travelling expenses when having to attend before a pension board, as many of them will have to come long distances and leave their work. This would also prevent any unnecessary delay in boarding the men, as the board would be called upon to explain any unnecessary expense. If I were called upon to attend the board a certain day and I was not dealt with on that day the board should be called upon to account for why I was not boarded on that day, incurring an extra day's allowance, and that would do away with a great deal of this "call to-morrow."

By the Chairman:

Q. Where a man breaks down, having been previously discharged, would you have him re-committed at his expense?—A. He will be examined by his local practitioner, and upon the report of the local doctor he will be forwarded to be examined by the board at his nearest headquarters.

Q. You want to put the man in every part of your province on exactly the same basis?—A. Yes.

Q. So that there would be no disadvantage to the man living 300 miles away from Calgary?—A. No, that man will have two or three days to reach military headquarters. He has lots of time to get boarded, and I believe you will find that there will be great delay in the case of men drawing small pensions being re-examined, unless provision is made for their travelling allowance.

Q. I understand where the Government has summoned a man to attend—not where he comes himself—that they think the Government should allow pay and travelling expenses, hotel bills covering his expenses there and back?—A. I do, sir. Another suggestion is that all Canadians abroad who have joined any of His Majesty's forces, or those of his Allies, in the present war be entitled to the benefit of any settlement scheme or other scheme submitted by the Government. This would also include any reservists of the Allies who resided in this country previous to the war, and who left this country after the war to join their respective armies.

Q. While you are speaking of the status of the family in Imperial enlistments, how about the Imperial pensions in this country. Are they adequate?—A. That I cannot tell you. I have not a copy of the Pensions Act, neither do I know a man that has drawn pensions.

Q. You have a considerable number of widows in Alberta who are the widows of Imperial Army men?—A. Yes.

Q. Who have been killed in British regiments in this war?—A. Yes.

Q. Is their pension adequate to live on in Alberta?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. That has not been brought to your notice?—A. No.

Q. If a man was a British reservist and went from Alberta and served in the British regiments in France, would he be eligible for membership in your association?—A. A man who lived in Alberta?

Q. And joined a British regiment?—A. And subsequently returned to Canada?

Q. Yes?—A. Undoubtedly I would include those. In looking over the objects of this Committee I notice you refer to receptions, and I am of the opinion they are inclined to become cooler as time wears on, probably owing to the public becoming familiar with the large number of returned soldiers coming back. It must be disappointing to a great many of our lads to see the coldness of their reception on returning to their homes, after practically sacrificing all for their country. A direction should be sent out by the Government calling for the formation of civil reception committees to meet our returned wounded and disabled men and to welcome them back in the name of the Dominion, and such a welcome would remain a lasting souvenir in the memory of our lads. You will see many men coming back and you will probably see the porter, the wife and a couple of children at the station, and that man will be looking forward to a civic reception where the mayor and aldermen of the council would meet him and welcome him back in the name of the Dominion, and the citizens of Canada are becoming so familiar with the number coming back that the spirit is dying although perhaps it may live in your large centres where there are several organizations which may go there to meet them, but in the west, and the east I am afraid also, that spirit of welcoming the men back and giving them a dinner or a banquet is dying out.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Is that not because of the fact that the people did not know that they were coming, particularly in the smaller places?—A. We have not taken up that particular branch. The Hospitals Commission might notify the people days beforehand of the arrival of these men in a certain district, and plenty of time given to organize a committee to meet and receive these men.

Q. But as a matter of fact they are not notified and a great many arrive at their home town without any notice having been sent home?—A. It is quite easy for a reception committee to find out from the pensions board and the Hospitals Commission when the next band of wounded will come in.

Q. I am speaking of the small place where there is no reception committee and no notice has been forwarded to the village or whoever is in authority there that the men are coming home?—A. That could be done. Now, there is another matter, gentlemen.

By the Chairman:

Q. May I interrupt you a moment? Mr. Stutchbury told us in his evidence that he had several hundred branches scattered throughout Alberta. Are they not notified from the Division Centre?—A. They are notified by Mr. Stutchbury. I believe he wires them that certain men are coming to the District.

Q. Well then, your machinery is working all right?—A. The authorities in the Calgary District, as far as I know, are co-operating in every way possible for the benefit, and the benefit alone, of the returned man.

Q. So that the local organization gets notice that the man is coming, and if he is not met when he arrives it is owing to a lack of response on the part of the citizens?—A. It is owing to a lack of response on the part of the citizens; but I may say that we have the co-operation of the civic authorities in Calgary in every way for the betterment of the condition of the returned soldiers.

Another matter I wish to touch upon is land settlement. I am not going to go deeply into it, as two of my colleagues in the Association, who are experienced farmers, are here. But there is a statement made by Mr. Kidner in his evidence before your Committee at Ottawa, when he stated that out of 340 men only six made a direct appeal to go on the land.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. In Alberta?—A. That was in Alberta. That was when the 340 men practically composed the whole of the returned soldiers in Alberta, and I do not think that you will get a large percentage of the men who are desirous of going on the land to do so until a Government scheme has been submitted and its features are known to the men. At a meeting held by the Association of which I am president, convened especially for the purpose of discussing this land question and attended by some 200 odd men, I asked if there were a suitable land scheme put forward by the Government, what percentage of that meeting would go on the land to become producers. Seventy per cent signified their willingness to do so. You may say that is a large percentage, but was very particular in ascertaining the sentiment of the meeting, as I wanted the information to lay before this Committee. The men in the proportion I have indicated said they would go on the land and become producers if a suitable land scheme were brought forward by the Government. Because we realize, and the average man who returns from the front now realizes the stringency that will occur in the financial market and the congestion there will be in the labour market all over this country; and if a suitable land scheme were decided upon our men would take up land in great numbers and would become producers to the great benefit of the country. I believe if that were done a surprising number of returned soldiers would take advantage of the opportunity.

[Sergt.-Major Guilfoyle.]

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. What would you suggest as a suitable scheme?—A. I will leave that to be explained by my two colleagues who accompanied me in order to make representations on this occasion.

Q. Was the matter discussed at any of your meetings?—A. Yes, and at great length. Just to give you an illustration of how keen the sentiment is in the West on this land scheme. Previous to coming down here I held five informal meetings to discuss this matter, meetings of a conversational character. The men came in large numbers night after night and remained until 11 and half past 11 talking it over. More so in the West than in the East the returned soldiers are farmers, or have been employed on farms.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Are there any unemployed soldiers in Calgary at the present time?—A. The civic authorities and the Board of Trade co-operate with us in finding employment for returned soldiers. The men are also given positions, wherever possible, under the Provincial and Dominion Governments, and private firms likewise do their best to supply positions. These are sufficient for the present, but I doubt whether we will be able to provide employment for the large numbers of men who will be returning in four, five or six months at the rate of 50 or 60 a week. Then the problem will really become a serious one.

By the Chairman:

Q. Then your land settlement scheme will be necessary?—A. Yes, a land scheme will be necessary. We have at the present moment men who are physically fit to go upon the land if a suitable scheme is inaugurated. I would ask you, gentlemen, to take my opinion as that of a man who is interested, not only in his own welfare but in that of his comrades, and I believe that immediate action should be taken in connection with the question of land settlement.

Q. What was your employment before you went to the war?—A. I was a clerk.

Q. Are you employed at present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the same line of business?—A. The same line of business.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Are you a clerk in a wholesale establishment?—A. I am in the Dominion Customs Service.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understood you to say that Messrs. Harold Hodgson and G. Wells are both prepared to speak on this land question. Shall we hear them next?—A. If you please, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: Well, gentlemen, we will hear what you have to say.

Mr. WELLS: As our President has told you, we called our members together at a number of meetings to discuss the question of land settlement. We could not take action in any special direction because we were working in the dark, and we did not know what the principles would be of any scheme which might be put forward. Different speakers got up and advocated different suggestions. If you like, I will leave with you a list of the different suggestions which were made at those meetings and which seemed to meet with approval.

By the Chairman:

Q. You might read suggestions and explain them to us?—A. I will read the suggestions and explain them. The first suggestion, which was endorsed by the majority of the men, was that 320 acres of land are necessary to each man in Alberta, for the following reasons: That owing to the backward spring and light rainfall in Alberta, it is necessary that a man should have more land than he cultivates to make a successful farm. The Government has recognized that by giving a man a homestead and a pre-emption. Our average rainfall in Alberta is somewhere about 14 inches a year. If that fell between April and August in the growing season, it would be abundant. Unfortunately most of it comes in the form of snow in the winter time, dries up on the high land, and in the low places runs into creeks, rivers and sloughs. Practically all the moisture that falls between November and April does not penetrate into the land at all. Whereas if a man has his land prepared and summer-fallowed, and follows a course of dry farming that conserves the moisture and he gets the benefit of two season snow-fall or rain-fall. Another thing is, we get a very late fall, the harvest is late and sometimes it is away on in September before we begin to cut. I have been a resident of Calgary for 24 years and I remember one year in particular when there were five distinct snowstorms before the 1st of October. I am not trying to knock the country, but it just shows you how impossible it is for the farmer to do much fall work.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. When the country is on its bad behaviour?—A. Yes. There are seasons when a man cannot do considerable fall ploughing. There are seasons when a farmer who thrashes from the stook may be delayed in getting his crop off the land by bad weather, or inability to get the thrasher, thus shortening his fall ploughing.

Now, dealing with the matter of land settlement, if the Government brings forward a scheme the land will not belong to the settler until he gets his patent.

As the land is the property of the State the settler has to be paid for doing the improvements so as to enable him to live and our idea is that the improvements that he does should be paid for by the state and that if he gets dissatisfied he is paid for his labour and can leave it and change his vocation.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. He gets paid?—A. That is a debt he owes the state.

Q. That is another clause then?—A. Yes. (Reads):

3. Lumber, implements, etc., to be supplied at wholesale rates.

4. From two to four horses to be supplied each man, half mares.

The reason for that is that in the spring, if a man wants to make a quick trip into town he can do it. (Reads):

5. If he wants to go in for dairying, two to six cows to be provided him, the state to insure this stock.

We are going on the supposition that the Government would give a man a loan to enable him to become a producer right away. It has been suggested that the Government keep these men on farms under pay and separation allowance. We prefer, sir, that these men be capitalized, that they should be given a loan. Supposing a man is given a loan of $2,000 at 5 per cent, and at the end of five years he should have defaulted in his interest every year, the loss would be only $500. If you were to keep him under pay, you are going to absorb $500 and at the end of five years he may not be self-supporting then. (Reads):

6. Males to be kept at central farms to which he must breed this stock. The stock is the property of the Government and will not be turned over to him until paid for.

At the same time it would be necessary for many settlers to be in one particular district before this can be done.

7. This stock to be paid for in the following manner: The settler to return a two-year old colt which would be inspected by the stock inspector; this shall be taken as payment for one horse.

In a practical scheme, I myself, as a practical farmer, would prefer to receive a two-year old colt than one which had been handled by every Tom, Dick and Harry. A colt two years old is practically raised. (Reads):

A two-year-old beast shall be returned in like manner when the colt would then be the property of the settler. When the man shall have raised feed, brood sows shall be provided on the same terms. A pig six months old returned for each sow, when the original shall be the property of the soldier.

8. A loan of $2,000 shall be made to each man; this shall be free from interest for three years; principal shall be spread over a term of twenty years.

9. At the end of five years, if he has raised three crops, patent shall be issued to him for the land; the Government taking a lien on the land for any balance due it.

If a man has had misfortune, by the issue of the patent, there is very little land in Alberta that he can not secure private companies that would gladly take up that obligation of $2,000 on the land, but in most cases the man would have paid for everything.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. It is free land in the first place?—A. Yes, sir. (Reads):

10. Each man shall choose the amount of breaking to be done the first year from 20 to 100 acres.

11. He shall also choose the kind of building he erects. The idea for the whole scheme being production of grain and stock. In this way the bulk of the loan would go into stock and not into buildings.

We want the Government to go into this scheme with us in a business-like way, and not permit the entire loan to go into buildings and leave nothing at all for live stock. I myself bought two cows and five two-year-old heifers in 1894; I never had a place that cost me five cents. I made my buildings out of logs, hay, willows and things like that. I kept my seven head of stock for five years, and at the end of five years I sold forty, kept one for myself, and I had sold and lost 13, so I had raised, altogether, 54 head in five years. From one cow alone I had seven. I had her, a four-year-old heifer, and three cows producing, and four head of other stock from this one in five years. (Reads):

In this way the bulk of the loan would go into stock and not into buildings, which would be unproductive.

12. Men to be assisted financially until they get returns from the land. Seed grain, horse feed, etc., furnished at wholesale rates.

[Mr. Wells.]

If a man is provided with implements and feed, there is no reason why he cannot go out in one summer and be self-supporting. He could even earn good money putting up hay. (Reads):

13. As the land and improvements are the property of the state until patent is issued, the settler shall not pay interest on them until he receives the patent.

14. All positions as overseers and inspectors, etc., of this scheme shall be filled by returned men of ability.

We feel that we have sufficient talent right among our own boys to run any scheme that is operated for the returned soldier. Another point is that where a man is physically disabled he ought to be allowed to take these benefits by proxy. Take my own case: I am a practical farmer and market gardener. I cannot follow my own employment, because I was discharged with a swollen left knee. While this is an old affair, it has been aggravated in service, for I slipped on the ship and injured my knee. At the same time, when I got back to this country, I told the board that I was able to follow my old employment, but I find I cannot. Although I am not complaining, I have to wear an elastic band or I could not walk at all. I have a son-in-law who is a veteran of the South African war, who lives in the city. He could do my duties by proxy. There are lots of men in that position, as well as widows where land could be improved and held in trust for the children, and the widow would get the benefit. (Reads):

The Veterans Club of Calgary would respectfully ask this Committee to grant the returned men of Canada thirty days to discuss the scheme before finally approved of by the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything further to suggest?—A. These are the views of the men and they cover only two branches of farming, stock and grain. I am a practical market gardener, and there is only one scheme that could be introduced that would be satisfactory. Every branch of farming should be considered.

The examination of Mr. Hodgson resumed.

MR. HODGSON: The only thing I would like to say is that before the Government bring forward any land scheme I would like to have it presented to the veterans so that they can take it under consideration for thirty days.

MR. BENNETT: You mean that after a Bill is brought down it should be widely circulated and no official action taken until thirty days have elapsed?—A. Yes, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you wish to have a hearing at Ottawa when the Bill is brought down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your organization is sufficiently crystallized so that you could send a thoroughly representative delegation whose views would be accepted by those who sent them?—A. Yes, sir, practical men at that.

Witnesses discharged.

Mr. W. A. MACDONALD, of the Canadian Association of Returned Soldiers, Edmonton District, called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. Mr. Macdonald, you have been here, I think, yesterday and to-day, and have heard the general trend of the evidence given. Would you say that you concur to date with all that has already been said?—A. Yes, our association formed about three months ago, and we have been taking up the fight of the men in general who have come back. With regard to the complaints that we have received, the greatest complaint up to date is regarding pay and pensions.

Q. You say that your greatest dissatisfaction is with regard to the pay and pensions?—A. I do not think there is a man, at least, nine out of ten of the men that come back gets a satisfactory statement of their pay.

Q. What do they bring back with them?—A. Nothing.

Q. Have they not their pay books?—A. They have not.

Q. Or their last pay certificate?—A. They have their last pay certificate, but that is all, unless the man has taken the precaution of taking down a duplicate of the payments made in his pay book. He has nothing to show as to whether he received his pay or not and that causes a lot of dissatisfaction all along the line.

Q. Now this matter of pay has come up several times, and I am going to ask you again if any of the men have ever expressed a doubt or had any reason to believe that their pay statement was not correctly prepared?—A. In what way do you mean?

Q. Do the men suspect or believe that their pay statements, in England or here, have been incorrectly prepared?—A. Undoubtedly, in some cases they do.

Q. Do they think that it is a mistake, or that it was done deliberately?—A. I may say that in some cases they think it was done deliberately, but I cannot give you any specific case.

Q. You cannot give me any case where a man believes that he was deliberately done out of money that was due to him?—A. No, I could not give you a specific case.

Q. Have any of the men ever intimated that they thought there was dishonesty on the part of the paymaster?—A. There is a great deal of that.

Q. You hear that the men think there was absolute dishonesty on the part of the paymaster?—A. Yes. Of course we talk about that matter more or less freely among ourselves, but you understand, I would not like to make any statement about it publicly, but there is no doubt whatever the impression remains in the minds of the men that such is the case.

Q. Would that be in England or in Canada?—A. As far as the overseas men are concerned, it would be in England and in France.

Q. What do they suspect as a matter of fact, in what way do they think they are getting a 'raw deal,' if I may use that expression?—A. I suppose they think that the paymasters are helping themselves a little bit out of their earnings.

Q. You have heard that expression of opinion by the returned men?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you heard that expression of opinion frequently?—A. I cannot say frequently, but I have heard it on different occasions.

Q. Have they ever been able to present anything tangible to support that suspicion?—A. I have never taken that up with them, but I daresay it could be followed up.

Q. I think you would be conferring a favour on the committee and on the country generally if you have any proof of anything of that kind, if you will let us have it. Now what is the chief trouble about the pay, is it delay?—A. Yes. Delay in the pay.

Q. Or is it that the men are dissatisfied with the amount standing to their credit?—A. That is the trouble in some cases, but in most cases it is the delay; that is the greatest cause of dissatisfaction when the men come back, that they have to wait so long before getting their pay.

[Mr. W. A. Macdonald.]

Q. What agency have you now in Northern Alberta that takes that matter up?—

A. Just the one, the Military Hospitals' Commission.

Q. Have you any branch of Mr. Stutchbury's Central Provincial Committee there?—A. Mr. Stutchbury, as far as I can make out, handles both ends of it.

Q. You say that the Military Hospitals Commission and Mr. Stutchbury's Commission are practically one and the same thing in Edmonton?—A. Yes.

Q. Who does the work there?—A. Mr. Stutchbury does most of the work there.

Q. He told us that he travelled most of the time. Who does the work when he is on the road?—A. He has a clerk in the office who does the work while he is away.

Q. He has a man there who is able to secure satisfaction for you?—A. There is another organization there run by a civilian, a man put in there by a body of citizens, called the Returned Soldiers' Bureau. As far as I can make out it is something after the style of the Returned Soldiers' Aid down here, only it is run by contributions from the city.

Q. Do they give relief in hard cases?—A. No, they do not—well they have done so in the past, but we are doing all that now.

Q. With money that you yourselves collect?—A. Partly with the money that the ladies of Edmonton contribute, and partly by the proceeds of concerts and entertainments and other things like that.

Q. Now what is their principal objection regarding pensions? Have you anything to add regarding pensions to what you have already heard?—A. I do not think so. I do not think I can enlarge any on what Mr. Guilfoyle has said.

Q. You concur with his views?—A. Absolutely, especially in the equalization of pensions; that is a matter we have threshed out very carefully, and we are all of one mind as to that.

Q. That is the equalization of pensions between the men and the officers?—A. Yes.

Q. What about the land scheme, do you share the view of the Calgary deputation in that respect?—A. The view that we have on that is that the land scheme should come from the Government, and that we should be given notice in plenty of time in order that we may give the matter proper consideration.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you mean that the land scheme should be discussed with you and with your association before it is adopted by the Government?—A. It should be discussed by all the returned men.

Q. That is the Government should give you an opportunity of discussing the scheme before its adoption?—A. Exactly.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. If your association were to meet and prepare a scheme which you could submit to the Government would not that be as satisfactory as it would be to submit to your association a bill that the Government might bring in?—A. I could not answer that, because we have not discussed the matter.

Q. I had in mind the question of time, and I thought that if your association were to submit a scheme to the Government it would take the least time, and that is what you appear to be most concerned about?—A. I think either way would work satisfactorily.

Q. Having regard to the need for expedition whichever plan would consume the least time would be the best?—A. Exactly.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything further you would care to add to what you have already stated?—A. I do not think so. I did not come down here prepared to speak of specific cases of neglect or anything like that, because I did not know, on the short notice that I received, exactly what I was asked to come here for.

[Mr. W. A. Macdonald.]

Q. But you came down here to give us information, and you found that the other western representatives have covered the ground you intended to go over?—A. Yes, sir, especially the deputation from Calgary.

Q. And you think that Sergeant Guilfoyle's statement covers the case?—A. Absolutely.

Witness discharged.

Mr. JAMES H. HILL, Secretary of the Returned Soldiers' Commission, Victoria, B.C., called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you hold in respect to the provincial organization?—A. I am the secretary of the Provincial Commission.

Q. Appointed under the British Columbia Government?—A. Yes, sir, by order in council.

Q. Will you file a copy of that order in council?—A. Yes, sir, I will have to send one down.

Q. Will you also file a list of the members comprising that Commission?—A. I can give you that.

Q. You might give it to us now?—A. The Chairman is Dr. H. E. Young, of Victoria. The members are: Major A. E. Todd, representing the city of Victoria; Major A. W. Gray, representing the city of New Westminster; A. E. Planta, Esq., representing the city of Nanaimo; Alderman R. H. Cale, representing the city of Vancouver; A. C. Burdick, representing the Returned Soldiers' Employment Committee of Victoria; E. W. Hamber, representing the Returned Soldiers' Committee of the Canadian Club of Vancouver, and two ex-officio members, F. W. Peters, of the C.P.R., Vancouver, and J. S. H. Matson, of Victoria; these are the two representatives of the Military Hospitals Commission, and they are members of the Provincial Commission.

Q. Have you any members on the Commission who represent the Returned Soldiers' Associations?—A. Not on the Provincial Commission; there are some on the local bodies.

Q. I understand, then, that you have branches scattered throughout the province?—A. Yes, sir, we have 79—we are represented now at 79 points through the province; 59 are our own organized committees and 20 correspondents.

Q. Those are local committees?—A. Yes.

Q. And do those local committees contain representatives of returned soldiers?—A. They can, and we wish them to, as they have the men there to put on the committees; I do not know definitely.

Q. What is the general policy about inviting them?—A. Well, that is left to the local committee, and that is our intention, that they shall do everything in harmony with the returned soldiers, and that would be my idea of their procedure.

Q. What work do you undertake to accomplish?—A. Primarily our object was to endeavour to provide or secure employment for the returned soldiers; that is the primary idea when the Commissions were formed, working in conjunction with the Military Hospitals Commission; but we do not restrict ourselves to that, we endeavour to do anything and everything that the returned soldiers wants done. We do not guarantee to do what he wants done, but we endeavour to do what he wants done.

Q. Do you relieve distress as well?—A. Financially?

Q. Yes?—A. No, we do not disburse any money. We expect our local committees to look after cases.

Q. With money raised locally from the kind-hearted public?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men have come back to British Columbia?—A. At the end of February we had on our record 1,251; 1,112 of those were reported to us through the discharge depot, and 139 sundry cases, including 52 camp cases; that makes a total of 1,251.

[Mr. James H. Hill.]

Q. You have camp cases also, do you?—A. Yes.

Q. You make no distinction?—A. I have always tried to make absolutely no distinction. I have always pointed out to the local committees that we want to do everything possible for men who enlisted and were honourably discharged.

Q. How many of those 1,251 have secured employment?—A. Our Committees had listed for employment 639, and provided employment for 590, leaving at the end of the month 49 on the Committee's files awaiting employment.

Q. Between the 639 and the 1,251 are men in hospital or men who went to their own homes without needing your assistance?—A. 438 in hospitals and sanatoria and diverted for treatment, leaving 813. 639 of those applied for employment through the local Committees; they do not necessarily go to the Committees.

Q. You have only 49 men on your list at present who are seeking employment?—A. That is at the end of February.

Q. Is there ample employment for them, or is it just a matter of adjusting?—A. Largely a matter of adjustment. So far we have been able to take care of the situation very satisfactorily.

Q. Are you taking anything like an industrial census of British Columbia with a view of finding what opportunities there are?—A. Yes, sir, the vocational officer of the M. H. C., who works in very close harmony with us, is making an industrial survey of the province, and there was also made a survey—

Q. Is that being done in conjunction with the National Service Commission?—A. No, sir, he is making that independently, but any information that we get that will be of assistance to the local Director of National Service will be given him if required. I sent him a supply of the forms used by the vocational officer.

Q. You are familiar with the work of the Military Hospitals Commission in British Columbia, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; not of course in detail like a member of the staff.

Q. Has there been any shortage of accommodation for returned soldiers requiring hospital treatment or convalescent treatment?—A. There are out-patients.

Q. Who might better be in the hospitals?—A. Well, of course I think myself, just speaking for myself, that there should be no out-patients, but that is a matter of opinion, I suppose. The officer commanding the unit told me just before I left that he would be in a position immediately to have no out-patients at all.

Q. That is, that provision is being made for all likely requirements?—A. Yes, sir; that is what he said.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. About the vocational training, what classes of work are being done in British Columbia to fit men for re-employment? Have you the employments classified at which you put back those men who were returned?—A. Yes. We have provided employment for 590 men. In providing them we have found them 852 positions.

Q. That is one man has left more than one position?—A. For instance, we have found position in various employments for men as follows:—

Classes in vocational work are being held at the convalescent hospitals under the direction of the vocational officer. Instruction is given in English, book-keeping, arithmetic, penmanship, business correspondence, stenography, typewriting, mechanical drawing, wood carving and gasoline engine work. The men are also given instruction in poultry and bee-keeping and in raising rabbits and squabs. There are also additional courses provided for the men at business colleges and free short courses in agriculture, one given by the University of British Columbia.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many farmers are on that list?—A. Nineteen.

Q. Out of how many?—A. Six hundred and thirty-nine.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. You mean you sent nineteen men out to work on farms?—A. Yes.

Q. As hired men?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. About three per cent?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. That figures out that you have to have about 10 jobs at your disposal in order to fit seven men in?—A. About that. Of course I think that it must be remembered that a number of those would be naturally temporary jobs. Of course we do not restrict ourselves. I tell our local committee not to restrict themselves to finding a man one job or two jobs, but to find them as many as they can till he is satisfied.

Q. Do you think you are going to have any residue of men that will keep no job that you give them?—A. Well, I do not think that there ought to be a great many.

Q. If there are a few what would you do with them?—A. Well, there are bound to be a few, I think.

Q. Do you think it is necessary to have a soldiers' home in British Columbia for the returned soldier that apparently cannot take care of himself?—A. I think it is too early to say. I think we would have to wait until we saw a greater number of men back and how they dispose of themselves and how they were absorbed.

Q. It is too early to consider that problem?—A. It is too far ahead I think to consider that.

Q. Have you any land scheme in British Columbia that you have considered?—A. Our commission prepared a land settlement scheme.

Q. Would you be good enough to describe it briefly and put it into our record?—A. The principle is a community settlement.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Have you published a report?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Will you produce it?—A. This is the report (producing report).

The CHAIRMAN: This will be put in our records.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The enormous cost of clearing land which is covered with heavy vegetation makes the problem very difficult. There is a limited area of farm land; that is the whole trouble?—A. As far as the province is concerned?

Q. Yes. You have a thick meadow and a valley up near Fort George, and around about that section, but you have no large areas in British Columbia except those covered with large forests, the clearing of which costs a considerable sum of money?—

A. At the last session there was a Bill passed under which certain lands will revert to the Crown. That is lands that were taken up and final settlement not made, and it is the intention of the present Government to put into effect a land settlement policy along the lines of that report—a community settlement.

Q. That Rural Credit Act of last session does not touch this fact, that you are short of available agricultural land, except that which will cost enormous sums of money to clear. That is the condition in British Columbia?—A. The land clearing is a great factor.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Have you not a considerable portion of the Peace River district in British Columbia?—A. There are Dominion lands on the Peace river.

By the Chairman:

Q. I suppose that land scheme is all set forth in the printed document which you file?—A. Yes, those are our recommendations with regard to community land settlements. The legislation which is being brought down was not far enough advanced when I left to allow of my bringing a copy but it will be along those lines.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you work in connection with the Military Hospitals Commission, or are you a part of the Military Hospitals Commission or are you connected with that Commission?—A. No.

Q. Is there somebody from British Columbia connected with the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. No.

Q. What do you say in regard to the accommodation for returned men? Is there sufficient?—A. I am not thoroughly familiar with the details of their accommodation. There were some out-patients when I left, but I understood there would be none very shortly. They are taking over a place at Qualicum, up on the island.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is that the big hotel there?—A. Yes.

Q. You do not know anything of the work of the Hospitals Commission and of the extent of it?—A. Not in detail.

Q. Are there any complaints out there from the returned soldiers?—A. No, practically none. We had our share of complaints about the delay in receipt of pensions and so on.

Q. But I am speaking as to treatment, medical and otherwise, accommodation and that sort of thing?—A. No.

Q. Have you heard it said that there were too many out-patients and not sufficient accommodation to take in-patients?—A. No.

Q. Do you find people co-ordinating with you in the way of employment, giving employment to returned soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you find the manufacturers there and the wholesale men and those people co-ordinating with you in giving these returned soldiers employment?—A. So far it has been very satisfactory.

Q. You would not undertake to say in your position that unless some other scheme were formulated if there was a sudden influx of soldiers, there would be very much less possibility of getting them positions or employment?—A. I do not quite get that.

Q. If there were a sudden influx of three or four hundred soldiers, unless there was some land scheme, you could not give that many men employment in British Columbia?—A. It might be a difficult matter.

Q. It would take a long time?—A. It might. I think it would.

Q. Therefore in your opinion is it necessary that some scheme should be formulated for the returned soldiers?—A. Other than land settlement?

Q. Yes?—A. Absolutely.

Q. What kind of scheme?—A. Well, we fully recognize that land settlement, or the development of agriculture alone, will not provide a complete solution of our after-the-war problem, and in my opinion that refers to the whole country. The land settlement is an essential feature, but it will not provide a complete solution of our difficulties.

Q. Have you any other solution to suggest to the Committee?—A. I think the whole matter of the establishment of industries, the assistance of industries, ought to be looked into, and ought to be dealt with. The matter should be taken up.

Q. Do you agree with the last witness, or has it been discussed there that Government supplies should be manufactured by soldiers in Government factories?—A. I have never gone into that particular detail, and I do not know—I do not think I am in a position to express an opinion that would be of value on that particular point, but I think that the whole matter of the establishment of industries should be taken up by the country as a whole.

Q. When you say the matter of the development of industry should be taken up by the country, just what do you mean—in the way of the State employing these men in industries?—A. The establishment or development of the industries of the country should be dealt with as a whole in order that we may get at some plan which will lead to the provision of employment for the returned men.

Q. By whom, by the State?—A. Well, that is a matter for discussion.

[Mr. James H. Hill.]

Q. You have no settled opinion upon it?—A. Except this, that I think it is an Imperial question. It is a question which should be dealt with by the Dominion and if necessary by the Imperial Government; it is a matter which belongs to both.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The Victoria Board of Trade has sent down a resolution. Would you like to have it incorporated in the proceedings?—A. I did not see it.

Q. You cannot then speak on behalf of the Board of Trade?—A. No. I do not know the nature of the resolution.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Perhaps it would be as well to put it on record.

Documents filed as follows:—

VICTORIA, B.C., February 24, 1917.

Chairman; Committee re Care of Returned Soldiers,
Ottawa, Ont.

DEAR SIR,—This Board of Trade has given much attention to questions arising from the war and the restoration of peace conditions when it terminates. The Board's views, as expressed in the latest discussions, have been set out in the form of a resolution, and I am instructed to transmit the accompanying copy and to ask that it may receive your favourable consideration.

Yours faithfully,

F. ELWORTHY,
Secretary.

Copy of a Resolution Passed by the Council of the Victoria, British Columbia, Board of Trade on Thursday, 15th February, 1917.

"Whereas the Dominion Government, at great expense of time and money, have trained and are training for military services all the man power of Canada volunteering for overseas service in the maintenance of the highest traditions of the British Empire.

"Whereas these volunteer soldiers, the noblest of our manhood, on the various battle fronts, have proved themselves worthy of our great expectations in efficiency and valour.

"Whereas many months and in some cases years of this National Service have necessarily changed the whole current of their lives, it follows that variable periods of time will be required to restore these volunteers to a state of effectiveness such as will enable them to follow their pre-war occupations.

"Whereas such preparation for a return to civilian life of these volunteer soldiers is the sole duty of the Canadian Government and requires immediate attention;

Therefore, be it resolved:—

1. That no soldier should be discharged until he is physically fit and a position has been found for him, except by request, with proof of ability to maintain himself.

2. That pending employment in civil occupations, all volunteer soldiers shall be housed and subject to suitable military discipline and medical supervision, the State to furnish productive employment and facilities for technical education as called for.

3. That reasonable provision for a return to military discipline shall be made for any cases where it is found that the employed is unfitted for the position found for him.

[Mr. James H. Hill.]

4. That in the case of incapacity a military sustenance allowance should be paid pending receipt of pension so that there shall be no interval of non-payment of one or the other means of support, similar treatment to be extended to the dependents of deceased volunteer soldiers.

Correct copy.

F. ELWORTHY,
Secretary.

Witness discharged.

The CHAIRMAN: Messrs. W. Drinnan and H. W. Hart are here as representing the returned soldiers of British Columbia.

Messrs. W. DRINNAN and H. W. HART, called, sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Hart, you are the vice-president of the Returned Soldiers of British Columbia, are you?

MR. HART: I am vice-president of the British Columbia organization, and secretary of the Victoria Branch.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Drinnan, what are you?

MR. DRINNAN: I am president of the Returned Soldiers' Association of Vancouver, and also of the provincial association.

The CHAIRMAN: You are president of your association?

MR. DRINNAN: Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: Then we will hear from you first, as president of the Returned Soldiers' Association.

Mr. DRINNAN, examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. Is your association incorporated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you intend that it should be?—A. Yes, sir, after the coming Dominion conference has taken place.

Q. Who are eligible for membership in your association?—A. In the meantime, until confirmed by the Dominion organization, all men who have gone overseas from Canada, all the Imperial forces, men who have gone overseas from England, all men of the Allied forces who were previously resident in Canada—that is, resident in Canada before the war—are eligible for membership in the association.

Q. What are the objects of your association?—A. To consistently inculcate loyalty to Canada and the Empire, and unstinted service in their interest; to perpetuate close and kindly ties of mutual service in the great war, to preserve the memory and record of those who have suffered and died for the nation; to insure that provision is made for and due care is taken of the sick, wounded and needy among those who served and the welfare of the dependents of those who have fallen.

Q. You cover the whole of the province of British Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your executive committee represented in all parts of the province?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any meeting prior to your coming down here?—A. We had a meeting in forming the provincial association some six weeks ago, with representatives from all over the province.

Q. With special reference to your coming down here to present views on behalf of the association?—A. Just a hasty meeting, sir, of the provincial association, which was not fully represented. There were representatives present from New Westminster,

[Mr. W. Drinnan.]

Similkameen, North Vancouver and Vancouver. There was no one present from Prince Rupert or from Nelson in the Kootenays.

Q. Was there no one present from Victoria?—A. The Victoria representative did not get there in time.

Q. Have you any criticisms to make as representing the returned soldiers in British Columbia?—A. There are one or two suggestions we would like to offer, but we are in the happy position, I may tell you, of being very free from complaint in regard to pay. Up to a certain time we did have these complaints but now we receive very few in regard to pay. It seems to me, listening to the evidence which has been given here these last four days, that a great many of these complaints are probably due to inability on the part of the paymasters to the different battalions.

Q. Do you mean in England?—A. In England or in France. Personally, my pay, when I got back last June, was down to the last cent, making allowance of course for the difference in the rate of exchange, and the separation allowance, that went astray for three months. These matters of pay are very easily remedied.

Q. How are they easily remedied?—A. By getting into direct communication with the paymaster at Victoria.

Q. Your paymaster at Victoria, then, has been able to regulate most of these cases to the satisfaction of the men, has he?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Was there any delay?—A. There has been delay occasionally.

Q. To what extent?—A. Not to any great extent. I do not remember any case at present which I can cite to this committee.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You must have a good paymaster?—A. That is the condition as I understand it there.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. There are no complaints now?—A. None that I know of.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How many men have returned to British Columbia?—A. I understand there are over 1,000, but I have not the actual figures.

Q. Do they all pass through your hands?—A. Not through our hands. We have 200 on the membership roll, Vancouver city.

Q. In the whole province how many have you?—A. I have not got that information yet. I have not got the returns from the different branches of the association. Of course, we have had numerous complaints in regard to pensions. I was not altogether aware of the procedure that would be followed here or I would have brought along some of the complaints. Not having the data with me I would not like to enter the details. I could not quote any particular case, but I do know that there are a number of men who have had trouble with their pensions.

By the Chairman:

Q. When you go home you can give us a few specific cases and we can have them investigated?—A. We find, sir, a great deal of trouble and overlapping has been caused by so many different associations.

Q. Of a voluntary nature?—A. Yes. We have in Vancouver the Returned Soldiers Club, which, I believe, acts in a similar capacity to that of the Returned Soldiers Aid Commission. In Victoria we have also the Daughters of the Empire and the Red Cross.

Q. Is the Returned Soldiers Club composed of returned soldiers?—A. No, sir. The Returned Soldiers Club is composed of business men from the Canadian Club.

Q. Who are not returned soldiers?—A. Who are not returned soldiers.

[Mr. W. Drinnan.]

Q. Does that not cause confusion?—A. It does, sir, but we have overcome that to a great extent by forming a central fund. This committee, called the Central Distress Fund, which, I believe, will be amended, because exception is taken to the word "distress," is composed of a committee of two members from the Daughters of the Empire, two members from the Returned Soldiers Club, two members from the Returned Soldiers Association, and one member from the Hospitals Commission Command. They propose in the meantime to put in so much money from each of their different associations until such time as we get the money from a carnival that is being brought off on the 4th of May. This carnival is being run by the Travellers of British Columbia, and they hope to collect a considerable sum of money to be equally divided between the Patriotic, Red Cross and Navy League, and, as at first proposed, the Returned Soldiers Association. However, by co-operation with the Returned Soldiers Club the suggestion was made that greater benefits could be secured if we put all this money into a central fund and thereby save a great deal of overlapping, so the Returned Soldiers Club agreed to that along with the Daughters of the Empire and the other organizations, and that fund is now being formed so that any cases of distress will be helped from that fund.

Q. Have you had many cases of returned men who were in distress and needed financial relief?—A. We have had quite a few, sir.

Q. Who has helped them hitherto?—A. The Returned Soldiers Club and also the association.

Q. Your own association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your own association supported by its dues and contributions from the public?—A. We have had very few contributions, and we have carried on one or two social affairs that have brought us in something like $1,400 or $1,500.

Q. Proceed.—A. I may state that the Returned Soldiers Club have always been more than anxious to co-operate and work in harmony with the Returned Soldiers Association, and they thoroughly understand, I think, that the best way to deal with the returned soldier is to allow the returned soldier himself to do it. To begin with the Returned Soldiers Club appointed a manager who was a civilian, naturally, there being very few soldiers back at that time. Now, we have one of our own men managing that club. He looks after the employment, also any grievance in the way of pay and pensions. He is paid by the club. It, I believe, gets a grant of something like $250 from the Government, $100 from the Dominion and $150 from the Provincial Government. The members of that club realize that the returned soldier is the best man to deal with the returned soldier and for that reason they have put this returned man into the position of manager of that club.

Q. Have you any central organization which acts as a clearing house for all these different relief organizations that you have mentioned?—A. No, sir. Most of the men who come back register at the Returned Soldiers Club.

Q. Does that constitute the trouble which you have, that is, if any soldier is in trouble about anything, pay, pension, Hospitals Commission or anything, is it well known that there is a place where a returned soldier can always be sent and get satisfaction for any grievance?—A. Yes, for this reason, that the offices of the Hospitals Commission are in the C.P.R. station. The vice-president of the Vancouver Association is also employed by that commission, so that we are able to get in touch with every man that passes through Vancouver. In connection with the land scheme, there is a gentleman by the name of Col. Markham, who has done some clearing of C.P.R. land in Vancouver. He has a scheme on Seabird Island, that is a place on the Fraser near Lardner, I understand. He recommends this land; it is now occupied; there are 4,500 acres on this island; there are Indians to the number of 122 who are taking up 500 acres of this land. His suggestion is, briefly, I cannot go into it in detail, but briefly he suggests that the Government take over this island, either the Provincial or Dominion Government. It is fairly heavily timbered and he suggests that the timber on the island would be sufficient to erect houses for something like 400 men to settle them on there with 10 acres per man.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Where is this island? In the Fraser?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Near New Westminster?—A. Near Lardner, I understand. His idea is that the land should be used for the purpose of vegetable gardening.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Is it good land?—A. I understand it is, sir. Of course, the scheme is purely Col. Markham's, and not being a farmer I cannot speak with any accuracy at all.

Q. Has your association given it any consideration?—A. They have, and they seem to think it is a good scheme.

By Hon. Mr. Ross:

Q. Have they seen the land?—A. I do not know that they have. There may have been members of the association who have seen the land and who are anxious to go on it. That I cannot say.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. There is another gentleman who has put forth a similar scheme in addresses in different parts of the country, a Mr. Flummerfelt. Have you heard the details of his scheme?—A. No, sir, unless he may have been one of the gentlemen who conferred with Col. Markham. I know that Col. Markham did confer with two gentlemen from the East.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Have you any suggestions with regard to the treatment of returned soldiers, other than what you have heard? What about pensions?—A. That has been covered thoroughly. I endorse what has been said by Sergeant-Major Guilfoyle.

Q. You believe in the equalization of pensions for officers and men?—A. Yes.

Q. Why?—A. For this reason, that a great many officers have been in civil life, socially, if you like to put it that way, in the same social life as the great number of the privates, especially in the West, I think probably we see more of it there than they do in the East.

Q. And you think that the sacrifice is no greater in the case of the officer than in that of the private?—A. I am positively certain of it, sir. I thoroughly realize that the officers who went out the first time probably gave a great deal of time, and spent a considerable amount of money fitting themselves to be officers in the service.

Q. Sergeant-Major Guilfoyle said that he would not apply that rule to the higher command?—A. No, sir, I agree with him.

Q. What do you understand was meant by that expression "higher command"; did he mean officers above the rank of colonel, or what?—A. I suppose he meant men who had been out in the first Expeditionary Force, as Lieutenants or Captains, and who have now risen to be Colonels, Lt.-Colonels, and Brigadiers.

Q. You think those men should get more pension than privates because they have earned their promotion by their merits and by their service in the field?—A. Yes.

Q. But you think if a man should happen to be a commanding officer now, who had not earned that rank by service that he should not get a higher pension than the private?—A. Yes, for example there are now men in British Columbia, who are going out in command of battalions, but who, previous to the war, had absolutely no military service or experience. They have been up and had their instructions, it has taken them almost three years to fit themselves, whereas there are men to-day who had military experience and service, as privates or non-commissioned officers, and who went with the first contingents, and who were probably wounded and who probably had been serving six, nine, or twelve months in the trenches and who still were not recognized in promotion. That is a fact, there are men going out now in charge of battalions—I do not say all of them come in that class,—but there are a number of them who are taking battalions to England to-day who did not hold commissions of any kind two and a half years ago.

Q. But they are not likely to get any pension?—A. I would hope not, but still if by any chance, any of these men should meet with an accident while in England or even here at home while training, they would be eligible for a pension as lieutenants-colonel.

Q. Exactly, and you do not think that would be just?—A. I certainly do not.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything further to lay before the Committee?—A. Yes, I would like particularly to emphasize the fact that returned men should, as far as possible have the care of returned men. I mean by that that any appointments that are being made now should be given to the returned men now in Canada. In nearly every province there must be, at the present time, over 1,000 returned men, and, surely, out of that number, there are those capable of filling any positions that may crop up in connection with the Hospitals Commission, or the Pensions Board, or any position of that description. I would suggest, sir, that the returned soldiers associations of the different provinces or towns might be consulted in regard to the appointment of these men. I am perfectly sure that any of our associations would endeavour to supply absolutely the best men available for the position, not only for the credit of the association itself, but for the credit of the country at large. In regard to vocational training, we have had in Vancouver considerable trouble in connection with the employment of men for this reason that employers do not care to take wounded soldiers on vocational training. Of course, as you are aware, there are not a great many industries in British Columbia, we have two men employed in the Vancouver Engineering Works, one week the man works at the practical work and the other week he goes to the college; each week he takes alternately, and for that he receives $3 a day while working, which amounts to $1.50 per day for the whole time. But the employers do not seem very anxious to have them there, and we suggest that something may be done along the lines of which Sergt-Major Guilfoyle has spoken of the Government taking over works. There is the cigar manufacturing industry, for instance, and I understand that it is a very difficult matter to get our men into that industry, in fact we cannot get a man into the factory to learn the trade of cigar-maker, a trade which a returned soldier would be able to carry on in a great many instances but the trouble is with the union which allows only one helper to a certain number of journeymen, so that we have no hope of being able to get any returned soldiers into that industry. If the Government were to take up that branch of industry, we would be able to find employment there for a number of returned soldiers.

By the Chairman:

Q. They make an allowance to the man who is undergoing vocational training out there, do they not?—A. They allow him 60 cents a day, which is quite inadequate; it should be raised to $1.

Q. Do they not get the separation allowance as well?—A. No, sir, I do not think so.

Q. The only allowance made is?—A. 60 cents per day subsistence allowance is all I understand they get.

Q. Have you been discharged?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you taking vocational training?—A. No, sir.

Q. I do not understand that 60 cents a day; that is the usual subsistence allowance for the man who is getting pay and separation allowance as well?—A. I do not know that they get any more. The man who is discharged received 60 cents per day while taking vocational training, but if he is not discharged he would be in a convalescent hospital and therefore would not need any subsistence money.

Q. But he gets his pension as well as the 60 cents a day?—A. He gets the pension in addition to the 60 cents if he has a pension. And if they are living out they won't get the patriotic money.

Q. Will they not get it if they are not discharged?—A. I know in my own case there was no patriotic money after I returned to Canada, but it may be different now.

Q. It should be paid, the patriotic money is supposed to continue as long as the man is in the hospital, but not if you are living at home?—A. That is what I say.

Q. If you are a man living at home you would then get $71 a month?—A. I was not long enough at home before I was discharged to get that.

Q. Continue your evidence, Mr. Drinnan.—A. I would like, also, to draw the attention of this Committee to the exploiting of returned soldiers.

Q. Yes, that is very important.—A. I mean, probably, in a lesser degree than has been brought out in the evidence here. We find that a great many people want to come to the Returned Soldiers' Association with a money-making scheme. For instance—

Q. For their benefit, or for the benefit of returned soldiers?—A. That is what I am coming to. It is supposed to be for the benefit of returned soldiers, but in many instances it is not.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What was the instance you were going to give?—A. A gentleman who came in from the other side of the line and wanted to put on a scheme called "Slippery Gulch, and the Days of Gold." He wanted to put this scheme on and run it under the heading of returned soldiers, but to take a percentage something like 60 per cent. Naturally enough, we turned it down. We turn down any scheme where it is not 100 per cent.

By the Chairman:

Q. Quite right.—A. We have also had schemes whereby some of the fighting men of the province—fighting-with-the-fists-men—wanted to put on a show and also get a big percentage of the profit. That, also, I may tell you, has been turned down.

Q. The Patriotic Fund can give you considerable experience along this line if you wish to apply for it?—A. Well, the Returned Soldiers' Association of Winnipeg also put us in rather a funny position. They have sent several suggestions to the coast in regard to raising money for their association. One of them was a stamp scheme that I don't understand very well, but they have some stamp that they wanted us to sell at a percentage. They also wanted us to entertain the idea of sending out a variety troupe of some description to run concerts. We understood, being a Returned Soldiers' Association, that they were returned soldiers, and I have only learned since coming to Toronto that they are a body of civilians. So you can easily see, sir, that, so far removed as Vancouver, we might be led into something innocently that we did not expect.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. What was the nature of the stamp they wished to sell?—A. I could not tell you.

Mr. HART: They were called "stickers." It was a little book like a book of postage stamps, and on the front it said, "Be a sticker; stick one of these on the back of every letter," and it was the crest of the Returned Soldiers' Association, a replica of the button that the gentleman who represented that association is wearing to-day. The idea was to purchase a book of these stickers and put one on the back of every envelope as an advertising scheme, and also as a money raising scheme. The idea was that on the Coast we were to pay five cents for those books, which probably cost a cent for a book, or perhaps a cent for a dozen books, and we were to charge ten cents for the book, keep five cents for ourselves, and the Winnipeg Returned Soldiers' Association were going to pocket probably five cents per book from the Pacific Province, whilst we have returned men out there who also require assistance.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand you protest against the use of the Returned Soldiers' Association by any civilian association?

Mr. HART: Yes, sir, strongly. I consider that it is exploiting the returned men. The gentleman who represented this Winnipeg Returned Soldiers' Association this morning stated that they formed that association with the idea of benefiting the returned soldier. If that is so I would like to have asked him why the returned soldiers were not allowed to have any representation on that committee.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I think he said it was formed at a time when there were very few if any returned soldiers in Winnipeg.

Mr. HART: Yes, but I am speaking of the present time. We are told the idea was to help the returned soldier. If that was true, why is not the returned soldier allowed to have some say in the organization which was formed for no other purpose than to assist him.

The CHAIRMAN: You have no such organization in British Columbia?

Mr. HART: Yes, sir, I am going to tell you about that presently. And, again, if their one idea was to assist the returned soldier, having obtained those funds, and now that there are sufficient returned men back to handle it, why not hand this thing over and say, "Now, we have got this thing in order, and now you are here yourselves we will hand it over to you." I think that would be a fitting way to act if it was their intention to help returned soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN: Have you completed your evidence, Mr. Drinnan?

Mr. DRINNAN: I would like to say that another danger we would like this Committee to pay attention to is this. In the meantime we are getting back to the coast probably 50 per cent of men who did not join up battalions in British Columbia. Now, you can see by that that we are going to be up against a very hard proposition if this continues, and I think some effort should be made to direct these men to other sources, because we have not the facilities for handling them.

The CHAIRMAN: Will you make it a point when you get home to prepare a list of as many of those men as you can see, men who did not originate in British Columbia, but who were sent back to British Columbia, and we will have that investigated.

Mr. DRINNAN: They have that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN: But if the privilege is to their detriment, and if it only means over-crowding your labour market and rendering it impossible to place your own men when they go back, it ought to be known.

Mr. DRINNAN: That is what we want to avoid.

The CHAIRMAN: Now, Mr. Hart, we would be glad to give you time.

Mr. HART: I will start with the Veteran's Club in Victoria. This organization was formed by Colonel Haggard and Mr. Rawlinson, who called himself Major Rawlinson, but is not entitled to that rank; he is a major in the Legion of Frontiersmen, and they elect their majors in the same way that a president or secretary of an association is elected. I think had I joined that association I might even have been a major-general by now.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. That has happened right here in Canada?—A. Right here in Canada, and I feel sure of this, that a man who joins that organization and is likely to cause trouble, as an inducement to him to be quiet they probably elect him major or colonel, as the case may be.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. It is a designation of a position within a society, and not a military position at all?—A. Quite so. When the men started to return to Victoria this organization called the Veterans' Club was formed. Advertisements were inserted in the daily papers asking the people to contribute towards the funds of the Veterans' Club for returned wounded soldiers; in every instance the word "wounded" was used. They obtained something like $600 from the people; the majority of the returned men had joined this club; after a time the rules were issued. In the first instance there was a permanent executive committee. There was no question of an election at an annual general meeting; the men were appointed by the founders, and when we raised objection to that we were told that if we wished to have representation on the executive committee it would only be necessary for us to join the Legion of Frontiersmen, and then we would be eligible for appointment—not election; the term used was "appointment." That we strongly resented. Another rule said that the club was the property of the Frontiersmen of Victoria. That was obtaining money under false pretences, for the majority of the people of Victoria were under the impression that the money they were subscribing was to go for an organization formed for the purpose of looking after the interests of returned soldiers.

Q. That has been straightened out now, hasn't it?—A. No, it has not. At the present moment, or when I left Victoria, cards advertising this Veterans' Club were placed in conspicuous places in the Military Convalescent Hospital at Resthaven, and the notices concerning the Returned Soldiers' Association were removed. An organization that is exploiting the returned men is allowed to have its notices placed on the walls of the hospital.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything further to add along those lines?—A. Yes, I have. I have a suggestion: I would like to see an Act of Parliament prohibiting any organization from using the name of returned soldiers, or in any way misleading the public to believe the organization to be a returned soldiers' organization when it is nothing of the kind.

Q. Would it meet the difficulty if all organizations throughout Canada who attempted to raise war funds of any character should require to be certified by the Federal Government and registered and approved?—A. I think it would.

Q. You know there is a law of that kind in England?—A. I do not.

Q. There is an Act of that kind in England and I may say informally for your information that the Prime Minister before he left sent a copy of that Act to the law officers of the Crown to draw up a similar Act for Canadian use, so that I know the matter is under consideration by the Government?—A. I think that would assist, providing that particular attention was paid to the name of these associations so that the names would not confuse the public.

Q. Your idea being that any names which would draw contributions from a sympathetic public, which were not exactly as intended in connection with the war veterans should not be used and that it should be made a criminal offence to use them?—A. I do, sir.

Q. Now continue if you have other items?—A. On the question of pensions, the pensions for the dependents of the men who have fallen I think are quite inadequate and this refers not only to the west but to the east and throughout the Dominion, whilst the soldier is serving his wife receives $35 a month, being $20 separation allowance and $15 assigned pay. This is supplemented by patriotic aid. When a man is dead the widow receives $32; a widowed mother receives $24. If it is impossible for the dependent to live in comfort on $35 per month and the existence of the Patriotic Fund is evidence of the fact that they cannot live in comfort on that amount, how can they be expected to live in comfort on $32 or $24. If they can live on $22 and $24 then there should be no need for the Patriotic Fund.

Q. I see your argument?—A. Then as to the question of the widow with children who dies and leaves the children alone, a widow with three children would receive $50 a month. That is an average of $12.50 for each person. When the mother dies the average of $12.50 is reduced by over 50 per cent, reducing it to $6 a month. It is practically impossible to get anyone to look after children for $6 a month.

Q. That is motherless children?—A. Yes.

Q. Whose father is killed?—A. Yes, but if the widow's pension were divided amongst the children then you would be able to find people who would be perfectly fit and willing to look after those children and save them from having to go into orphanages.

Q. You have precedent for that in the fact that the widower's children gets higher rates if the woman is dead?—A. Yes. Then the question as to a man who is killed in after years as a direct result of disability incurred on active service. I do not think there should be any time limit set for that at all. A man who has lost an arm, or who is deaf, or who is not very nimble on his feet is liable to be killed at any time in crossing the road. I have been nearly killed here about three times because I do not know the rules of the road and stepped in the wrong direction, and I am not able to step out of the way quickly enough, and it might happen that any man might be killed on account of his disability. A man who is deaf might 20 years hence be crossing the road and not hear something approaching and be killed. A man who has one eye might not see something approaching on the blind side, and if that happens 20 years hence and he leaves a widow, that widow should have some means of living, considering the fact that the direct cause of his death was the disability he contracted at the front. I would like to say with reference to the man who is killed in this way that it should not only apply to the totally disabled man, because a man partially disabled is apt to meet his death as a direct result of his previous injury.

Q. As a result of his inability to take care of himself?—A. Yes. Many men claim that they should be placed in a higher class for pensions, and I quote my own case. I am in receipt of $16 a month pension, but I am informed by the Pensions Board that it will be reduced to $8. I live close to the coast, and previous to the war used to get my fuel from the beach. I was able to do gardening, and anything that was necessary to be done around the house I was able to do it myself. Now we have to buy coal, and everything that has to be done in the way of digging and odd jobs around the house, I have to pay someone to do, and the $96 does not cover my out of pocket expenses.

Q. The $96 a year you mean?—A. A year. For instance, I have got a small house. Formerly, I could paint that myself, but now I cannot.

Q. Under what percentage do you come?—A. The second degree under the former scale, which gave me $16 a month. I was notified from Ottawa by circular letter the 1st of July to the following effect. "A new scale of pensions has been adopted. As this scale shows an increase, your pension will have to be re-adjusted, and when the re-adjustment is made the difference will be paid you." After the expiration of six months I received a letter stating that the marginally noted man had been awarded a pension of $192 a year according to the old scale. According to the new rate, however, he should only receive $96, as this readjustment shows a decrease it is recommended no action be taken.

Q. You have a fourth class pension?—A. I have a fourth class pension under the new scale.

Q. What were you in service, private?—A. I was a private.

Q. Then your pension would be $192 a year?—A. $192.

Q. $16 a month?—A. Yes.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

Q. Is not that what you are receiving?—A. According to the report of the Medical Board awarding a pension, when I was boarded in the first instance, the pension was made $16 a month.

Q. We have a memo from the Board of Pension Commissioners to the officer commanding M.D. No. 11, calling for a new medical board in relation to the renewal of your pension, dated 12th, 3rd, 1917. I do not know whether you got that memorandum?—A. I did not.

Q. A letter went to you to British Columbia on the 12th of March ordering a new medical board in relation to your pension?—A. This is the point I want to bring out: According to the new rate of pension I should only have been in receipt of $96 a year. So that if I am re-boarded and my condition is considered to be the same as it was, my pension will be $8 a month. This will not cover out of pocket expenses.

Q. But if your pension is maintained at the fourth class it would be $192 a year?—A. I am just instancing my case because there are many men like myself in receipt of only $8 a month pension, but who have to pay for everything that needs to be done around their homes because they cannot do it themselves. For this reason there are a number of men who are complaining that they should be put in a higher class.

Now, with reference to the question brought up the other day, that a boy of twenty should not receive the same pension as a man of forty-five, with that I do not agree. If the boy of twenty and the man of forty-five both live to be seventy, the former will have to put up with the pain and inconvenience of a disability for a further twenty-five years. Also that boy of twenty will eventually be a man of forty-five. I do not think he should be given a lower pension than a man of forty-five, because a boy who loses his arm is subject to as much disability as a man of forty-five.

As to the question of equalization of pensions for officers and men, we consider that the pensions should be equal, excepting in the case of those men who, previous to the war, had spent their time and money in fitting themselves for their rank. But the officer who has attained his experience at the expense of the Government is not entitled to any different treatment from the private.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You do not agree with your President then?—A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Your President excepted the man who, for example, had attained the rank of Colonel by merit and service in the field.

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, sir, but that would be a man who qualified himself as an officer before joining the C.E.F. He must have, to get even the rank of lieutenant.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): Suppose a man went to the front in September, 1914, in the C.E.F., and by merit and service in the field has attained the rank of Brigadier-General, do you, Mr. Drinnan, think that officer should get the pension of a private?

Mr. DRINNAN: No, sir, I do not.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): Do you contend that, Mr Hart?

Mr. HART: My contention had reference to the man who obtained his training as an officer at the expense of the Government. If that man was an officer previous to the War and has obtained his training at his own expense, he should be in an entirely different class.

The CHAIRMAN: Do you think it would be fair when men have enlisted as officers and their wives have allowed them to go, knowing what the scale of pension is, and the men are killed, to cut the pension for the widows down to a private's rate?

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, sir, I think it would be quite fair. The Government saw fit to cut the man's working pay.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: But that has been restored.

The CHAIRMAN: You see the Government has entered into a contract in the case which I cited.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

Mr. DRINNAN: The Government entered into a contract with the privates also, sir.

Mr. McCURDY: The contract is being carried out.

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, but it was cut out for a year.

The CHAIRMAN: If an officer enlists and leaves his wife and family understanding that a certain scale of pension will come to them if he is killed, do you not regard that as a contract?

Mr. DRINNAN: It is a contract, there is no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN: Would you consider that the Government could reduce that pension to the widow, in justice, if the officer is killed.

Mr. DRINNAN: It would be unfair, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: How can you equalize the pension of officers and men if you are going to reduce the officer's pension?

Hon. Mr. ROSS: There were no pensions in the first place.

The CHAIRMAN: There has always been a pension scale. There was a pension scale prior to the breaking out of this war, although the pension scale has been altered by Order in Council and is now almost about to be implemented into the Statutes. Every officer who has enlisted did so with a certain pension scale before him, and if he were killed his widow would get that rate of pension.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Which has been changed.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, but increased, not decreased.

Mr. DRINNAN: Let me ask how many officers of the first contingent, and probably the second contingent, considered when they enlisted what the pay or the pension was going to be? Also, how many of the men who enlisted in those contingents considered what the pay or pension was going to be. They did not care anything for those things, they went to help their country.

The CHAIRMAN: I think you are wrong about that. I think a great many of them considered what their wives would receive if they were killed. I do not think they worried about their own pay, but I think a good many considered what their wives would get.

Mr. DRINNAN: There was no Patriotic Fund at that time.

The CHAIRMAN: There was a pension scale in force.

Mr. DRINNAN: I do not think they paid very much attention to it.

Mr. HART: Thousands of men who were fitted to hold commissions joined up as privates because they wanted to get to the front. They did not for a moment consider what was going to happen. There was only one thing they thought of and that was to go to the aid of their country. Everything else was subordinate to that, but they did believe that whatever happened to them the Government would see that their dependents would not suffer.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): There is no doubt that is true but the thing is to be fair to the officer who has gone to the front under a certain contract with regard to his pay and pension.

Mr. HART: There are many cases. I know of one case in which the officer was the junior in the office, was almost an office boy, and the private was a man who was his senior, earning a very much higher rate of pay.

By the Chairman:

Q. That may be a case of very exalted patriotism on the part of the private.—A. There were many thousands of such cases, especially at the commencement.

Q. In an army that had to be formed like ours, de novo, there would be cases of that kind?—A. Yes.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): There are cases of officers who went right from civilian life and became colonels, and in individual cases would unjustly get the pension of a colonel.

Mr. DRINNAN: There are cases of officers who got even to France who were very much over age, men who should never have been out of Canada, more or less tourists. I would call them, a great many of them.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything further to add, Mr. Hart?—A. At Victoria we act in conjunction with the Returned Soldiers' Aid Commission, the vocational training officer of the Military Hospitals Commission, and Major Harvey, of "J" Casualty Unit, and everything has been very satisfactory. I was amazed when I saw the mass of documents that the chairman of the Investigating Committee of Toronto brought out of his pocket. We have the same sort of thing out there, but we turn them over immediately to the Secretary of the Provincial Aid Commission and everything is straightened out in the central clearing house, and if the Toronto Returned Soldiers' Aid Commission representative handles it properly he can do everything necessary and save a lot of trouble and delay, because he knows exactly where to apply and what steps to take to have the different matters straightened out.

Q. So that the accumulation is largely due to overlapping and lack of knowledge. Where you have one thoroughly competent officer to whom everybody goes it works smoothly?—A. Yes. It is necessary to know the routine, and by referring all complaints to him he can get them straightened out without trouble and inconvenience to the man who is employed on other work.

Q. I think Mr. Drinnan, in his evidence, referred to a Dominion convention. Is it the intention that the soldiers' organization throughout Canada shall meet in conference in the near future and form a Dominion-wide organization?

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: With provincial branches?

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: Then there will be an executive who will be empowered to speak for the entire soldiers' associations of Canada?

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: And these questions will then doubtless be discussed and the policy of the organization enunciated?

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes, sir.

Mr. BENNETT: Preliminary meetings have taken place in some of the provinces.

Mr. DRINNAN: We have formed a provincial association. We have not taken a charter for the reason that we had not decided on the name.

Mr. BENNETT: You want a charter in all the provinces?

Mr. DRINNAN: Yes.

Examination of Mr. Hart resumed.

The WITNESS: Another thing that would help the returned soldiers greatly, sir, is that the returned men themselves, in whose interest these different organizations and committees are formed, shall have some opportunity of co-operating and pointing out their views.

By the Chairman:

Q. By meetings, or having seats on the executive?—A. By having seats. This is a Parliamentary Committee formed for the purpose of inquiring into grievances of returned soldiers and to try to find a solution to their different problems. If returned soldiers were included on this committee I consider that its efficiency would be greatly increased, because there are questions that they can see which are not seen by the members of this committee, because they are not returned soldiers themselves and have not been through the same experiences and therefore do not understand what is required by the returned soldiers.

Q. It won't be long before you will probably have returned soldiers who can qualify as members of the Parliamentary committees?—A. It would probably have created a precedent to have placed soldiers on this committee, but the war itself is a precedent, and will create thousands more.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. This is a Parliamentary committee.—A. I know it is. It was not absolutely necessary to make it exclusively a Parliamentary committee.

MR. BENNETT: This Committee would have to be a Parliamentary committee. There are others that might not.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Can you lay your complaints before a returned soldier better than before this Committee?—A. No. I mean I have heard questions being asked here, while we have been sitting around, and I have heard different men say: "Why doesn't some one ask this or that question as it would bring out points that were being overlooked."

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Did you make notes of those?—A. No, I did not.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Can you bring to your mind now any one question that should have been asked?—A. There are two that are not of great moment. One was when the police chief was giving evidence and at that time he stated something to the effect that the returned soldiers should not receive preferential treatment, that they should obey the law. Certainly. They should obey the law, and if a soldier takes advantage of his position as a returned soldier to bring discredit on his uniform he should be soaked twice as hard as a civilian. But the question of the man who is nervous and abnormal is different. He should receive entirely different treatment. He is really a sick man. Then there is the question of mental and alcoholic cases. There are lots of cases now of that kind.

By the Chairman:

Q. If you can give us any information or suggestion about dealing with the alcoholic returned soldier we shall be very glad to have it?—A. A large number of the men who are affected in this way were, previous to the war, total abstainers or very moderate drinkers. They were sent to England from the front with their nerves shattered, strangers in a strange land, not knowing what to do. Many of them took a drink, and if they were normal it would not have had any effect upon them, but one drink is very often more than a man in an abnormal condition can stand.

Q. A convalescent man?—A. A convalescent. And it is very easy when a man has taken one drink to take two.

Q. How would you help him?—A. I would suggest special treatment for those men.

Q. Before or after the act?—A. When you have these alcoholic cases, instead of placing them in convalescent hospitals and then punishing them because they come back drunk, they should be treated as sick men because they are sick, and steps should be taken to try to reclaim them and make them desirable citizens by special treatment.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

Q. That is you recognize alcoholism as a disease and treat them accordingly?—A. In this case it is caused as a direct result of their service. In many instances owing to the fact that the men were abnormal on their return they contracted the habit before regaining their normal condition.

Q. That is worthy of consideration. Is there anything further?—A. Yes, with reference to the land. I think too much reliance has been placed on that. The majority of men do not want to go on the land. Their experience at the front has rendered that almost impossible in some instances. After the excitement of service at the front it would be almost impossible for men to isolate themselves and go on the land. I know from my own experience that the majority of them do not want it. If you were crossing a lake on a boat and a man who was travelling with you, with his pockets stuffed full of bills and all his worldly possessions, fell overboard, and you jumped over to rescue him, supposing he then said: You are a very fine fellow, but you will have to dig my lot and grow potatoes to decrease the cost of living. I don't think you would turn around and answer that man very politely, and that is the way some of the men are looking upon this question. There is so much stress laid upon the land that they consider they are being railroaded——

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What?—A. Railroaded, that is the expression I have heard used by the men. I was speaking to a man of some importance on that question. He asked me, do you think the land scheme is a good one. I said no, I do not, for the simple reason that I do not think many men will go on it. He said: They will have to. In answer to my query, why, he said: They will realize that it is necessary for them to go on the land in order to increase the production of foodstuffs and they will also realize that they will have to earn a living. I think that the man who has been out to protect his country should not have to come back and develop the country in a way he does not want to. It should be done by men who have not been overseas. If it is necessary for men to go on the land and cultivate it let some of the men who have not suffered give up their soft jobs and take the hard ones on the land and so make room for the soldier.

By the Chairman:

Q. There are many men who do not regard going on the land as a penalty?—A. I am dealing with the men who do.

Q. You think that men who do not desire to go on the land should not be forced to do so as the only alternative?—A. Every man who wants to go on the land should be given every encouragement. With regard to the solution of the problem there is not the slightest doubt in my own mind that it is necessary to develop the natural resources of the country and create industries. To do that it is necessary to have money, it cannot be done without money, and the solution of the "after the" problem is the most serious one which is before the people of Canada. Everyone is determined to make every sacrifice to bring the war to a successful conclusion, but the people are not so united in their intention to bring about the solution of the "after the war" problem, because, while they realize that money must be used unstintingly to bring the war to an end, they have different ideas when it comes to providing for returning the soldier to civil life. Money is not to be obtained for that purpose so readily, and I have a scheme I wish to submit to the Committee.

Q. Is it a personal scheme?—A. It is a personal scheme.

Q. It is not a scheme that has been submitted to and approved by the Soldiers' Association?—A. No, it is a personal scheme that shows a way in which the Government may find a solution.

Q. Is it in writing, or can you put it in writing and hand it in to the Committee?—A. It is in writing, partly, but it needs a little extension and explanation.

Q. Supposing you put it carefully in writing, and then hand it in as your evidence?—A. I can give you the scheme very briefly in a few minutes, I would prefer to do that. There are two schemes, apparently, open to the Government at the present time. The one is to retain for a long period in the service the men who come back so as not to glut the labour market by throwing all these men out of employment, the other is to demobilize them right away as soon as they come back. The second proposition is impossible, and the other is unsatisfactory.

Q. The second proposition is impossible because of lack of transportation?—A. I mean after they come back to Canada; to turn out the 400,000 men to seek for employment would bring about a very serious condition of affairs.

Q. It would take a whole year to bring that number back so that they would not be all suddenly thrown on the labour market?—A. But after they are back in Canada the suggestion has been made that they should be used for clearing the land; I think myself that instead of waiting until they come back steps should be taken to create industries which will afford them employment when they return. These industries should be established for the purpose of developing the natural resources of the country, so that as soon as these men can be spared from military service they will be able to start work immediately. If 400,000 men are retained for six months after the time that it would be possible to discharge them it would cost the country somewhere in the neighbourhood of $185,000,000 to maintain them, and the National Debt would have to be increased by that amount. Instead of waiting until the war is over money should be appropriated now, and new industries created and steps taken to start the development of the natural resources of the country, this would be very much better than if the men were retained in the service for six months after they returned to Canada. There is also the question of what is going to be done with them, if we are going to keep them in camps all the money which will be expended in pay and for their upkeep would go into the hands of the contractors who supply them with food and the men who run the canteens where the men would spend their money. It is a question of which is the wiser thing to do—

Q. Your suggestion is that the Government should take steps to develop the natural resources of the country by the establishment of industries so as to have employment for the men when they come back instead of waiting until the men are here looking for employment?—A. Each province has its own problem, and should be allowed to solve it in its own way, the provinces should be given a certain amount of money and allowed to go ahead and look after their own men.

Q. Your idea is that the Dominion Government should finance it, and each province should spend the money according to the requirements of the local conditions?—A. That is my idea.

Will you permit me to submit for the consideration of the committee a letter which I received only this morning, containing a suggestion offered by one of our members, as follows:—

“Would you have a resolution put before the meeting, namely:

“That returned soldiers from the front that had Dominion land home homesteads, previous to 1914, be granted their deed to same upon making application to the Minister of Dominion Lands, Ottawa, which would include the Dominion Lands in British Columbia.”

In British Columbia a man who had a pre-emption previous to going to the front gets his grant, and this man suggests that the Dominion Government should make the same concession.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you care, Mr. Drinnan, to submit Col. Markham's suggestion for scheme of land settlement.

MR. DRINNAN: I will do so if you desire it.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well, we shall be very glad to have it.

Witnesses discharged.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

Dr. JOHN BROWN, junior, representing the National Council Y.M.C.A., was called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand, Dr. Brown, that you are connected with the national organization of the Y.M.C.A., and particularly interested in the returned soldiers' question?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you have some evidence to give to this committee with reference to the re-awakening, so to speak, of men who have come back and who have not yet decided seriously to undertake their own betterment along warfare lines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you kindly give us the benefit of your suggestions?—A. We have at the discharge depot in Bath, England, a secretary who devotes his entire time mingling with the men who are soon to come home. We have had an arrangement with the Militia Department whereby we have been experimenting, with secretaries on the ships bringing the men back home. We also have secretaries stationed at Halifax, St. John and Quebec, whose sole duty is to connect up the information and the interests of the men that are handed on to them from our secretary in the discharge depot in England, and the information gathered by the men on the ships. This information, in turn is passed on through one of three channels, the largest of which is our local associations. In every city of any size in the Dominion we have, as you know, a local branch of our Young Men's Christian Association.

Q. With a building?—A. With a building and equipment. We appreciate that the Y.M.C.A. is looked upon favourably by the majority of returned soldiers, particularly in view of the work rendered by the association overseas, but we are depending more upon the point of contact made by the various secretaries with the soldiers while en route home to definitely link up in a very personal way these men who are coming back to their home communities. There are a number of definite things that the local associations throughout the country are doing. First of all, they are granting free membership privileges for from three to twelve months in some instances to all the returned soldiers. In addition to this, they are giving preference to returned soldiers in the use of their dormitories, which is a very considerable problem in many instances, I mean to the men. In addition, they are granting the use of their rooms for all sorts of social and recreational activities specially planned for the returned soldier, and to the organization of educational classes, and offering the rooms for the use of returned soldiers' groups and clubs for functions of their own.

Q. How about the gymnasium, bowling alleys, and so on?—A. All that is included in the privileges I mentioned—swimming pools, social room, library, etcetera.

Q. You are speaking generally of the policy of the association, not merely in Toronto, but throughout the Dominion?—A. Yes, sir. As a regular part of our association work we have always given attention to the matter of securing employment for young men who are either out of employment, or who wish to make changes in their present positions. Naturally, we are particularly on the look out for returned soldiers, and assisting in every possible way, giving them preference in the employment of men on our own staffs, both in janitorial service and where unskilled men can be used, as well as looking to recruits for our regular association work from the returned men. Possibly one of our largest services, that cannot be defined, and yet that means a great deal, is helping the man in a general way to become established in the community by getting him acquainted with the pastors of the churches, introducing him to young men's Bible classes, and in channels outside of the returned soldier movement as such, bringing him in contact with civilian life, and having him re-establish himself in the ordinary walks of life.

Q. Have you representatives in places like Whitby?—A. We have begun, under the direction of the Hospitals Commission, an arrangement with them whereby we nominate to them, for approval, secretaries who will divide their time in the hospitals and convalescent homes. We have at the present time the former chaplain of the 198th Battalion, Chaplain Nicholson, introducing that work for the first time at Whitby. The work thus far is very satisfactory.

Q. At Whitby you have charge of the amusements and entertainments?—A. We have a dual relationship. The Hospitals Commission look upon this man as their expert on vocational guidance. He is there to create an appetite on the part of the men for the educational classes for which the Hospitals Commission are providing instructors; he does not do the teaching.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is he paid by the Hospitals Commission?—A. By the Hospitals Commission.

Q. What remuneration does he receive?—A. This particular man gets $125 a month.

By the Chairman:

Q. He is an expert?—A. He is.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What does he do?—A. He does two things. From the Hospitals Commission point of view he is assisting the men in vocational guidance work and interesting them in the educational classes.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. When a man comes back, having been unsettled in his previous vocation, he is casting about as to what he is going to do now. This man, because of his personal contact with him during his illness, moving in and out with freely, attempts to get a line on the man, analyze and help him to analyze himself, his previous training, his fitness for different lines of vocation. Then, knowing the various educational classes in which the Hospitals Commission is providing instruction, he acquaints that man with this fact, and attempts to interest him along the line of his particular fitness.

By the Chairman:

Q. They sometimes call him a co-ordinator, don't they?—A. A vocational co-ordinator, yes sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. He helps the man pick out a job and fit himself for it?—A. But it is more than that. It is helping the man to study his fitness for one of many jobs, not to take the first one that offers itself.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Was this particular co-ordinator engaged in this line of work before?—A. Not this man; he was a minister, chaplain and college professor. He has been with the soldiers. He has a point of contact. In addition he has a motion picture machine, graphophone, and library. He organizes entertainments, informal religious services, checker and chess tournaments, etc.

By the Chairman:

Q. Does he organize the sports, football, etc.?—A. Yes, all that sort of thing. There is one other place in which we are making an experiment which I might hope the members of the Committee would visit. The former McCarron Hotel on the corner, of Queen and Victoria streets, which is just now being renovated will be the first of what we call a Red Triangle Club. We have set aside an appropriation of $10,000 to cover any possible loss in the operation of this former hotel as a downtown Y.M.C.A. club for soldiers, not for returned soldiers exclusively, but the thought is that the emphasis will be upon that work.

[Mr. H. W. Hart.]

Q. Men in uniform?—A. Men in uniform only. It is designed to accommodate particularly the transient men, accommodations wholesome in every way will be provided. We have splendid sanitary and bathing facilities, and pool tables, and refreshments will be served. The big feature will be the service bureau, here again tempting the man to solve his problems.

Q. An impartial friend that the man can consult with as to his future, his employment and opportunity and all that?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you wish to add anything more?—A. Just one other point. The Young Men's Christian Association is a world-wide movement. While in Canada we have not done much in the rural field, in other countries considerable progress has been made. In the United States there is a very considerable work being done in rural districts. The Y.M.C.A. has very definite work in rural fields. We are seeking to find our place in the scheme of land settlement in connection with the returned soldier. We believe that an important factor will be the social and recreation phase of the life of these men, and that this organization, which has given special attention to this phase of the soldier's life from the time he enlists at home until he returns, may well be one of the factors as he comes and establishes himself in a new environment, where particularly the monotony and possibly the drudgery and isolation will be the thing that will either make or mar.

John McRAE, recalled and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand you desire to make a statement, inasmuch as your work was referred to by one of the British Columbia men?—A. In reference to those stickers that the British Columbia man refers to, I must plead guilty to being the father of that stamp. I wrote from Winnipeg to a number of British manufacturers, and, invariably, every letter that came to me had this sticker on the back of it, and I conceived the idea that we might use it to our mutual profit; so we got out this sticker with 24 stamps in a book. The book cost $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents. We submitted it to various people, and to our brethren from Vancouver, at a price of 5 cents. They were to sell it at 10 cents. We have sold thousands of these and that was one source of our revenue, and I think it must be admitted by the Commission that any organization that will gather up \$77,000 in a matter of 21 months in the way we did will have to do some work.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You used it for one purpose alone?—A. Absolutely.

Q. The returned soldier?—A. Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: I do not take that to be the serious part of their statement. The serious part of it was that the British Columbia returned soldiers were themselves deceived by the name. I do not think anybody would object to the selling of the stamps.

The WITNESS: I fail to see what particular difference it makes what we call our association.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. As long as everybody understand it?—A. Yes, but apart from that, as long as we were giving every cent for the benefit of the returned men, I do not see any objection to it.

[Mr. John McRae.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You are not taking anybody in?—A. Absolutely not; and another thing, not a single director on our board gets one cent: if he did, he could not sit on the board five minutes.

By the Chairman:

Q. It is apparent that the men who are bona fide returned soldiers object to the use by civilians of the name Returned Soldiers Association?—A. That is apparent.

Q. That is a fair criticism; don't you think your association could do its work as well under another name?—A. Of course, we have been advertising that name for the last year and three-quarters. We were the originators of it, and it would be an advantage, no doubt, to the returned soldiers in Winnipeg to have that name. We were perfectly satisfied to give it to them.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. There is an objection to the button. Is it right that a man who is not a returned soldier should use the button of a returned soldier and represent himself to be a returned soldier when he is not?—A. This is nothing like the button the returned soldier wears—no resemblance whatever. There is another point I wish to draw your attention to with reference to the British Columbia men. They all pass through the city of Winnipeg, and, as a consequence, are entertained by the Returned Soldiers' Association. Sometimes when the train comes in there, and they have four or five hours to wait, we take those boys to the theatre, for instance. Then we give them their dinner and send them away with periodicals and other things to read on the train. A number of other cities west of Winnipeg have written us and offered us assistance. We also wire ahead: a man coming in there wants to wire to his mother or relatives. We do the wiring for him at our expense.

They also made reference to the returned soldiers not being represented on our board. Now, we are a chartered organization.

Q. Any man can become a member?—A. Yes, on the payment of $5 he can buy that button. He can give us $5, which is the equivalent of the button, and he can become a member. We had this matter under very serious consideration in the early stages, and we concluded it would not be fair to tax the returned soldier $5 to become a member of the association: and another reason we do not allow the returned soldier to vote, we were first located in the Army and Navy rooms in Winnipeg. The secretary was an Army and Navy man and a very active worker on behalf of the returned soldier, but they objected to going up there because the minute you go up there they shove an application card under your nose, asking you to become a member of their association: and remember this, gentlemen, that the Great War Veterans are not members of the Returned Soldiers. A great many of them are not associated with any organization; quite a number of them have signed up with the Army and Navy Veterans. There are a great many who have not signed up with anything. I maintain that the beneficiary has no right to vote away public funds subscribed for his benefit. That is the position I take, right or wrong.

Witness discharged.

MEMORANDUM OF VETERANS' CLUB, CALGARY.

SUGGESTIONS FOR LAND SETTLEMENT.

1. Three hundred and twenty acres of land for each man.
 2. As the land is the property of the state the settler to be paid for doing the improvements, so as to enable him to live.
 3. Lumber, implements, etc., to be supplied at wholesale rates.
 4. From two to four horses to be supplied each man, half mares.
 5. If he wants to go in for dairying, two to six cows to be provided him. The state to insure this stock.
 6. Males to be kept at central farms to which he must breed this stock.
 7. This stock to be paid for in the following manner: The settler to return a two year old colt which would be inspected by the stock inspector; this shall be taken as payment for one horse. A two year old beast shall be returned in like manner when the cow would then be the property of the settler. When the man shall have raised feed, brood sows shall be provided on the same terms. A pig six months old returned for each sow, when the original shall be the property of the settler.
 8. A loan of $2,000 shall be made to each man; this shall be free from interest for three years; principal shall be spread over a term of 20 years.
 9. At the end of five years, if he has raised three crops, patent shall be issued to him for the land; the Government taking a lien on the land for any balance due it.
 10. Each man shall choose the amount of breaking to be done the first year from 20 to 100 acres.
 11. He shall also choose the kind of buildings he erects. The idea for the whole scheme being production of grain and stock.
In this way the bulk of the loan would go into stock, and not into buildings.
 12. Men to be assisted financially until they get returns from the land. Seed grain, horse feed, etc., furnished at wholesale rates.
 13. As the land and improvements are the property of the state until patent is issued, the settler shall not pay any interest on them until he receives a patent.
 14. All positions as overseers and inspectors, etc., of this scheme, shall be filled by returned men of ability.
- The Veterans' Club of Calgary would respectfully ask this Commission to grant the returned men of Canada 30 days to discuss the scheme before finally approved of by the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa.

COPY OF ORDER IN COUNCIL.

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Militia and Defence, April 18, 1917, advise that every person who has served, is now serving, or may in the future serve as an officer, nursing sister, warrant officer, non-commissioned officer or man in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and who has been or may hereafter be honourably retired or discharged from such service, after six months' continuous service during the present war, be continued on the pay and allowances of the rank held at the date of retirement or discharge, for a period of three months if the said service or any portion thereof has been performed overseas.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, ONTARIO.

TORONTO, April 20, 1917.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 17th instant, addressed to the Honourable Mr. Ferguson, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, has, in the absence of that Minister, been transferred to me for attention.

The statement read by the chairman to Mr. Ferguson appearing on page 710 of No. 8 Proceedings, is taken from a memorandum adopted at an interprovincial conference held in Ottawa in October, 1915, regarding the problem of taking care of and providing employment for members of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces who return to Canada during the period of the war. The memorandum in question was agreed to by the representatives of the several provinces in attendance at the conference and was agreed to by me personally on behalf of the province of Ontario. The memorandum contained a provision that in case, upon consideration, the Government of any province deemed it advisable to alter or amend any of the suggestions, or make further suggestions, it should immediately forward notice thereof to the Provincial Secretary of each of the other provinces of Canada with a view to having the same approved by the governments of such other provinces. No such notice was forwarded by my Government nor did this Government receive and such notice from any government of the other provinces, and so I have assumed and still assume that the memorandum referred to was adopted by the governments of all the different provinces of the Dominion and that the same is binding upon this Government in common with the other provincial governments.

In furtherance of the memorandum referred to, a central Provincial Committee was at once appointed by this Government, called the Soldiers' Aid Commission, and the appointment and powers of this Commission were ratified by the Act of the Legislature at the following Session,—see Chapter 3, 6 George V, and this Government has, so far as I am aware, through said Commission, carried out to the full every undertaking and obligation resting upon it under said memorandum.

I would beg, however, to call attention to the fact that the memorandum referred to sets out clearly that it only attempted to deal with the problems which were then pressing and that there were two other problems demanding attention,—the first, relating to a practical method of placing soldiers on the land, and it was suggested that this should be made the subject of special inquiry to be instituted by the Federal authorities; the other, relating to the finding of employment for the large number of soldiers that it was then expected would within a short space of time return to Canada upon the conclusion of the war.

I think it was clearly understood by all parties that the arrangement set forth in the memorandum referred to was only temporary, and intended to meet the conditions then existing, and was not intended as a solution of the returned soldier problem, or to finally settle the duties and liabilities of the Federal and Provincial Governments, particularly with relation to conditions that might arise after the war.

In order that there may be no room for misunderstanding, it is perhaps proper that I should point out that at the conference referred to the representatives of the provinces took the position that the problem of the returned soldier was a national one, and that all obligations and responsibilities in connection therewith rested upon the Dominion Government, and, as I understood it, the Dominion Government recognized and admitted that such was the case. Anything undertaken by the Provincial Governments under the memorandum in question was voluntary, and with the object of assisting and co-operating with the Dominion Government in the pressing situation that had then arisen.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) W. H. HEARST.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

ROOM 301,

April 27, 1917.

The Committee met at 10.10 o'clock a.m., the chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

All nine members of the Committee were present.

The examination of Mr. E. H. SCAMMELL, Secretary, Military Hospitals Commission, resumed.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have followed the proceedings of this Committee pretty closely, and you also have a fair idea of the evidence which has been given. Events have moved since this Committee was appointed, and our first session began, consequently you may have some new information to give regarding the Hospitals Commission, and may also have some explanations to present with respect to the evidence already heard. I think, therefore, it would be better for you to proceed in your own way, the Committee reserving the right to interrupt you from time to time and to ask such questions as may suggest themselves.—A. When I was on the stand last, Sir Herbert, I explained the accommodation which was available for convalescent treatment, and was about to deal with the tubercular situation. That matter was reserved until I should be heard by the Committee again. However, before going on to that I should like to say that the statement I made regarding accommodation in Halifax, that the Commission had taken over part of Dalhousie College and was about to erect a hospital in the grounds of that institution, requires to be amended, the Commission having taken over two other properties in Halifax in lieu of carrying out the original proposition. As Mr. Armstrong is to be on the stand, I should like, if I may, to leave to him the explanations regarding the new properties we have taken over since I was on the stand before, and merely now to say, that the situation in Nova Scotia is well looked after, and in the course of a very short time we shall have beds to spare in that province, also that we are opening a number of other institutions in some of the other provinces which will very shortly give us a considerable margin.

Q. Do you wish to give us an enumeration of those more recent operations now, or will that be set forth in your evidence later?—A. I should like you to take that information from Mr. Armstrong, if you will.

Q. Very well.—A. Now, with regard to the tubercular situation: the Commission has taken over some institutions entirely. It has also arranged with existing sanatoria to build additions, utilizing the administrative buildings, the commissariat equipment, and so forth, for the benefit of these extra pavilions. At Ste. Agathe the Commission has taken over a summer hotel, the property of Mr. Lorne McGibbon. This has been in operation since January, 1916, and there is accommodation there now, with the additions which have been made, for 70 patients. That institution is usually kept fairly filled. At Ste. Agathe also there is the Laurentian Sanatorium, where treatment is given to from 40 to 50 patients, so that we have accommodation at that point for about 115. We also have another sanatorium in that district at Lake Edward. Then we have taken over a sanatorium at Kingston, the Sir Oliver Mowat Sanatorium.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is the accommodation at Ste. Agathe sufficient for the Montreal Military District?—A. Yes, for tuberculous patients.

Q. And will be for the next few months?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. For the tuberculous cases in the No. 4 Military District—the cases do not like to go outside the District where their friends are located, as a rule—there is ample accommodation at Ste. Agathe?—A. Yes. In fact the accommodation there now is partly utilized by patients from other districts, and we have still a few beds to spare.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. What is the reason of that?—A. It is because there is a lack of accommodation in other districts.

By the Chairman:

Q. What accommodation have you in the Maritime Provinces for tuberculous patients?—A. Very little at the present moment. In about ten days time we shall have very much more.

Q. So at the present moment tuberculous patients from the Maritime Provinces are being sent either to Ste. Agathe or to Lake Edward?—A. Exactly. So far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, we have used a sanatorium which is just outside of Charlottetown—the Charles Dalton Sanatorium. It is the property of the Prince Edward Island Government, and we are able to send up to 30 patients there. If necessary, we may build another pavilion there later on.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Have you not got an institution at Kentville?—A. As regards Kentville, we have entered into a contract with the Nova Scotia Government to give us 100 beds. We are contributing one-half the cost.

By the Chairman:

Q. For tuberculous patients alone?—A. Yes, sir. We are contributing one-half the cost of the additions necessary. That institution was to have been opened by April 1. Then it was to have been ready by April 15. Now I understand it will not be ready until the first week in May.

Q. When the institution at Kentville is opened is it your intention to transfer all such patients as are at Ste. Agathe or Lake Edward to Nova Scotia?—A. If necessary.

Q. By "if necessary," do you mean if they are crowded at either of the other institutions, or if the patients desire it?—A. If the patients desire it and there is room at Kentville, we shall transfer them there.

Q. I might say that I know something of the troubles of the Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Ste. Agathe, and one of the heart-breaking features of the situation is the unwillingness of the patients to remain there for treatment. I can well see how a man from Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia, living at a distance of five or six hundred miles away might be pretty restless at Ste. Agathe, and I was wondering if it was your intention to keep those men nearer to their homes than they are at present?—A. That is the intention of the Commission.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What was the cause of the delay in the construction of the building at Kentville?—A. I do not know. The work is in the hands of the Works Department of the Government at Nova Scotia.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. What about the Jordan Memorial Sanitarium, New Brunswick?—A. We have recently made an arrangement for an extension there. They have a building which at a cost of $18,000 or $20,000 can be made to accommodate 40 patients. We are arranging with the provincial authorities that half the cost shall be paid by the Commission, the Government of New Brunswick paying the other half. The same arrangement applies to the sanatorium at St. John, or the St. John County Hospital, as it is called, which is intended only for advanced cases. The Jordan Memorial Institution at River Glade will only take incipient cases. Those two institutions together should provide the accommodation needed in New Brunswick.

Q. What will be your total capacity in that Military District when you have completed these extensions?—A. 200, sir.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Would you explain again the arrangement with the New Brunswick Hospital?—A. Do you mean the one at St. John?

Q. No, the one to which Mr. McCurdy alluded.—A. The Jordan Memorial at River Glade? They have a building there which requires alteration and repair and the estimated cost is from eighteen to twenty thousand dollars. The arrangement which is being made is that the Military Hospitals Commission will pay half the cost.

Q. How many patients will it accommodate?—A. 40 patients.

The CHAIRMAN: Now proceed with your evidence, please.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. All the soldiers suffering from tuberculosis are not sent to these places? A great many go to their own homes?—A. Not if we can help it.

Q. But as a matter of fact.—A. That is because some men absolutely refuse to take treatment.

Q. I wanted to find out if that was the fact.—A. It is.

Q. Is there a larger proportion go home than go to the sanatoria?—A. Oh, no. I do not suppose over 15 per cent, if as large a proportion as that, elect to go home.

By the Chairman:

Q. The difficulty has been, as I understand it, to get the men to remain there for the six months period, which is regarded as the least period in which a case of tuberculosis can be arrested. I would like to know whether the Hospitals Commission has given serious consideration to the matter of making life interesting, pleasant and agreeable for the men who are at these sanatoria, with a view of obviating this intense longing to give up the treatment and go home?—A. That has for a long time engaged the attention of the Commission, and I am glad to say that the steps which have been taken during the last six or nine months have largely met that difficulty. For instance, at Ste. Agathe we have put up a workshop building, where there are carpenter's tools and other equipment which the men can use for arts and crafts work. This has resulted in great activity on the part of the men: in fact some of them have been so desirous of continuing there and taking up these classes that restraint has had to be put upon them.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Are they overtaxing their strength?—A. They are inclined to overtax their strength, they are so anxious to be occupied. We start the work while the men are in bed: they do embroidery work, light wood carving, and crocheting.

By the Chairman:

Q. And put puzzles together?—A. Yes, and then they go later on to the workshops. We are putting those vocational buildings in every centre where we have sanatoria.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Is provision being made to some extent for victrolas and for concert and moving pictures and entertainments of that kind?—A. Yes.

Q. What organization is taking over that phase of the work?—A. The commission is looking after it.

Q. Any outside voluntary organization?—A. No, except this: that some of the film organizations are lending us free their films; for instance, to come back to Ste. Agathe we have a moving picture machine there, and some of the theatres in Montreal supply us with so many films per week, so that the men there see exactly the same picture theatres they would see were they to attend the moving pictures in Montreal, and we are endeavouring to extend that policy throughout the whole country. There is a natural desire on the part of the men for recreation of that nature, and the commission will be very glad to receive any suggestions towards extending that work of recreation.

The CHAIRMAN: I was wondering whether you could not call in the co-operation of outside agencies, and try to keep their life there as interesting as you could by a succession of entertainments and lectures and that kind of thing. I think you would have no difficulty in Montreal in organizing a volunteer organization that would undertake to amuse the patients at Ste. Agathe, and visit them every week or twice a week.

By the Chairman:

Q. If your Hospitals' Commission would formulate a scheme by which outside wellwishers could supply voluntary entertainment at your hospitals, I have not the slightest doubt that there are scores of organizations which would jump at the chance of being useful in that way, and this supplementary assistance would be of great value in cheering up the men?—A. I am very much obliged for the suggestion.

The Sir Oliver Mowat Sanatorium at Kingston was taken over by us some months ago on loan from the Kingston Health Association. It has a building capable of accommodating about thirty patients. We have extended that very considerably, and shortly will have room there for 200. It stands now at about 175.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You mean that there are 175 there?—A. No, we have not that many, but we have accommodation for that number, with the new pavilion we have put up. We are using the main building as an administration building. Then we have a small sanatorium at Freeport, near Kitchener.

Q. That is strongly criticized?—A. I know of no reason why it should be criticized.

Q. You heard the criticism by Dr. Marlow?—A. Yes. He has never seen it. You remember after he criticized it he was asked by the chairman as to whether he had ever seen the place and he said no.

Q. Have you seen it?—A. Yes, I saw it before it was taken over.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you seen it since?—A. Not since it was taken over.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You do not know how it has been improved?—A. I know what work has been done by the report received.

Q. Was it a private home?—A. It was an old farm house on which the City Council of Kitchener spent $25,000.

Q. For what?—A. For a sanatorium. It was just completed when they tendere it to the Commission. We spent a little more money on it, and for a small sanatorium it is quite satisfactory.

Q. How much did you spend on it?—A. About $4,000.

Q. Were they fitting it up for a tubercular hospital themselves?—A. Entirely.

Q. Is it in Kitchener?—A. Half way between Kitchener and Preston.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. How far from Kitchener?—A. I should say about three miles or two and a half.

Q. In the country?—A. Yes, right on the banks of the Grand River, overlooking the river.

Q. Is there anything further to be said with reference to the Minnewaska Institution? The Committee has received a very large file of papers from the management of the Minnewaska Sanatorium, who regard themselves as somewhat aggrieved, claiming that a contract was entered into with them by the Hospitals Commission, that they discharged many of their patients in expectation of fulfilling the contract, and that afterwards the Commission decided not to use it, and that they consequently suffered a loss. What is the position of your Commission with reference to the Minnewaska people?—A. Would you like me to tell you the story of that arrangement, sir?

Q. Inasmuch as they are anxious to put on record their side of it, it might be as well if you would.—A. Subject to correction in matters of detail, when I have the file before me, this was the arrangement: The owners of the Minnewaska Sanatorium approached the Commission, asking that patients might be sent there in view of the fact that some were going to the Free Sanatorium at Muskoka. Different representatives of the Commission saw the building in question and interviewed the management. The management undertook, if patients were sent there, considerably to enlarge and improve the premises and to provide, if necessary, for 300 patients without any capital cost to the Commission. A number of men were sent there, and the same rate was paid as was being paid to the Muskoka Free. Complaints began to come in that the food was not good, that the sanitation was not good, and the matter was investigated by Col. Marlow, by Major Munn, by Senator McLennan and by others representing the Commission. The situation was pointed out to the management, and a promise was made that the defects would be remedied. We waited for a time, we sent our own medical officer there, we sent an assistant, we provided certain equipment, in fact in some cases, we bought supplies, because we found that the men were not being properly treated.

Q. Properly fed?—A. And properly fed.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You say the men were not properly treated and were not properly fed?—A. They were not properly treated and not properly fed, I include both. No agreement was entered into with these people, several times they requested a definite agreement, but the Commission refused until these difficulties, these defects were removed. Unfortunately at that time the camps began to unload on us a great many tubercular patients, of whom we had no knowledge; these filled up all the available accommodation, and it was impossible therefore immediately to evacuate Minnewaska. The management knew what we were considering, they knew that unless definite improvements were made, we should withdraw our men, and they wrote us stating they would like a decision on this matter as they had an opportunity of turning the institution over for the use of some friendly society, and requesting that we make haste regarding it. We did; and after taking over the institution at Freeport, and arranging for further accommodation at Hamilton, we removed the patients from Minnewaska. But as we had removed them without definite notice we paid the management, I believe it was, two weeks extra to cover any immediate loss they might have been put to.

By the Chairman:

Q. Two weeks on each patient?—A. On each patient we removed. I have no hesitation in saying that the treatment given by the Commission to the institution at Minnewaska was a most generous one, and I should welcome on behalf of the Commission, any investigation that you may care to make and to submit the whole correspondence and all the details.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. What rate were you paying that institution for each patient?—A. At the commencement we paid $7 per week, it being understood that the Ontario Government would pay an extra $3 per week as was the case in respect of other institutions. They did not do so, and we therefore raised our rate to $10 per week.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Then you think Col. Marlow's criticism with regard to that institution was justifiable?—A. I certainly do think so.

Q. Did the Commission have to assume any obligations on behalf of that Institution?—A. Not exactly, but we had to help some of the creditors by holding back payments due until the creditors could take necessary proceedings.

Q. You mean the Institution got into debt, but the Commission was not called upon to meet any obligations in that respect?—A. No, we did not pay anything directly but, knowing that proceedings were being taken by some of those who had supplied the institution with meat and other articles, it took us a little longer than is usually the case in putting their accounts through.

The Frank Sanatorium in Alberta was taken over by the Commission in October, 1916.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Why do you skip the Byron Institution?—A. I am dealing first with all those that are operated entirely by the Commission. This Sanatorium was a summer hotel or health resort, and it has been rented by the Commission, it is capable of taking 64 patients and is now full.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who supplies the medical staff?—A. The Commission has supplied the staff.

Q. Does the Commission or the Army Medical Corps supply the staff?—A. It will be the Army Medical Corps now, they are Army Medical Corps men, but we have a tuberculosis expert engaged.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Why do you say "now"?—A. Because of the recent arrangement with regard to the Army Medical Corps made by the Commission.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. How has that conflict between the two bodies been done away with?—A. I think that has been explained in previous evidence; the Commission is now using the Army Medical Corps men for its medical service.

The Commission has recently taken over another hotel in the West, the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the Kootenay lakes.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. At Balfour?—A. Yes, at Balfour. That at present has room for 70 beds and it is intended to undertake considerable building operations there and make it the central sanatorium for Alberta and British Columbia. That would take care of all our patients there.

Q. All tuberculosis patients?—A. Yes, sir. Now in addition to these institutions which are operated by the Commission, the Commission has arranged with existing sanatoria to enlarge their equipment and plant, the Commission paying a portion of the cost, sometimes one-half, and sometimes rather less than one-half. That applies to the Lake Edward Sanatorium outside of Quebec, it applies to the Kentville Sanatorium, to which I made reference just now and to the Mountain Sanatorium at Hamilton where we shall have room for a little over 170 patients.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Where is that sanatorium?—A. On the mountain, outside of Hamilton, it is one of the best sanatoria in the country.

By Hon. Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Who owns it?—A. The Hamilton Health Association.

Q. Is that a private corporation?—A. It is a private corporation, but it is not a profit-earning corporation.

Q. By whom is it controlled?—A. By a committee in Hamilton which works closely with the City Council, and the Board of Health.

Q. It is not a profit-earning institution?—A. Not at all. At the Byron Sanatorium, or the Queen Alexandra Sanatorium, outside of London, we have a similar arrangement.

Q. Who controls that?—A. The London Health Association, of which Sir Adam Beek is the chairman.

Q. Is it not owned by the Ontario Government?—A. No.

Q. Is it a profit-earning institution?—A. No.

Q. It is purely philanthropic?—A. Absolutely.

Q. And any contributions made in the shape of equipment to that institution by private parties and associations like the local Red Cross workers will become the property of that association?—A. That is so. That association, of course, carries on, as nearly all these associations do, at a loss for most of their patients, and they require voluntary contributions to help them out. There we shall have room for 110, that is when the additions are completed.

Q. What rate do you pay?—A. $1.50 a day.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. How many can you accommodate there now?—A. Forty-eight.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What are you contributing?—A. To Byron, $26,000.

Q. In the form of permanent erection?—A. Yes, $25,000 for the new buildings that they are putting up, and $1,000 for alterations in their present building.

Q. Are you supervising that expenditure, or handing them over the money?—A. We shall hand them over the money.

Q. Isn't that rather improvident?—A. No, because they are expending a very great deal more than that. They are spending, I am informed, $125,000.

Q. What check have you on the proper expenditure of that money?—A. The accounts must be submitted here; the building is inspected from time to time by one of our officers; and our contribution is only a small proportion of the total.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How much is it?—A. $25,000 toward the new buildings. The Ontario Government are contributing a like amount, the City Council of London a like amount, and the Hamilton Health Association and the Red Cross Society are making up the balance.

Q. What is the total expenditure?—A. Sir Adam Beek tells me $125,000.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Under whose control are the tuberculous soldier patients?—A. The Byron Sanatorium will control the patients except that we supply a disciplinary officer there.

Q. The medical treatment will be administered entirely by the officers of the sanatorium?—A. Exactly so.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Will civilian patients be admitted?—A. Oh, yes. The soldiers, however, will be in pavilions by themselves.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. The Commission will have the first call for accommodation?—A. Up to 110 beds. The Ninette Sanatorium in Manitoba is the next that we have an arrangement of that kind with. We have room there at present for 30 patients; that is being increased to 100. The Commission is paying half the cost of the additional pavilion necessary to bring the accommodation up to 100.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How much will that probably be?—A. The Commission's cost will be about $21,000.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is Ninette Sanatorium near a city?—A. It is a few miles out of Brandon.

Q. It is not as lonesome as Ste. Agathe?—A. Quite, I should think.

Q. You have no complaint about the patients finding it awkward to live there?—A. No, they have not reached here.

Q. Ste. Agathe is a charming place because lots of people live there in the summer-time?—A. I know that.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is the disciplinary officer in Byron Sanatorium a doctor or a soldier?—A. He is not a doctor, sir.

Q. He is a soldier?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is he?—A. I cannot tell you.

By the Chairman:

Q. You can get his name?—A. I can get his name if you wish. At Tranquille Sanatorium in British Columbia, near Kamloops, we have arrangements to send 32 men. The place is usually full.

Q. They built a special building for you?—A. They did, sir. It was put up by the Government of British Columbia.

Q. How much did you contribute?—A. Not anything, simply $2,500 towards the furnishing. There is a small private sanatorium at Kamloops where we have 10 men. We have also 30 men at the Muskoka Free Sanatorium. We have a few men also at a civic sanatorium in Calgary, usually about 20. As soon as Balfour is completed, however, we may remove all to Balfour.

Q. Will Balfour serve for Southern Alberta and Southern British Columbia entirely?—A. Yes.

Q. And you will dispense with Frank?—A. Not at present. We may convert Frank into a sanatorium for rheumatics afterwards. There is mineral water there, and it is admirably adapted for that.

Q. Do you keep tubercular convalescents and advanced cases in the same buildings?—A. We have had to do so.

Q. You do not differentiate as to incipient and advanced?—A. No. The advanced cases are sent as near to the man's own home as possible.

Q. What is the total accommodation for tubercular patients at present?—A. At the present moment we have 674 beds.

Q. How many patients have you?—A. We have 602 patients in those beds.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You have 602 patients?—A. We have seventy-two vacant beds at present.

Q. How many patients would you evacuate each month?—A. Very few.

Q. Really you are up to your limit for tuberculous cases?—A. Yes, we have a number of men who are not in yet. When our present building operations are completed about the middle of the summer we shall have between eleven and twelve hundred beds.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

- Q. You expect that these beds will all be occupied?—A. Not immediately, sir.
Q. But during the summertime? (No answer.)

By Mr. Pardee:

- Q. When do you expect to have these finished?—A. Most of them will be finished by the first of June. The work has been going on for some months.
Q. By that time you will be able to accommodate 1,100 tuberculous cases?—A. Very nearly that. By the middle of August we shall be able to accommodate fully the 1,200.
Q. You are making accommodation for 340 more than you have at the present time?—A. At the present time.
Q. Do you consider that sufficient?—A. It is very difficult to say.
Q. What is your idea?—A. I think we shall have to build or arrange for a large central sanitarium.
Q. With how many beds?—A. Probably four or five hundred beds.
Q. Do you mean in addition to what you have now?—A. Yes.
Q. When could you have that ready?—A. Oh, next winter, perhaps.
Q. Don't you think the need will arise before that?—A. No, because we can always take care in the summer of many tubercular patients in tents.
Q. So you consider your tubercular accommodation sufficient at the present time?—A. It is met for some months to come.
Q. Only for "months"?—A. That is all, sir.
Q. Do you consider it absolutely necessary between now and the first of next December that very much more accommodation should be provided for tubercular patients?—A. Personally, I think so.
Q. To the extent of how many beds?—A. I should like to arrange for a sanitarium for 500 beds.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

- Q. In what province?—A. In Ontario; it is in Ontario that we have most of our patients. But our difficulty with the tubercular problem has always been this: the man wants to get as near to his home as possible, and it is very difficult to hold him in another province. There is one institution that I omitted: we have no sanitarium in Saskatchewan, and recently, as Mr. Armstrong will be able to tell you, he has arranged for taking over a school at Regina which will accommodate about seventy tubercular patients. That will also be ready about the first of June.

By Mr. Pardee:

- Q. That is in addition to what you have given us?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

- Q. Of the 600 patients, have you any idea how many are camp cases, that is have ever gone overseas?—A. 227, sir.
Q. The flow of camp cases has practically ceased, has it not?—A. It is a good deal less than it was.
Q. Do you anticipate, judging from present recruiting, having many more tubercular camp cases?—A. I am unable to answer that question. It depends entirely on the rigidity of the medical examination.
Q. The first medical examination?—A. Yes.
Q. You say the number of camp cases that you may expect to have turned over to you in the coming summer will depend entirely on the rigidity of the primary medical examination by which men enter the force?—A. Exactly.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You have now 602 tubercular cases?—A. In sanatoria.

Q. And of those, 227 cases are what you call camp cases that have never been overseas?—A. Yes, sir. At one time it was about 60 per cent.

Q. Of the total?—A. Yes. That is why we have had any congestion. The Commission asked the overseas authorities to state how many approximately would be returned during a given period. The information was furnished.

By the Chairman:

Q. And arrangements made accordingly?—A. Arrangements were made for 100 per cent more than the number given, but we were swamped by these camp cases.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you keep any track of how long these men have been in camp before being turned over to you as tubercular cases?—A. They vary considerably.

Q. Are there many only a month?—A. There have been a few.

Q. What would be the average?—A. Four or five months.

Q. Do you know whether those that are four or five months in camp are incipient or advanced?—A. The majority are incipient, sir, a few advanced.

Q. A few are advanced?—A. Yes. We have to-day out of the 602 cases in the sanatoria, 77 advanced cases of which a certain proportion—I cannot give you the exact figure, though I can ascertain it—are camp cases.

Q. Have you only 77 cases out of 602 that are advanced?—A. That we know are permanent cases.

By the Chairman:

Q. That can never get well?—A. Men who will die.

Q. Have you, as yet, noticed any more strict examination for enlistment in connection with men suffering from tuberculosis? Has it had any effect in the way of causing a diminution of men coming to you who are camp cases?—A. Yes, it has because the proportion to-day is not as large as the proportion a year or nine months ago.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is the standard of medical examination the same?—A. That is outside of my province.

Q. How many returned soldiers in any sanatoria are suffering from tuberculosis?—A. Some figures were given to us recently by the Director-General of Medical Services, approximating about 165, but we have reason to believe that these figures are below the mark.

By the Chairman:

Q. Of those 165, Mr. Scammell, I suppose a certain percentage have been in hospital and declined to stay there longer?—A. No, that does not include those. Those men are discharged. But of the number we have at present in the sanatoria, there are a few cases of men who have come back to us and said: "Will you take us on again—we made a mistake."

Q. Have you any idea how many men refused to continue their treatment in your sanatoria contrary to the advice of your medical authorities?—A. Not a very large proportion, sir, I could not give you any figures.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. On what date were these 602 patients in the hospital?—A. On the 15th April, sir.

Q. Of this year?—A. Yes.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By the Chairman:

Q. What is the next subject, Mr. Scammell?—A. Do you wish to deal at all with the number of patients that we have?

The CHAIRMAN: We would like to have the most recent return regarding convalescents.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. All patients.—A. Up to the 15th April we had of convalescents 2,034 overseas patients, and 353 camp patients. We had 1,842 overseas patients as out patients and 93 camp patients as out patients. In the hospitals for the insane we had 98 overseas patients and 25 camp patients, and 11 out patients. In other institutions, we had 176 overseas and 78 camp cases, with 345 reckoned as out patients.

Questions have been asked during the evidence which has been given regarding the procedure when a man returns from overseas. I should like to put in the evidence a copy of the form used.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You have about 5,000 patients then, according to the figures you have given, in and out door patients?—A. In and out door the total is 5,677. That, sir, is the form which is used in Quebec (producing form).

By the Chairman:

Q. That form had better be inserted in the evidence as filed by you as an exhibit showing the information secured at Quebec (see appendix)?—A. That form is filled in partly from the record of the Board of Medical Officers and partly from questioning the men themselves. Its object is to have in a brief form sufficient information for the Military Hospitals Commission, and for others associated with the Commission, to deal with the returning men. Seven copies of this form are made and are distributed to those interested, including the provincial Commissions which deal with employment; and it has been found that this has met the case very fully. The classification is shown by the different colours of the form.

Another subject which was raised in the evidence has been that of civilian clothing.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Before leaving the number of patients, can you give an idea of the number of men returned from overseas who have been treated by you and sent home as cured, or needing no further treatment? You still have 5,000 under treatment, but how many have left you?—A. The number of men of whom the Commission has records up to the end of March, 1917, is 13,826.

Q. That is practically every returned soldier who came back to Canada?—A. No, that is the number of whom the Commission has records.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. There must be more than that. I have a return here made up to the same date showing that 18,376 men have returned from oversea. This return is furnished by Frank Beard of the Record Office of the Department of Militia and Defence to the Secretary of the Committee.—A. I question these figures.

Q. What are your figures?—A. 13,826 have passed through the hands of the Commission. In addition to that 550 returned through Halifax before the Commission took on.

Q. What date is your statement?—A. March 31, 1917.

Q. This return is the same date too.—A. About 400 have come back, besides the 550 of whom the Commission have no record.

The CHAIRMAN: Your return, Mr. Ross, will include all rejects?

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): No, it says: "Statement of Troops returned to Canada to March 31, 1917, classified in Military Districts."

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

The CHAIRMAN: That includes misfits.

WITNESS: This number has been obtained by going over the books showing the men that have passed through our hands.

The CHAIRMAN: You have a record of 13,800.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Are these all enlisted men?—A. All enlisted men who have returned from overseas, but not officers or men returned as escorts.

The CHAIRMAN: Will you file that statement for the record?

(Table III filed as follows):—

FRANK BEARD,
i/c Record Office.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. How much pension does a man suffering from tuberculosis receive?—A. According to his disablement.

Q. If he is going to die from tuberculosis, what does he get?—A. He would receive a total disability pension in that case.

The next subject I would suggest referring to is that of civilian clothing, as that matter was taken up by some of those who have given evidence. Some criticism was launched regarding the quality of the clothing which was distributed at Quebec and other depots. $13 is allowed by regulations for the clothing issued at the Discharge Depot at Quebec.

Q. At all seasons?—A. No, sir, in summer it is $8 because no overcoat is then provided; in the winter it is $13 which includes a suit and overcoat and a cap and I may be permitted to say that the most wonderful value has been given for that $13. The Commission has laid the matter before the Department of Militia and Defence, by whom the purchases are made, requesting a reconsideration of the situation in view of the fact that the cost of clothing has advanced considerably since the commencement of the war. That matter is now being gone into very closely by the department and the War Purchasing Commission, and I think that no criticism along that line in the future will have to be made.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What is the practice, do the men take the clothing issued by the department, or do they avail themselves of the option of taking the money?—A. They usually take the clothing, a few take the money, but, in my opinion the option should be abolished and the clothing should be issued in all cases.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are the suits issued easily recognized on the street?—A. No, they are not, they are of all kinds, a very great variety of cloth is used.

Q. Are they made under contract?—A. At present they are being bought in Quebec by arrangement.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Complaint has been made that the clothing is altogether too cheap and that it is not of a quality to satisfy every man?—A. What can you expect for the money, sir?

Q. What is the reason the men are not given better suits, is it economy or what?—A. That was the rate laid down in the beginning, except in the western provinces where, when a man is discharged $16.50 is allowed for a suit, but in the East the amount allowed is $13.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How much better than $13 ought they to go in your opinion?—A. I think that through the War Purchasing Commission they probably would be able to get a very good suit and overcoat for $17.

Q. Why should there not be a store established in Quebec where the department could purchase these suits wholesale and distribute them to the returned soldiers as required?—A. In my judgment, the department should contract with a mill for the output of the cloth, and they should contract with a manufacturer to make up the suits, and there should be stores at the headquarters of each Military District.

Q. That would be far better than to have the men go out and buy them?
—A. Far better.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. You say you object to the option of taking the money instead of the clothing?
—A. Yes.

Q. Why. Even at $17 the suit might not be of as good quality as a great many men might require, and consequently it might be useless to them.—A. If the suits were made of the quality of cloth of which I saw samples a short time ago in the office of the War Purchasing Commission, I should be very glad to have one myself.

Q. But these suits, if you get them, would be ready made and a good many men would be unable to get a good fit, and therefore they would not care to have them?—A. There is a certain degree of truth in that, but if the man takes the money and goes away and spends it and then tells people "I have no civilian clothes"; criticism is launched against the Government for not providing him with them. That is the reason why I would insist upon every man taking a suit of clothes when he is discharged.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is the military regulation about wearing military clothes after a man is discharged?—A. He cannot wear his uniform without the authority of the Commanding Officer of the District; if he does so without that authority, he is liable to have the uniform confiscated and to be arrested.

The next criticism is with reference to the delay in sending the last pay certificates from the office of the Paymaster General to the various units of the Military Hospitals Commission Command, and the consequent delay in paying the men. There is not the delay which, from some of the evidence which has been given there would appear to be in the sending of the last pay certificates to the various units, and the placing of the returned soldiers on pay. The procedure is this: When the ship comes in bringing the men with their papers, those papers are gone through by the accounting staff at the discharge depot. When the men leave for their destination each man is furnished with, say, $10 for immediate spending money and a cheque for $50, $75, and sometimes $100, according to the amount due to the man on the documents arriving from England is mailed to the Paymaster in the district in which he is going, in order that it may be forwarded to his address; therefore when he arrives home he has more money, than his pay would be for the period between the date of leaving the discharge depot and of receiving his first pay cheque from the Unit Paymaster. The papers then come to Ottawa, they are dealt with by the Paymaster General's Branch of the Department of Militia and Defence, and I am sure there is no unnecessary delay in handling those documents here. They have to be compared with the Assigned Pay, with the Separation Allowance accounts, and usually within ten days those statements are made up and forwarded to the Paymaster of the Command, so that he can put the man on his pay-roll. But what really happens is that when a man get his cheque for $50 or $75, as the case may be, he likes to spend a little money immediately on his arrival home.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. He meets a lot of friends?—A. Exactly, sir. And he forgets that it is bound to take a little time for his documents to be registered and his accounts checked, and to be placed on the pay-roll in the District to which he is going. But there is no undue delay. I was talking this week with the paymaster of one of our units. I asked him what was the average time that it takes after a man arrives in Quebec before he gets him on the pay-roll. He said: "Three weeks." If it can be done in less than a month that is pretty quick work.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By the Chairman:

Q. How much is he given to tide him over the three weeks?—A. From $50 upwards.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Never less than $50?—A. If he has a debit balance or a very small credit balance, he may get less.

Q. He gets some advance?—A. There are very few cases where a man does not get an advance.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. He gets $10 anyway at the discharge depot?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. How does a man get a debit balance?—A. I do not know exactly. But there are various ways by which it is done overseas. Sometimes the man may not have his pay book by him, and he goes to a pay officer with a hard luck story, and the paymaster makes him an advance, to be entered in his pay book later. It is not a very common occurrence. Sometimes separation allowance or assigned pay has been paid twice and then it has to be deducted.

Q. By error in the department?—A. By error in the department, but, as a rule, the man himself knows it.

Q. Where a woman has received through error separation allowance, and, in good faith, has spent it, not understanding all the military regulations, does it not seem a hardship to take from the returned soldier the amount of the overdraft which is due entirely to an error on the part of the paymaster?—A. Possibly it is, sir, especially if the man himself knows nothing about it. I do not think there are very many cases where the man does not know.

Q. There have been cases of very extreme hardship where men have been overpaid entirely through the error of the Paymasters' department, and then when called upon later to make up the amount, having spent what had been overpaid, have found it impossible to make up the amount?—A. There are cases of that character, but I think they are very rare. I should like to say in that connection, that the marvel is that there are not a very much larger number of these errors, when the multitude of accounts is taken into consideration and the quality of the staff which is available as clerks for the various branches of the work.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Does the Military Hospitals' Commission have to do with these payments?—A. Only if the man returns and is one of our patients, then we take him on our strength.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. You have many cases reported to you where returned soldiers, after getting this payment of $10, instead of going to their homes or going to the points where they enlisted are sent back to other places. They ask to go, perhaps, to their original home or native places, and become stranded there?—A. Occasionally. There are not many cases of that kind.

Q. In a case of that kind, would the second payment you spoke of, $50 or $75, follow the man there?—A. Yes, if he was discharged. If he was not discharged he would have to report to one of our hospitals, otherwise he would be a deserter.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. In connection with this matter, Mr. Scammell, here is an item clipped from one of the Toronto papers, the Toronto Daily Star, in connection with Mrs. Mary Ellen Harrison, in which she is asked to refund the sum of $27. The date of this man's discharge was dated back so that she is asked to refund it from the time that the discharge was arbitrarily dated back by the department while this man was under the charge of the Hospitals' Commission. How do you explain that?—A. I am glad to say that that will be avoided in future.

Q. What would be the explanation of such a case ever occurring?—A. A man would be before a medical board, and be recommended for discharge. His papers have to come to Ottawa, be dealt with by the D.G.M.S. and then passed to the Board of Pension Commissioners. It might take three weeks, a month, or three months before everything was gone through. In the meantime the man's pay stops, and when he gets his discharge and his pension it is dated back to the date when he is recommended for pension. Now, that has been a very great hardship.

Q. Then when it was dated back, if the dependent had got the money for separation allowance or subsistence she was asked to refund it from the time that was dated back?—A. That has happened in several cases.

Q. Is that done away with now?—A. Absolutely done away. Not only so, but whenever a case of that sort has come to the knowledge of the commission we have it up with the department and the Board of Pension Commissioners in order to get the claim wiped out.

Q. In your judgment, it is not a fair thing to ask this woman, Mrs. Harrison, to refund that money?—A. Not in those circumstances. By the order-in-council which was recently passed, No. 508, dated February 24, no discharges are carried out until the Board of Pension Commissioners has notified the officer commanding the soldier that he is to have a pension or he is not to have a pension, and if he is to have a pension that it will commence on a certain date. Then the discharge has to be carried out as on the day previous in order to meet that very condition.

Q. Now, my information is that this case of Mrs. Harrison is still pending. Will you make a note of it and look into it?—A. I shall be glad to do so.

By the Chairman:

Q. Will you enter an abstract of that case in the minutes so that we can have the complaint and the answer?—A. I will, sir.

Q. What is your next subject?—A. The next thing I want to report is a new order-in-council in connection with vocational training.

Q. Give us the gist of it and then file it.—A. When Mr. Kidner was here he explained the provision made by the Government through the Commission for maintaining men while undergoing re-education after discharge. There were several points in the order-in-council granting the authority which required emendation. These have now been made. For instance, it was found that the subsistence allowance of 60 cents per day granted to a man living at his own home while undergoing re-education, was insufficient. That has now been increased by an order-in-council passed on the 12th April to one dollar per day.

Q. What is the number of the order-in-council?—A. No. 976. We had several cases of men with dependents, which dependents had not been in receipt of separation allowance and who were not entitled to it; but they were bona fide dependents, sometimes sisters, sometimes other relatives.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Some members of the family?—A. Always members of the family.

By the Chairman:

Q. Dependent upon the soldier?—A. Yes. Therefore, we have had this clause added:

A widowed mother or a mother who is not widowed if she be dependent entirely or partially on an unmarried son who is receiving vocational training, and if the son made an assignment of his pay to his mother or can prove to the satisfaction of the Military Hospitals Commission that he has regularly sent a portion of his pay to his mother; or a sister or other dependents, if the soldier who is receiving vocational training made an assignment of his pay to her or to them or can prove to the satisfaction of the Military Hospitals Commission that he has regularly sent a portion of his pay to her or to them, the said mother, sister or other dependents, may be paid an amount equal to the assignment made or payments sent by the soldier, provided that such amount shall not exceed the amount which would be paid under the authority of this order-in-council to the wife of a married man without children.

Now, that is I think, a very necessary extension. We had a number of cases of men who could not take re-education because they had dependents who were not entitled to be supported.

Q. Not strictly entitled under the old regulation to be supported?—A. No, sir. Then the provisions of re-education have been extended to naval men. It is included in this clause:

12. The provision of this order-in-council shall apply to all members to His Majesty's Naval, Military and Auxiliary Services, who were bona fide residents in Canada, at the outbreak of the war, who are unable to return to their previous occupations by reason of disability incurred on service in the present war.

I should like to put that order-in-council in as an exhibit.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: Has the order-in-council with regard to the payment of three months pay and allowances after discharge gone into the record?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Have you received any complaints with regard to the discharge depot at Quebec; that Quebec is a bad locality for a discharge depot and that the soldiers have been badly treated at Quebec and that it was desirable as a consequence that another locality was selected?—A. No, sir. I have not seen any such complaints.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Where are the discharge depots located?—A. At Quebec, Halifax and St. John. The returned soldiers for the maritime provinces are discharged at St. John, and the others are entrained on arrival from overseas and are dealt with at Quebec. Very few discharges are being carried out at the discharge depots, the only men being discharged there now being those who have no disability incurred on service.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Supposing an Ontario man is discharged in Quebec, is he allowed to stay in the city of Quebec?—A. No, he is forwarded on to his destination.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Have you had any complaints about the men having difficulty in crossing over from Levis to Quebec to the discharge depot?—A. None at all.

Q. Complaints about that have not reached you?—A. There was only one case in which a train arrived in the middle of the night, and the conditions were not very favourable for crossing; otherwise there has been no difficulty at all.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is the next matter you have to bring before the Committee?—A. Questions have been asked regarding invalided officers. I simply wanted to explain that at present the invalid officer does not come under the Military Hospitals Commission; he returns under a different arrangement, he does not pass through the discharge depot, but he is sent home—

Q. They are not included in the 13,800 you spoke of?—A. No, sir.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are any included in that number who had no service at all on the other side?—
A. The Commission does not deal with officers except when an officer requires treatment. In that case he is entitled to and receives treatment. It is quite possible that the Commission may open, in the near future, an officer's home, perhaps more than one, but up to the present the number requiring treatment has been so small that it would have been an unnecessary expense, but all the facilities at the disposal of the Commission are open to the officers.

By the Chairman:

Q. Does that mean that an officer, on pay and allowances after his return, unless discharged, has to provide for himself?—A. In some cases he has done so.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Have you a special ward in one of your hospitals for the officers?—A. We had, at one hospital at Quebec, which we have now closed, and all the time it was opened, we only had two officers in it, but neither of them has been overseas. I should like to mention an arrangement for officers which has been made, an arrangement of a very generous character, by Dr. and Mrs. Pilgrim, of Barbados. This gentleman and his wife have a large estate in Barbados, and they communicated with Sir George Foster some time ago, stating they would be prepared to receive wounded and disabled officers from overseas who had been to the front, as guests at their house. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company also notified Sir George Foster that they would be pleased to carry any wounded returned officers who were capable of travelling without requiring special medical service, to the West Indies and back, free of charge. In accordance with that arrangement I suppose we must have sent a dozen officers to Barbados, the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. taking them free, and Dr. and Mrs. Pilgrim looking after them when down there. Since then another gentleman at Barbados, the Reverend Dr. Harrison has opened his house to officers, and two will be leaving by the next boat to stay with him. I thought I would like to put that fact on the record.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is an interesting statement in view of our taking care of the Jamaican negroes here.

WITNESS: It certainly is.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do all the officers have the privilege of taking vocational training if they desire to do so?—A. Certainly, but we have not yet had a case in which an officer has expressed a desire to do so.

Q. None of the officers have availed themselves of that opportunity?—A. No, but it is open to officers.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you conclude from that fact that they have all returned to their original employment?—A. Mostly, or their education is such that they do not require to take special training along vocational lines. The Committee has had before it the secretaries of the provincial associations and a great deal of information was obtained as to the work which is being done by those associations in the direction of finding employment for returned soldiers. I should like to say that these commissions are working in the closest harmony and co-operation with the Military Hospitals Commission. We supply the secretary of each of these Commissioners with one of the forms made out at Quebec, giving particulars of each man returned. The commissioners have sub-committees covering in some cases every town and village in the province, and notification is sent forward from Quebec to the Commission, when men are returned. Each man is given a card of introduction to the Secretary of the Commission and up to the present there has been little difficulty in finding employment for all who have returned and who are capable of taking work.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By the Chairman:

Q. That card of introduction is given for the purpose of identification?—A. Yes, it does not mention the man's name in case he should lose the card, but it mentions the number of his report, so that it will be useless to any stranger who picks it up.

Q. I think that the card runs something like this: "The bearer of this card is the person referred to in Report 2261."—A. Something like that, and it is addressed to the Secretary of the Provincial Commission of the province to which the man is going.

Q. And usually when the soldier arrives at the secretary's office and presents that card the report is there ahead of him?—A. Yes.

Q. But the secretary asks the soldier certain questions?—A. Yes, and receives the man's answers.

Q. Which tallies with the statements contained in the report, and in that way the secretary is able to assure himself that the right man is attached to the right report?—A. Certainly. Then, if the man goes to a convalescent home and stays there for one, two, three, six, or nine months, about two weeks before the time set for leaving the home a special notice is sent to the secretary of the Provincial Commission informing him that John Smith will leave the institution on or about a certain date, that he has been attending certain classes, and that he desires work along certain lines. That information is in the hands of the secretary of the Provincial Commission before the man leaves the institution, so that the secretary is able to look around and see what work can be found for him, and, as I said just now, there has been very little difficulty up to the present in finding work.

Q. Will the provision of that order in council for three months' pay after discharge, in your judgment, bridge over the hiatus that has caused criticism?—A. That is very difficult to say. It depends entirely upon the man himself.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is this amount payable in a lump sum, or is it payable by the month?—A. That matter has not yet been decided by the Militia Department.

Q. Would you advise that it be paid in a lump sum?—A. No, sir, I should not.

Q. Would you have him wait for a month for his first payment?

The CHAIRMAN: On the day of his discharge the man gets his pay, whatever is coming to him, up to that date, and by the end of the month he is entitled to another thirty days' pay.

The WITNESS: If I might make a suggestion in connection with that order in council, I should like to see the payment spread over six months, on a gradually reducing scale.

By the Chairman:

Q. Without increasing the total amount?—A. Without increasing the total amount, but on a gradually reducing scale, because when the man is discharged, if he is a re-education case, he is supported by the Military Hospitals Commission; if he is a pension case, he is granted a pension by the Board of Pension Commissioners, and it is only the case of a man who is cured, and who is not in the receipt either of re-education or pension, who has no more money coming in; so that if this extra payment were spread over a number of months there would be a gradual reduction which would have the effect of compelling the man to look around and to obtain employment. If, however, the amount is paid in equal monthly instalments, there will come a time when the pay will suddenly stop, and he will be entirely without means; I would rather see it stop by degrees.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. How is the man going to get along on half pay for six months?—A. If he is not entitled to pension or re-education he is capable of working.

Q. Are those in receipt of pension in the majority?—A. No, they are not in the majority at all.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. You are afraid the man will not start to look for work until his pay is stopped?—A. A great deal of the difficulty has been along that line.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. If the payments were made on a gradually reducing scale at a certain time he would find that he would have to look for work, but he would not be absolutely destitute?—A. That is the idea, he would not have enough to live on, but he would still have some money coming in whilst he was looking for work.

By the Chairman:

Q. I have made a rough estimate that this would cost the Government $120 per man. You have to consider that he is entitled to 15 days pay on discharge anyway, so that it only means an elongation of 2½ months?—A. The pensioner does not get 15 days pay.

Q. I understand that, but your idea is that the man should be paid say $20 one month, $15 the next, $10 another month, until the payments stopped altogether?—A. Exactly.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And the gradually reduced amount would emphasize to the man the necessity for looking out for work?—A. It means some trouble to spread the payments over a longer period, but I believe it would be better for the man himself.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the man get full pay and allowances for three months?—A. The order in council provides for full pay and allowances.

Q. There is the field allowance 10 cents per day. Does he get that?—A. And the separation allowance.

Q. That is $33 per month for pay and allowance?—A. And the separation allowance is $20 per month, or $53, that is for a married man, but taking the married and single men together it is an average of $40 per month.

I should like to report that the Commission in dealing with the question of publicity has been at special pains in order to keep the public informed concerning the work that is being done. Bulletins are issued, copies of which have been submitted to this committee, and from time to time information is sent out to the newspapers, and the press gallery has been most generous in the way in which it has dealt with the information we have sent out from time to time. The same applies to the Associated Press. We have issued also some lantern slides which are being used for lectures in various parts of the country, and those slides are in very great demand; they go from place to place as rapidly as we can send them and we are increasing our stock very considerably. They represent the various hospitals, exterior and interior, in Canada and they are accompanied by certain information showing the work that is being done. Then there is a bill on the wall (indicating poster) which is displayed in all our hospitals, copies of which have been sent overseas as well in order to let the men know what they are expected to do and what is hoped for from them. It is probable that more bills of that nature may be got out from time to time. As far as the tuberculosis patients are concerned, the Commission some time ago issued a small brochure—

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Have you had these bills printed in French for distribution in Quebec?—A. We have not done so yet, sir, I think that will be done a little later. I was about to say we have issued a brochure dealing with tuberculosis, telling the men who are suffering from tuberculosis what they should do to help themselves. There has been a very great demand for them, in fact I believe, the brochure has run through two editions.

Another matter which I think has been mentioned in the evidence was the disablement fund which the Commission, some months ago, started in to gather. You will remember that a considerable sum of money was donated to the Machine Gun Fund, but it was found that quite a large amount of that fund was not required and some of the donors offered to donate the money for some other purpose. It was suggested that a disablement fund might be started, and about $126,000 have been received without any public appeal being made for the purpose. That money has been invested in War bonds, and it will form the nucleus of a fund which I have no doubt will be required when the war is over.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What is the object of that fund?—A. To meet the requirements of “hard luck” cases, principally.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. There will be men who have no legal claim upon the Government at all who will have to be helped.

Q. What do you mean by that, can you not come down a little closer than that?—A. Supposing you have the case of a returned soldier who has been discharged, and he cannot hold his job in private life, say because he is addicted to liquor; we will say that man is living in Montreal, and he has a brother in Saskatchewan on a farm, and that the brother says: “If you can get my brother and his family to me, I will look after him, but I cannot afford to bring him out myself.” The man himself has no money; what are we going to do about it? You will require to have some fund by which you can help cases of that kind.

Q. With regard to that $126,000 was it turned over to the Hospitals Commission to be used for that purpose?—A. It is in the hands of the Commission.

Q. Has it come to the Commission from the Government?—A. No, sir, it has come from the subscribers. We had one donation of $100,000.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Who handed the money over to you? Was it paid by the subscribers to the Government for machine-guns, and by the Government handed over to the Military Hospitals Commission for this purpose?—A. This money was never paid to the Government, it was money raised, subscribed, but not paid to the Government, and those who had raised it wished it to be used for this purpose.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. It was raised by a committee and was handed over to the Military Hospitals Commission before it reached the Government?—A. It never reached the Government. Mr. Carruthers of Montreal gave $100,000 towards it.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. During navigation of the St. Lawrence are any of the discharged soldiers brought up by water to Montreal, or are they landed at Quebec?—A. At Quebec.

Q. The fact of navigation being opened makes no change?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you continue to use St. John and Halifax in the summer time?—A. Halifax is used by the troop ships in the summer time, St. John has not been used, I do not know whether it will be.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything else to suggest?—A. I have two or three recommendations, sir.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Will you be good enough to give them?—A. One is with regard to the Government pay to men who go into the Government service in Ottawa. A good deal of complaint has been made before this Committee that men are taken on at $40 per month. I think a recommendation should be made by this Committee, if I may be bold enough to suggest it, that the minimum amount should be increased to a living wage. There will be very serious cause for complaint among the soldiers of this district if they are expected when they enter the Government service to start at $500 a year.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Should not the returned soldiers in the other districts be as well treated as they are in this district?—A. Certainly, but that is not the inside service, sir, I am speaking of the Inside Service.

Q. But it may be in the Inside Service in other districts.—A. It will be nearly all outside service in the other districts.

Q. And you are referring to the inside service only?—A. I am referring to packers and messengers and positions of that description which are practically all in the inside service here in Ottawa. I would very much like to see the remuneration raised to a living wage, and I may say that some of the deputy ministers have stated, in correspondence with the Commission, that they would like to see it raised, but they are helpless in the matter.

By the Chairman:

Q. One suggestion that has been made is that the man who has served as a soldier should have the time that he has already spent in the service of his country regarded as time spent in the Civil Service, and that would put up the salary which he would be entitled to receive to the same amount as he would have received had he been in the Civil Service at the time he enlisted?—A. I put that down as the next item, sir. I think most certainly that should be done.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. That is reasonable?—A. It applies to his civil pension as well when he becomes sixty or sixty-five years of age.

Q. I think it should, too?—A. I think his service should be reckoned.

Q. His military service should not hurt him.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is to be regarded as one of your recommendations?—A. I wish that to be one of my recommendations.

I do not know exactly what the Government is going to do with regard to the land, settlement question. I believe it is now before the House, but there are quite a large number of men who applied for homesteads before enlisting. According to the legislation, or the order in council, passed at the commencement of the war, these men were to be protected during their absence, that is their residence was excused, their term of military service counting as residence; but the improvements have to be completed afterwards before the patent could be given. A number of men have come back, especially to western Canada, who have no money to go on their homesteads again. I therefore suggest that in any grant which may be made by the Government to assist men to take up land provision should be made to extend the privileges of that to men who already have taken up land, who have done a certain amount of work on it, and are prepared to go back if that is put through. I know several cases at the present moment who would go out on their homesteads.

Q. Do you mean if a man has been on a homestead for six months and then enlists and spends a year and a half in military service, he should be regarded as having spent two years' residence on his homestead?—A. That is already done, sir. What I want is this: if the Government is going to advance $2,000 or its equivalent to the men who take up homesteads now de novo that the same advance or its equivalent should be made to the men who already have taken up homesteads. At any rate, that they should be helped to go out on their homestead. I should very much like to see a recommendation to that effect made by this Committee, in which case I think it would carry.

I do not know whether the Committee is going to deal with the problem of demobilization or employment when demobilization takes place.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Before taking that matter up, I would like to say that the evidence we have had so far shows that out of 345 or 346 men who have gone through your hands only five or six wanted to go back to the land. In the 13,000 men who have gone through your hands I suppose most of them have been asked, in the tabulated list of questions, whether they desire to go on the farm?—A. They have been asked what occupation they desire to follow.

Q. How many of them have said they wanted to farm?—A. I should not think two per cent. Bear in mind that these are not well men.

Q. I want to get some definite idea how many two per cent would be?—A. Two per cent would be 260. If we actually had 150 I should be surprised.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Some have said they would go back if the Government gave them financial assistance?—A. I am satisfied that when that is known the number will be increased, and especially when demobilization comes, when we are going to have healthy, sound men returning. The majority of those who have returned now are sick men, men who should never go to work on land, and it is small wonder that our figures are very low. I do not know whether the members of the Committee are aware that some time ago the Government of Australia took a census of their men and found that 24 per cent were ready to go on the land if it was a case of assisted settlement.

Q. Mr. Kidner said they were willing to go on the land if they were given a beautiful farm in a warm valley?—A. I do not know about that.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The last part of the resolution introduced by the Minister of the Interior applies to soldiers who take up land after they have returned, but you recommend that it should be made to apply also to those who took up land before going overseas?—A. Precisely.

Q. The last paragraph of the resolution reads as follows:—

and further to provide that the Board may loan, upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed, to any such settler an amount not exceeding two thousand dollars for acquiring land for agricultural purposes, payment of encumbrances on land used for agricultural purposes, improvement of agricultural lands, erection of farm buildings and purchase of stock, machinery and equipment, the money to be expended under the supervision of the Board, and all expenditure made under the terms of this resolution to be paid out of such moneys as Parliament may appropriate for the purpose.

What you wish is that that provision should apply not only in favour of the men returning who want to take up land, but also for the man who had taken up land before he left?—A. Precisely, that is the point I want to make.

The CHAIRMAN: I think that the matter of demobilization and land settlement had better be postponed until the Committee finishes its first report regarding the treatment of disabled men coming home. Then, if we decide to go further into the examination with respect to the placing of fit men, we will be glad to hear what Mr. Scammell has to say.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Mr. PARDEE: Perhaps we had better decide to subpoena no further witnesses until we settle this point. I take it that this Committee was appointed for the returned soldier, and if you are going to have a report only on the treatment of disabled men it would only be the fringe of the subject if we put in such a report as is suggested.

The CHAIRMAN: I think it would be desirable to make our report in two parts, the first dealing with the evidence we have taken as to the efficiency and sufficiency of the measures now being taken to look after disabled men as they come home. Probably Parliament will wish to discuss that matter some time during the present session. The greater question of what will be done with the fit men after they come back from the war will engage this Committee for many sessions, and which, if the Committee desire to study, we certainly should study.

Mr. PARDEE: I am not altogether prepared to subscribe to the idea that there are two sides to this report. We can thresh that out at another sitting.

The CHAIRMAN: I understood the other day in connection with the interim report it was the desire of the Committee to present to Parliament some synopsis of the present evidence which should be prepared as soon as possible.

Mr. PARDEE: I do not care to press the matter just now.

By the Chairman:

Q. What have you further to say, Mr. Scammell?—A. If we are not going to touch the broader question, I have nothing more I wish to say.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. We were told in Montreal that there were several projects under way to give increased accommodation. Has any decision been arrived at?—A. Would you mind asking Mr. Armstrong that question?

By the Chairman:

Q. The recent decision on the part of the Government to take over through the Army Medical Corps all the medical services in connection with the Military Hospitals Commission having been passed, and being now a fact, has that involved any considerable dislocation in arrangements that you had previously made, and what steps are to be taken by the Military Hospitals Commission to provide a solatium, so to speak, for such individuals as may find themselves not called upon to perform the work that they expected?

Mr. PARDEE: Under the Medical Board?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Take, for example, the case in Montreal. The Military Hospitals Commission appointed an officer who appeared before this Committee, Dr. Mackenzie Forbes, and authorized him to engage a staff for certain purposes. He secured nurses from various institutions on the understanding that certain hospital arrangements would be made. Now he is assigned to another altogether different work under the Army Medical Corps, and all the arrangements he had made with different nurses fall to the ground. What provision is the Military Hospitals Commission taking to relieve the blow as far as these other people are concerned?—A. Any nurses who were in the employ of the Commission and are competent may be taken over by the Army Medical Corps.

Q. For example, in Montreal, I understand they secured the services of several valuable nurses who came back from the other side, and also the matrons of one or two of the hospitals, to take up this special work, and now they are all cut adrift with a mere "thank you."—A. I am not aware of the fact that that was done.

Q. Has that matter received serious consideration on the part of the Military Hospitals Commission as to what steps shall be taken to cause the changes to work as little hardship to individuals who suffer by it as possible?—A. That is being taken into consideration.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What is being done?—A. These people are on pay at present.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What people?—A. The staff that we have employed.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has the alteration of programme made a very great difference in your staff?—A. No, sir, it has not.

Q. Have you found it necessary to drop many who have been otherwise employed?—A. No, I doubt if we have dropped any.

Q. Can you place all who have been engaged under the auspices of the Military Hospitals Commission?—Practically every one who is satisfactory.

Q. Now, it has been represented to me that at several points besides Toronto there are ample manufacturing establishments for the making of artificial limbs. Is it your intention to keep the supplying of artificial limbs entirely at Toronto?—A. No.

Q. What further steps are you taking to have artificial limbs supplied in other parts of Canada?—A. If you will ask Mr. Armstrong, he has gone into that matter and can inform you.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Will you explain how appointments of medical men are made. Are they political?—A. What do you mean exactly by "political"?

Q. Supposing you need the services of medical men in Montreal. A medical man applies for an appointment and is told that his application will be considered. He waits some months, but nothing seems to have been done in the meantime. He wants to know then whether to go to the party in power to be recommended or to the university, or how the appointment is to be made.—A. The appointments are made upon merit, upon qualifications.

Q. By the commission itself?—A. The appointments which will be made in future are to be made by the Army Medical Corps after the names have been approved by the commission. Any suggestion of politics entering into the thing is entirely outside the mark. The commission is only too anxious to get the most expert medical and surgical services available in the country.

Q. I have been told there was some difficulty in getting medical men in Montreal because they did not want to give up their practice. I have known some who applied who have been unable to get positions and have wondered if they needed political recommendations.—A. There is nothing of that kind at all. It is a question of qualification.

Q. Who decides the qualification, the Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes, in consultation with the Commission.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has this list of cases, some forty or so, which has been laid before this committee in the way of individual complaints, been submitted to the Hospitals Commission?—A. No, sir. May I have a copy of it?

The CHAIRMAN: I think we might ask Mr. Scammell to report on each of these cases.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. One of the soldiers heard in Montreal complained that when they landed at Halifax neither the medical men nor the nurses could understand them, that is the French soldiers. Has that been remedied?

The CHAIRMAN: That is in the evidence and will be a subject for us to report on.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. You do not know anything about that?—A. I could not tell you, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What is your position, Mr. Scammell? What are you called in the Commission?—A. Secretary.

Q. Mr. Armstrong is what?—A. Director.

Q. And Sir James Loughheed is?—A. President.

Q. And it is with you three that largely the work of the Commission lies?—A. There are others associated with us.

Q. Yes, I know. But you are the acting head, you are the works?—A. With Colonel Thompson and Colonel Sharples.

Q. Anybody else?—A. And Mr. Kidner.

Q. Now then, your duties are just what, particularly? We understand what Sir James Loughheed's are. Mr. Armstrong is director, we will get his duties from himself. Your duties as secretary are what? What are you supposed to have supervision of—everything?—A. I am supposed to know something about everything.

Q. The internals all go through your hands?—A. I am in touch with everything that is done in the Commission, and I am also the treasurer and paymaster. I attend to a great deal of the correspondence and many other matters.

By the Chairman:

Q. The six gentlemen you have mentioned, Sir James Loughheed, yourself, Mr. Armstrong, the director, Colonel Thompson, medical superintendent, Mr. Kidner, vocational director, and Colonel Sharples, officer commanding the unit—an examination of these six would cover the entire ground of the activities of the Military Hospitals Commission, would it?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Now then, when you became the Military Hospitals Commission, you displaced the Army Medical Corps?—A. In what way do you mean "displaced"?

Q. You took over the duties of the Army Medical Corps?—A. No, we did not.

Q. What did you do then?—A. We took over the duties of providing convalescent hospitals for returned soldiers which up to that time had been managed by a small committee of the Militia Department, of which the Director-General of Medical Services was a member.

Q. Who was he?—A. The gentleman at that time was Colonel Jacques, the Acting Director-General. There was also the Director-General of Engineering Services, Lieut.-Colonel Hallick of the Ordnance Corps.

Q. All the Military Hospitals Commission had to do was to take over the convalescent homes?—A. Was to provide convalescent homes.

Q. You took over what there were?—A. Yes, and the Commission was empowered to provide medical services and to provide nurses and carry on.

Q. Outside entirely of the Army Medical Corps?—A. This is the condition: (reads)—

That the Commission be empowered to call in the aid of any department of the Federal Administration, in particular to use the machinery of the Militia Department, and where desirable to draw on the department for supplies, stores and equipment, and to utilize the services of the Divisional and District staffs.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is that an extract from the Order in Council?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. The order reads "to utilize the services of the Divisional and District staffs?"—A. Yes.

Q. Would that include the services of the Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you do that?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you get rid of many of the Army Medical Corps? Did you supersede them and do without their assistance in carrying on active duties?—A. No.

Q. Did you take over the medical end altogether?—A. We did to a large extent in the summer of last year, when a further Order in Council was put through charging the Commission with the whole duty of the medical services.

Q. And that meant the medical side of the Convalescent Hospitals as well as the vocational and other side of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. Then the Army Medical Corps was left with nothing?—A. With the men proceeding overseas.

Q. With men proceeding overseas only, everything here was Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Yes.

Q. How many officers under pay, all told, are there in the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Medical Officers?

Q. Every kind of officer?—A. I can supply those figures.

Q. Perhaps you might get them for me?—A. I will fill them in.

Q. Perhaps you might do that, and you might give also what their salaries are?—A. Excuse me, you want a complete list, the pay-roll of the whole staff of the Commission?

Q. The present staff?—A. Do you mean the whole staff?

Q. Wait now, I will put it another way: Are there any large percentage of men employed under the Military Hospitals Commission that were formerly employed in the Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes, there are several who now revert to the Army Medical Corps under the arrangement just spoken of.

Q. Who now "revert" to the Army Medical Corps?—A. For pay.

Q. Under what arrangement?—A. Under the arrangement that the Commission has now made, that the Army Medical Corps will carry on the medical service.

By the Chairman:

Q. They were seconded to you and now they revert to the Army Medical Corps?—A. And they are to be paid by the Army Medical Corps.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And these Army Medical Corps men now want to go overseas?—A. I do not know. The Army Medical Corps men are now looking after the medical service in our hospitals as well.

Q. You employ all the medical services for the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. We are not doing so now.

Q. Who looks after that?—A. The Director General of Medical Services, or his A.D.M.S. in the District.

Q. And he belongs to whom?—A. To the Army Medical Corps.

Q. Then am I right in saying that the Army Medical Corps now supplies the Medical Staff for the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Absolutely.

Q. Does the Military Hospitals Commission then have charge of these hospitals and not have the charge of the medical unit of each?—A. Except indirectly.

Q. And that the Commission would have charge of the appointing of these men?—A. We have the right to say whether a man should be appointed or not and after he is appointed we have the right to say whether the appointment is satisfactory, and if it is not satisfactory we have the right to say that he should be removed.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Then is the process this: that the Army Medical Corps has charge of the medical personnel of the Military Hospitals, that they recommend the men to you in the event of your wanting a man, and you say whether you will take him or not?—A. Exactly.

Q. So that in the last analysis you are looking after the medical unit?—A. We have the power of approval and disapproval.

Q. Then what is the good of the Army Medical Corps, is it not getting back to the old position that you are liable for the Military Hospitals?—A. In the eyes of the public, most certainly we are.

Q. In the eyes of the public and in the eyes of everybody else. Now I was asking if you have the approval and the rejection of the medical staff, can you see any sense in the Army Medical Corps being in there too?—A. Are you asking me to answer that question as Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission, or do you want my personal opinion? Remember I am not a medical man.

Q. Both—as a man having charge of these matters, and having knowledge of it.—A. My personal opinion is that the Military Hospitals Commission should have charge of the whole work from A to Z.

Q. Is it your opinion, as a business man, and as a man having charge of this organization, that this Army Medical Corps is entirely unnecessary in the Military Hospitals as far as the medical unit is concerned?—A. No, sir, I will not say that, though my opinion is that the commission is capable of taking care not only of the hospitals, but of the medical side of the work as well. In some districts we have had some difficulty in getting expert medical men owing to the large number who have gone overseas, and owing to the large number that were attached to the Army Medical Corps and were not available; of course these men are now available.

Q. They are available?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the Army Medical Corps attached to? What do they do, what are their duties?—A. Their duties are simply medical duties, hospital duties.

Q. In your hospitals?—A. In our hospitals, in base hospitals and in camp hospitals.

Q. We might take one concrete case, perhaps, and get at it, this way: You have a home on College Ave., Toronto, the old Bishop Strachan School, that is entirely in your care?—A. Yes.

Q. Has the Army Medical Corps anything to do with it?—A. Yes.

Q. Through whose instructions, on their own initiative, or on yours?—A. Through the A.D.M.S. of that district.

Q. Are they there under the Military Hospitals Commission control?—A. Only indirectly.

Q. Who appointed them?—A. They were appointed by the Army Medical Corps.

Q. On whose request—yours?—A. I cannot say.

Q. How did they get there?—A. Because the Army Medical Corps has been in charge of that work.

Q. But the Military Hospitals Commission is in control?—A. The Military Hospitals Commission is responsible for the whole of the work, but the Army Medical Corps is responsible for the medical section of that work.

Q. Yes, but would you allow a man to go in there you did not want?—A. Certainly not.

Q. Then you are responsible for that medical service?—A. I said indirectly we were.

Q. But not directly?

By the Chairman:

Q. As I understand it, you have not power to appoint them?—A. Not to-day.

Q. But you have the power of objection, which is equivalent to rejection.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Well then, it comes to this, in the last analysis that the Army Medical Corps is in charge of the Medical Unit of the Convalescent Hospitals?—A. That is so, sir.

Q. They put their men in there for the care of these patients on the request by you to the A.D.M.S., is that right?—A. Sometimes, and in other cases the A.D.M.S. reports that a medical man is necessary at a certain station and according to the agreement which we have with the Army Medical Corps, he must submit the name of that medical man.

Q. To you?—A. To the Director General of the Medical Services.

Q. You get this through as many people as you can, apparently, I understand how you would use this word "indirect". It is a fine system. Now then the A.D.M.S. says something ought to be done and puts it up through the D.G.M.S. to the Hospitals Commission, is not that right?—A. Exactly.

Q. And then when he tells you that you go to whom?—A. He states what should be done there,—

Q. And he sends a man there, does he?—A. He sends the man.

Q. And if you like that man, you keep him?—A. If we approve of him.

Q. He stays there if you like him, and if you don't like him, you tell the A.D.M.S. who sent him?—A. We tell the A.D.M.S., through the D.G.M.S.

Q. Who is that?—A. Col. Potter.

Q. And he does what?—A. He takes the man back and puts him at some other duty.

Q. It would take some time, I would think, in case the man was not satisfactory, to fill the position. How long does it take you to get a man?—A. It entirely depends upon the distance from the centre of operations.

Q. Then we can leave it at that, that the Army Medical Corps and the Military Hospitals Commission have a joint responsibility for the care of these Hospitals?—A. Yes.

Q. And there is no direct responsibility, that is about right is it not?—A. It is not very far wrong.

MR. PARDEE: We will let it stand at that.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Have you found that inefficient men have been sent to the Hospitals, by the Army Medical Corps at any time, men that have had to be removed?—A. I am not aware of it.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Now, you say either the A.M.C., or the Military Hospitals Commission Command, if they were alone, could look after this proposition. Do you agree with that?—A. What do you mean by "this proposition"?

Q. I mean the Convalescent Hospitals, etc., and what is in connection with it.—A. I have no hesitation in saying that the Army Medical Corps would be absolutely unable to cope with the situation, as they have not the machinery. They are a medical organization only.

By the Chairman:

Q. Put it the other way: If the Military Hospitals Commission were alone could they cope with the situation?—A. Certainly they could if they were permitted to obtain the services of any suitable medical men, whether A.M.C. officers or not.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. The Army Medical Corps could not cope with it, but the Military Hospitals Commission could?—A. Because they have built up the necessary machinery.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. You told me just now that they are not capable of taking hold of the whole work, and that your Military Hospitals Commission is. Is the Army Medical Corps capable of taking care of the Medical end of it?—A. I see no reason to the contrary.

Q. Do you see any reason for having divided responsibility?—A. I do not.

Q. If you wanted medical men would it not be the sensible thing to go and get them from somewhere, some competent organization of which you knew?—A. That is what we are doing.

Q. When were you doing that, up till when?—A. Really up to this date.

Q. And it was stopped then?—A. Yes, partially.

Q. And the Militia Department, or what Department was it, stepped in and stopped it. Who stopped it?—A. The Militia Department wished us to use the Army Medical Corps.

Q. And they told you that you must go to the Army Medical Corps for them?—A. Practically.

Q. And since then you have been carrying out this arrangement you told me about just now. Anyway you did get other men before somebody stepped in and stopped it?—A. Yes.

Q. Has the system been as satisfactory during the last two months, as it was prior to that time?—A. It has been, to some extent, but the time that has elapsed has been so short it has not been possible to say how it will work out.

Q. But prior to the time the change was made it was working very satisfactorily?—A. It was where we were working absolutely freely.

Q. Have you ever been working absolutely freely?—A. In one or two districts, yes.

Q. What districts were those?—A. British Columbia.

Q. A long way off—where else?—A. London.

Q. Canada?—A. Yes.

Q. And the Hospitals in those districts have been absolutely under the charge of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. They have been, yes—Alberta too.

Q. But in all the rest of them you had been working with divided authority?

By the Chairman:

Q. That was because the Army Medical Corps men refused to be seconded over to you. A. Or that they were refused to us.

Q. That is, you never completely took over the members of the Army Medical Corps?—A. No, Sir.

Q. Only in some of the provinces?—A. Only in some.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you take them over now?—A. We have taken over occasional members; for instance, in London our chief officer was an Army Medical Corps man; in Winnipeg our chief officer is an Army Medical Corps man—it is rather difficult for me to give you a list from memory.

Q. How many beds have you, all told, that can be used to-day? I do not want a classification, I just want the number?—A. Convalescent 3,246, sanatoria 674, insane hospitals 181, other institutions 345, a total of 4,646.

Q. Now that is the number of beds you have all told for returned soldiers?—A. Yes, that is those in operation.

Q. All right, those in operation.—A. We have more beds that will be ready in a very short time now. This information is changing from week to week and from day to day. Probably if we wanted to do so we could put in 500 or 1,000 more than the number.

Q. What is your number there?—4,646.

Q. Could we say that the Military Hospitals Commission had going and coming to-day, to-morrow, or perhaps yesterday, five thousand beds that could be immediately made use of?—A. Yes.

Q. That would be a fair lumping of it, is that so?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, how many do you expect to have by the end of May?

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Beds or men?—A. Will you ask that question of Mr. Armstrong?

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many men have you got in your 4,646 beds?—A. 3,373, sir.

Q. Have you a surplus of 600 beds?—A. 1,300 beds.

Q. How many of those are evacuated each month, Mr. Scammell?—A. That I cannot tell you offhand.

Q. We want to get that; it is very important.—A. It varies very much.

Q. There ought to be an average there. How many do you expect per month from now on?—A. Just a moment. (Consults documents.) This is the rate at which they have been returning during 1917: 1,569 in January, 868 in February, 2,151 in March.

Q. April?—A. I have not got the figures for April, but at the present time there are two hospital ships running which bring in 650 men, or thereabouts, and making an average of three trips per month for the two hospital ships. That is 1,650. In addition to that we are getting two trips by other ships bringing an average of 300 per ship.

Q. You expect about 2,200 per month from now on?—A. Exactly.

Q. That is my information. Can you and will you be able to take care of them?—A. Yes.

Q. Where do you propose to get extra accommodation?—A. That is one of the questions I want you to take up with Mr. Armstrong. He is prepared to deal with that.

Q. All right. Now, in your opinion, are the hospitals that you now have sufficient in the way of equipment, and so on?—A. I do not quite understand.

Q. Well, what is your opinion of the hospital on College street, Toronto? Do you think that ought to be maintained?—A. That will probably be closed by us in the not very distant future. It has served its purpose extremely well, but in eighteen months' use with 150 to 200 men in it, it got knocked about rather, especially as it was an old building to start with.

Q. Then the Grey Nuns' hospital in Montreal: do you propose to keep that?—A. I think so.

Q. In the same state that it is in?—A. What do you mean by the "same state"?

Q. According to the evidence that was given to us in Montreal by witnesses whose names I do not recall at the moment, the discipline was not particularly good, the medical service was not particularly good, the light was very poor, there were certain objections in it that felt to the soldier that he was almost in a criminal environment, and so on. Have any of these things been changed?—A. Some of them have been gone into and changed. For instance, we have removed from there the vocational classes to the technical school.

By the Chairman:

Q. Giving larger space in the recreation room?—A. Giving larger space in the recreation room. The whole evidence that was taken in Montreal has been gone over to see where improvements can be made.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And they have been made?—A. And they have been made as far as possible.

Q. Has your medical service there been improved? Have you a man there all the time now?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Who can tell us that, under whose charge is that?—A. Under the charge of the A.D.M.S. He has been requested to have a medical man there all the time.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. You are not in a position to say if one is there. The Commission cannot say to the Army Medical Corps what they shall have, that they shall have a doctor there all the time, because they will tell you go to—?—A. It can be done.

Q. They had nine men at the Grey Nuns for twenty-four hours and they could not get a doctor there before a man died. Has that state of affairs been rectified?—A. That is not quite correct. The man referred to was in his own house. He was an orderly and not a patient in the hospital.

Q. I will give it to you any way you like. The evidence was that there were nine men to cover twenty-four hours, and there was not a man there by any manner of means all the time. Has that been rectified?—A. Orders were issued immediately for it to be rectified.

Q. Has it been?—A. I should suppose so.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In what respect?—A. That there should be a medical officer there the whole time.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Can you make it your business to find out?—A. I certainly will.

Q. What steps will be taken to provide a remedy?—A. Steps will be taken to endeavour to have it rectified.

Q. You cannot do anything except say: "We would like it done." That is right?—A. Yes.

Q. If the A.D.M.S. says it is not necessary, the Military Hospitals Commission sits back and says: "That is as much as we can do," and they have done as much as they can do, is that right?—A. That is putting it bluntly.

By the Chairman:

Q. What new accommodation has recently been opened in Montreal?—A. Since the Loyola building do you mean?

Q. Since we were down there? The Loyola building has been opened since we were down there. What accommodation have you there?—A. Accommodation for 250.

Q. Is it for convalescents or for acute patients?—A. For convalescents.

Q. Your staff at the Grey Nuns has been moved there, I mean the administrative part of the staff, has been moved to Loyola?—A. No, the administrative part were moved there previous to that, but we have now taken separate offices for the administrative staff.

Q. Apart from both hospitals?—A. Yes, so as to give the hospitals over to their proper work.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Now, Mr. Scammell, there have been sent to me from time to time—I do not know whether the other members of the committee have received them also—papers and interviews and such articles as appear in newspapers. It is not necessary to explain them to you all. They are various complaints of returned soldiers, and I am going to take them up with you as they appear here and I want you to give your explanation, so that people who read this paper may be satisfied or otherwise. The Toronto Evening Telegram of the 20th April, 1917, publishes specifically eight complaints and opposite these eight complaints eight cures for them. They put first the condition, opposite they put the cure. The conditions is:

1. Daily delay in medical attention, which keeps men waiting for hours.

That is the first complaint. I have a letter from a returned soldier in which he says that he went out to the Spadina Hospital, he was told to go, and he went, and he waited for a matter of two hours, and there was no medical man sent for to examine him and he finally left because he was too tired to wait any longer. Do you know if that sort of thing has been going on?—A. I am not aware of it. It should not be.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. It should not be, surely. I want you to make a note of that if you will, whether or not men are not attended to within a reasonable time. We cannot expect all to get attention at once. I would like you to make a note of that. The next point is:

2. Neglect of any attention to some patients at all.

And the cure for that is:

Constant, careful checking over of the men on the register.

Q. Do you see constantly that the men that are in your hospitals by a course of checking up and registration are being attended to all the time?—A. Absolutely.

Q. What is your system?—A. Our system is that there is a complete record in every hospital of the man, of his disability, and the treatment he is receiving, and the rota for his attendance and the attendance of the medical officers.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is he examined daily?—A. No, sir, not if the man does not need it. Of course, if he is a bed case, he is.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Then, I think perhaps you will agree with this:

3. Unnecessary red tape and "militaryness" with wounded men, occasioning worry, inconvenience and undue exertion.

And the answer to that is:

Simpler and more sympathetic system with less call upon the men.

Q. Can that be remedied in any way?—A. I do not know what is referred to there.

Q. Do you think there is too much "militaryness"?—A. No, sir.

By the Chairman:

Q. Might that mean that they refer a man to two or three offices to get what he is after, and these offices are widely distributed?—A. That may be what is at the back of the mind of the writer. I do not know.

Q. Would you advocate some central clearing house for complaints in a city like Toronto?—A. It is very desirable.

Q. Is there any organization known to you at the present time acting in that capacity?—A. Any organization in any district, do you mean?

Q. Is there any organization or office in Toronto which, at the present time, is acting as a clearing house for all kinds of soldiers' complaints?—A. The office of the Military Hospitals Commission has been doing that all along.

Q. Supposing a man comes in to get his pay adjusted or to see about his pension, will he be turned down or taken care of?—A. If it is a matter of pension, now that the Pension Commission has an office we should send him there.

Q. Would you not think it would be better to have some one centre in Toronto where every kind of soldiers' complaints could be handled without the necessity of having the soldier travel from one office to another?—A. It would be a most desirable thing.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Would it not be more desirable to have such a centre in, say, five sections of the province of Ontario?—A. I think it would be unnecessary machinery.

Q. Do you think only one central office is necessary?—A. To deal with complaints? Yes.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. One for each Military District?—A. Quite enough.

Q. How many Military Districts are there in Ontario?—A. Three.

Q. Don't you think that there ought to be one in each Military District?
—A. Practically there is.

Q. Who does it?—A. The provincial commissions.

Q. Outside of that.

By the Chairman:

Q. The provincial commission deals with a man if he wants a job. That is all they do?—A. It is only the provincial commission in the province of Quebec that takes that line. Every other regards itself as a clearing house for the complaints of the men.

Q. Can a soldier, for example, go down to the office where Mr. Warwick is in Toronto with a complaint about pension or back pay, or to be retaken over by the Hospitals Commission, and can he get immediate satisfaction or is he referred to to some other office?—A. Mr. Warwick will immediately take the matter up.

Q. Ab initio?—A. Ab initio. Here, the office of the Military Hospitals Commission acts as a clearing house except for pensions. The pensions matters go direct to the Board of Pension Commissioners. Everything else that comes in from all these provincial commissions—we have a stack of correspondence dealing with individual cases of men—they go into the case, report on it, investigate it, sometimes send around to the man's house. They do it most sympathetically.

Q. Taking the case throughout Canada as a whole do you think it desirable to have some recognized centre or clearing house? What authority should undertake that?—A. It should be the provincial commissions. They come into closer touch with the men.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Who are the provincial commissions under?—A. The provincial governments.

Q. I do not agree with you.—A. They have been doing that work splendidly.

Q. Why should not the Military Hospitals Commission do that work?—A. The Military Hospitals Commission is doing it through the provincial commissions. There are for that purpose sub-committees of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Under whom is Mr. Warwick? He is not under the Hospitals Commission? —A. No, he is under the provincial commission. He is secretary of the provincial commission for Ontario, but in so far as he does that work he is acting with the Military Hospitals Commission. We probably get half a dozen letters from Mr. Warwick every day.

Q. Is there anybody in London doing that same work?—A. Certainly, the office of the provincial commission in London.

Q. Have they got an office opened there?—A. Yes, with a paid secretary.

Q. And every description of complaint will be attended to in these offices?—A. Absolutely.

Q. You will not send men from one place to another as was being done when we took evidence in Toronto?—A. Men will go from one place to another.

Q. Why should they if Mr. Warwick can do every single thing?—A. Mr. Warwick does do it whenever a man goes to him.

By the Chairman:

Q. If a man comes in to Mr. Warwick about his pay, does he communicate with the Military authorities or send the man a distance of a mile and a half to the Exhibition Grounds?—A. There may be cases in which it is desirable to send a man there, but ordinarily he would communicate himself direct.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. You gave us a list of the secretaries of the several provincial commissions throughout Canada, Messrs. Warwick, Pye, McCoy, Robinson, Hill, Stutchbury, and so on. These are each secretaries of local organizations. Now, are these men acting as a general clearing house for all soldiers' troubles in these provinces?—A. They are acting as clearing houses in most instances.

Q. And are they advertising throughout the province in newspapers and otherwise that all soldiers' complaints will be dealt with immediately?—A. They are.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Are they doing that advertising at the expense of the Government?—A. At the expense of the provincial governments.

Q. Is it with the authority of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. It is with the concurrence of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. So that these men are practically responsible to you?—A. In regard to all complaints, they are the clearing house for complaints, and as such are responsible to the Military Hospitals Commission.

The CHAIRMAN: I want in that connection, Mr. Pardee, to show you the advertising in Montreal papers. This is a comparatively limited form (producing clipping).

Mr. PARDEE: (Reads clipping as follows)—

SOLDIERS' EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION,

294 ST. CATHARINE EAST, 'PHONE "EAST 3968."

Co-operating with the Military Hospitals Commission.

The only official source of information in the province of Quebec regarding employment for discharged soldiers. Employers and the public generally are invited to co-operate in securing suitable employment for returned men.

Employers will help the cause if they will advise this office when they give employment to soldiers giving all particulars and give notice should they leave their employment. This information is required for the purpose of records only.

Soldiers residing in Quebec city or surrounding districts may apply to Jas. A. McManamy, Esq.; in Sherbrooke, to J. K. Edwards, Esq.; in Three Rivers, to P. L. Lassonde, Esq. In other municipalities, soldiers may apply to the mayor, who is requested to communicate with this office. No charge is made for services to the soldier or employer.

Mr. JOHN PYE,
Secretary.

Hon. GEO. A. SIMARD,
Chairman.

The WITNESS: That is the only case in which the Provincial Commission limits itself to that work.

Q. Have you not samples of advertising that has been published in the other provinces, in order to let the returned men know of the state of affairs?—A. I might be able to find that.

Q. Is there any such advertising?—A. Not put out through the Military Hospitals Commission, possibly put out by the Provincial Commission.

Q. Do you not think you ought to do it?—A. Possibly.

Mr. PARDEE: The point is there are too many heads; somebody ought to do it, but nobody has done it. There is some little advertisement I have noticed by the Provincial Commission in the daily papers in Toronto, but unless you dig through the paper with a microscope, you could not find it, it is so small.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: A complaint has been made by Sergeant Lowery, Chairman of the Investigation Committee, Great War Veterans' Association, Toronto, that there is no central point to which the returned soldier can go in order to make complaints. He stated when giving evidence before this Committee (p. 822):

What we suggest is that there be established some central agency for returned soldiers where we can go and promptly adjust any matter, whether connected with pay and allowances, pensions, or any other branch of the service, and that some person be there with whom business could be transacted.

It was further stated in the evidence that now a man has to call at four different places in the city of Toronto in order to transact all the business he may have with the Department; he has to go to 59 Yonge Street if his business is in connection with pensions, and then to the Exhibition Camp if it is a question of pay, it takes him twenty-five minutes to go there, and twenty-five minutes to come back, and there are two other places which he may have to visit in order to get the information he requires, or do the business he has in hand as a returned soldier. What I want to point out is that if there is a central clearing-house in the City of Toronto to which every returned soldier could go and have his grievances looked into and settled it would be of very great advantage.

The CHAIRMAN: Before the Committee adjourns I would like to call its attention to a letter I have just received as follows:—

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, MILITIA HEADQUARTERS, CANADA.

April 27, 1917.

Dear Sir HERBERT AMES:—

Re Dr. Marlow.

On April 11, Colonel (Dr.) Marlow, Toronto, wrote the A.A.G., M.D. No. 2., as follows:—

"I feel that it would not be consistent to enter into an arrangement with The Militia Department which would necessitate my going overseas before the Committee reports to Parliament, and especially as it is more than likely that many features of the Canadian Medical Services both overseas and in Canada will be discussed."

Previous to this, however, Dr. Marlow had offered his services for overseas and they were accepted.

In view of the decision of the British War Cabinet, on April 20, in which it was stated that every physician and surgeon and every man with medical training, of military age, must be called up for service immediately, this decision having been arrived at on account of the submarine warfare carried on against hospitals ships, and the necessity of holding casualties in France, instead of transferring them to Great Britain, I have to request that you will be good enough to inform me whether or not you need the services of Dr. Marlow any more before your Committee, and if so, that they will be utilized at as early a date as possible. If, however, you do not require him before your Committee again, I should be glad if you would address him to that effect, in order that he may take up his duties overseas without further delay.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd) W. E. HODGINS,
Major-General A/Adjutant-General.

Sir HERBERT AMES, M.P.,

Chairman, Parliamentary Committee, on Returned Soldiers,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Committee adjourned until 3.30 p.m.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Room 301

APRIL 27, 1917

The Committee met at 3.30 p.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

The examination of Mr. Scammell resumed.

The WITNESS: A question was asked me this morning about advertisements by the Soldiers Aid Commissions in various newspapers. Here is an advertisement by the Ontario Soldiers' Aid Commission, (Reads) “RETURNED SOLDIERS.

The Head Office of the Soldiers' Aid Commission of Ontario (Incorporated by Special Act of the Legislature of Ontario) is at No. 116 College Street, Toronto.

The public are cordially invited to co-operate with us in securing suitable employment and in doing other helpful work for returned soldiers and their dependents.

Classes for the Vocational Re-education of returned soldiers who have been so disabled as to prevent them from resuming their former occupations have now been provided, and any man who regards his disability to be of such a nature as to entitle him to the benefit of these classes is requested to make application to Mr. W. W. Nichol, Vocational Officer for Ontario, No. 116 College Street, Toronto, when full particulars will be gladly furnished and arrangements at once made for a Board to enable those entitled to obtain courses of instruction in the subjects suitable to their particular disability. In addition to getting instruction free, the support of the soldier and his family or dependents during the period of retraining and for one month after it is completed, is provided for according to scale.

Cases where assistance for the families of soldiers is required, are daily reported to us, and we will thankfully receive subscriptions to our “Relief Fund”. Subscribers to this Fund are assured that payments from same are made only after careful investigations of the merits of each case, and particulars will be furnished on request to subscribers as to the disposition of their donation. All donations should be made payable to the order of the Soldiers' Aid Commission, and in each case an official receipt will be issued therefor.

All services are free of charge. For further particulars as to our work, please write or telephone N. 2800.

W. D. McPHERSON, K. C., M.P.P.,
Chairman.

J. WARWICK, Secretary.”

The WITNESS: That is a splendid advertisement.

The CHAIRMAN: It is a much more comprehensive advertisement than some of the others.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. In what paper does that appear?—A. In “The Khaki Call”.

Q. I was asking you about these various matters, and we had just finished dealing with the Bureau of Information. The next ground of complaint that we have here is, unsuitable accommodation for amputation convalescents and tardy provision of artificial limbs. You are doing away with your place on College Street, and where will the inmates from there go, to the Booth Memorial Home?—A. Those who require artificial limbs.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Will they go only to the Booth Memorial Home?—A. That will be an Orthopaedic centre only.

Q. Where will the rest of the patients go?—A. Some to Whitby and some to Guelph.

Q. As to the supplying of artificial limbs, are you making any arrangements to enlarge the manufacture and increase the output?—A. Very considerably.

Q. What are you doing?—A. Mr. Armstrong has all the facts and figures dealing with that matter, if you would be good enough to ask him that question, Mr. Pardee.

Q. Then I want to get to the out-patient matter. Do you find many complaints by reason of the fact that men are taken away from their homes and made inmates of institutions when they might be reasonably be left as out-patients?—A. There is always a certain amount of kicking.

Q. I know, but do you find very much of it?—A. Not a great deal.

Q. Well, not a considerable amount?—A. Oh, there is a good deal, the men prefer to be at their own homes.

Q. Is it not possible to have them at their own homes to a greater degree than at the present time, and still go on with your treatment?—A. No.

Q. Why not?—A. The contrary is the case. When a man is at his own home he is more or less a free agent. He stays out as late as he chooses at night, he takes such exercise as he cares to take and he is not under the medical supervision he would be in a medical institution.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is it not a fact that your medical people state that the furlough that a man gets on arrival here to go home is as a rule medically the opposite of beneficial for him?—A. There is considerable consensus of opinion in that direction.

Q. And you simply give the man the furlough for sympathetic reasons, and take him back usually in a poorer condition than when he went there from the view of medical improvement?—A. Yes.

Q. The established rule is to let the man go home if he is at all fit to go home, but it has to be taken as generally impairing the man's health and retarding his recovery?—A. Except from a psychological point of view.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. When a man is an out-patient is he still allowed subsistence allowance? A. Certainly.

Q. He gets all the perquisites that an in-patient would get?—A. And 60 cents per day in addition.

By the Chairman:

Q. Has that been raised to a dollar?—A. No.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. It is the vocational class that has been raised?—A. It is the re-educational cases whose pay has been raised to a dollar.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Why should that be raised to a dollar when the ordinary out-patient would not receive it?—A. The ordinary married out-patient is in receipt of rather more than the man who is taking the re-education, and there has been no apparent reason to change the militia regulation in that respect, that sixty cents per day should be the subsistence rate for men living at their homes.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Whereas a man who is on vocational training gets a dollar a day extra?—A. From the 1st of April.

Q. I do not see the reason of that. Supposing a married man is an out-patient, why does the vocational training entitle him to forty cents a day extra?—A. The married man who is an out-patient receives $30 a month, plus $20 a month, plus whatever the Patriotic Fund may allow him, plus sixty cents a day. The married man without a family who is undergoing re-education is allowed $8 a month spending money and $35 for his wife, which makes $43, plus his subsistence, which is now raised to a dollar a day. There is no Patriotic Fund allowance for him. That is his entire income.

Q. You have heard of the Harding case in Toronto where the man was suffering from tuberculosis. He lived with his wife and he was in such condition that he could not possibly work. He was the father of eight children, he was 46 years of age, dismissed from the Spadina Hospital, March 2nd, as a disabled soldier; he was told by the doctors there that the only hope for improvement in his case was his removal to Regina, Saskatchewan, the atmospheric conditions there being so different from England and here that it might relieve the asthma and bronchitis. He had twenty-two years unblemished career as a worker on shells in Woolwich, England; then he came to Canada, but war was declared, and he joined his six brothers, four of whom were in Canada and two in England, leaving a wife and ten children. When he was overseas he contracted consumption, came back here, was dismissed from Spadina Avenue Hospital, and he was put on a pension, the third class pension, I think it was about $24 a month. They were in that condition, and his wife got work, and in going out to work one morning she was killed by a street car. Would the Hospitals Commission have charge of such a case? Would the Hospitals Commission dismiss a man with a wife and ten children, let him go, and allow him to remain with a pension of from $20 to $30 a month? Would that not be in your province to take care of?—A. If the man's case had reached finality—in other words if he could not be improved by further treatment then it would be the duty of the Commission to discharge that man, and pass him to the Pensions Commission. The amount of his pension is then determined by a medical examination, on which the Pensions Commission acts.

By the Chairman:

Q. Based on the degree of disablement?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. There was a total disablement practically. Since he was discharged the Hospitals Commission had nothing more to do with him?—A. Nothing whatever, unless he comes back under this new Order in Council for further treatment.

Q. Does it not strike you, having had a great deal to do with this kind of thing, that such a case as that should not be allowed to occur, that there should be some provision made about it?

The CHAIRMAN: What provision, if any, could you suggest?

Mr. PARDEE: I would suggest there should be some sort of contingent fund.

The CHAIRMAN: I was asking him.

Mr. PARDEE: I am not criticising. I was asking for information.

The WITNESS: That is one of the points which was brought up—

Q. Is that what your $100,000 is going to be used for?—A. Exactly. That is as clear an illustration as you could find of the value and necessity of a disablement fund.

Q. How long before you will get such a scheme as that under way?—A. Probably not until after the war.

[Mr. E. H. Scamell.]

Q. In any event, as soon as a man is discharged, that is an end of him, as far as aid goes?—A. There is the assistance he gets in getting employment.

Q. But if he was not able to get employment, and his wife had to go out and work for a living, and the neighbours had to bury her; you are liable for none of that under the existing regulations?—A. No.

The CHAIRMAN: In other words, that case would seem to illustrate the necessity of some charitable or benevolent organization, with power to deal with exceptional cases of this character.

WITNESS: Cases which have no fair legal claim.

Mr. PARDEE: I would not put it as a case of compassion at all, but I would say that it should be the duty of the Government absolutely to provide for that man.

The CHAIRMAN: You cannot do it by regulation, because you would have to make a regulation for each individual case.

Mr. PARDEE: The Government should make a regulation which would enable them to deal with these cases. The poor fellow went and fought and did his bit. Here is another case which reads: "Sick wife, missing man, his pay cut off, and he cannot get a pension, both his sons are at the Front. The woman now confined to her bed and, practically nothing is to be had for her." Has the Commission no power to deal with that case?—A. That is absolutely in the hands of the Militia Department, and provision is made for all such cases.

Q. What provision is made?—A. That if a man is missing his assigned pay and the separation allowances are continued to his wife until he is declared dead, and then she is pensioned as a widow.

Mr. PARDEE: A pension was refused her because her husband had not been officially declared dead.

The CHAIRMAN: And that is remedied by the new Order in Council, which would give her an allowance until the pension was either refused or granted.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. In the meantime, does she get her allowance?—A. She gets her separation allowance under the old regulation.

By the Chairman:

Q. She gets both now?—A. But I mean under the old regulation.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Take up the Marlow report. At page 6 of his report, Col. Marlow refers to the question of the medical stores and drugs. What system are these bought on and how are they replenished and so forth? Have you to do with that, or is Mr. Armstrong the one to tell us about that?—A. The drugs are bought in the usual way through the Purchasing Branch of the Militia Department. They are requisitioned for emergency purposes, when they can be bought on the request of the medical officer and paid for by the Commission.

Q. Then these drugs are only furnished to the Militia Department?—A. Our main supply is furnished through the Militia Department.

Q. You only buy emergency drugs through the Commission?—A. That is all, sir.

Q. Would the Commission be able to make better contracts along these lines if it were to buy the drugs itself?—A. I do not see why that should be.

Q. You do not see any reason?—A. No.

Q. With the present system, then, you are quite satisfied?—A. I think so.

Q. Dr. Marlow says in his report that an undesirable effect of the present system is an undue accumulation of various kinds of supplies which may never be called for at all. Do you think that is the case?—A. In making requisitions you cannot help that in any hospital.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Do you make requisitions for large amounts in bulk?—A. For what we shall likely require say, during the ensuing three months.

You just ask for supplies for three months at a time?—A. Three months at a time.

Q. Colonel Marlow further says that the stock in hand, which must be carried by medical stores in the various districts would reach a value of many thousands of dollars, and that the present system if continued will some day be the cause of considerable financial loss. Do you agree with that?—A. Undoubtedly it will to some extent, but the medical stores must carry a stock of drugs in order to buy at anything like reasonable prices. I do not suppose that the loss, through deterioration, or the final destruction, of any drugs, would be anything like as great as the loss would be if we bought in small lots.

Q. Then by purchasing in that way you get the drugs at better prices?—A. Certainly.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Better than if you purchased from retail dealers?—A. Exactly.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You have told us as far as you know, about the tubercular situation?—A. I think so.

Q. Has Colonel Thompson, your Medical Superintendent, had any previous military experience?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. From the knowledge you have gained during your connection with this Military Hospitals Commission, is it necessary in your opinion, that a man should have military experience in order to occupy a position such as that?—A. I do not think so.

Q. You do not agree with Dr. Marlow when he says it takes at least five years to make a medical officer and even at that the required material can only be drawn on from the ranks of university matriculants. Then he says further on in his report that no one but a medical officer with military experience should be appointed to that position. Do you take exception to that at all, or what do you say so far as your experience goes?—A. I take exception to that in this respect; that the experience of the Commission with Colonel Thompson has been a most happy one. He has grasped the work in a most able manner, and I do not think there would have been any improvement had he been one of the two members of the Army Medical Corps before he became our medical Superintendent.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Have you had any medical experience?—A. No, sir.

Q. None at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are only talking in a general way from what you have seen as Secretary of this Commission?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And of the men you have got, all you can say is, that, as far as your knowledge goes as a layman, their medical services are satisfactory?—A. So far as I am aware, sir.

Q. Dr. Marlow says in his report that it has been impossible to secure men of high medical standing who might offer their services, on account of the various situations which have been created, such as that a former student in their office might be in command over them, and giving them orders one day, whereas the physician had been the ones to give orders previously. Do you find anything of that kind?—A. That has not come under my purview at all.

Q. Have you any suggestions to make to this Committee looking to improvement in the services of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then can we take it that in your judgment the system up to date is perfect?—A. No, I do not think you can take any such thing, because we are human.

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

Q. Being human, then, I fancy you can see some things that might be remedied. What would you suggest?—A. Immediately we see a direction in which a matter can be remedied we set about remedying it.

Q. Then at the present time there is nothing you can suggest to this Committee at all in the way of remedying present conditions?—A. I have no suggestions to make along that line.

Mr. PARDEE: You said this morning, Mr. Chairman, that we would decide later on as to what we would do either in the way of making our report in toto on returned soldiers, or simply putting in the first part of our report. If that is so I will not go on with the examination of Mr. Scammell. I have a great deal I want to ask him about on other matters, but perhaps we might let that stand until next week, and in the meantime decide what we will finally do.

The CHAIRMAN: I think there is no doubt but what the Reference directs and empowers us to enquire, not merely regarding disabled men, but as to the whole question of demobilization. However, for purposes of concentration of the evidence, we have hitherto been dealing only with disabled men, and if it seems desirable we might make an interim report on that matter, inasmuch as Parliament probably would prefer to deal with the subject immediately. The larger question, as to what shall be done to provide employment, and to distribute the returned soldiers when demobilization takes place at the end of the war, is one which I think would require very considerable examination by this Committee, and an amount of evidence from men capable of speaking on that subject in different parts of Canada. If we wait until we get all that secondary evidence in our hands before making a report, Parliament would have adjourned before the report was ready. My suggestion is to make a report on the first phase of the question while Parliament is sitting, and then to go on with our sessions, and if the Committee felt it was wise to do so, to get permission from the House to continue after Parliament has risen, the enquiry into the other greater subject if it were thought desirable.

Examination of Mr. Scammell resumed:

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How many returned soldiers have you now, Mr. Scammell, that would be competent to take up permanent occupation. Do you know at all or can you give me any idea as to the number?—A. I should say a large majority of them.

Q. Are any of those men fit to go upon the land?—A. That I cannot say, but in all probability a considerable proportion, if they evince any desire to do so.

Q. Have many of them evinced any such desire?—A. Not at present.

Q. Have many of them been asked to do so?—A. I cannot say that they have, except in the West.

Q. Is there a very considerable percentage of men who could take up market gardening?—A. I see no reason why they should not do so.

Q. You have made no inquiries along those lines amongst them?—A. Not personally.

Q. Has anybody done so?—A. Enquiry is made in connection with the Vocational Classes that are held in the Institutions, and a number of men are taking training on those lines.

Q. And when these inquiries are made is there any classification at all of the men who desire to take up these pursuits?—A. Not more than the classification of their enrollment.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. Their enrolment in the various classes, such as certain men who are to take up market gardening, certain men who are to take up carpentry, certain men who are to take up motor engineering, and certain men who are to engage in other phases of the work.

Q. And at that they are let drop?—That is as much as you get as to what they desire to do or what will ultimately become of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would it not appear to you that a classification might be made of these men as they go along in their various occupations to find out whether or not they propose to carry out to a finality?—A. It would not be of very much value.

Q. Why not?—A. Because the condition of a man while he is in Hospital renders him changeable.

Q. Then when are we to reach the stage where we might get something definite?—A. When the man is approaching his discharge.

Q. Is any classification made of him then?—A. Yes, sir. The information which is sent to the employment Commission contains particulars as to the classes the man has been taking so that they may have an idea what his preference is when they are looking for employment on his behalf.

Q. That man then goes to the Provincial Commission?—A. That man goes to the Secretary of the Provincial Commission or the local committee of the Provincial Commission.

Q. Then he is placed?—A. Then he is placed.

Q. There is no one employed by the Commission whose particular duty it is to see whether these men make good or otherwise?—A. It is very difficult to keep tab on the men, but if a man goes back to the Provincial Commission they endeavour to place him in a situation that will satisfy him. The man that does not come back apparently is satisfied.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. At some stage in this man's handling by the Commission is there not a list of questions submitted to him, and is not one of those questions as to what occupation he has pursued in the past, or what occupation he desires to pursue in the future?—A. That question is asked him on his arrival.

Q. Every man?—A. Yes.

Q. That is what I was trying to get at. Have you tabulated in any way the answers to those questions so that you can give us the number of men. You said about 150 was the limit?—A. If it has not been tabulated it is being done, based on the report made in Quebec; whether it is completed or not I cannot say.

Q. But you are quite within the mark nevertheless?—A. I think perhaps I might add that the National Service Commission is now making a survey of the men overseas. Cards are being sent over for that purpose.

Q. For what purpose?—A. In order to ascertain the previous occupations and the preference of the men who are at present serving, that statistics may be obtained before demobilization.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you seen this list of forty individual cases in the evidence?—A. It was handed to me this morning.

Q. Would you be good enough to have that examined from the point of view of the Military Hospitals Commission, and a brief note prepared with respect to each case?—A. I have already put that in hand this afternoon.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What have you to say as to the gratuity system? Are you in favour of the gratuity system, or do you think some system of pension should be made for these men?—A. I think some system of pension should be arranged.

Q. You are not in favour of a gratuity?—A. Its working has been very unsatisfactory.

Q. You have personal knowledge of that?—A. Again and again.

Q. And as one having that knowledge, you are thrown directly in contact with these men. You would advise a change from gratuity to pension?—A. Yes, even though the pension be a small one. I would sooner give a man a pension of $8 a month for six months, than I would give him a gratuity of $50.

Q. Why? Would he spend the $50 all at once?—A. As a rule. $8 a month would be something coming in.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In regard to soldiers that are put in civilian hospitals, are they generally put in a ward by themselves?—A. They are generally put in public wards.

Q. In some cases are they put in with undesirable company? Take the case of the man who was found between two alien enemies for instance, would it not be better to have those men all by themselves, in a ward by themselves, even if it were a general ward? Could that not be arranged?—A. Not when only two or three are in a hospital.

Q. Are there as few as that?—A. We have very few in the General Hospitals.

Q. It could be arranged to give them a room by themselves?—A. I did not know any complaint had come in on that score.

Q. Another matter, do you arrange with all your convalescent homes that there shall be a resident physician during all the time?—A. All the homes except the very little ones.

Q. How small?—A. We have some as small as twenty-five. It is quite unnecessary to have a resident physician for such a home.

Q. It has been complained that men returned to homes, and there was no physician, and they suffered from lack of medical treatment?—A. A physician visits those homes every day.

Q. So that you say that complaint is entirely unfounded?—A. Quite unfounded.

Q. Will you look into the fact and see if returned soldiers have been put in the position I speak of?—A. I should be much obliged if you would give me the data so that I can look it up.

Mr. Ross: I will give it to you.

Witness discharged.

EXHIBIT 4.

P.C. No. 976.

PRIVY COUNCIL
CANADA.

CERTIFIED copy of a Report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General, on the 12th April, 1917.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 7th April, 1917, from the President of the Military Hospitals Commission, submitting as follows:—

In the application of the powers granted by the Order-in-Council of 29th June, 1916, (P.C. 1472), several matters have arisen which make it necessary to modify and extend these powers.

In clauses 2 and 6, payment of subsistence allowance is provided for men undergoing vocational training, where such men are living at their own homes or in lodgings, at 60 cents per day. Owing to the largely increased cost of living it has been found impossible in some cases to procure board and lodging, especially in Western Canada, at this rate. Very strong representations have been received by the Commission that

[Mr. E. H. Scammell.]

$1.00 per day is the lowest amount upon which it is possible for a man to procure board, lodging and laundry.

An omission was made in the last Order-in-Council in consequence of which single men were not granted $8.00 per month in the same way as married men.

Several cases have arisen where men with a disability enlisted. On discharge from the Service it was found that this disability had been aggravated. Pension however, is only based upon the aggravation. It has been found that this aggravation sometimes prevents a man from returning to his previous occupation. If a minimum allowance is fixed, such men may be re-educated.

Clauses 7 and 8 provide for payment to a widowed mother and to the parents of a man undergoing vocational training when such payments are necessary. No provision is made for cases where the widowed mother or other relatives of the soldier have been receiving assigned pay from him, or are proved to be wholly or partially dependent upon him, but where separation allowance has not been given; nor for cases where the widowed mother or other relatives, subsequent to a soldier's return to Canada, become dependent upon him.

The attention of the Commission has been drawn by the Department of the Naval Service to the fact that no provision has been made for giving vocational training to officers and men of the Canadian Naval Service and its reserve force, i.e., The Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve, and the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve, (Overseas Division.) It has been pointed out that the officers and men of those forces are equally upon service as the officers and men of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and the Commission has been asked by the Department of the Naval Service to submit an amending Order-in-Council so as officially to include them. It has been further pointed out that a large number of Canadians are serving in the Royal Naval Air Service, the Royal Flying Corps and other Imperial Forces, who should also be included.

The Minister therefore recommends that the scale of pay and allowances for men undertaking vocational training, after their military pay has stopped, (set forth in Order-in-Council, P.C. 1472, of 29th June, 1916) be cancelled, and that the following be substituted therefor:

(1) Single men, "living in," free board and washing, plus $8.00 per month. Where the total amount received by way of pension and this allowance is less than $16.00 per month, an additional allowance shall be granted, so that the minimum amount receivable shall be $16.00 per month in addition to free board and washing.

(2) Single men, "living out," $8.00 per month, plus $1.00 per day subsistence allowance. Where the total amount received by way of pension and these allowances is less than $46.00 per month, an additional allowance shall be granted, so that the minimum amount receivable shall be $46.00 per month.

(3) Married men, "living in," free board and washing, plus $8.00 per month, with the following additions:

(A) For wife having no children, $35.00 per month, less pension of husband.

(B) Wife and one child—

(a) If the child is under the maximum age and over 10 years of age $42.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(b) If the child is under 10 and over 5 years of age $39.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(c) If the child is under 5 years of age, $38.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(C) Wife and two children—

(a) If both children are between ages of 10 and the maximum age, or if one is between 10 and the maximum age, or if one is between 10 and the maximum age and the other between 5 and 10, $47.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(b) If both between 5 and 10, $42.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(c) If one is between 5 and 10 and the other 5 years old or less, $42.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(d) If both are under 5 years of age, $41.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(D) Wife and three children—

(a) If all three children are between the ages of 10 and the maximum age, or if two are between 10 and the maximum age and the third under 10, or if one is between 10 and the maximum age and two between 5 and 10, $50.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowance for children under the Pension regulations.

(b) If all three are between the ages of 5 and 10, or if two are between the ages of 5 and 10 and the third younger, or if one is between the ages of 5 and 10 and two are younger, $45.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(c) If all three are under 5 years of age, $44.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(E) Wife and four children—

(a) If one child is between 10 and the maximum age, and a second child between 5 and the maximum age, no matter what be the ages of the other two, $53.00 per month less pension if husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(b) If one or more children are between 5 and 10 and the others younger, $48.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(c) If all four are under 5 years of age, $47.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(F) Wife and five children—

(a) If one child is between 10 and the maximum age, and a second child between 5 and 10, no matter what be the ages of the other children, the maximum allowance may be given, which is $55.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(b) If one or more children are between 5 and 10 and others younger, $51.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(c) If all the children are under 5 years of age, $50.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(G) Wife and six children—

(a) If one child is between 10 and the maximum age, and a second child between 5 and the maximum age, no matter what be the ages of the others, the maximum allowance may be given, which is $55.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(b) If one or several children are between 5 and 10 and others younger, $54.50 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(c) If all children are under 5 years of age, $53.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

(II) Wife with 7 or more children under the maximum age, no matter what be their ages, may be given the maximum allowance of $55.00 per month, less pension of husband and allowances for children under the Pension regulations.

NOTE.—In all the foregoing cases, payment of allowances for the wife and children of a man undergoing vocational training will be made direct to the wife, unless otherwise deemed advisable by the Commission in individual cases.

4. Married men living in their own homes, $1.00 per day extra.

5. A widowed mother, if she be dependent entirely for support on an unmarried son who is receiving vocational training, and if the son made an assignment of his pay to his mother and also arranged for her to receive Separation Allowance during the time he was in service, may be paid on the same scale as the wife of a married man with no children.

6. A widowed mother, or a mother who is not widowed, if she be dependent entirely or partially on an unmarried son who is receiving vocational training, and if the son made an assignment of his pay to his mother, or can prove to the satisfaction of the Military Hospitals Commission that he has regularly sent a portion of his pay to his mother; or a sister or other dependents, if the soldier who is receiving vocational training made an assignment of his pay to her or to them or can prove to the satisfaction of the Military Hospitals Commission that he has regularly sent a portion of his pay to her or to them, the said mother, sister or other dependent, may be paid an amount equal to the assignment made or payment sent by the soldier, provided that such amount shall not exceed the amount which would be paid under the authority of this Order-in-Council to the wife of a married man without children.

7. The parents of a man undergoing vocational training, if both are old and incapable of work, and if they are entirely or partially dependent on the son in question, may be paid on the same scale as the wife of a married man with no children.

8. Widower's children.—The guardian of a widower's children who are under the maximum age shall be paid the following rates:—

(a) One child—$10.00 per month.

(b) Two children—$17.50 per month.

(c) Three children—$22.00 per month.

(d) More than three children—$3.00 per month for each child in excess of three with a maximum payment of $35.00 per month.

9. When a child reaches the age of 5 or 10 or the maximum age between the first of the month and the last day of the month, the birthday shall be regarded as on the last day of the month.

10. Payments under these regulations shall be continued for one month after the completion of vocational training, whether the man has secured employment or not.

11. In the preceding clauses, wherever the term "maximum age" occurs, it means 16 years old in the case of a son and 17 years old in the case of a daughter.

12. The provision of this Order-in-Council shall apply to all members of His Majesty's Naval, Military and Auxiliary Forces, who were bona fide residents in Canada at the outbreak of the present war, who are unable to return to their previous occupations by reason of their disability incurred on service in the present war.

13. The provisions of this Order-in-Council shall be operative from 1st April, 1917.

The Committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.

Mr. SAMUEL ALLAN ARMSTRONG, called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you occupy in respect to the Hospitals Commission?—A. Director.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. Since the 18th December, 1916.

Q. What were you doing before that?—A. Assistant Provincial Secretary of the Province of Ontario.

Q. What do your duties consist of?—A. I have general supervision of the management of the work of the Commission.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

Q. Are you most of the time in Ottawa or on the road?—A. Probably half and half.

Q. What were your duties as Assistant Provincial Secretary?—A. I had charge of all the Provincial Hospitals in Ontario. The Provincial Secretary's Department controls all public institutions, not only hospitals for the insane and reformatories, but also the general inspection of all general hospitals, County houses of refuge, and other charitable organizations. Practically all the time I was with the Provincial Government my work was in connection with not only the operation of these public institutions, but very largely in connection with the construction of them, the engineering part of it and the organization generally.

Q. You have been here while Mr. Scammell was giving his evidence, and there are some features of Mr. Scammell's evidence that require amplification. Taking up first of all the matter of convalescent cases, regular cases, what recent enlargement of your accommodation throughout the country has been undertaken, taking first the regular convalescent cases?—A. I do not know just what you mean about the recent enlargement.

Q. In what respects and in what places have you increased the available number of beds for returned convalescent patients during the last few months?—A. If we take it by Provinces, starting at Nova Scotia, we have the new hospital at Camp Hill, Halifax, now in course of erection, having accommodation for 300 men.

Q. Are you erecting a new building?—A. A new building entirely.

Q. What character?—A. Frame construction. It is of a semi-permanent character, concrete foundation and frame superstructure, with the intention ultimately of bricking it in as a brick veneer building and making it permanent.

Q. Can it be used in winter?—A. Yes, all the buildings we put up even of a most temporary character are suitable for winter use.

Q. Is that for the convalescents belonging to the Maritime Provinces?—A. That covers the Province of Nova Scotia.

Q. Is it for Nova Scotia cases, or cases in transit?—A. Well, very rarely a case in transit would have to remain there, because a bed case is put on a hospital train and passed right through to destination; so that we consider Camp Hill will be used for Provincial cases. One section of the building with 150 beds is provided with full hospital equipment. The other section is rather more of a convalescent character.

Q. You intend therefore to have provision for active cases, as well as convalescent?—A. Yes, should active cases arise.

Q. But you keep them separate?—A. Yes; in addition to that, for active treatment cases, we have at pier No. 2 in Halifax, the discharge depot, splendid accommodation there for probably 450 beds.

Q. In operation at the present time?—A. Just about in operation. We have been delayed in getting the equipment in there.

Q. Is the hospital really on the pier?—A. I think so. I have not seen that myself, I have not been to Halifax, but I understand it is one of the immigration buildings, and I presume it is the same as the other buildings of that character. We have also taken over the Presbyterian college near Pinehall, which consists of two buildings, and is in operation now, and will have accommodation for 150 beds. A building for vocational purposes will also be erected. In the meantime there is sufficient accommodation for class rooms in the buildings that are there. In Sydney we have taken over the Moxham Home, which has accommodation for approximately 100 beds, and ample room for extension.

Q. I want to know more about the more recent developments?—A. These cases I am giving you are all recent.

Q. These have not been referred to in the evidence yet?—A. I do not think so. What I am giving you is all recent.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How long since?—A. Within the past three months. In fact, the three places I am giving you now are within the last two months. The Halifax pier has been in operation for some little time, although it is really only now being completed. We do not consider discharge depots in calculating our accommodation, because they are only used for men in transit, and the men are only there for three or four days, depending on their classification. Then in New Brunswick the Armouries were converted into a discharge depot with accommodation for 450 beds.

Q. Where is that?—A. St. John, New Brunswick.

Q. That is quite recent?—A. That is quite recent. At the time it was decided to convert the Armouries into a discharge depot information had been received from England which led the commission to believe it would be necessary to create such an institution in St. John. From the information sent over since that building has been in operation, it would appear that we were wrong in our judgment or the information we had received, and I think a change will probably be made in that building whereby the centre portion will not be used for hospital purposes, but a side wing only. General Jones informs me that he recently made an inspection of it, and it will make excellent accommodation for hospital purposes. The Government House at Fredericton is about to be taken over. Negotiations have been under way in connection with that building for a long time, but it was occupied by the militia, and as they are about to vacate it we are about taking it over, and arrangements will be made to convert it into a convalescent home. We expect to provide there approximately 150 beds. I am not dealing with the tubercular situation yet.

By the Chairman:

Q. Deal with the convalescent situation?—A. There has been no change in the province of Quebec other than the alterations which are now under way in the discharge depot. The commission has secured from the Immigration Department the two upper floors of that building, and it is now being converted into wards with isolation sections for tubercular cases and for the insane; so that while these men are held there they will be completely isolated from the rest of the men. We have accommodation there for between 800 and 1,000 men.

Q. How soon?—A. We are using it all the time now, but the alterations were just started this last week.

Q. How soon do you expect to have accommodation there for 1,000 men?—A. In possibly a month's time. In the meantime we have ample accommodation there for our present requirements. This is in anticipation of the arrival of the boats at Quebec during the summer. There is nothing further in the province of Quebec. At the present time we appear to have ample accommodation for convalescents in that province, but we have in the meantime been studying the situation and making a fairly extensive survey of the province with a view to ascertaining what should be done.

Q. Is there any immediate intention of having a convalescent home outside the city of Montreal?—A. That is one of the matters under consideration at the present time. My personal view is that there is only one place in Quebec for that, and that is adjoining the Macdonald College, where we can take advantage of the entire teaching staff. The college authorities cannot let us have any of their land, and it may be necessary for us to acquire land and erect hospital buildings, utilizing if possible, the college plant and equipment for vocational training; and, perhaps, in that atmosphere we could hope to have more of the men go on the land than by utilizing city technical schools elsewhere or putting in our own technical training equipment.

Q. That has not been decided on?—A. Nothing has been decided on, but as a matter of fact we have been making extensive investigations to learn as to whether it will be necessary to acquire buildings either by lease or otherwise.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

Q. And erect?—A. And erect, yes. In the province of Ontario, Queens Military Convalescent Hospital is almost immediately ready for occupancy. We have taken over from Queens University Grant Hall and the Arts Building, with accommodation for about, we expect, 450 men, with full operating equipment for surgical operations, and electrical apparatus for electric treatment. Both the Hotel Dieu and the General Hospital in Kingston will be used for major surgical operations. We have just taken over the Pickering College at Newmarket; it has been donated by the Society of Friends. This institution will be converted into a hospital for the insane, and all insane will be segregated at that point.

Q. Those that you keep at Cobourg?—A. There are only a very few cases at Cobourg, and they are not serious cases; they are rather more the result of shell-shock. We have a large number of cases in the provincial institutions, and the accommodation is entirely too crowded in these places at present, so that it has been decided that we should have our own institution in Ontario for them.

Q. A soldiers' insane asylum, and take the cases from the provincial institutions?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many will that institution accommodate?—A. About 150, that is at Newmarket. We propose increasing the accommodation at Cobourg by 300 beds, giving us an ultimate accommodation of 450 exclusively for the treatment of shell shock. We have a splendid staff and a splendid equipment, ample to take care of the increased accommodation. The Hospital for the Insane at Whitby, a portion of which is in course of construction, there are eight cottages with accommodation of about between 50 and 60 beds each, which are now being occupied by returned men.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. On the cottage plan?—A. With the exception that there is an infirmary built ready for occupation with 100 beds. Whitby is probably the most modern institution of its kind on the continent and it will be thoroughly equipped for the care of the convalescent.

By the Chairman:

Q. How many do you expect to be able to handle there?—A. We are arranging now to erect buildings for 300 beds. When the remaining nine buildings which the province has in course of erection—they will be occupied as completed—perhaps it will be six to eight months before the entire plant is ultimately completed—we will have accommodation for 1,200 beds, and with the 300 additional we will have an ultimate total accommodation for 1,500 men at Whitby.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. That is final?—A. That will be final, but we have any amount of room for expansion, and with the type of temporary building we put up for 150 beds, we can put them up in six weeks. The old Toronto General Hospital, just now being used as a military hospital, may be taken over by the Commission. That has accommodation for anywhere between 500 and 750 beds. That arrangement may be effected next week.

Q. Let me ask you one thing there. Taking the Toronto General Hospital will not enlarge your accommodation. That hospital is already being used?—A. Not by us, that is being used by C.E.F. camp cases.

Q. What will then become of the camp cases?—A. They tell me we will require to set apart 150 to 200 beds at the most for those men. That population is gradually diminishing, and as they go into camp they will take many of them into the camp hospitals. The new orthopaedic hospital in North Toronto is just ready for occupation, that is the main building. The other two units we are erecting in connection with it, the Booth Memorial, will be ready in less than a month's time.

By the Chairman:

Q. Will the Booth Memorial be entirely for orthopaedic cases?—A. Yes, sir. That will give us a total accommodation of 450 beds. We have another institution that we have been negotiating for at Burlington. Negotiations fell through. It is possible that we will take steps to expropriate it, that is the Brant Hotel, which will give accommodation for 350 beds. There is another building, the Massey-Treble property known as Euclid Hall, in the city of Toronto, which will be open in ten days' time, with accommodation for 30 beds, and will care for the paralytic and incurable cases, spine cases. The census only shows 26 cases of this kind. We will have accommodation in this building for between 30 and 40. The Ontario Reformatory at Guelph has now been taken over, the negotiations being completed by the Commission last week. We propose erecting 300 beds there which will give us a total accommodation of 800 beds. This property consists of 850 acres of land with modern dairy stables, creamery, a very large greenhouse which has just been built, 150 by 50 feet, machine shops, woodworking shops, woollen mills, and the entire farm plant. The intention is to concentrate on the more advanced educational work at this point, and if possible to utilize the staff of the Agricultural College, which is less than a mile away, in the training of these men in agricultural pursuits. It is expected that with the dairy barn, and with the greenhouse, and the farm and garden generally, we will be able to induce the men to take up the agricultural side of the work. There are facilities there for work of that character which we cannot duplicate anywhere in Canada. We may be rather sanguine, but we hope we will get results. That will provide us in the Province of Ontario with a total accommodation of between 3,500 and 4,000 additional.

Q. By what time?—A. Well, in that I am including the 600 beds for Whitby. If we take them off and add the 500 Toronto Base Hospital, it gives us 3,400 beds which are almost immediately ready.

Q. Practically 3,500 beds in May?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many will you have in June, July or August?—A. These are really all coming in now. The only one there is any doubt about in getting early possession of is Brant and the three units we propose putting up at Cobourg, Whitby and Guelph, but in six weeks we will put these up and have them ready quite easily in August.

Q. What new arrangements have you in the West?—A. I do not know whether you know about the old Agricultural College property; has that been mentioned to your Committee as yet?

Q. Yes.—A. That is not occupied yet, but we expect next week, or the week after that, if the equipment is there, that we will be able to occupy the entire place which will give us accommodation for 750 beds.

Q. In May you expect to have 750 beds in Winnipeg?—A. Yes, and in addition to the dormitories and other building is to be included the large machinery building which is being equipped with all necessary machinery and equipment for vocational training; there are also 100 acres of land, which we have obtained from the Manitoba Government, together with barns and other equipment. The farm work for the time is being done under the direction of the Head of the Brandon Experimental Farm. Winnipeg will probably be made the vocational Training Centre for the whole of the Province of Manitoba; we cannot get the same facilities for vocational training at the new Agricultural College of Manitoba that we can get either in Saskatchewan, Alberta or Ontario, for practical instruction. In Alberta there is the Ross Park School at Moosejaw which institution has present accommodation for 240 beds; we were erecting a dining room and kitchen building there as well as an Infirmary building for 150 more beds, making a total of 390. There is the Y.M.C.A. building at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, that gives accommodation for, say, 150 or 160. In Alberta we have just taken over the Alberta College at Edmonton, which gives accommodation for 450 beds.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

Q. What is your present total accommodation in the Prairie provinces?—A. In Alberta 487, in Saskatchewan, 192, 346 in Manitoba, and 525 in British Columbia.

Q. Approximately you have 1,500 beds in the western provinces at the present time?—A. Yes.

Q. What increase do you expect in the course of one, two or three months?—A. With the accommodation we have laid out, for these provinces we have ample.

Q. But approximately what addition will be made in the next three months?—A. That is a very difficult question to answer.

Q. Can you add 1,000 beds within the next three months to that accommodation if necessary?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Saskatchewan seems to have a very small number of beds?—A. Yes, but we have ample. I am unable to understand it, but only just this week I had a letter from the O.C. of the unit saying that with the accommodation we have laid out we have ample to last us for some time, and that we need not bother about further Saskatchewan accommodation.

By the Chairman:

Q. Yet you have only 192 beds?—A. There are more than that, because we have the Ross Park Hospital, Moosejaw, coming in with 390.

Q. That will give you accommodation for 580?—A. Yes. In British Columbia we have just taken over the Braemar and Langara property at Shaughnessy Heights, outside of Vancouver, where we expect to have accommodation for 450 beds. We got immediate possession of Langara with 150 beds. This was a boys' and girls' school and gives excellent accommodation. We have taken over Qualicum Inn on Victoria Island, which has accommodation for 220 beds, and we purpose erecting an addition to that property, which will give us 100 additional beds.

Q. The programme you have outlined shows that you are well ahead of any probable needs, insofar as you can see at the present time?—A. I think so.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Even if they come at the rate of 2,200 a month?—A. Just before I came here this afternoon, I had a further conversation with General Jones on the subject; he doubts very much if that estimate will be reached. He thinks it will be 1,600 a month, or less.

By the Chairman:

Q. Why does he think so?—A. He thinks we are wrong in our estimate of three hospital ships a month as it takes each boat five weeks to make a round trip; they cannot make two trips a month as we estimated.

Q. And it is not likely that the number of boats put on that service will be increased?—A. Apparently not, two boats seem to be the limit, that is, hospital ships, but the troop ships may be increased so that generally we may estimate 1,600 a month.

Q. Have any steps been taken in connection with utilizing some of the returning American ships for the purpose of bringing back our patients?—A. We have not anything to do with that, that is all controlled in the Old Country.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. That is the return of all these men is controlled there, you must take as many as they send?—A. We must take what they send us, we do not have anything to do with that at all.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Is there not a possibility, owing to America having come into the war and devoting attention to the shipping question, of an increase in the accommodation available for bringing men back?—A. I do not think so; General Jones does not express that opinion. Evidently they keep these men in the hospitals as long as possible to see if they can salvage them for further use overseas. At the present time I believe there are something like 14,000 Canadians in hospitals in England, and with the fighting that is now going on that number will probably be increased up to over 20,000 right away.

Q. Do you not think that fact will tend to stimulate the evacuation of them in larger numbers?—A. If it does, I think we will be quite equal to the increased strain.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you propose to get more accommodation than you have at the present time?—A. With this accommodation I have outlined here it would look as if we could take care of the situation for some time to come. For instance in the month of March, the total discharges throughout Canada were over 1,200 so that our admissions are not going to be, if General Jones' estimate is correct, very largely in excess of our discharges, and, as the medical work gets better organized throughout the provinces, the number of discharges should increase. Shell-shock cases under treatment will not be discharged rapidly, because they take a long time, on an average about six months.

By the Chairman:

Q. How will you take up the increase in accommodation in the matter of tuberculosis and the increase in accommodation in the matter of artificial limbs?—A. The accommodation that has been provided in the Maritime Provinces looks for the time being to be sufficient to take care of the tubercular cases there. Our accommodation in Ontario is limited, we are alright in the Province of Quebec, and when the accommodation now being provided elsewhere is completed, we will be able to evacuate a number of men from the sanatoria in Quebec and in that way provide ample accommodation for that Province.

Q. You will return the Maritime Province men to their own province?—A. Yes. Ontario is the problem at the present time.

Q. From a tuberculosis point of view?—A. From a tuberculosis point of view. We cannot depend on any estimate of accommodation for men from overseas because of the camp cases that come in. Men contract the disease or it becomes aggravated apparently when they are in camp, and they come in without any knowledge on our part as to the number we are likely to have, and it upsets our arrangements. It would seem as if we have either got to increase the accommodation at the existing sanatoria in the Province of Ontario or erect a large central institution to be operated by the Commission. There is a difference of opinion as to that and we have not yet reached a decision.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. The percentage of tuberculosis cases coming from the camps is very high in Canada. Can you account for it?—A. I do not know how to account for it. Naturally we would get more of these men from camps here than we would from overseas, because the t.b. cases would be weeded out before the men started overseas.

Q. And in that way would be discovered?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. You say that the question of a large central hospital for Ontario cases is under consideration but not yet determined?—A. Not yet determined.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

Q. And have you ample accommodation elsewhere?—A. We have accommodation falling in at Hamilton and accommodation falling in at London.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Now, as to the tuberculosis situation it is, I take it, the intention of the Commission to come to some final conclusion forthwith?—A. Immediately, sir. There are two propositions: One to enlarge the existing sanatoria at Kingston, Hamilton and London, and possibly Freeport. But Freeport is an isolated place with none too good a water supply and only a small acreage. My personal opinion is that a large central institution is the proper thing to put up, where we could make the plant as large as we please and have it complete throughout from beginning to end, but that is only a layman's opinion.

Q. Of course, without my saying so, it is most necessary that soldiers suffering from tuberculosis should in the very first instance be taken care of?—A. Yes. I think we will tide over the immediate difficulty in a very short time, with the new accommodation that is under way and will shortly be available.

In Manitoba we will have additional accommodation at the Ninette Sanatorium.

In Saskatchewan the situation is difficult. There is no local or Provincial institution. One is under construction but it will be many months before it is ready for occupation. Therefore we made an arrangement to take over a school in the centre of Regina, which has a large block of land, and we are putting up an infirmary building as well as verandahs on the main building, and we will have accommodation there for 70 men. The officer in command of the unit advises me that the situation is clearing up, that many men who have been classified as t.b. when sent to the sanatoria are pronounced to be not at all of that class. We have also sent a large number of men to British Columbia. In probably two or three weeks' time we will have accommodation in our own institution in the Province of Saskatchewan for between 70 and 80 men.

By the Chairman:

Q. Coming to the matter of artificial limbs, you have at the present time one artificial limb factory in Toronto, which has recently been considerably enlarged?—Yes, sir.

Q. How much has the output been increased?—A. I do not know what the output was at the time to which you refer. Our output now is from seven to nine limbs a week in legs. That output is being increased all the time as the men are becoming more proficient in handling the work. It was utterly impossible for us to get artificial limb makers. We have tried in vain to do so in the United States. The bulk of the men who are engaged in the work are either Germans or Austrians; and we are reduced to taking on carpenters and other men who are unskilled in the making of these limbs, and training them for that purpose.

Q. I have received a letter from Sergeant-Major Guilfoyle, of Calgary, who appeared before the Committee at Toronto, in which he refers to the establishment of an artificial limb factory in that city. Have you any knowledge of the situation there?—A. Yes, sir, there is an artificial limb factory in Calgary that we will have a report on this week. Investigation is being made as to whether the managers of the factory are prepared to undertake to make the standard limb that has been adopted by the Commission. All these factories have their own design of limb, and as the Commission has to maintain these limbs, it is highly desirable that the limb should be standardized as far as possible, throughout the country. In other words, that there should be a uniform limb.

Q. So that if there is a broken part, it could be readily replaced?—A. Yes, readily replaced. What we are trying to do is to build up the business in Toronto to the maximum, and use it as a centre, to make arrangements with a factory in Montreal, one in Winnipeg, and one in either Calgary or Vancouver, to supply the demand at these various points.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

Q. You would have the manufacturing of limbs going on at four points?—A. Yes, if it can be arranged. We want the factory at Toronto to be the parent institution where we can have the necessary equipment and have the necessary skilled men producing these limbs to as advanced a stage as they can get them.

Q. The disabled soldier has to go to the limb factory. Does that mean that a man from the Maritime Provinces has to go to Toronto?—A. Yes, but there are not many of them, sir.

Q. This is regarded by the men as a hardship?—A. At the present time most of these men who come over are unfit for artificial limbs. They have to wait for a very long time to reach that state. At the end of March we had ninety-two men in Toronto who were not fit to be supplied; their stumps were not healed or their shrinkage was not complete, and they could not use the limbs. It has been suggested that these men be furnished with pegs so as to harden the callouses and thus fit them earlier for limbs.

Q. Take the case of a man, for example, in Fredericton, New Brunswick, who requires an artificial limb. Does he have to go to Toronto?—A. That man will have to go to Toronto at the present time, but there have been isolated cases where the man has been sent to the nearest factory to be fitted with a limb.

Q. That would be a non-standardized limb?—A. A non-standardized limb. The question of arms is the biggest proposition we have to contend with. One make of arm which has been highly spoken of is the Carnes' arm. They have evidently had an excellent sales campaign carried on in England, because all the men who come out here do not want to wear anything else but the Carnes arm; consequently when they come to be fitted with what the orthopaedists consider the proper kind of arm, they want a Carnes. We have ordered about fifty-four of these arms at $200 apiece, made in the United States. It takes a month to get delivery. They are not manufactured in Canada, and I am afraid to recommend the manufacture of them, even if we should take over the patent. They have a highly complicated mechanism and require skilled workmen to produce.

Q. Have the fifty-four arms you have imported given satisfaction?—A. We have not imported fifty-four. We have given an order for fifty-four, and I think there are only sixteen or eighteen delivered.

Q. Have they given satisfaction?—A. It is rather early to tell. It will not be very long till we will be having trouble with breakages. Then we will have to keep duplicate parts of the limbs to make repairs. One of our men engaged in a factory in Toronto, Caron, said to be a very high class arm maker, invented an arm called the Universal arm, said to be better than the Carnes arm. We have agreed to take over the patent if it is any good. The orthopaedists in Toronto tell me there are some mechanical objections to it which do not make it as perfect as a Carnes arm. That will remain to be demonstrated.

Q. What arrangements have you made in Montreal for the manufacture of arms?
A. No arrangements completed yet.

Q. Have you investigated the firms that are there?—A. There is one firm there we have completed arrangements with for the manufacture of instruments. You will know the firm; Telat, I think it is.

Q. Telat & Duckett, 390 Bleury street, Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. And Conrad Martin, 36 Craig street east, Montreal?—A. I understand the other firm is the better one.

Q. Both firms should be investigated?—A. My advice is that the first-mentioned firm is the better of the two.

Q. I think they should both be carefully investigated?—A. We will do so.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you not think it would be unwise to take men from Halifax to Toronto to fit them with limbs?—A. Yes, it might be. We have not had as many of those limbs as one would naturally assume we would have.

Q. Why could he not be fitted in Halifax and St. John as well as Toronto?—A. It is very desirable that we should have at these centres of manufacture a skilled orthopædist, and I am advised that they have not any men in the Maritime Provinces that are equal to the men in Montreal or Toronto.

Q. That is the only stumbling block?—A. Possibly so.

Q. Do you think it would be expedient at the present time to buy these legs from the United States?—A. What we have done with regard to cases of amputation below the knee is to enter into an arrangement with the Dominion Artificial Limb factory to produce for us the necessary limb; that is not a standardized limb. They say it is a good limb. Our orthopædist does not recommend it, yet I believe it is giving good results.

Q. Would you say a good many of those men who think they are being kept too long without artificial limbs are really in a position to be fitted?—A. I could not say. At the end of March we had 92 men in Toronto not fit to be supplied, and 38 waiting to be supplied.

By the Chairman:

Q. How many are waiting who are fit to be supplied?—A. Thirty-eight waiting to be supplied, and there were 40 limbs under construction, they would be passed out from day to day as completed, and every day somebody would be getting a limb and getting away.

Q. Your contention is that in view of the fact that the Dominion Government undertakes to keep the limbs and arms in repair that there should be a standardized leg and arm?—A. I think that is of the utmost importance, and it should be the best that could be produced.

Q. On the ground that if they buy from the United States market where they have United States patents, that it might be impossible for the Dominion Government to supply the necessary repairs?—A. I cannot speak from my own knowledge of the matter, but I am advised that a committee of orthopædist which reported on the subject were opposed to the idea of throwing this open to the different manufacturers, by reason of the fact that in their competition for business they would be offering all manner of inducements to the men, and when they would get the business that would be the end of it, and the Government having to maintain the limbs would ultimately be in a bad position.

Q. How long is the natural life of an artificial limb?—A. I believe the limb-makers guarantee them for three years.

Q. How soon is it probable the Dominion Government would have to renew them?—A. You may have to renew at the end of six months or less.

Q. You regard the constant renewal of the limb as a very important item?—A. Yes. There were 19 legs made in England which had to be repaired or re-fitted in our own factory.

By the Hon. Mr. Macil:

Q. Breakages?—A. Sometimes. It has been stated that the arm has been broken deliberately.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Is the arm more subject to breakage than the leg?—A. Some of the complicated arms are.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you anything further to add?—A. No.

[Mr. S. A. Armstrong.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Would you suggest that there be a more direct way of dealing as between you and the medical staff than you have at the present time?—A. We are all in hopes, as the result of the arrival of General Fotheringham, that we will have in him a panacea for all ills.

Q. So that you are waiting for him?—A. Yes.

Q. At the present time you do not regard the present situation as satisfactory?—A. Not entirely so. Although the work is, I believe, assuming better shape from a medical standpoint, after all it is very largely a personal equation with the local man.

Q. So that you have no comments to make until such times as Dr. Fotheringham appears on the scene?—A. No.

Q. He is already in this country?—A. Yes, he is in Toronto at the present time, and I understand will be in Ottawa next week.

Q. You have had very considerable experience with hospitals for the insane? The evidence given before us here is that separate and distinct hospitals should be established for insane returned soldiers outside of the provincial institutions altogether. What do you say as to that?—A. I do not think it would be as satisfactory as having these men placed in the provincial institutions. One reason is that there would be such complete indifference displayed by the nursing staff and the staff generally, owing to the fact that the patients would develop ultimately into old chronic cases. They would not be given the same attention and consideration as I think they would if they were in their own province. You would not have enough men from the present indications to warrant such an institution in each province. Consequently if you segregate them at one point in, say, one province, their friends would lose sight of them entirely; they would simply be put away and that would be an end of it, and in our own work in the province we have found it of the utmost importance to keep patients as close to their friends as we can get them.

Q. Would it be quite feasible to segregate them in provincial institutions?—A. Quite so. If the Dominion Government made a grant to the provincial government to erect a building, I do not think it should be saddled on the province. I think the Government should make a grant to the province to segregate these men in an institution by themselves, if segregation were advised.

Q. Would you advise segregation?—A. No, I would not.

Q. Your opinion is that insane cases ought to be along with the ordinary patients?—A. In spite of the fact that we have been condemned for having these men in the ordinary hospitals for the insane, I adhere to the idea that it is right.

Q. Now, does it strike you that there ought to be some further classification of convalescents in this way: sometimes you want accommodation, and accommodation that you have must be equally good for winter as for summer, I take it. Are there not, for instance, in the various institutions which you have described here, a good many convalescents who just want the finishing process, a month, a couple of months, three months? Could you not classify these men to such an extent that you could obtain beyond peradventure ample accommodation in the event of a large influx?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Don't you think then, or do you, that the Commission might properly take smaller places that would accommodate say from one hundred to two hundred, have them as finishing convalescent homes, and have them ready at the present time against the possibility of a tremendous return of men?—A. There is just one drawback to that, and that is the extent to which many of these men who are seemingly ready for discharge, should continue on in their vocational work so as to get a further improvement to suit themselves for outside positions.

Q. Quite so?—A. And it would be not in the best interests of these men to take them away from that vocational training. On the other hand there are, no doubt, many cases who could go outside particularly during the summer time, who are not dependent on vocational training, providing the place was large enough that you could put the necessary organization in to handle it.

Q. Would it not strike you in view of the present state of affairs that some such step ought to be taken by the Commission so as to provide against a tremendous influx and overcrowding?—A. Well, there is no indication that we are likely to get that, and with the accommodation I have mapped out today it looks as though we have quite sufficient to take care of the situation for at least the next six months. But we have available today, should we see fit to take advantage of it, a large hotel called Minaki, near Winnipeg. That hotel is in the lake section with no community around it. It is an isolated place, delightful for summer, but you would experience great difficulty in getting medical men to go out there and remain in the place, and it is important that a place a hundred miles from anywhere should have a full staff. We are also considering another place in Ontario for a similar purpose during the summer, to take care of one hundred or one hundred and fifty men.

Q. You said just now that in Quebec there has been no change. Are you familiar with the Grey Nuns Hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think that is a fit place?—A. I will say this, that I think that the Grey Nuns Hospital has greatly improved since the time you visited it. It is being much better operated, and I do not think you would have so much occasion for criticism today as perhaps two months ago.

Q. Has the medical staff been stirred up?—A. The medical staff has evidently been stirred up, in fact the entire staff has been stirred up, and the results are very much better. Col. Patch, A.D.M.S. of the A.M.C. is in charge of the medical service which is being organized and developed in an effective way.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Have internal improvements been made?—A. It is not an up-to-date place, the wards are entirely too wide to make it satisfactory for hospital purposes. There was not anything else available there. We have been offered a large building at Maison-neuve, but to go into that would involve an enormous expenditure; then you have not anything in the way of vocational training. There are a lot of things you would not have that would have to be provided. That is why we feel that the location of a building in the vicinity of Macdonald College would be better.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. What was the objection to the Côte de Liesse property?—A. The cost was enormous, and not only the cost, but it would have taken a great deal of time to complete it.

Q. And at Ste. Anne de Bellevue you would put up hut hospitals?—A. We would put up our standard type of construction, two-story buildings housing 150 men each.

Q. It would be less expensive, I suppose?—A. Yes, that would cost a good deal less.

Witness discharged.

Major JOHN L. TODD called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is your position, Major Todd?—A. Major, Canadian Army Medical Corps.

Q. And member of the Pensions Board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since what date?—A. 11th September, 1916, by order in council.

Q. You have had opportunity, I think Major Todd, to look over some of the evidence and, specially, some of the complaints that have been made on the part of individuals who feel that in the matter of pensions they have grievances. Can you give us any evidence that will tend to meet the criticisms that have been raised?—A. I received several letters from Mr. Cloutier, and I have also read through all of the evidence. Mr. Cloutier mentioned several cases, but there are many more in the evidence which he did not mention in his letters.

Q. There is a list here of 40 cases?—A. That is the point I was about to bring up, sir. When I heard there was a possibility of my being called before this Committee I went into the matter and found there were about forty cases. I have gone into them all and have talked the matter over with my fellow commissioners, and we felt that perhaps we had better make this proposition to you: that while we are quite willing to bring here papers referring to all these cases—and there is a large pile of them—we would prefer to do one of two things, either take each case up and write you a letter about it—I see you asked Mr. Scammell to do that for example—or else that you should send one or two of your members as a sub-committee to go through each individual case in our office in order that they might satisfy themselves of the details in each instance.

Q. Would it not be better to make a combination of both of those offers, that is to ask you to take this list of 40 cases, and such that contain anything like a grievance to give in the briefest possible form the departmental reply to the allegations made, and then, if on comparing the complaint and the reply the Committee was not satisfied, a sub-committee could go to your department and take any cases that did not seem to be finally disposed of?—A. That sounds very well.

Q. If you will be good enough to take this list and to go through it in that way, and wherever the Pensions Board, past or present, has reviewed a case, give us the statement and then the Committee can determine whether there are any further cases it should investigate?—A. My fellow commissioners asked me further to say that we would be very glad to show the members of the Committee the operation of the office of the Board of Pension Commissioners.

Q. I think that is something that would be well worth doing. In the first place, Major Todd, you had considerable experience overseas?—A. I went overseas, sir, in April, 1915.

Q. What was the object of your stay overseas?—A. I was sent there first of all with No. 3 Canadian General Hospital Unit, and was seconded for service to the office of the Director of Medical Services. I served in connection with boards of medical officers on discharged men; then on the pensions and the claims board. Then I was sent overseas to France to study the manner in which France was returning her disabled soldiers to civilian life.

Q. You have had considerable opportunity to see what the French Government are doing in the matter of returning their disabled soldiers to civilian life?—A. I spent about two months investigating that point, and have since kept in constant correspondence with M. Pierre Masse, who is rapporteur to the Chambre des Députés on this question, and with others concerned with it in France.

Q. We will be very glad to have you tell us about that?—A. In going over your evidence, and in listening to what I have heard here this morning, it struck me more than ever that similar necessities bring similar remedies. France has had an experience of nearly two years in the question which you are considering. There are none among the difficulties that have presented themselves to you but have presented themselves to the French government, and have been met by them. I wrote a report on the French system; I think it has been sent to the members of this committee, and I think it will be the quickest way of approaching this subject if I follow the general lines of that report and make my remarks in the order in which the subjects to which they refer are mentioned in that report.

The first thing is the necessity for centralization of control; the French Government have appreciated that absolutely. Various reports have been made, and I think France will ultimately form some sort of central body for what is called the "Liquidation"

[Major J. L. Todd.]

tion of the war." that is to bring things back to normal. That necessity of centralized control, centralized direction, is recognized by the French as essential, but that does not mean—

Q. What sub-agencies do they bring under the central body?—A. Whatever may be necessary; the first thing they say is that since the war is a temporary thing they desire to create as little permanent machinery as they possibly can for dealing with it. In other words it is desired to use existing machinery as largely as possible; for instance, do not build any asylums; the French say: "This is a civilian army, we have very few professional soldiers, our men are all citizens and as soon as the fighting is over they will become civilians again." The French do not look forward to establishing many special homes for soldiers; they mean to have their severely disabled soldiers in civilian institutions, and those who require no supervision or constant care because of their disablements will go into families, their own families, or the families of others, where they will be maintained by the pension which they receive, a pension sufficient in amount to maintain them in decent comfort.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. The idea is that they should go to their homes and be maintained there?—
A. Yes, the government giving them the money with which to maintain themselves.

By the Chairman:

Q. They do not want to create a class of paupers out of the war?—A. Since you have given that lead, I might as well go on with it. That is felt so strongly that the Government, with the labour unions, has actually set up a committee to consider what means can be taken in order to assure the soldiers after the war is over that they will be looked upon as men and citizens, not as pensioners. It is realized that unless the employer is watched closely he may say to the ex-soldier: "You can work for a lesser wage, because you are in receipt of a pension." The soldier is a citizen and is entitled to receive fair compensation for his labour, irrespective of the pension he may receive.

To return to our discussion of the centralization of matters concerned with the return of soldiers to civilian life, and the necessity for it here in Canada: it should be insisted that centralization of control does not mean centralization of active executive power.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Might I ask you as to the difference between the pensions paid here and in France? Does the soldier get as large a pension in France as he would in Canada?—
A. The pensions in Canada are the largest in the world.

Q. How much does the average soldier get in France?—A. I could not answer that offhand.

By the Chairman:

Q. I wish you would file with the Committee a statement as to the French pension for a widow, and the French pension for disablement, because the French schedule of pensions is similar to ours?—A. It is impossible to give you anything that will be of any real value for comparison; all we can say is that France has recognized that a man must be compensated in accordance with his disability, and that the amount of the pension must be sufficient to assure him a competence. That is true also of England.

Q. Supposing that a man who is in receipt of a pension goes to another country?—A. France did not permit her pensioners to leave France without permission; an old French law provided that if a pensioner went outside France to live his pension was reduced.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. What would France do in the case of a reservist who came from Canada, we would say, leaving a wife and family in Canada?—A. I have not heard that question discussed, but I should imagine they would simply give him the same pension as they would in France. I do not know whether they are going to put into force that old law which said that pensioners who went outside of France to live should have their pensions reduced.

Q. If you can find any information for me on that point, I should be very glad to have it, and also on the point of what would be the status of a woman in Canada who married a French reservist who has been called out to fight with his French regiment, and who is killed?—A. I shall write to Monsieur Masse to ask him for information on this point.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. What is the minimum of disability for which a French soldier gets a pension? Our minimum is 20 per cent; do you know whether in France they have a higher or a lower minimum of disability?—A. You have asked me really two or three questions; the point is this, the amount of money received by French pensioners, whether in one sum or in several sums, is always proportionate to the extent of disability.

Q. That is not the point upon which I want to get information. We do not grant a pension to a soldier for less than 20 per cent disability. Do they give a soldier who has been injured a pension if his disability is less than 20 per cent?—A. They compensate them—that is the essential point—no matter how low the disability is, so long as disability exists. I understand your question, but I cannot answer it at the present time.

Q. Can you get that information for the Committee?—A. I will try, but their pension law is, at present, under consideration. It dates back to 1831, and it may be changed in many particulars.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. You will, of course, know whether there is any difference in pensions as between officers and soldiers; are the pensions based on the rank?—A. Yes.

Q. They have a similar system, in that respect, to the English system, and to ours?—A. Rank governs the amount of the pension.

By the Chairman:

Q. Rank and the extent of disability?—A. I think the only country in Europe where rank does not make a difference is Switzerland.

You have just heard my explanation of the necessity for centralization; that, of course, is my personal opinion and not that of the Pension Commissioners. There is a very great necessity for centralization of everything in connection with the returned soldier. In that connection reference might be made to a matter that has been discussed more than once; that is the desirability of establishing in Ottawa a war memorial building. In it would be placed all the records and trophies of the war; the Pension Board would necessarily occupy an important part of such a building, the storage of the documents and records essential to the proper granting of Canadian war pensions would require at least twice the floor space of this room.

Q. It would require to be a fireproof building?—A. It must be fireproof; it would be a terrible catastrophe were the papers now in Canadian record offices destroyed by fire.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What do these records consist of?—A. I could give you a list of the documents.

By the Chairman:

Q. They are the dossiers?—A. The dossiers of the soldier, all the records of his services.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. And you say these are not in a fireproof building?—A. I have not examined the building, but it does not look fireproof from the outside.

Q. I think the Commission should adopt the most urgent measures to secure their protection?—A. It is a most essential point—the provision of a fireproof building for the proper preservation of all war records.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is the military and medical record of every man who has served in the Canadian Force who applies for a pension?—A. Whether he applies for a pension or not; because, if there is one thing more certain than another it is that we are going to have in the course of time claims consequent upon changes of legislation, from many men who have served and who were not granted a pension when they were discharged.

In the British Imperial Service, when a man is discharged and leaves the service, his documents are preserved for a certain length of time, according to the way in which he is discharged, and then destroyed, with the exception of men who are discharged on account of pensionable disabilities. Their documents pass into the permanent custody of the Pensions Board. Our opinion as Pension Commissioners is that in Canada, since there is a possibility that every man may claim for a pension, or have a pension claim made in respect of him, the ultimate custody of the documents of men who have fought in the C.E.F. should reside in the Canadian Pensioning Board. By that means the Board would always be assured an authoritative basis for the granting of pensions and it would be responsible for the safe-keeping of documents on which it will, for many years, pay out the country's money.

Q. Now, I understand that the Pensions Board are planning to act as custodian of all the documents in respect to every enlisted man?—A. I would not say "planning." We have no authority to plan, I am just expressing an opinion in regard to the matter. We keep certain of these documents, but the remainder go to the Records Office.

Q. Then most of the documents go to the Records Office?—A. The majority of them do at the present time.

Q. And you have only duplicates of them or extracts from them?—A. Extracts from them, and in one or two cases we have the originals. The documentation of personal service in the C.E.F. is a long and complicated question.

Another advantage which a war memorial building would afford, would be in serving as a rallying point for returned men. If a central directing body, appointed to direct all matters connected with the return of our men could be looked upon by the returning soldiers and sailors as their trustees, and if that body were housed in a war memorial building here which veterans could recognize as their own building, I think perhaps some little thing can be done to prevent our associations of former soldiers and sailors from becoming bodies with particular interests not necessarily identified with those of Canada as a whole.

We would like to add our support to what has been said in preceding evidence concerning the immediate necessity for the drafting of definite instructions and procedure for dealing with all casualties. General Fotheringham will be connected with that work; and we should like to place every emphasis we can upon the importance of the work which he is about to carry out.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What is the work in question?—A. Dealing with a point on which you were hammering this morning, Mr. Pardee.

Q. What did it have reference to?—A. The necessity for drawing things together into one hand.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you expect to publish a handbook, or something of that kind?—A. That is a point I was going to bring out under the heading of publicity. It may be dealt with now. Take France, in the winter of 1915. The Frenchman is more conservative than we are, and is a greater stickler for his right. He also expresses himself a little more freely than we do. At that time about 15 per cent of the men in France who ought to have prolonged treatment and vocational training took it; the remainder would not have anything to do with the training; they all wanted to go home. But when the French disabled soldiers read in the newspapers of the remarkable results accomplished with those men who had undergone vocational training, they commenced to return to the schools for disabled men and to ask for it. The advertisements to which reference has been made in preceding evidence should be most prominently displayed among Canadians, and the pamphlet to which you, Mr. Chairman, referred, should be published and widely distributed as soon as it is possible to do so.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. And a copy sent to every man before he left the other side?—A. I think so, sir. That pamphlet should set forth the broad principles upon which the country is trying to deal with returned men.

These principles are,—

(1) All disabilities are to be reduced to a minimum by everything that medical science and the provision of orthopædic appliances can do.

(2) Disabled men, when it is necessary and possible, must be taught an occupation in order to make them employable.

(3) Ex-soldiers, whenever it is necessary, must be assisted and aided in establishing themselves in employment.

(4) Every disabled man must receive pension money in accordance with the extent of his disability. The object of the pension is, so far as can be done by the payment of money, to compensate a disabled man for his disability, and to make him the equivalent of a healthy individual; the amount of the pension should, therefore, be sufficient, together with the capacity for usefulness remaining in him, to assure him and his family a happy, healthy existence in decent comfort.

Q. Would you be in favour of continuing the pension rather than the gratuity?—A. Certainly, the larger amounts; but I think that if a man had the tip of his little finger blown off he ought to get some pension for it.

Q. Some continuing pension?—A. I would not say that, sir; the loss of the tip of a little finger is trivial. Let us say it is worth about one half of one per cent.

Q. It will never grow on again?—A. The healthy body is said to be the equivalent of 100; then one can say that the tip of a little finger is not more than one half of one per cent.

Q. But inasmuch as the tip of the little finger is gone, and he is one half of one per cent below par for the rest of his life, should not the payment to him of one half of one per cent disability be continuous while he lives?—A. The point is, the amount is so small; is it worth while giving a man—let us say in this case—$2.40 a year for the rest of his life? Personally, I scarcely think so; it would be better to capitalize the amount and give it to him in a single sum. The question is a different one if the extent of the disability and the amount of the compensation is greater. If a man had a disability of, let us say, 10%, (e.g., the loss of an index finger), which would it be better for him to receive, an annuity of $48 per year for the rest of his life, or a lump sum in a single payment? The value of $48 a year to a normal man of thirty-eight, is, under present conditions, worth about $664. In ordinary cases it would scarcely be desirable to commute the payments and make a single payment of a sum approaching that amount. If, however, the disability were one of 5% and the pension awardable only $24 a year (equivalent in a man of thirty-eight, to a lump sum of $334), it is questionable whether it would be better to award a gratuity of, let us say, $200 in a lump sum, or to grant a pension so small as $24 a year. It is possible to imagine many instances in which a lump sum of $200 would be much more useful to a man than $24 a year for life. Which would the average man sooner have, $24 a year for life, or a gratuity, in a single payment, of $200?

The CHAIRMAN: Judging from the evidence given here, most of the men would prefer the continuing payment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That would be in a case where the disability was recognized under 20 per cent?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Those were men who considered there was a great injustice being done.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: The greatest complaint we have heard is from the men who are on the border line of 20 per cent.

WITNESS: We are very much in favour of increasing the number of classes. We think there are cases of hardship under existing legislation.

By the Chairman:

Q. You would make ten classes instead of five?—A. Yes, we are very much in favour of it.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Have you a schedule drawn up to that effect?—A. Yes, we have. I do not know whether this is the place to introduce it. We have considered the whole question extensively and carefully in order that we might make recommendations to the committee which we understand is to recommend pensions legislation.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Are the Pension Commissioners agreed as to what the schedules should be?—A. We are agreed for official purposes. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: It would be very easy for us to ask Major Todd to take the present pension scale as it stands, which is by twenty per cent grade, and give us its equivalent in ten per cent grades?

WITNESS: Why not ask the question directly? I have given you the reply, and said that we have drawn it up for the committee.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You are of opinion that would be a better grade than the other?—A. Personally I have urged it for a long time.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you grade it finer than ten per cent?—A. No, except the last class. I would like to see the last class run something like this: I should like to see the gratuity increased to about $200.

Q. That is doubled?—A. Yes. The capitalized value of $24 a year is about $334. A man entitled to a gratuity of less than $150 would receive that less sum. A man entitled to a gratuity of more than $150 would be given choice between a gratuity of $200 and $24 a year for life.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. In that case all the previous discharges would be reviewed?—A. I do not understand the question.

Q. Where men have been discharged and gratuity paid they would be entitled to a further payment?—A. Oh, surely.

Q. I have seen some very hard cases—A. Yes.

We cannot lay too much stress upon the desirability of sound medical examination at enlistment. You have threshed that out pretty well in the evidence, and I think the evidence has made it very clear.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

There is an absolute necessity for efficient medical examination on discharge, both for those who are discharged on account of medical unfitness and for those discharged for any other reason, because we are going to have men come back twenty years from now saying, "I was put out because I was an incorrigible," and so on, but I was also disabled and am therefore pensionable. The necessity for rigid medical examination of every man at his discharge is very great.

By the Chairman:

Q. As a protection?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. And you will know definitely just how he was at that time, and there will be no chance for evasion on his part?—A. That is it.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your action now is very largely taken after a study of the errors of other nations, and what it has cost other nations to make those errors and you are therefore trying to avoid them?—A. That is it. A matter in which the medical service is doing a great deal of good at present is in spreading a knowledge amongst medical men everywhere of new methods of treatment and of the things that have been found out during the war.

Though I am an officer of the C.A.M.C., and as I heard that corps criticized a little this morning, may I say that I cannot express sufficiently my admiration of what it has done overseas both from a medical and executive point of view. It has looked after hospital organization in the fullest sense of the term.

One very important point that the war has brought out is the necessity for careful, and special treatment of the various neurosis and psychosis, produced or declared by the stress of military service.

I understand that this question was also alluded to in the evidence; the difficulty of getting medical men. There are just two things to do; one is, pay your medical men; the other, enforce universal national service and tell them where to work. There are only these alternatives. We are having the same difficulty in getting medical staff for the Pensions Board.

There is another point on which I would like to insist; it is the great desirability of making arrangements by which—I think General Jones is taking it up—invalid Canadians may be transferred directly from hospital overseas to their own hospitals here without going through all the difficulty of being boarded at the discharge depot. In that way a man, let us say, sick at Ramsgate will have his case considered and be sent directly to the most suitable hospital in Canada, perhaps to Whitby.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. As it is now, what course does he go through?—A. The men are sent over here as being ready for discharge, sir. On arriving in Canada their cases are considered at Quebec, or another discharge depot, as Mr. Scammell described to you this morning, and he is sent on from there.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you think that could all be done in England?—A. That is my point.

Q. And done better probably?—A. With less trouble all through. Let us say with less trouble.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Less records to keep?—A. Less records, too. You were speaking concerning artificial limbs. I agree with everything Mr. Armstrong says. The French experience is most absolutely that it is necessary to establish first of all that which is the best appliances that brains can make and money buy. Then adopt that limb or appliance and permit no others to be given.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Standardize them?—A. Yes. Artificial limbs are very much like motors. You think you have the finest in the world; but the next salesman may convince you that you have been deceived. You spoke concerning repairs for limbs. Each man who is dependent upon his limb or appliance should have two, one to use, and the second to use when the first is broken. If a man is dependent on his leg and his leg breaks, he cannot move; he must have two. How are repairs to be made? The conclusion to which the French have come is this: if a man takes care of an artificial limb it will last for about three years. Men who wear artificial limbs will often say that theirs last for much longer than this. Let it be assumed, however, that the normal life of a limb is three years. The French proposal is that men receiving artificial appliances shall receive a sum equal to a third of its cost yearly for keeping a limb in repair. If the limb lasts for longer than three years, and does not require renewal, then the soldier retains the annual allowance as a bonus, earned by him through the careful use which his appliance has received.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do the French supply the soldiers with two legs?—A. They supply one at present, I think they are going to supply two. The Australians supply two.

In connection with vocational training and functional training, I have nothing particular to say with the exception that all with experience are deeply convinced of the necessity for functional training. From a therapeutic point of view, too much stress cannot be laid upon it:—to get it into the minds of the men that they can succeed even if they are disabled; to get them back again into the habit of work. Functional and vocational training cannot be commenced too early; it should be commenced in the hospitals overseas. It must be co-ordinated with similar work in Canada.

It may be worth while remembering that in England the widows of disabled men are being trained so that they will not be entirely dependent on their pensions. They are being trained to be self-supporting in useful occupations.

What else I have to say is mainly on the question of pensions. In reading the evidence it does not seem quite clear in the mind of everyone that the Board of Pension Commissioners is merely an administrative instrument and that it has no authority in the devising of the legislation which it administers.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have no discretionary powers?—A. Not to change legislation, sir.

Q. Supposing you found a case where the spirit of the law might allow a claim to be considered and yet where the letter of the law would not permit it?—A. The Pension Commissioners look upon themselves as the trustees for the soldiers and sailors, and an applicant for a pension is always given the utmost benefit of any possible doubt. We have already asked publicly, that is through letters to the newspapers, and other agencies open to us, that every possible complaint be referred to us. Again, we look on ourselves as trustees for the soldiers, and always give the greatest possible consideration to any complaint that comes before us. But we cannot change the law.

Q. You have not quite answered my question. Is there any authority, for example, of the Governor General in Council to grant a pension on your recommendation where you would feel that one should be given, and where under the strict letter of the law you were not permitted to do so?—A. There is no such machinery.

Witness retired.

Committee adjourned until Tuesday, at 10 a.m.

APPENDIX TO No. 11 PROCEEDINGS

Orders in Council, Statements and Other Papers re
Treatment and Care of Returned Soldiers, Pensions, Soldiers' Aid Commission, and Supplementary Evidence.

P.C. 2890.

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA.

THURSDAY, the 6th day of January, 1916.

PRESENT :

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL.

His Royal Highness the Governor General in Council is pleased to order and doth hereby order and declare that the official acceptance of death of officers, warrant officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Canadian Overseas Expeditionary Forces who have been reported "missing" shall be as follows:—

After they have been so reported for six months.

2. The procedure to be similar to that adopted by the Army Council and to be carried out by the Canadian Record Office, London, England, and also at Ottawa in cases demanding further inquiry in Canada.

3. The modus operandi to be as under:—

(a) When evidence of the death of an officer or soldier is furnished either in a report from the enemy or in an unofficial report from an officer or soldier who has returned to England, the Record Office, London, England, will undertake the main responsibility for the decision, but will refer the case to the D.A.A.G. at the base to state whether he has any evidence to the contrary before final acceptance of death, Army Form B. 2090 (b), of which a copy is attached, to be used.

(b) In cases where officers and soldiers have been reported "missing" for six months, the available evidence to be collected and considered by the Record Office, London, England, and in the case of soldiers, such office will ascertain that neither it, the unit, the base, the British Red Cross, nor the next-of-kin and relatives have any information suggesting that he may still be alive. The Record Office will then finally submit the case to the base on Army Form B. 2090 (c), a copy of which is attached. Both Army Forms B. 2090 (b) and 2090 (c) to be sent to the Secretary, Militia Council, Headquarters, Ottawa, as soon as completed.

(c) In cases where the base is unable to give a definite report, the final decision as to acceptance of death for official purposes will be given by the Director of Pay and Record Services, Canadian Overseas Expeditionary Forces, as all the available evidence will have been collected by the Officer I.C. Records.

(d) In cases where further inquiry has to be made of relatives or next-of-kin domiciled in Canada, the Record Office, London, England, will transmit their report to the Record Office, Militia Headquarters, Ottawa, by which latter office such further inquiries will be made and the final decision as to acceptance of death be given by the official in charge thereof.

4. In cases where an officer, non-commissioned officer, or man is reported "missing," assigned pay to continue to be paid for a period not exceeding three months and separation allowance for a period not exceeding six months from the date the officer, non-commissioned officer, or man was reported "missing." Pension to start from the date the assigned pay and allowance cease. For example: A man is reported missing on October 1, 1915, both assigned pay and separation allowance would continue to be paid until December 31, 1915, and separation allowance, only, up to January 31, 1916. Then, when there has been official acceptance of the death, pension would start from January 1, 1916.

(Sgd.) RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

P.C. 508.

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA.

SATURDAY, the 24th day of February, 1917.

PRESENT:

His Excellency
The Governor General in Council.

His Excellency the Governor General in Council is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered that the last paragraph (4) of Order in Council P.C. 2890 passed on the 6th day of January, 1916, which reads:—

"4. In cases where an Officer, non-commissioned Officer or Man is reported 'missing' Assigned Pay to continue to be paid for a period not exceeding three months, and Separation Allowance for a period not exceeding six months from the date the Officer, non-commissioned Officer or Man was reported 'missing.' Pension to start from the date the assigned pay and allowances cease. For example—a man is reported 'missing' on the 1st October, 1915, both Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance would continue to be paid until 31st December, 1915, and Separation Allowance only up to 31st January, 1916. Then when there has been official acceptance of the death, pension would start from 1st January, 1916."

be cancelled.

His Excellency the Governor General in Council is further pleased to make the following regulations governing the Issue of Pay, Allowances and Pension to or in respect of Officers, non-commissioned Officers and Men invalided, killed in action, dying on Active Service or reported "missing" to be put into force forthwith, and cancelling all previous regulations on the subject in conflict therewith, and the same are hereby made and established accordingly:

1. Soldiers invalided—

(a) All invalided soldiers shall receive pay and allowances until discharged from the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

(b) No invalided soldier shall be discharged from the Canadian Expeditionary Force until a Board of Medical Officers has certified that further treatment or hospital care will not improve his condition, or that it is advisable that he should pass under his own control.

(c) When a Board of Medical Officers has recommended discharge on account of physical unfitness, discharge shall not be carried out until a notification has been received from the Board of Pension Commissioners by the officer commanding the soldier, that a pension of an amount stated, commencing on a day fixed, will be forwarded to an address named. The said officer commanding shall, thereupon, complete the discharge as from the day immediately preceding the day fixed. If no pension is to be awarded, the Board of Pension Commissioners shall notify the said officer commanding and discharge, post-dated fifteen days, shall be carried out immediately. Provided that the officer Commanding the Discharge Depot at Quebec, St. John or Halifax may carry discharge of a man returned from overseas when a Board of Medical Officers has certified that no pensionable disability exists, in which case discharge shall be post-dated fifteen days.

(d) When a soldier who has served as a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force and has been discharged subsequently requires treatment for a disability which is certified by a Board of Medical Officers to have been caused or aggravated by service, the Board of Medical Officers may recommend his re-attestation as a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force. If such recommendation is acted upon he shall be placed on pay and allowances from the date of his re-attestation, his pension, if any, being cancelled from such date. Payment of pension covering a period subsequent to the date of re-attestation shall be deducted from his pay and allowances and shall be repaid to the Board of Pension Commissioners by the authority making such deduction. The Officer Commanding the unit in which a pensioner is re-attested shall immediately notify the Board of Pension Commissioners of the date of his re-attestation. When a pensioner has been re-attested he shall be regarded as a new case in so far as discharge and pension are concerned, and the usual procedure followed.

(e) The regulation under which a man discharged for pension is given thirty days' pay and allowances in advance is hereby cancelled.

2. Soldiers Killed in action.

Dying on Active Service or Reported "Missing."

(a) Without Dependents.—All Pay and Allowances shall stop from the date of death or from the date upon which the soldier was in fact "missing."

(b) With Dependents.—All Pay and Allowances, except Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance, shall stop from the date of death or from the date upon which the soldier was in fact "missing" but Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance shall be paid monthly thereafter to the dependent until such time as the pension is ready for issue. The Board of Pension Commissioners shall notify the Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Branch of the Militia Department that a pension of an amount stated, commencing on a day fixed, will be forwarded to an address named, and Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance shall cease on the day immediately preceding the day fixed. If no pension is to be awarded the Board of Pension Commissioners shall notify the said Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Branch and Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance shall be immediately discontinued. If it is made to appear that the proofs necessary to lead to the granting of a pension are being unreasonably delayed, the Board of Pension Commissioners may direct that Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance shall stop.

For the purpose of ascertaining whether Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance are to be discontinued or continued after the date of the casualty, the word "dependents" shall be taken to mean those in receipt of Separation Allowance.

Pensions which may be awarded to persons respecting whom Assigned Pay or Separation Allowance has been stopped after the date of the casualty, or to whom no assigned pay or Separation Allowance has been paid, shall take effect from the date upon which the death occurred or from the date assumed to be the date of death for official purposes in the case of those reported "missing."

In the event of a casualty with respect of a soldier without dependents not being reported in time to stop the Assigned Pay cheque for the then current month being issued, any over payment shall be recovered whenever possible, and so also with regard to the personal pay and allowances of officers which are deposited at their credit at the Bank of Montreal, London, England.

Clerk of the Privy Council.

COPY OF TELEGRAMS.

LONDON, November 7, 1916

From: Sir George Perley,
London, England.

To: The Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ont.

Referring to former cables from Bruce to Militia requesting that accommodation be provided for active treatment in Canada, we are now able to forward twelve officers and three hundred men requiring further treatment. May we send them? Others will be forwarded at intervals.

LONDON, November 16, 1916.

From: Sir George Perley,
London, England.

To: The Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Can.

The Medical Service recommends that we forward two classes of patients to Canada for active treatment. First, those who are permanently unfit for further service, and Second, those who will require six months or more active treatment, and whose ultimate return to the service is doubtful. It is estimated that at present there are three thousand patients in England who could be disposed of in this way, thus relieving the hospital congestion here. There are three hundred men now boarded and ready to proceed to Canada—all ambulatory cases who are permanently unfit for further service, but who could go on passenger ships. At least half, probably more of the three thousand cases would be ambulatory. The remainder would be sent in hospital ship. Am of the opinion that course recommended is wise and hope necessary arrangements can be made in Canada. Could these not be absorbed into civil hospitals. May we send over the three hundred immediately?

OTTAWA, November 18, 1916.

To: Sir George Perley,
London, England.

Following from Loughheed. Your cable 16th; Military Hospitals Commission are making arrangements for first three hundred men, active treatment cases, but will require at least three weeks' time to provide necessary accommodation and staff. Medical and nursing assistants accompanying soldiers should remain in Canada on account scarcity professional services here. Important we have ample notice respecting all shipments and specific dates when fixed, as considerable time required to secure suitable accommodation.

LONDON, November 26, 1916.

From: The Adjutant-General, C.E.F.,
London, England.

To: Military Hospitals Commission,
Ottawa, Can.

Oneag 2057, twenty-fifth. Three hundred cases invalided to Canada: These three hundred will be sent forward next week, arriving on or about December sixth. All are able to walk. Most require considerable surgical treatment. Would suggest their being placed in civil hospitals. Sufficient Medical Officers and Nursing Sisters will be sent forward with these cases to deliver them safely to their destination, but neither Medical Officers nor Nursing Sisters can be spared to remain in Canada as we urgently need these here. May we send an average of five hundred per month to Canada to be treated in hospitals there? All fit to travel without detriment to their health and all will do better in opinion of medical authorities in Canada than by remaining for prolonged periods in hospitals in England.

OTTAWA, November 13, 1916.

My dear Sir George,

On Saturday I took up with the Prime Minister your cablegram to him of the instant, in which you say you are able to forward 12 officers and 300 men requiring active treatment in Canada.

As you doubtless know we have two classes of hospital in Canada, one known as the Military Hospitals administered by the Militia Department, and the other Convalescent Hospitals administered by the Military Hospitals Commission. I have taken up with the Director General of Medical Services of the Militia Department the accommodation of the Military Hospitals and he informs me that these are already filled with patients. The same may be said of the Convalescent Hospitals under the Military Hospitals Commission. We have had to take over a substantial number of cases from the Militia Department, cases which under normal conditions would have entered the Military Hospitals. The Director General of Medical Services informs me this morning that he is having an extended inquiry made throughout Canada to ascertain if any accommodation can be secured in civilian hospitals. He and I are very doubtful if any space can be furnished in this direction in Canada. The Militia Department and the Military Hospitals Commission have already handed over to the civilian hospitals a number of cases that cannot be handled advantageously in the Government institutions.

If the cases referred to in your cablegram are intended to be the first of cases to be sent out to Canada requiring active treatment and as recommended by Colonel Bruce in his report and also in his cablegram to the Militia Department, we should have ample notice of what the policy of the Overseas Administration of the Canadian Forces will be in this matter.

Hospitals will have to be erected and officered, provision will have to be made for hospital cars and trains. In this latter respect we are practically without any. I have already taken the subject up with the Minister of Railways and am hopeful that ere long we may have several hospital cars fitted up. From enquiry I am also informed that it will be a difficult task to properly officer large hospitals owing to the number of Canadian doctors and nurses now at the front.

On the approach of winter it is rather an unfortunate time to enter on a policy of sending out a great number of cases for active treatment if proper treatment can be given such cases in England.

The main thing to consider at the moment is what your Overseas policy is to be on this question. If you find it is indispensable to do this please cable me as to what the requirements will actually be and I shall take the subject up with all parties interested and personally, with those associated with me, contribute in any way we can to meet the situation.

We for some time have been in treaty with the Ontario Government to take over their cottage asylum institution now under construction at Whitby, Ontario. This is being constructed in three units with accommodation of approximately six hundred to a unit. One unit will be completed about the end of the year. The second unit in about six months. We had intended this chiefly for our convalescent work which is of course quite distinct from the active treatment cases referred to in your cable. We are exceptionally fortunate in securing the property. Up to the present time we have found that to secure accommodation for convalescent cases alone has been rather a difficult problem, hence, in my judgment, if we have to enter upon active treatment cases we have to specially build.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) JAMES A. LOUGHEED,

President.

The Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY, K.C.M.C.,
Overseas Minister of Militia,
Canadian High Commissioner's Office,
London, England.

OTTAWA, April 18, 1917.

SIR,—The secretary has passed your letter of the 16th April to me for attention.

2. I have looked up page 677 of the Proceedings of the Committee referred to by you. I may say that to compile the figures which the chairman requested would take a clerk working constantly about ten days to a fortnight.

3. It would not be so difficult to give you the number of tubercular patients who have had their destinations in Ontario and who have returned from overseas, and doubtless the Assistant Director of Medical Services of Military District No. 2 would be able to give you the number of men invalided from camps, etc., in his district from this cause.

4. The only figures which are immediately available are those applicable to the present time, and I may say for your information that on the 8th instant there were in sanatoria in M. D. 2, 147 in-patients and 28 out-patients. Of the former, 85 have been overseas and 62 have not, and of these 23 overseas and 9 camp men are in Freeport sanatorium, Kitchener, which is situated in M. D. 1, but which is attached to M. D. 2 ("D" Unit, M.H.C.C.), for administrative purposes. Of the latter, 26 have been overseas and 2 have not.

I am,

Yours faithfully,

WM. T. MOORE,

Secy. to Medical Superintendent.

PROVINCIAL RETURNED SOLDIERS COMMISSION IN CONJUNCTION WITH MILITARY HOSPITALS COMMISSION, CANADA.

VICTORIA, B.C., April 5, 1917.

Sir HERBERT AMES,

Chairman, Parliamentary Committee on Returned Soldiers,
Ottawa.

SIR,—In accordance with your instructions, I have the honour to enclose herewith for inclusion in your Committee's report, the following:—

(a) Copy of order in council approved 29th November, 1915, creating the Provincial Returned Soldiers Aid Commission (British Columbia).

(b) Report of the Provincial Commission as submitted to the Legislature 31st March, 1916, dealing with the following matters:—

1. The provision of farm lands for settlement by returned soldiers and sailors;
2. The provision of education, technical and agricultural training and employment of returned soldiers;
3. The establishment of Provincial Bureau to provide for the distribution of the labour supply created by demobilization and immigration;
4. The provision of a supply farm for use in conjunction with the Military Convalescent Hospital at Esquimalt.

In connection with Part 1 of the above-mentioned report, I enclose a copy of a letter written by this Commission to the Dominions Royal Commission on the occasion of their sitting at Victoria, 21st September, 1916. The Provincial Government purpose putting into effect immediately a land settlement policy on the basis of community settlements along the lines of our Commission's recommendations. While this will be a provincial measure, we are of the opinion as stated in our letter to the Dominions Royal Commission that the matter of providing lands for settlement by ex-soldiers is one not confined to the provinces. It is in fact, rather an Imperial question and we consider that the costs in connection therewith should be borne, in part at any rate, by both the Federal and Imperial Governments. It is suggested that such share might take the form of loans to the returned soldier settlers for the purchase of stock, implements, etc., against the security of chattel mortgages.

Part 2 of the Commission's report refers to the matter of Vocational Training. The advantages of this system are proving of incalculable value and we are of the opinion that the system might be extended with great advantage to include the re-training of able-bodied men, either soldiers or civilians, desirous of improving their condition by taking up trades other than those they have been perhaps obliged to follow. As in the matter of land settlement, the Commission considers that the primary responsibility for the extension and development of this phase of the work, together with the co-ordinated feature of the establishment of industries most closely allied to the natural resources of the country, rests upon the Federal and Imperial Governments in co-operation with the various Provincial Governments.

Part Three of the Commission's report deals with the establishment of Employment Bureaux which in our opinion would prove of material assistance in dealing with the distribution of the labour supply following upon demobilization.

Part Four of the Commission's report deals with the matter of a supply farm for use in conjunction with the premises at Esquimalt presently occupied as a Convalescent Hospital by the Military Hospitals Commission. We are of the opinion that it is as yet too early to deal with the provision of permanent homes, but in the event of such an establishment becoming necessary in the future the farm in question would prove a highly desirable adjunct.

(c) Copy of the Commission's Employment Return to 28th February, 1917, showing disposition of men on the Commission's records.

(d) Statement of positions in various employments found for men applying to the Commission.

(e) A list of the points in the Province at which the Commission is represented, either by duly organized committees or correspondents.

(f) Copies of forms which are being used by the Vocational Officer in making an Industrial Survey of the Province.

I have pleasure in enclosing also copies of two resolutions passed by the Victoria Board of Trade relative to Returned Soldier matters.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

J. W. HILL,
Secretary.

Copy of a Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, approved by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on the 29th day of November, 1915.

To His Honour
The Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The undersigned has the honour to recommend that the undermentioned gentlemen be appointed a Provincial Committee, with power to add to their number if deemed necessary, to work in conjunction with the Military Hospitals Commission of Canada, in regard to the provision for the care and employment of members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force upon their return to Canada:—

The Honourable H. E. Young, M.D., LL.D., Provincial Secretary, representing the Government of British Columbia (chairman);

His Worship Mayor A. Stewart, representing the City of Victoria;

His Worship Mayor A. W. Gray, representing the City of New Westminster;

His Worship Mayor A. E. Planta, representing the City of Nanaimo;

Alderman Joseph Hoskins, representing the City of Vancouver;

A. C. Burdick, Esq., representing the Returned Soldiers Employment Committee of Victoria; and

E. W. Humber, Esq., representing the Returned Soldiers Committee of the Canadian Club of Vancouver; and

That the said Committee be empowered to take up its duties forthwith, and to do all such matters and things as may in the opinion of the Committee appear requisite for the carrying out of its objects.

Dated this 26th day of November, A.D. 1915.

H. E. YOUNG,
Provincial Secretary.

Approved this 26th day of November, A.D. 1915.

SUPPLEMENTARY EVIDENCE.

March 18, 1917.

From: Medical Officer i/c Sanatoria,
Ste. Agathe des Monts, P.Q.

To: Sir Herbert B. Ames,
President Parliamentary Board of Inquiry.
Reception and Treatment of Soldiers,
Ottawa.

Evidence.

Sir,—

I have the honor to refer to my evidence given in Montreal on the 15th inst., and to your question relating to the number of N.C.O.'s, officers, nursing sisters, men, etc., received in Ste. Agathe, and to submit the following figures:—

TABLE VII.

Showing the number of officers, nursing sisters, N.C.O.'s and men received at the sanatoria in Ste. Agathe des Monts at date ending March 18, 1917.

Source.	Laurentian Sanitarium.	Laurentide Inn Sanatorium.
From France.....	61 — 26%	44 — 40%
From England.....	52 — 22%	27 — 25%
From Canada Camps, etc.....	122 — 51%	38 — 35%
Totals.....	235 — 100%	109 — 100%

The foregoing statement has been made with reference to transfers from one institution to the other. In the case of a transfer the sanatorium in which the man finished treatment or spent the latter part of treatment has been credited with the admission. There were twenty-seven N.C.O.'s and men transferred from the Laurentian Sanitarium to the Laurentide Inn, and eight transferred from the Inn to the Laurentian.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

J. R. BYERS,
Captain M.O. i/c L.S.

SUPPLEMENTARY EVIDENCE.

CAUSES OF DISSATISFACTION.

The dissatisfaction of our returned soldiers is due to several causes, e.g.:—

1. Difficulties with pay and pensions;
2. Complaints against hospital discipline and treatment;
3. Neglect after discharge.

1. Difficulties with pay and pensions:

(a) Pay and allowances. Troubles in respect of these have been chronic ever since the men began to come back. The delays involved, the inability of many unlettered men to carry on correspondence with officials and the lack of answers to letters are sources of irritation.

(b) Pensions. Perhaps this is the most fruitful cause of complaint. Nearly every soldier is aware that a new scale of pensions was promulgated early in 1916, under which an increase of pension was anticipated by the pensioner. Following the announcement of the new scale many inquiries were written to Ottawa and all the earlier ones elicited the same reply in the form of a printed circular issued under date of 1st July, 1916, promising adjustments which have not yet been made.

Mistakes are made in paying pensions and delays which are incomprehensible to the men are frequent. Pensions bulk enormously in the minds of returned soldiers and what seems a very small matter to an official, is of great importance to the individual soldier.

Pensions which seem entirely inadequate, and which are based upon an incomplete appreciation of a case, or which are classed as final where reasonable finality has not yet been reached, are frequently matters of apparent injustice to discharged soldiers. Some of this trouble is attributable to premature discharge, though often at the man's own request. There are many cases of the payment of a "gratuity" of $50 in "full settlement" of Government liability where the recipient has been unable to do any work whatever and where he has found himself and his family absolutely destitute.

Contributory to such hardships is the fact that on discharge everything stops at once, military pay, separation allowance, patriotic fund, medical treatment, and the fact that a wife was maintained—sometimes in comparative luxury during her husbands' active service—emphasizes the change of circumstances and accentuates the grievance. No reflection on the Patriotic Fund is intended, as difficulties in this respect are matters of public knowledge.

2. Complaints against Hospital Treatment and Discipline.

The returned soldier who comes home to Canada direct from England has usually been rather "spoiled" in English hospitals and homes and is unprepared for the somewhat rigorous discipline which he finds in Montreal. Care should be taken not to give a Convalescent Home too penal an aspect, thus giving an unfortunate first impression and creating an antagonistic of mind which will not easily be overcome. Discipline is necessary, but it can be made too ostentatious.

Vocational training to be a useful adjunct to recovery must be administered under proper conditions. The great curative agencies of sunlight and fresh air are fundamental requisites. The training is worse than useless when it involves confinement all day, either in a smoky crowded recreation room, or in cramped, badly lighted and badly ventilated workrooms. The well nigh ideal premises and plant of the Montreal Technical Schools should, by arrangement with the Provincial authorities, be made available for the vocational training. The fact that the men would proceed on foot or by conveyance to and from this school would in the matter of open air and natural exercise be a great benefit.

The failure to use, except for very few cases, the Khaki Convalescent Homes (particularly the one on the mountain side specially provided by the league for nervous cases) for returned soldiers, except a very few, and the utilization of these homes for recruits who have never been overseas, has irritated the returned soldiers. They draw unfavourable comparisons between the treatment meted out to themselves who have suffered great hardships, and the men who have but lately answered the call of duty, and have not yet gone overseas. These two classes of men should not be mixed, and the best accommodation should be given to the returned soldier, not to the recruit.

3. Neglect after discharge.

There has been no organized attempt to keep in touch with a man after discharge. He is off the slate so far as the Government is concerned. Nominally, he is restored to a civil status and that in varying degrees of fitness, or rather unfitness, to pick up the severed threads of his former life, often as unreal to him as if it belonged to a previous existence. As before stated, pay, allowances, Patriotic Fund, all ceases, nothing but a meagre pension to fall back upon, and he is frequently in trouble about that. He remembers his recruit days. The allurements and promises held out to him then, and recalls his anticipation of the treatment which the returning heroes would receive. He still sees everything being done to secure and to care for recruits, and he compares the fair promise with the bitter realization. He is becoming a direlict, a malcontent, a source of infinite future trouble and responsibility for Canada. What can be done to avoid such a misfortune?

A plan for dealing with returned soldiers.

The returned soldier is at a loss where to go if in need of assistance. He sees Militia Headquarters, Armouries, Recruiting Stations and other Government places where the new soldier can get attention, but they have other things to do than look after the veterans. Besides, he has been taken out of the control of the regular military authorities. He is "fed up" with hospitals, he knows nothing about any local representative of the Pensions Board, his family have no further claim on the Patriotic Fund, though they can get help from the Soldiers' Wives League if they think of asking for it. Often the man shrinks from applying for help because it seems to him monstrous thing that, after what he has been through he should be a suppliant for charity. Sometimes he is too deficient in education or too mentally impaired to figure out just what his remedy may be. To such men the Khaki League and the Khaki Clubs have become veritable havens of refuge, the one place where sympathy, counsel and practical assistance without talk or formality or red tape are instantly available.

The League has been organized and working quietly for two years. It has the confidence of the soldiers and the support of the public. It proposes to establish at Khaki League Headquarters, a Committee of Soldiers' friends, composed of representatives from the Khaki League,

the Patriotic Fund,
the Soldiers' Wives League, the Returned Soldiers' Association, and from other organizations
if desired.

The Committee to include in its personnel a doctor and a lawyer, and to meet, say, twice a week or oftener if necessary.

Returned soldiers with any difficulty or grievance whatever to be invited by advertisement and otherwise, to report same to the League Headquarters. The league will, as it has already done, make some immediate investigation, and furnish prompt (that is the same day) temporary relief.

The applicant or his case will go before the Committee at its first meeting when (1) Difficulties of pension could be noted by the pension representative, and where adjustments are due and pending, immediate advances could be made, possibly with an understanding from the Government; (2) Medical treatment. Cases needing medical attention will be at once dealt with by a doctor. On his certificate the man could be (a) readmitted to a convalescent home (b) to a regular hospital (some cases would be greatly benefited by application and treatment procurable only in regular hospitals, (c) Sent home for treatment and nursing there.

The doctor's report could be made the basis for proceedings looking to a readjustment of pension where such might seem desirable.

Dealing with Man's Family.

The representative of the Patriotic Fund could take steps towards procuring, if justifiable, a wife's immediate restoration to the benefits of the fund.

The Soldiers' Wives Leagues, through their representative, could get instantly in touch with the family, look after the children, etc.

The legal representative could attend to matters of fraud and injustice which are constantly perpetrated upon returned soldiers, and which the knowledge of some legal interest existing on their behalf would tend to avoid.

The representative of the Returned Soldiers' Association would have the effect of inspiring the soldier's confidence in the Committee, since it would include one or more of their own number in its membership.

Such a body could give speedy, friendly, unofficial relief. It would provide a means for the prompt hearing of every complaint, it would disarm criticism and leave no excuse for lack of attention. Promptness and absence of formality is an essential. These men do not want help in three days, or three weeks or three months. When they want it, they want it instantly. The composition of the Committee would prevent overlapping, for the functions of each organization could be settled then and there.

On active service a soldier can always get a hearing from his superiors and knows exactly where to go to state his case. He cannot be expected to unlearn everything which he has acquired through months of training and actual experience. It takes a considerable time for well educated officers to re-adapt themselves to civil life. And it takes those who sympathize with the returned soldiers, who understand their point of view and best of all, who have shared their experiences to deal successfully with them.

A. R. DOBLE.

701-3 BELMONT HOUSE,

VICTORIA, B.C., March 25, 1917.

Sir HERBERT AMES, Chairman,
Returned Soldiers Committee,
Ottawa.

SIR,—The limited time at my disposal prevented me submitting the following evidence which I beg to submit now, with the request that it may be included in my evidence already given before your committee.

A medical officer, name unknown to me, was asked by your committee what could be done to make hospitals more attractive, especially for tubercular patients. He would suggest nothing, but stated that strict discipline was necessary. That is wrong. Discipline is the cause of dissatisfaction.

A sick man returning to this country after having done his bit wants more freedom. He is an invalid and should be treated as such, instead of being annoyed by military discipline and restraint.

Many men have been discharged from a date some months previous to the time they were notified and have consequently been placed in awkward financial positions. I understand this cannot occur in future, but this latest Order in Council does not go far enough, it should be retroactive.

A business man who sold goods yesterday, has as much right to receive payment as the man who sells goods to-morrow. The circumstances are exactly the same, and there should be no discrimination between the man who fought last year and the man who is fighting now.

Another point I wish to bring to your notice is the necessity of providing employment for returned men as soon as they are fit to work. The practice of assisting men indefinitely is likely to undermine their selfrespect, the habit of living on charity, repugnant at first, may become chronic, transforming worthy and desirable citizens into useless and undesirable beggars.

Immediate action is necessary to remove this very grave danger.

Your obedient servant,

H. W. HART,

*Honorary Secretary,
Returned Soldiers Association, Victoria, B.C.*

P.S.—The object of this association is to co-operate with the Government, and assist it in every way, in its endeavour to find a solution of the returned soldier problem.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, OTTAWA,

COMMITTEE ROOM 303,

TUESDAY, May 1, 1917.

The Committee met at 10 o'clock a.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

Members present: Sir Herbert Ames, Mr. R. B. Bennett, Hon. Charles Marcell, Mr. Middlebro, Hon. Charles Murphy, Mr. Pardee, Mr. Ross (Middlesex) and Mr. Sutherland.

The CHAIRMAN: I have here a communication from Mr. N. F. R. Knight, Secretary of the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada, which I understand, is an amalgamation of the various bodies whose testimony we have received, in a Dominion-wide organization, which was created at Winnipeg, at a conference on the 12th April, 1917. He also sends a list of the findings and recommendations of that conference, a copy of which is here for each member. As part of it relates to pensions, I think it would be well for the members to read that over previous to resuming Major Todd's evidence. I may say that Mr. Knight is coming down this morning, and wants to be present in connection with Major Todd's evidence.

Conforming to our request Mr. Stutchbury, who appeared before the Committee as representing the local Soldiers' Aid Association of Alberta, has filed a certified copy of the Order in Council of the province of Alberta, creating the Provincial Committee, which I think should be printed in our record.

Major Todd recalled and further examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. Major Todd, when the hour of adjournment arrived at the last meeting of our Committee, you had not completed your evidence. Do you wish to continue on the same lines, or would you prefer to take up pension scales and specific cases?—A. After thinking over the matter, I think perhaps it would be better to continue along the same general lines, and that then you allow me to put in evidence, with a comparison of the British, French and Canadian pensions scales, the suggested scale of Canadian pensions, for which you asked me, and lastly to take up specific cases.

Q. Very well, then, we will follow that line.—A. In going over my evidence, I see that in speaking of centralization of control for the liquidation of the war, I did not lay sufficient stress upon the necessity for the formulation of detailed instructions for dealing with casualties, nor upon the point that, whilst there must be centralized administration, the immediate care of men, on demobilization or as now when they are returning in small numbers, should be distributed geographically among existing military organizations in the districts—executive functions should be dealt with by the man on the spot. In Canada, great distances make very difficult constant reference to headquarters.

Another point on which I should have laid stress is this, and you have had some evidence before you which will draw attention to the necessity for it; it is important to bring out the point that in France it has been found necessary to pass legislation forbidding the acceptance of public funds for purposes connected with the war by any society without Government approval. It might be interesting to you in that connection to have a précis of the Act which the French Government has recently passed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: That is a valuable suggestion.

Document filed as follows:—

1. Section Lois et décrets général.

Loi relative aux oeuvres qui font appel à la générosité publique.

(Published in "No. 178 Bulletin des Lois de la République Française." Partie Principale.) 1916.

The Commission, to control all societies founded with the object of rendering assistance to those who have suffered from the war and whose funds will be dependent upon public generosity, will be composed of representatives from the Departments of the Interior, Finance, Justice, and the Council of State, together with three representatives appointed by the Minister of Interior from recognized charitable organizations. It will comprise in each departmental area of France a representative from the Department of the Interior, who will act as president, representatives from the Departments of Finance and Justice, an inspector for the department of charitable organizations, and of two members of a recognized charitable organization, residing in the department.

No individual, society or organization may appeal for funds to public generosity without first obtaining authorization from this body. Those who do so will be liable to inspection. Daily accounts must be kept of all receipts and expenses. The authorization may be withdrawn on wilful infringement of rules, the society dissolved, the funds transferred, either according to existing statute governing the society or failing them, may be distributed among other authorized societies. Any person administering a society may be punished by fine or imprisonment for infraction of rules.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. I do not quite understand that proposal, Major?—A. There are a great number of societies in France, and in the evidence it appears that there are some in Canada, which solicit subscriptions in aid of returned soldiers. Sometimes that money is very excellently expended, sometimes it is not expended with as much regard to economy as might be desirable. The French Government hold that in war time the total resources of the country are consecrated to the prosecution of the national aim, and the Government will not permit private individuals to solicit money.

Q. Or private associations?—A. Yes, for matters connected with the war, without Government approval and control.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Otherwise you have them begging in many ways?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Would that prohibit the formation of societies with membership fees at $5 or $10?—A. Absolutely everything.

By the Chairman:

Q. It would not necessarily mean prohibition, but regulation and authorization of such as were deemed good?—A. Quite right. An elaborate machinery has been set up in France; it is outlined in the précis.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): In Canada the same thing might go on by organizations getting charters.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Before they get subscriptions, the suggestion is that such organizations be registered by the Government and be compelled to account for the funds that they get. A man should also be prevented from going on the streets and soliciting alms for himself.

The WITNESS: It would apply to tag days and movements of a similar nature.

The CHAIRMAN: After the war there will be a plethora of groups of returned soldiers who will endeavour to live on the public, and some regulation will be absolutely necessary.

The WITNESS: Another point upon which I did not lay sufficient stress is the necessity for proper statistics and records. We have the experience of the United States to go by; the United States found it very difficult to compile accurate statistics after the Civil War. Now is the time when we should make our plans for the keeping of records and statistics; that plan should be carefully followed in all of its details.

In connection with artificial limbs, I might further emphasize the necessity for providing at once for the repair of these appliances. France is training men as manufacturing orthopedists in her factories where artificial limbs and other appliances are being manufactured. There will be in Canada, I suppose, at the end of the war three or four thousand men who will require new artificial limbs at the end of every three years or so. It is worth while commencing at once to train manufacturing orthopedists so that there may be centres all over the country where the men can get their limbs repaired.

By the Chairman:

Q. The Canadian Government, I understand, not only supplies the man with the original artificial limb required but also guarantees to stand the expenses of repairs and renewals?—A. That is my belief, sir.

Q. And your contention is that the renewals and repairs will constitute a problem involving at least a thousand?—A. I would not like to name a figure.

Q. A large number?—A. Yes.

Q. Of limbs that will have to be made every year?—A. That is right, sir.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Does it not mean that men will have to go all round the country and repair limbs?—A. Yes. France has appreciated the necessity of providing manufacturing orthopedists in every town of any size who will repair the artificial appliances of men living in their areas. Men are being trained to do that work. It is a new profession. The men who are to follow it are generally crippled men.

In speaking of pensions I tried to make it very clear that the Pensions Commissioners look upon themselves as trustees for soldiers and sailors. In that connection, let me refer to the list of complaints through which we are going later. Among them are a couple of instances involving distinct hardships. Those hardships would have been avoided if the men in question had realized that their complaint should have been made to the Pension Commissioners. We received the complaints indirectly through this Committee. If the complaints had come to us directly they would have been dealt with earlier.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What is your view in regard to publicity?—A. I am for publicity in every way—as fully as possible.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are you familiar with that poster which you see on the wall—"What every disabled soldier should know"?—A. Yes.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. Was that gotten out with the co-operation of the Pensions Board?—A. I think I may say so.

Q. Does it contain what the Pensions Board would desire to have?—A. I think it is an excellent thing.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Your suggestion is it should be much larger?—A. Please do not misunderstand me; I am not complaining. I think the Military Hospitals Commission has done an excellent work.

By the Chairman:

Q. They forward you all complaints they receive from day to day?—A. Yes. There is the utmost co-operation; but war is a new thing to us. We are having the same experience as France and Great Britain; here, as there, there cannot be too much publicity, so that everybody may understand the problems to be dealt with and the manner in which they are to be met.

Q. What would you think of having a small handbook or primer, in short chapters, which a returned soldier or citizen of only average ability would be able to clearly understand, and have them widely distributed among returned soldiers and those interested in returned soldiers?—A. Every suggestion of that sort seems to me excellent and worthy of adoption.

Q. That should be issued by the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. Along the line of that poster?—A. Yes.

Q. What every returned or disabled soldier should know?—A. Yes.

Q. Who would be the proper people to get that out?—A. If a centralized body should be found, it would be the organization to deal with that. At the present time it would be the Pensions Board or the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Or the military authorities?—A. Yes, or all three combined.

In trying to fulfill its function of trustee for the pensioned soldiers, the Board of Pensioners has established its organization, an Investigation Branch. Its object is to visit every pensioner once a year at least and see that all goes well. That is its first and most important function.

Q. By pensioner you mean——?—A. Anybody in receipt of a pension.

Q. Man or woman?—A. Yes.

Q. The word pensioner includes all classes?—A. Yes. At the present time we have twelve district offices, four more are to be opened up, in all the important centres. The offices are distributed in accordance with the local density of recruiting.

Q. Will you file a statement of the location of those offices and the official in charge?—A. I shall do so. These district offices have a second important function. We have come to believe that there has been a certain looseness in the administration of American pensions. One of the prime causes of any loose administration was that ex parte evidence was permitted; that is, the man who was going to get the pension was the man who collected the evidence on which that pension was granted. We intend that one of the functions of our branch offices, a part of the Canadian pensioning body, will be to assist applicants for pensions in presenting their claims in proper form.

Q. Would a soldier desiring re-examination for revision and pension make application to one of your local centres?—A. Yes, either to the local centre or to Ottawa, whichever he wishes.

In speaking of pensions; in looking over the evidence it has seemed that one or two witnesses did not quite understand that the amount of Canadian pensions is governed only by military or naval rank, and by disability. Income, previous and subsequent occupation, make no difference. The only thing that governs the amount of pensions, for the rank concerned, is the extent of the disability.

It was suggested that numbers of men were refusing vocational training and employment through fear lest their pensions might be reduced if they perfected them—selves in some occupation or obtained employment. I have made inquiries through the Military Hospitals Commission on that point, and there seems to be no sound ground for the suggestion.

Complaints were made, in the evidence, against headquarters, Pensions Board, because pensions were not granted in accordance with the medical certificates sent in by outside practitioners. I want to draw attention to the point that estimates of the extent of disability by independent civilian medical men are often valueless for pension purposes, because the civilian practitioner usually has very little knowledge of the history of the disability and consequently is not in a position to say whether or not the disability existed in the man examined prior to his enlistment. It is only at headquarters, where we have all the papers, and we know the man's history, that we can say certainly that a disability antedated enlistment; when that is so, the disability is not pensionable.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. If the disability exists prior to enlistment, he would not be entitled to enlist at all?—A. No; but there are progressive diseases. Sometimes men are attested when they are apparently well, although they are suffering from a disease, such as syphilis, which is of a progressive nature. If plainly evident symptoms of that disease appear during a man's service, and if their appearance is precipitated by the stress of service, then the man is plainly pensionable for the extent of that aggravation; but he is not pensionable for the portion of his disability which resulted from the incurrence of the disease before enlistment.

Q. Should such a man be accepted at all?—A. Of course not; but the trouble is that doctors are liable to error. It is often very difficult to detect the disease: There are very few of us who have not had an acquaintance who has died of locomotor ataxia and whom we never thought of as syphilitic.

Q. If the medical man certifies in the first instance that he is medically fit, and inferentially that he has not syphilis, how are you going to prove that he was afflicted with the disease at the time of enlistment?—A. Excuse me, I do not think it is a fair inference; because it is very easy for a medical man to miss latent syphilis. Tuberculosis is a common disease; it also may be progressive.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you mean it may not show itself for years and years?—A. Quite right.

Q. But here is a man who knows that he has the disease. That man when he enlists must have some knowledge of it?—A. Men often think they have been cured.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Might it not happen that a man who had syphilis did not know it, and enlisted, and was passed by the medical man, and then afterwards, by stress of service, the disease became patent, and then he is told he had the disease when he joined? He will never believe that. He also has the medical certificate and such a man would never be satisfied with his pension because he will say, "I did not know it, and I did not have it, and the medical man certified that I did not have it."

By the Chairman:

Q. But if your medical man asserts that, had he not enlisted, that would have broken out anyway, then how does he become eligible for pension?—A. I do not think he becomes eligible for pension. I am speaking personally now; do not think that I am speaking as a pension commissioner. My opinion is that Canadian military pensions should be Canadian military pensions. If you want them to be anything else than that, say so. My conception of a military pension is one that compensates an individual for any personal detriment—I do not care when it comes on—resulting from service. It is so in Great Britain. The disability might come on several years after the war is over. Whenever it appears it is pensionable; but if disability does not result from service, it is not pensionable. If, on the other hand, it is desired to make every detriment which appears in a man during his service pensionable, then let it be said, plainly, that the object of our pension legislation is not only to pension disabilities caused by war, but also to insure our soldiers and sailors against all the risks of existence during the time that they are in the Canadian Expeditionary Force. They are two distinct ideas; one is general insurance and the other is military pensions.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What do you call it?—A. General insurance—accident and health insurance.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You would always have a man who did not believe he had syphilis, and who would have the doctor's certificate to prove that, and afterwards the disease would develop and he would say he did not have it before?—A. I think your point is not quite sound, for this reason: you will get lots of men who will publicly protest that they have never had it; but if they are honest men and if you get them by themselves and ask quietly, they will answer, "Yes, there was a little slip."

Q. Would it be possible for a man to have it in its incipient stage and not know he had it?—A. He may think he is cured.

By the Chairman:

Q. He knows he has been exposed?—A. Yes. He knows he has had a sore, had treatment, thought he was cured; and probably got married; but he has been insufficiently treated.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. He might not know he ever had it?—A. There may be some cases; but they are very few.

By the Chairman:

Q. What would be the position of the Pensions Board in a case like this: a man is in training at Valcartier, and on Saturday afternoon in summer, being off duty, he goes down to the river for a swim, and is drowned?—A. The regulations say that a man is pensionable for things that occur during service. That is the law.

Q. Therefore his widow gets a pension?—A. Unless it can be shown distinctly that the man was negligent.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Take this case; a young man enlisted, and some time during the day when the men were off duty, had a little wrestling bout in the camp, and in the wrestling bout got injured and incapacitated, would he be entitled to a pension?—A. Yes, if the occasion was as you state it to be.

Q. The man was not on duty, but in the idle hours of the day indulges in a little wrestling match?—A. If there was no negligence, or fault, or wilful misbehaviour, or anything of that sort, absolutely, yes.

Q. Just the ordinary recreation a man would have?—A. In England it has been so stated in orders; if a man is playing football, to make himself fit to be a good soldier, and is injured, he must have his pension.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you any further note there?—A. There is a point which has been discussed, many times, in the evidence; it is, the amount of the pension. The general consensus of opinion concerning the amount of the pension is that a pension, in conjunction with the remaining capacity for work of the pensioner, should be sufficient to secure decent comfort to the man receiving it.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What would be the minimum pension for the private?

The CHAIRMAN: That is dealt with in this memorandum for soldiers, and we will take it up clause by clause.

WITNESS: There is another point that should be considered. A question was asked in regard to it at the last sitting of the Committee. You asked me if there were any instances in which the Pension Commissioners really went a little bit outside of the law, and you suggested that it might be a good thing were the Pension Commissioners to have the power of recommending to the Governor-in-Council that pensions should be granted in certain cases of hardship. There are cases of hardship. Hardship exists when, under existing pension laws, pension is refused to a sister who has been dependent upon a lost soldier brother. Hardship also arises when a son, a young boy of eighteen—an apprentice or a student—has gone to the front and has been killed. He never contributed to the support of his father and mother; but he undoubtedly would have done so had he lived; the whole question of prospective dependency is involved here. I think it is possible to draft a clause which would cover such cases; and, speaking here as a pension commissioner, the Board of Pensions Commissioners think it would be very much better were general principles stated in our pensions legislation, were specific laws enacted in accordance with those principles, and were as little as possible in our legislation left to the discretion of any body performing the functions of a pensions board. We would much prefer to see every provision definitely formulated. We would like to see specific legislation given to the pensions commissioners to administer.

Q. Even then there would be always hardship?—A. Possibly. If there were the remedy you suggest seems to be an excellent one.

Q. That they might be dealt with by Order-in-Council but only upon recommendation of the Pensions Board?—A. That is right, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. If you are dealing with exceptional cases I can relate the facts with respect to one which I brought to the attention of the Prime Minister last session. In that case the youth was a natural son, born and brought up at St. Godefroi, Bonaventure County, by his foster mother. This young man came from there up to this part of the country and went to the shanties. Afterwards he enlisted. He was told his name should be so and so. He took that name and stated his next of kin. Shortly after going to the front he wrote his foster mother, and she is in possession of the letter, telling her, among other things, that he had taken out a policy on his life but omitting to mention the name of the company. Since then he has been killed. His dependent has been told she will receive the unpaid balance of pay due to him, but nothing beyond that. Now, how would you deal with a case of that kind?—A. That case would clearly come under existing pension legislation, in view of the relation of the woman of whom you speak, to the dead soldier.

Q. This is a poor fisherwoman who had taken the boy and brought him up and looked to him for assistance in her old age.—A. She was certainly the soldier's foster mother. Under existing legislation, if the facts are as you have stated them, the woman referred to would be regarded as dependent upon the dead soldier.

Q. The parish priest at St. Godefroi drew up a statement of the facts and I handed it to the Militia Department.—A. If you give me the name and all of the facts connected with the case I shall be very glad to look into it and send a statement to you.

There is another point which might be mentioned. It was brought out in Senator McLennan's evidence and had reference to the necessity of providing insurance for disabled men. If a man is disabled conditions are altered for him. Because of his disability the price of services to him, where normal probability influences cost, is altered. A disabled man cannot get accident insurance nor can he always get life insurance on the same terms as can a healthy man. The situation should be met by legislation in some way. Senator McLennan gave an excellent example when he referred to the case of a one-eyed man. Such a man is more exposed to danger because he has only one eye, and if he loses his remaining eye he becomes not one-eyed but blind; these facts will prevent him from getting employment. The case must be met in some way.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Do you suggest that the State should undertake the business of accident insurance? Or that it should absorb the cost of such insurance?—A. In my opinion it is immaterial what course of procedure is followed so long as the case is dealt with. I do not know enough about accident insurance to lean to one procedure rather than another. The point is that the situation must be met either by providing for insurance in the pension or by making other provision. In France, there is a fund for bearing the extra cost of insurance, so that it costs a disabled man no more than a sound one to become insured.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is that fund provided by the State?—A. One-half is provided by the State and the other half by the insurance companies.

Q. Could not the same thing be done here?—A. I do not know.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. An insurance company would not be so apt to insure a disabled man as a well man, because the former is more apt to be injured?—A. That is so.

Q. Then if the company's liability depends upon the amount the man was earning, and the disabled man's earnings would not be as large as a man who was physically fit, would not that tend to counteract the disinclination on the company's part to insure the disabled man?—A. Not quite. Take the case of the one-eyed man. If such a man loses his remaining eye in a factory the employer has a totally blind man on his hands, and under existing legislation the amount of damage for the accident will be estimated for a blind, and not for a one-eyed man.

Q. I am speaking now of the Workmen's Compensation Act. If a one-eyed man only receives one-half as much wages as a man with two eyes, the amount an accident insurance company would have to pay would be much smaller than in the case of the former?—A. As a matter of fact do you not think that a one-eyed man would get as much as a two-eyed man?

Q. Yes, I think he would?—A. So do I. Unfortunately, employers would be inclined to say to such a man: "You only have one eye. You are dangerously liable and susceptible to accident; I will not have you in my shop."

By the Chairman:

Q. As a matter of fact, public opinion would compel the employer to pay that one-eyed man the same as the two-eyed man?—A. It is to be hoped that it may be so;

[Major J. L. Todd.]

but the French are already faced with this condition of things: The men who are not in receipt of pensions are jealous of those who are, and it has been necessary to examine the situation in order to provide means to prevent pensioners from becoming a degraded labour class because of the tendency to say to a pensioner, "You have money coming in; therefore, you can work for less wages."

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The effect of your argument is rather to show that employers would be deterred from employing any injured men at all?—A. It would have both results.

I would like to urge very strongly the point that in our opinion in the light of French experience and from experience in Great Britain, the pension is the least of the things that must be done to secure the proper rehabilitation of a disabled man. The pension is a mere bagatelle compared with the importance of making the man employable, and of getting permanent employment for him.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The difficulties of assimilating returned soldiers into civil life are not as great in Canada where we have a citizen army raised on the volunteer system, as in Europe where compulsory service prevails.—A. That may be true of certain parts of Canada; but it is said that in British Columbia over eleven per cent of the population has gone to the front; that is about the same percentage of the population as is serving in Great Britain. From what I have heard, bearing in mind all the circumstances, it will be difficult and very important for British Columbia to get those of her men who have gone, back at work.

Q. I should think the difficulties of assimilation are not as great in our country as in the older countries of Europe?—A. Generally speaking, I think your statement is correct.

That brings up the question of employment bureaux. A point upon which the French especially insist is that an employment bureau, to be of any value, must have the power of advancing transportation to men who are travelling towards districts in which they are to be employed. The French authorities have nothing but good to say of the English system of employment bureaux.

Q. In Canada the great distances to be travelled, especially where it is a case of transportation of labour between provinces, has to be borne in mind. Is this the whole difficulty, so far as you can see it?—A. As far as I can see it.

MR. BENNETT: That is the high cost of transportation and the long distances to be travelled.

By the Chairman:

Q. There is in every province now a Soldiers' Aid Commission organized for the purpose of assisting to find employment for returned soldiers. Do you think that as another adjunct to these local provisional organizations there should be a Dominion organization of some sort to transfer the superfluous labour of one province to another in case of necessity?—A. As far as I can see, the establishment of a Dominion-wide system of co-ordinated labour bureaux under federal control might be a splendid step in advance. There are other problems which become extremely evident when they affect soldiers. There is, for example, the matter of a Department of Public Health. When we see tubercular soldiers going about our streets, we feel that everything should be done to care for them properly; but there is very little which can be done under existing legislation. If, through the desirability of providing properly for tubercular soldiers, sound machinery for dealing with tubercular citizens were established, much good would result from a great evil.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

The CHAIRMAN: I am going to ask you, Major Todd, to stand aside for a few minutes in order that the Committee can examine General Jones. We want to get a little information from him, and it is necessary to secure his testimony now, particularly as he is a very busy man and is shortly to leave for overseas.

Witness retired.

General JONES called, sworn, and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. Please give your full name, your military status, and the work you are at present engaged upon?—A. Guy Carleton Jones, surgeon general, medical commissioner.

Q. Your work has been mainly overseas, has it not, since the outbreak of the war?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been in charge of the medical services in England and in France as well?—A. I was in charge of the medical services overseas until October 18, and again from January 6 until February 9.

Q. I think the Committee would like to have you tell them something with regard to the way in which men are selected in the Old Country for return to Canada; also the way in which you determine how many shall be sent back and the steps you take to notify the authorities here as to the probable return of men. Our evidence has been linked up with the evidence of the authorities on the other side of the water, and we would like to have any information that you can give us dealing with the problem of the returned soldier.—A. Perhaps it would save time if I gave you an estimate which I prepared for Sir George Perley, in January, 1917, showing the estimated number of men to be provided for this year. There were at that time in hospitals in England a total of 16,000 men, and an estimate was made from the casualties occurring in the Canadian corps during 1916, and the probable number of casualties that would result if another division were added. Taking the proportion of casualties to be returned to Canada as 18 per cent, it gave the number to be sent home as 7,200, and there were at that time in England about 3,000 cases that would in all probability figure in the class to be returned. Then if the estimate was made of about 2 per cent of sick men to be returned, it would raise the total to be sent back home in 1917 to a little over 12,000, or just over 1,000 a month. Those figures comprise the cases straight from hospitals in England to hospitals in Canada. Then if you take the percentage of men who have come from Buxton—

Q. You are speaking of men who are no longer available?—A. Who are no longer available for various reasons, medical and otherwise. Thirty per cent of these men would in all probability require convalescent accommodation in Canada after their arrival here.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How many men would the 30 per cent represent?—A. About 300 a month.

Q. Should that number be added to the 12,000?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have the recent casualties among the Canadian troops at the front led you to believe that that number will be exceeded?—A. No, sir, because the casualties must, like everything else, follow the law of averages. There is a limit to the loss a corps can sustain, and the casualties that we based our estimate on for 1916 include two very heavy periods of loss in June and September.

[Surgeon-General Guy Carleton Jones.]

Q. When you calculated that about 15,000 men would come back to Canada in 1917 did you expect that it would be at an even rate from month to month?—A. Yes, I did. It will work out fairly well in that way, too, unless the Canadian corps is pulled out of the field altogether for a couple of months at a time. However, that has never yet taken place. Since our troops went to France they have never been pulled out either as a division or corps.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. What do you mean by the phrase "pulled out"?—A. I mean pulled out of the firing line.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is the calculated wastage?—A. It is difficult to estimate.

Q. Now, go on with your statement?—A. The class of cases coming back to Canada are first of all the men who would be absolutely unfit for service. That is, men that the Medical Board in England have decided are unfit, for medical reasons, and there is a class that will require further treatment extending over a period, of say, six months, and the endeavour is to get those men back to Canada from England, but that is to be safeguarded, because we must always look to the very important point that we must keep up the strength in France and that the farther the man goes away from the firing line, the more difficult it is to get him back.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The policy is not to send back to Canada any man that might ultimately go back to the firing line?—A. Unless their treatment is for a long period of time, and that is guarded by the opinion of specialists, of Colonel Armstrong and, now, Colonel Primrose, and they advise the Canadian medical officers, as to what class of case should be operated on in England, and what class in Canada. There are certain cases we could not touch in England, under say, three, four or five months, and perhaps longer. Some of these cases we send out to Canada, but, it is carefully watched by the specialists, who see that no man is sent to Canada who should not be sent.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are the men suffering from various complaints, such as tuberculosis, carefully segregated in the ships when they are sent back?—A. On our hospital ships, they are.

Q. And the shell-shock cases and others?—A. For the mental cases there is special accommodation on the hospital ships.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Are any wounded sent back to Canada except on hospital ships?—A. Not recently, unless those who are not in medical hands; nobody under medical charge is now being sent back in other than hospital ships.

By the Chairman:

Q. What proportion of the returned cases are known as active cases?—A. There has been a great deal of confusion in the minds of the people out here as to what are active and what are not. An active case is a case which has not reached its finality as far as medical treatment is concerned. The cases to which I refer such as injury to the bone that cannot be operated on for six months on account of latent infection, are active cases, although they might not require operative treatment for six months or more.

[Surgeon-General Guy Carleton Jones.]

Q. By "active cases" here we generally infer, or generally mean, a case that will have to be sent to a regularly constituted hospital where medical or surgical attendance is always available, as distinguished from convalescent cases that may be sent to a home, where it is only a matter of rest, fresh air and good treatment and amusement. Have you any idea what proportion of the cases coming back would fall into those two categories?—A. No, I could not give that, because the class of cases will vary from time to time in England.

Q. Have you ample accommodation in England for all cases of what you might call an active character?—A. We have accommodation that will deal with the situation, but the accommodation for that special class of case, the orthopaedic, which covers a very large group of cases, has not been increased in proportion since it was decided to send these orthopaedic cases back to Canada.

Q. Is there any probability of any very great increase in the demand for hospital accommodation in England, that will render it advisable to send more than 1,300 cases per month to Canada?—A. It might not arise from Canadian cases, but it might arise from the English situation in this way: when an offensive is going to be made a "whip" will be sent around to the English hospitals, by the War Office, to get every available man out of the English hospitals; that will include Canadian as well as English, therefore the pressure, in a few days, becomes apparent on the Canadian Convalescent Hospitals. All classes of cases go to those hospitals, whether needing a week, a month or less under ordinary conditions, but in every case it is controlled by the lever which is at the Front.

Q. Have you ever been in that condition in England where you desired to send back some Canadian cases and were restrained from doing so by lack of accommodation here?—A. The only time I know of was when a cable was received asking for delay of—I do not remember how long, but think it was about three weeks—on account of the terminal facilities at Halifax and St. John not being ready.

Q. What would be the maximum number of Canadian cases that might be cared for in England without resulting in a persistent demand that a larger number be sent to Canada?—A. That depends entirely upon the English accommodation. The situation changes so rapidly that I could not give you the figures at the present time, but only a very short time ago the Director General of the English Medical Service made an extremely urgent demand for more beds in England; whether he got those beds or not, or what proportion of them he got, I do not know.

By the Chairman:

Q. There is no differentiation made between the Canadian and the British wounded in the primary care of them?—A. No, not in the primary care of them.

The CHAIRMAN: Then, General Jones, unless there is something you wish to add to what you have already told us, I would say that the committee is much indebted to you for the valuable information you have given us.

Witness discharged.

Examination of Major Todd resumed.

WITNESS: I was asked when I last gave evidence to compare the pensions paid in Canada with those of Great Britain and France. This (producing tabulated statement) is "A Table comparing Rates of Pensions for War Disabilities, for Widows and for children in Great Britain, France and Canada; with a suggestion for a new Canadian Pension Scale—all for a Private Soldier or Able-bodied Seaman."

Please look at the English scale, which came into force, on the 4th of April. Under that scale a man may receive a gratuity of not more than £200:—that is really a commutation of pension. For a disability of less than 20 per cent, or when the interest of the soldier demands it, pension and allowances may be commuted, as a gratuity, in a single payment of not more than £200. A man who gets the $1,000 can get nothing more. Such a gratuity is given to neurasthenics, who suffer from no physical disablement. A man receiving such a sum commences to spend it. In a few weeks he finds that his resources are diminishing and commences to work; occupation is the best cure for cases of that sort. The large gratuity is a far-seeing provision for a special class of cases, but it will be a very difficult thing to administer properly.

The CHAIRMAN: The difficulty is as soon as that $1,000 is gone, the man comes back for more.—A. Certainly.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. What is the lowest disability the English pension law recognizes?—A. The lowest class is 20 per cent.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. There is no pension under 20 per cent disability?—A. No, but there is compensation, by gratuity, for disabilities of less than 20 per cent.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. And that may be up to £200?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Would the man get the $1,000 for a disability of 19 per cent?—A. $1,000 would not be given for disability of 19 per cent. A lesser compensation would be given.

Q. The $1,000 is in lieu of a greater pension?—A. That is the idea.

Q. Speaking generally, how do the Canadian pensions compare with the British and the French? Are they higher or lower?—A. They are the most generous in the world.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are they more generous than the revised English pensions?—A. For the disabilities pensions, yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What do you mean by that answer?—A. Pensions given for disability.

Q. In what do they differ? They are all on account of disability?—A. No, sir, Great Britain has an alternative scheme, which compensates a man for economic loss.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Is that based upon his earning power?—A. The British, at the present time, give pensions in consideration of two factors, personal detriment, and economic detriment. They grant their pensions in accordance with the disability; but they permit men to receive what are called "alternative pensions"; that is, pensions in which the previous earning power of the pensioner is considered.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Is that based on the earning power of the man alone?—A. It is an alternative pension.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. Alternative for disability entirely, or disability with regard to his earning power?—A. It is the amount of money the man receives which is important. It does not much matter how he gets it; but if it is to the man's advantage to consider his previous earning power, then earnings are considered.

Q. It is absolutely alternative, but he cannot take it partly under one and partly under another?—A. No.

Q. This is to cover the case of a man who was getting a larger salary before his injury than he can earn afterwards?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. That is they have the alternative right to take it on the amount of their previous earnings or a straight pension if they choose?—A. The clause making the provision under discussion reads as follows:—

"3. Any disabled man pensioned under article I of this Our Warrant, who makes application and shows that the minimum pension with children's allowances (if any) which he has been granted, together with the average earnings (if any) of which he remains capable, are less than his pre-war earnings, may be granted, temporarily, or permanently, in lieu of the minimum pension and children's allowances, a pension, which, together with the average earnings (if any) of which he is judged capable, shall not exceed his pre-war earnings up to a maximum of fifty shillings a week, plus half of any pre-war earnings between fifty shillings and one hundred shillings a week."

That means that the maximum pension a man can get is 75 shillings per week in respect of his whole family, and that brings up the most important point in the whole question of pension legislation, it is the provision of a maximum amount for the pensions which may be granted in respect of an individual soldier or sailor.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Under that provision you would have this difficulty, that the man who is to be re-educated will have the amount of his pension reduced on account of his increased average earnings, as a result of re-education?—A. It is his "pre-war" earnings.

MR. MIDDLEBRO: But it says that his present earnings shall be taken into consideration, and that is entirely antagonistic to the principle we have adopted that the man's earning powers under our system shall not interfere with the amount of his pension.

By the Chairman:

Q. Now, Major Todd, will you be good enough to look over this memorandum setting forth the views of the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada, as contained in their recommendation passed at their meeting at Winnipeg on the 12th of April last. I might read it over and, as the various points are taken up, we will be glad to have you give us your views in regard to their recommendations?—A. It will be understood that they are my views and not those of the Pensions Commission?

Q. They will be your own personal views. (Reads):—

"This convention of delegates, representing Great War Veterans of Canada, deems it the immediate duty of the Government of the Dominion of Canada to readjust the whole pension scale for disabled men, and the dependents of those who have died for the Empire; that the pensions of the widows and mothers, which are especially unjust and inadequate, be increased without delay, widows and mothers of deceased soldiers being placed upon the same footing."

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Now, what is your opinion? Do you think the present pensions of widows and mothers of soldiers are adequate or should they be changed?—A. They should be on the same footing.

Q. You think they should be on the same footing?—A. It would seem proper to me, that they should be placed on the same footing.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. The mother would get 80 per cent, then the same as the widow does now?—A. Exactly.

By the Chairman:

Q. Under the present scale it is $32 per month to the widow and $24 to the mother?—A. That is right, sir.

Q. And is it your opinion, that they should both be $32 per month, or is it your opinion that $32 per month is not enough?—A. I do not wish to give an opinion, because I know of no figures obtainable in Canada, making it possible to state accurately the cost of living, and my conviction is that these pensions should be sufficient to ensure decent comfort.

Q. If the widow receives $32 per month, and she has no children, how would that compare with a widow's pension in England and a widow's pension in France under similar circumstances?—A. Our pensions are very, very much better. The widow in France receives only about $7.50 a month.

Q. As against $32 that we pay?—A. Ours is very much higher.

Q. And in the case of the widow in England, how does that compare?—A. She receives 13s. 9d. per week, that is about $13.75 per month.

The CHAIRMAN: That is what a British widow would receive, and ours, you will observe, are very much higher.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. The cost of living here is much higher than it is in England and France?—A. I am not prepared to make a statement about that; in some parts of Canada $32 a month will provide very decent comfort indeed.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: What could a woman do with $7.50 a month?

By the Chairman:

Q. Major, what would you think of a proposition to supplement the pension of the widow of a British reservist, where the widow resided in Canada, or the widow of a French reservist residing in Canada, so as to enable them to receive from their own Government and from the Canadian Government a total pension that would be equivalent to that of a Canadian widow?—A. I would like personally to see it done, sir.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: The chairman mentioned only British and French reservists. I suppose widows of Belgian and other reservists would be included.

The CHAIRMAN: I mentioned those two classes for illustration.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you think that the widow and the dependent mother should be placed on the same footing as regards pension?—A. Not exactly, sir, for this reason: The widow is dependent upon one man; the widowed mother may have several children, each responsible for the support of that mother. Each child is legally responsible, as in Quebec, or morally responsible as in certain of the other provinces, for the support of a necessitous parent.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Where, however, the widow is dependent upon one son, who is her sole support, and who has been killed, in your judgment should that widowed mother be treated as a widowed wife?—A. If that son were the sole support of that widowed mother, yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Those are the only classes who are supposed to go on the pension list?—A. The law reads: "Wholly or mainly dependent."

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Would you cut her allowance down to $60?—A. I would simply investigate each individual case. I think that the Government must replace to the uttermost farthing every personal loss due to the war. If one son has been killed in the service of the country, and the widowed, dependent mother has two other sons, the Government merely replaces the loss of the son who has died.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Supposing the one who was killed was the only one who contributed to his mother's support, that the others were married and had families of their own, and were financially unable to help their mother?—A. If that were true, I would say that she should receive the full amount.

Q. Have you power under the law to do that?—A. Absolutely, sir. Under the present law no distinction is made. It must be proved whether the mother was "wholly or mainly dependent."

By the Chairman:

Q. At present the maximum allowance to a widowed mother is $24 a month?—A. That is right.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. If a mother and a widow live together, would they each get a pension? It is very often the case that a widowed mother and a widowed wife live together; that is, a man may support his mother in the same house as his wife. If he is killed, can they both draw a pension?—A. I think, if there is a widow, that the widowed mother is not pensionable. (See section 22, Order in Council, P.C. 1334, June 3, 1916.)

Q. I think the provision is that a widowed mother must have been dependent on an unmarried son in order to get separation allowance?—A. I think it is so.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There must be such cases as Mr. Pardee has mentioned.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): I do not think the Government compensates the two cases.

By the Chairman:

Q. Now, take the second recommendation of the Great War Veterans' Association (reads):—

Therefore be it resolved that, in the opinion of this Convention, the present system of gratuities under the Pension Act should be abolished, the ratio of disability of the pensioner be reduced from 20 per cent, as at present, to 5 per cent.

Do you think it would be advisable that, instead of having five classes of pensioners, there should be ten classes with a 10 per cent difference in degrees?—A. Personally

[Major J. L. Todd.]

I am very much in favour of it. Here is the suggested scale which you asked me to draw up (indicating document). I want you to understand, gentlemen, that this is my personal suggestion, that it is not made as coming from the Pension Commissioners. On the right hand side this note appears: "For the purposes of exposition only, $40, the existing pension for total disability, is assumed to be a sum sufficient to ensure 'decent comfort.'" Class 1, 100 per cent would be awarded $40 per month, and the other class reduced with drops of $4 per month for each 10 per cent disability until we get down to "less than 10 per cent."

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In your suggestion there are twelve classes, starting at 5 per cent?—A. Practically, with the gratuity.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have worked this out on a 10 per cent basis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In each case, the man 100 per cent disabled would get $40 a month and the man 10 per cent disabled would get $4 a month, and if disabled less than 10 per cent he would get a gratuity of $200 or less?—A. Yes, or $2 a month.

Q. If he preferred it?—A. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: That is 12 per cent of $200 for life.

Extent of disability for certain injuries stated in rudimentary table.

Extent of disability from specific injuries stated in Order in Council.

For the purpose of exposition only, $40, the existing pension for total disability, is assumed to be a sum sufficient to assure "decent comfort."

A maximum of total pensionability in respect to each individual to be set.

Extent of disability for each injury to be estimated by Pension Commissioners.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your recommendation would be that the system of gratuities be practically abolished, and in lieu thereof that a minimum amount as low as $2 a month be given for the lowest degree of disability?—A. I would not abolish gratuities, sir, for awards of $100 or less. There are many men who would much prefer to have a lump sum of $100; it would be more useful to them than a small monthly gratuity. I would not like to see anything less awarded as a pension than $2 a month.

Q. That is low enough to go on a permanent basis?—A. That is my personal opinion, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Is your idea, according to your suggested table, that nobody would receive more than $40 a month?—A. Excuse me, you have not considered the necessity for attendance. Some men may require an attendant.

Mr. PARDEE: A totally disabled man gets an allowance for an attendant of $250 additional a year.

By the Chairman:

Q. The next recommendation of the Great War Veterans' Association is: (reads)

Also, that any decision of any board be not final, but that any man disabled and receiving a pension, or with claim to pension, have the right to appeal to another board than that formerly appeared before, whenever suffering increased disability.

Now, what have you to say with reference to that recommendation?—A. That has reference to boards of medical officers. At the present time that is precisely the procedure which we are endeavouring to follow. Sometimes it is necessary to employ the same board of medical officers again, but we try, whenever there is an appeal, to get an opinion from a different board of medical officers than that which made the first report.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You try to get a court of appeal?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. The recommendation of the Great War Veterans' Association proceeds as follows: (reads)

And further we protest against the unfair practice of Pension Board Headquarters reversing the recommendations of a local medical board, without ever seeking the man, or examining his condition.

What comment do you make on that?—A. On the face of it, that contention seems to be very sound; but I think, as a matter of fact, it is not sound, for these reasons: I referred to one point this morning, that the local medical board does not always have the full knowledge of a man's past history which we have at Headquarters. A second reason is that local medical men do not always have an accurate knowledge of the extent of disability which results from a given injury that we do have at Headquarters on account of our great experience. I have seen the proceedings of a board of medical officers in which the disability consequent upon the loss of one eye was put down at 100 per cent. I mean exactly what I say. I do not mean that there was pain or other complication; to estimate the loss of one eye as a 100 per cent disability is absurd.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is that disability not fixed by Order in Council?—A. Yes. But local medical boards sometimes make estimates of disability which are not in accordance with the facts.

Q. Which are clearly wrong?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. As I remember the evidence, Major Todd, the principal objection raised by the returned soldiers was that the recommendation of the local medical board who saw and examined the man was revised or altered by the Headquarters of the Pension Board on documentary evidence only, they never seeing the man. Would it not be better in that case to have the man brought to Ottawa and re-examined?—A. I think it would be impossible, sir, on account of the long distances. I think that the point is quite completely and well covered by existing instructions which are sent to the medical men examining for pensions purposes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What are those instructions?—A. They are told that the thing we want from them, above all, is an accurate description of precisely the condition existing. Medical men are supposed to be able to express fairly accurately on paper that which they observe. If an accurate description is obtainable I think that it is possible for a central board to justly, efficiently, and equitably administer pensions without actually seeing the man applying for a pension.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. When you revise the findings of a medical board, you do it by correspondence?—A. Absolutely.

By the Chairman:

Q. What happens is this: the applicant is examined by the medical board. The medical board, rightly or wrongly, tell the applicant what their decision is?—A. They have been asked not to tell applicants the extent of disability.

Q. The applicant goes away understanding that the medical board has recommended him for, say, 80 per cent disability. He has his finding revised and cut down to, say, 60 per cent disability. He says: "The board which actually examined me in the flesh considered me disabled 80 per cent; the board which has not seen me at all considers me disabled only 60 per cent." The man thinks he has a grievance. How will you meet that condition?—A. If the man is of the opinion that he has a grievance, he should write a letter to the Pensions Commission and make a complaint; he can always appeal and get another examination.

Q. Your reply is, that, if dissatisfied with the ultimate finding of the Headquarters Pension Board, the right to appeal is open to him, and that probably the second examination would also be by a local board composed, if possible, of different men.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Has he the choice of naming one member of the board?

Mr. PARDEE: Let the witness answer the question.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Would he go before the same board for the second examination?—A. Not necessarily. In some instances, yes. If possible, we try to get a different board. If there still seems to be cause for complaint we get a specialist to report on the applicant. In one of the cases named in the evidence concerning which you will probably question me, we have made arrangements for the man to go to Montreal to be examined by a specialist.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. When it comes down to the last analysis, if a man appeals and is not satisfied, he has the right to reappeal, and when he does so you will give him the very best help you can in the way of a specialist?—A. We are there as the soldiers' trustees, and we finally refuse no pension until we three commissioners are satisfied that there is no right to pension.

Q. But he has two appeals before that is decided?—A. He can appeal as often as he wishes. We do not limit his right to appeal.

Q. He always has two appeals?—A. I would not say that. There are some cases, Mr. Pardee, where it would be useless to give a man two appeals, say, the case of one of those poor fellows named in the evidence, with syphilis. One of the cases cited is such a case. He is, from the reports we receive, a pretty bad man. It would be useless to permit that man to appeal twice.

By the Chairman:

Q. Yet he can go to certain newspapers and get all the columns of space he wants?—A. Part of the press has been very good in referring complaints to us first before publishing them.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Do you have many appeals from the findings of the local boards?—A. My answer to that question is, no. We are granting about a thousand pensions a month, and yet your committee is sitting and has received only 40 complaints. I cannot give you offhand the figures of how many complaints we have received. I can get them.

By the Chairman:

Q. I think it would be well if you would let us know what proportion of cases are appealed?—A. We have only sat as a formal commission, I think it is, twice, to hear an appeal. The pensioners have the right, under Order in Council P.C. 1334 of June 3, 1916, to appeal to the Commissioners.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Do the local boards comply with the conditions set forth in your forms?—A. The war was a new thing, a new experience for us all. Every one with whom I have come in official contact since the war commenced, with negligible exceptions, is doing his very best. My answer then is; that there are not more inaccuracies than one might expect. On the whole, the boards are accurate.

Q. You have told us that some of the boards have put down the disability for the loss of one eye at 100 per cent, which would indicate that they are not always accurate?—A. That happened in Great Britain, sir; I saw it in England when I was on service overseas.

Q. Would it not be more satisfactory to have a permanent board to examine these men rather than to select a board that had not been doing, possibly, any work of that kind? Would it not be more satisfactory to have permanently on the job men who thoroughly understand the work, and whose findings would be uniform, than to take the findings of boards appointed practically for the sake of convenience?—A. I hope they are not appointed "practically for the sake of convenience." I know that the Director General of Medical Services has been asked to appoint the best boards he can get, that representations have been made to him of the necessity of good boards. The situation is this: while the Pensions Commission recognize that it is responsible for having good medical advice, they wish to use it until they have reason to believe that the existing machinery is at fault; and our opinion, I think, is that the existing machinery at the present time has not been shown to be at fault and is doing its work quite well.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. When dealing with the soldier whose language is French, do you generally have a board the members of which understand that language?—A. That seems to be an absolutely essential provision.

Q. We have had complaints from witnesses, who have told us that a man was examined by a doctor who could not understand French at all. This witness spoke very bad English, and he complained that he could not explain his case in English as he would like to have explained it, and as he would have been able to explain it in his own language. Do the local boards speak French?—A. I think that the A.D.M.S. of a district would certainly see to it himself that they do when dealing with a French-speaking soldier.

Q. In the province of Quebec it is all right, because all the practitioners there understand French, but in the other provinces that might not be the case. Has any change been made in that respect?—A. That is a military matter. I could not answer the question.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. What is your opinion about an examination being made by a permanent board?—A. I think it would be preferable, when it is possible to have it, as in a large military district, where a number of medical men are available who have had great experience in board work. The arrangement in France seems to me very excellent. They have, I think, only two boards in each French department; the personnel of those boards is very carefully selected. The boards sit only in the hospital centres, where they are able to obtain reports from specialists and where there is every facility that a properly equipped hospital can give for making diagnoses. The question in Canada is a rather difficult one. Ours is a big country, with a scattered population, and hospital centres are few and far between. Whenever it is necessary to do so, pensioners are brought into the centres to be examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. Just there, when you ask a pensioner to come into a centre to be examined, who pays his railway fare?—A. Up to the present the transportation arrangements are made under the authority of the officer commanding the military district concerned.

Q. If the man has been discharged from the service?—A. Even though he be discharged from the service.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Provision is made only for the railway fare; it does not include any other expenses?—A. At the present time, I think only the railway fare.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What is the centre in Military District No. 2 for examination?—A. Toronto.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are there any other centres, besides Toronto, in District No. 2?—A. There is one at Hamilton, and there might be centres elsewhere, if it were desirable to form them.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. There has been a great deal of criticism regarding the examination made by medical men in the different battalions, that their examination was not sufficiently strict, and that in the final examination before the boards, prior to the battalion proceeding overseas, a great many men were rejected who should undoubtedly have been rejected at the outset. Was that due to some extent, to the fact that these examinations were made by the local boards, instead of the regular boards? (No answer.)

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. In looking at the matter from the standpoint of efficiency, would it be better to have the board composed of men of the highest standing in the medical and surgical profession?—A. You cannot get too good men for the medical board.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do I understand you to be of the opinion that if there had been a permanent board the result might, in some ways, have been different in the past?—A. Without going into the question of how the board is to be appointed, I would say that a permanent board would, in my opinion, do better work than a frequently changing, temporary one. But please do not understand me as in any way saying that the existing boards have not done their work well.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. But if you were starting all over again?—A. My opinion is that a permanent board, sitting always in a hospital centre, would do better work than a temporary one. But it must be considered also whether or not it would be in the public interest, or of the men concerned, to make men come in to Toronto, say, from Owen Sound, for examination, when it would be perfectly possible to get sound medical opinion on their particular disabilities in Owen Sound; our distances are very great.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And if it were necessary to have a special examination, you could bring the man to wherever the specialist was?—A. That is done now.

Q. On the other hand, if you had a permanent board, you would also require to have some other board to which a man could appeal if he were not satisfied with the determination of that board.?—A. If you carry out that suggestion.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Here is a point that I would like to have made quite clear: a man goes before the board and is not satisfied with the decision of that board, and asks for another board; the second board confirms the decision of the first board; would your board here rest upon the decision of the two boards?—A. If we think there is the slightest shadow of doubt we would consider it, but in a case of syphilis, it would be useless to waste that man's time and the time of everybody else by holding repeated examinations.

Q. It would in such cases be useless to waste the board's time, you say?—A. Under the authority of the Order in Council, the Board of Pension Commissioners has exclusive jurisdiction over the granting of pensions. Forgetting that I am a commissioner, I think that arrangement a most excellent one; the members of the board look upon themselves as the soldiers' trustees, and a trustee is a man who looks after the interests of his principals.

By the Chairman:

Q. Take the next clause (reads):

Further be it resolved that, if it be established upon proper medical authority, that any man die, as a direct or indirect, result of injuries received, or disease contracted or aggravated in the course of his duties, while in the service, his dependents shall be entitled to full benefits under the pension scheme.

--A. My personal opinion is that every disability due to service, no matter when it occurs, is pensionable.

Q. So that if a man came back here, and after his discharge, died, and it is shown to be directly or indirectly the result of disease contracted or injury received, while on [Major J. L. Todd.]

service, his widow should have a pension?—A. Cut out the word “indirect,” I do not understand what it means; if a man’s death is due to military service his widow should, in my opinion, be pensioned.

Q. No matter what time may have elapsed between the receipt of the injuries and the death?—A. That is my opinion, my personal opinion. I think that by a careful efficient medical service, the country can be sufficiently guarded against fraud and that compensation should be given for personal detriment due to service no matter when it ensues.

Q. He has the option of appeal at any time if his disability is due to service, and, as you have in connection with every discharged soldier, his whole medical dossier on file, you can compare the report of a subsequent examination with the examination that would indicate his condition at the time of his discharge?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Surely you would put a limit on that?—A. I would not; public interest can be safeguarded by providing a reliable medical service. There will be cases of hardship if some such provisions is not made.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. The British Pension Law has the same idea—could you give an instance in which such provision as you speak of would be necessary?—A. Take the case of a man who had received a head injury and later became subject to epileptic fits.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. He might be discharged from the service, when apparently well and seven or eight years afterwards he might become ill as a result of his injury?—A. As a result of the injury.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I had a case of assault once, where a man was injured, but the result of the injuries was not disclosed until four or five years afterwards and he got $1,000 damages.

By the Chairman:

Q. The next clause is as follows (reads):

Further be it resolved that, in the opinion of this Convention, the pension of the widow and the widowed mother be no less than that of the totally disabled pensioner, and further that the pensions for children be materially increased.”

That we have already discussed, the pensions for widows and mothers.

Mr. Ross: That resolution goes further; we discussed the widows and mothers, but that asks that the pensions be increased still further.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is your opinion with regard to the pension of the widow and the widowed mother, should they be the same?—A. I prefer to take it from another point of view because the question of children is introduced in this recommendation. Under the present regulations, if there are ten children, $60 per month; I would rather see a maximum fixed limiting the total amount of pensions awardable in respect of any individual. I think it would be best to draw a pension scheme, which would say that the total amount of pension that could be awarded in respect to one soldier would be, let us say, as a basis for argument $720, or any sum you choose that would enable a man and his dependents to live decently. That sum would represent that which the soldier could earn if he were alive. Under such an arrangement, with a maximum of $720 yearly it would not be possible for a family of ten children to receive $60 per month for the children alone. Six dollars per month is, possibly, too little for a single child, but $60 for ten children is probably, too much.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

In discussing the pensions of widows and children, the question of "overhead" household expenses must be considered. Under former pension proposals the French recognized the necessity for maintaining the household by providing that, when a man died, a part of his pension went to his widow, so as to increase her pension in order to enable her to meet household expenses. Possibly there may be sound basis for this recognition, and it might be well if widows with us received a little more money in order to carry on properly the overhead expenses of their households. As for children's pensions, I would like to have a sliding scale for them, as in England. There the first child gets 5/, the second gets 4/2d, and so on. These are, of course, too small amounts for Canada, but the principle is a sound one.

The CHAIRMAN: The next clause deals with separation allowances, which does not come within the scope of Major Todd's labours.

The next clause reads as follows (reads):—

Further, we protest against the practice of the present Pension Board Headquarters, deducting any part, or remitting any part of a pensioner's allowance to any other party save the pensioner himself, in fulfilment of any claims, asserted by either civil or military authorities and interests, as pensions are, by Act of Parliament, absolutely unattachable for debt.

They have a grievance there?—A. I do not know just exactly what is meant; but I think that part of the complaint has been relieved by the Order in Council, P.C. 508, of February 17, 1917, under which no deductions are made from the pension on account of overpayments to soldiers during service. Under existing legislation, if a man is unworthy or improvident, and cannot look after his family, pension money is not paid to him, but to an administrator, so that it will be expended properly.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Who appoints the administrator, is he somebody appointed by the Board?—A. Yes.

Q. Or is he appointed by the court?—A. That is right, or by us.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What is the course of proceeding in that case?—A. We try as much as possible to use the provincial machinery.

Q. That would be all right if you do that?—A. We do our best to use it.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you appoint the wife as administrator in any case?—A. I do not know whether we have done so, but it would seem desirable to do so in some cases.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You consider the matter carefully, and get all the information you can to guide?—A. We get all the information we can from the Patriotic Fund or from any other source.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you take any security from the administrator?—A. I cannot answer that question, I think we intend to do so in some instances.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is there any special member of the Board who looks after that particular class of cases?—A. We have a legal adviser.

Q. Who is he?—A. Mr. Archibald.

Q. He lives here in Ottawa?—A. Yes he lives in Ottawa.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Is he employed temporarily or permanently?—A. During our pleasure.

Q. I mean is he a permanent official of the board?—A. He gives his whole time to the board.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. He is the board's legal adviser?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. You think that your medical boards should be composed, as far as possible, of men who have been overseas?—A. I would not say that; but it is very essential that men who have been overseas, and who have had overseas experience, should be members of the medical boards—for this reason, they have a practical knowledge of the affections to which soldiers are especially subject, of shell-shock, for instance.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Have you many cases of malingering?—A. The cases of pure malingering, that is of men who are purely attempting deception, or clean through, are extremely rare; there are cases where people suffering from shell-shock may apparently be classed under that heading, but the real malingerers are very few.

The CHAIRMAN: That completes the matters referred to in the memorandum, regarding the subjects of pensions. The remainder of the memorandum of the Great War Veterans' Association deals with the allotments of land, and the Committee have not dealt with that subject this morning. Mr. Knight, secretary of the Great War Veterans' Association, is here, and before Major Todd leaves this subject, if Mr. Knight wishes to put any question he may do so.

Mr. N. F. R. KNIGHT: I do not wish to put any questions. I might state in justice to the Board of Pension Commissioners that much of the difficulty we have been meeting with has come through the men not understanding to what they were entitled. Many of the matters dealt with in the different resolutions have already been settled; for instance, the matter of deducting pay from a pension cheque. In many cases, men were overpaid, or their wives had drawn more money than was coming to them, or the men themselves have drawn pay, and losing their lives on the battlefield, this money was deducted from the cheque of the wife. There was a great deal of difficulty at one time in this connection, and until a few months ago many complaints were coming in. Since that time, as I understand it, the new Order in Council, No. 508, has done away with that thing entirely, and we did not know that that order had been passed by the Government. We now number over seven thousand men, and members are coming in every day; for instance, yesterday I got more than four hundred new memberships; we think we will have at least 350,000 or 400,000 members ultimately active and associate. If we could be informed of the passing of such orders, I could let all the locals know about them. We believe that the men go to us with complaints more than to the officers of the Pensions Commissioners.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it expected that you will be permanently in Ottawa and act as a clearing-house for all soldiers' complaints?

Mr. KNIGHT: We have a permanent office in the Citizen Building in Ottawa. As time goes on we shall need much larger quarters. At the present time complaints will come to me from the returned soldiers. We find that some men go around and begin to spread reports. Many of them have grievances which they have never tried to have remedied at the proper source. If they would come to us instead of telling everybody their troubles, and making people dissatisfied and thinking that the returned soldier is not being justly treated, it would be far better. We really think that the powers now are really trying to do for the returned soldier all they possibly can do, but we do not want the returned men to go about telling other people all their grievances. Let them come to us and we will take the matter up with the proper authorities.

The CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Mr. Knight.

Examination of Major Todd resumed.

By the Chairman:

Q. We have now the individual cases which have been cited throughout sessions of the Committee, which, to a certain extent, will test the efficiency both of the service of the various departments concerned and the spirit of the complaints. Will you give us briefly, Major Todd, a report in so far as your Department is affected, by the complaints in these forty cases. We will refer to them as "Case 1" and so on. I will read the complaint of Case No. 1 (reads):

Examined by a medical board 28th November, 1916, discharge to date from 28th December: was recommended for pension at $16 per month; not yet received any word. Departmental reply, March 31, 1917, all papers not yet located; he is to be awarded class 4 pension, $96 for six months with effect from December 28 last.

—A. This means papers were found shortly after the evidence was given. He was then immediately awarded a pension of $16 a month dating from December 29, 1916, for six months; he to be then medically re-examined. Cheque was immediately forwarded to him and it is believed that his grievance exists no longer.

Q. Why were the papers difficult of location?—A. They were mislaid.

Q. It was a case of carelessness?—A. Yes, that is one of the cases where there was a grievance. If we had heard of the grievance earlier it would have been remedied earlier.

Q. Case No. 2 (reads):

Discharged by several boards; recommended for full pension; matter taken up with district pension officer; Toronto board raised a plea of negligence; pension cut down; previous boards never raised the question of negligence.

—A. This is a case of syphilis, sir. The medical board held at Shorncliffe on May 15, 1916, stated that this man's disability was not due in any way to his service; it was, hemiplegia resulting from syphilitic thrombosis. He was only in France for three weeks and received no head injury. The condition would equally readily have appeared in civil life. His incapacity was total. A medical board held at the discharge depot found his disability to be right sided hemiplegia from syphilitic thrombosis. Medical board held at Central Military Convalescent Hospital, Toronto, found his incapacity almost total and suggested two months further treatment. Medical board held at Central Military Convalescent Hospital, Toronto, on November 24, 1916, found that his disease was right-side hemiplegia caused by syphilis, aggravated three-fifths by service. We awarded him a pension of $480 for one year, and a pension for his child. This award was made on July 21, 1916. On December 19 the medical adviser of the board found that the disability was due of luetic origin. In other words, it was due to negligence. He suggested, however, that the disease was hastened by six months, or possibly one year, by reason of his active service, and he recommended that the pension cease at the expiration of the pension year.

Q. That is, that it would not have broken out for another six months or a year?

—A. We gave the man the benefit of every doubt.

Q. In this case the service antedated his breakdown?—A. Yes. This case has been notified that his pension will be discontinued at the expiration of the period for which it was granted. No further action is indicated under existing legislation.

Q. Case 3 (reads):

A physical wreck; two fingers of his hand taken off, and the hand is drawn in; discharged at Quebec, November 17, 1916, with a gratuity of $55. Has been reboarded, and has since been granted a pension of $8 per month.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

—A. There is no doubt that this case is one where the description given by the first medical board was insufficient. On getting a better description, the claim was adjusted. This man rightly complained.

Q. That was an appeal case, where the man had just grounds for appeal, and where the result of the appeal benefited him?—A. Yes.

Q. Case 4. (reads):—

Arrived in Canada, 3rd October, 1915; discharged October 7; pension 5th January, 1916, at $8 per month; given temporary employment in post office; poor health; bad case of trench rash; discharged because of defective eyesight; trench rash not mentioned in discharge; compelled to leave work for two periods, 41 days and 30 days; ordered to hospital November 25, 1916; discharged December 23; all this time income was $8; requests that case be reconsidered by Pension Commissioners for reinstatement in class 2 or as an alternative that a gratuity equal to 27 days' full pay with allowance and subsistence plus $37 the amount of his hospital bill be paid.

What have you to say in regard to case 4?—A. It is a very long story. The medical board held at Shorncliffe, September 9, 1915, found his disability to be defective eyesight, bad teeth, and pain on walking in great toe of right foot. His disability was found to be one-quarter. He was awarded a pension of $75 per annum for one year from January 5, 1916. A medical board held later in 1916 found that he had a great many scars on his shoulders and back. These scars were the result of boils, and had been troubling him for nine months. There was also a rash all over his back and shoulders. His capacity for earning a livelihood was estimated lessened 40 per cent. The board recommended that he be put on pay until such time as improvement would justify it and then be reboarded. Probably duration of present condition will be three months. On November 1, 1916, the Director General of Medical Division found that the conditions complained of bear no relation to his service, and the medical adviser to the Pensions Board concurred. The man's pension was adjusted to Class 5. You know, board of medical officers writes its proceedings and sends them to the A.D.M.S., then to the D.G.M.S., both of whom certify to its correctness. Another board was held on January 3, 1917, which said that this man had pain in walking in his right great toe, followed by pain and swelling, that this condition was much worse than before enlistment and never troubled him before enlistment. It also reported that the scars on the man's shoulders and back showed deep seated inflammation which developed in the trenches in 1915, and which prevented him working three months out of the previous six. He had recently been in hospital eight weeks. This board stated that his capacity for earning a livelihood was lessened fifty per cent for six months. A special report was made with regard to his eyesight by a specialist in which it was stated: "Eyes will be o.k. with proper correction of glasses." On January 25 the man's pension was discontinued for the reason that there had been no disability due to or resulting from active service. The rash and boil condition was considered to have nothing whatever to do with his service. As a result of this complaint his case is being gone into carefully in a detailed way by the Commission—no appeal was ever made to the Commission. The opinion of our medical adviser is that since the staphylococcus infection was first reported on October 16, 1916, it can scarcely be said that it was not due to service, and that the reinfection from staphylococci was therefore not the result of service either, and that the theory weakened resistance by service should not apply. The whole thing is being gone into again.

Q. Case 5 (reads):

Discharged from hospital with skull fractured, two by two and a half inches; is working in this condition; skull has no protection; has since been reinstated in class 2 for treatment and everything regarding his case is proceeding satisfactorily.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

—A. This case is coming up for a pension again in the ordinary course.

Q. The complaint is practically withdrawn. Case 6 (reads):

Gassed and wounded; discharged at Quebec, October 15, 1915; ordered to hospital, April 14, 1916, where he remained until November 5, 1916; Government paid portion of hospital charges; still owing $100.50 for period from September 9 to November 5. Pension granted $16 a month to March 31, 1917; compelled to go to work February 22 though not really fit.

—A. This is a case which would now come under Order in Council No. 508; that is, he would receive continued treatment. The question here really should be dealt with by the military authorities who have now taken over the work of the Military Hospitals Commission. There is no question of pension there.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Is it a question of medical treatment?—A. Yes. Our opinion is that there is no pension question here.

By the Chairman:

Q. Case No. 7 (reads):

Man's throat pierced by bullet, opened jugular vein, came out in collar bone. Discharged at Quebec, October 14, 1915. Is subject to violent fits; is a locomotive fireman but not able to follow previous work; pension $8 a month granted 21st August, 1916, for six months; Board of Pension Commissioners requested independent examination; doctor reported permanent disability higher than his pension was based upon.

—A. The case is coming up for medical re-examination. When we heard of the complaint we asked for more information.

Q. This is an appeal case?—A. We are having it re-examined, sir, in order to deal with it.

Q. Case No. 8 (reads):

Discharged 17th April, 1916, and paid $82 instead of $150. Eye glasses had been prescribed but never furnished; had been medically examined for catarrh, liver and kidney trouble. Health is growing worse; receives no pension or assistance of any kind.

A. This is another case of syphilis. The disease was contracted ten years ago and the man's eyes were always short in sight.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Has the man any grievance?—A. The Pensions Commission is of the opinion that it can take no action under existing legislation.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. The statement was made in the House recently that syphilis was very extensive among the soldiers. Is that so?—A. I think it is a sound statement.

Q. Is it worse when they come back?—A. It is in the whole country, sir.

HON. MR. MARCIL: Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement that syphilis is becoming so general, is any action being taken by the military authorities to treat these men, or are they allowed to roam through the land?

The WITNESS: They are very carefully treated.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. When they are discharged, what treatment do they get? The hon. member for West Peterboro said that half the country would be infected with syphilis before long?—A. He is not rightly informed. Soldiers will be treated in the military hospitals.

Q. Yes, if they are willing to submit to the treatment. Is there any compulsory measure under which you can treat them against their will?—A. You cannot put any restrictions on a discharged soldier that you will not put upon any civilian.

Q. After discharge, if they get no treatment—

The CHAIRMAN: They are civilians then.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Would it not be important for this Committee to consider this question and make some recommendation?

The CHAIRMAN: As Major Todd says, if it is a disease not incident to the war in any way, no treatment could be given it that would not be given to all civilians.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. In the case we have been dealing with, was the disease contracted prior to or subsequent to overseas service?—A. It was contracted ten years ago, and he was always short-sighted.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. He got no pension?—A. No.

By the Chairman:

Q. Did he go overseas?—A. I think so, I am certain he did; he came back through the discharge depot.

Q. Case 9. (Reads):

Arrived in Canada 23rd February, 1916; medically examined by board at Montreal and recommended for pension on basis of 75 per cent disability; Ottawa board reduced amount to 50 per cent; has been receiving only 40 per cent, or $16 per month; lost an eye when wounded, also suffering from skull fracture.

—A. This is a case where his disability only permits of the man receiving the pension which was awarded to him. His disability is the loss of the right eye, and he complains of weakness and poor vision of the left eye. The medical specialist says that there is practically nothing wrong with his left eye.

Q. He is receiving a pension of $16 a month or 40 per cent?—A. His disability is estimated at 50 per cent. If there were 10 classes of pension he would probably receive a slightly higher pension.

Q. Case No. 10 (reads):

Discharged at Quebec, 6th August, 1915, pensioned 28th January, 1916, at $132 per annum for one year; pension readjusted May 13, at $33 per month, and again on 21st December, 1916, from old scale to new scale. Complains that he did not receive sufficient separation allowance; had been paid $90 separation allowance from 1st March to 15th July, 1916, whilst under treatment; has to collect separation allowance due him for the time he was put back in hospital.

—A. This is a case for treatment, sir.

Q. He complains that he did not receive sufficient separation allowance. This is not a pension case, but if you can give us any information regarding his complaint, please do so.—A. It would not occur in the future. The procedure under Order in Council P.C. 508 of February 24, 1917, is not retroactive, so that this man has apparently no means of obtaining pay of separation allowance unless the Militia Department makes it a special case. If he gets treatment in future, he will be replaced upon pay and allowances in the usual way.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. Case No. 11 (reads):

Recommended in England for third class pension for one year; discharged at Quebec 25th September, 1915; his leg broke out after two months' work, ordered to hospital; at hospital three months; bed patient five months and kept two months longer. Received six months' pension in Canada and a pension cheque for $11 while in hospital. Wants to know why he was not paid for period while in hospital. Departmental reply; "This man's disability, arthritis, was not due to military service, given free treatment in a convalescent home, and, under the circumstances, he was not entitled to draw pay and allowance."

—A. I will read the memoranda, sir (reads):

This man was awarded a third class pension from December 22, 1915. He claims that he was cut off the pension list without being re-boarded, in March, 1917. This is not a true statement of the case. He was actually cut off from pension on October 1, 1916, on the authority of the medical board dated June 7, 1916, which stated that he had no disability due to service. The decision in this case is accurate, as the arthritis from which he was suffering was not due to his service, although he was given free treatment in a convalescent home.

The point there is, his disability was not due to service.

Q. Was it aggravated by service?—A. I will look up the case; there is no disability due to his service.

Case 12 (reads):

Discharged in Montreal, pensioned at $8 per month; got two cheques totaling $20.10; had been overpaid on L.P.C. and pension money stopped. Departmental reply: "After this man returned to Canada a last pay certificate was received from England, showing a debit balance of $21.30. This was 'on account of stoppage for venereal disease.' Complaint further sets forth that he has not been given statutory increase at Customs Department where he has worked for five years."

In case a man is confined to a hospital because of venereal disease contracted whilst in service, does his pay cease while in hospital?—A. It does not cease, sir. When the war started a sum of 15 cents a day was deducted from his pay for his treatment, that sum was afterwards increased to 50 cents a day.

Q. If the man, then who had been so debited should be killed, would that be deducted from his wife's pension?—A. Under the present legislation, no; no deduction is made from the wife's pension.

Q. What was the provision of the old law?—A. Nothing, except that all overpayments made to the pensioned man were deducted, that was all.

Q. But that is no longer done?—A. I am not sure about that, if the man is in debt I think it is deducted from the man himself.

Q. The next case is No. 13.—A. The evidence in this case shows no pension complaint, but only a complaint with regard to his discharge documents. This is a question for the military authorities to answer.

Q. Case No. 14 (reads):

"Enlisted 9th November, 1914; discharged 14th October, 1915; pension granted, $21 per month for one year; pension stopped before he was reboarded; reboarded 16th February, but has not heard since. Submitted to Department

[Major J. L. Todd.]

March 31."

—A. This man was returned to Canada medically unfit owing to destruction of right eye and decreased vision of the left eye, following gunshot wound. Medical Board which examined him at Shorncliffe, on July 26, 1915, found him to be totally incapacitated. The Medical Board held at Quebec, on October 11, 1915, concurred as to the disability, but were of opinion that the man was incapacitated to the extent of three-quarters, with a possible improvement to one-half. He was awarded a second degree pension under the old scale, for one year, from January 11, 1916, which was later adjusted to a class III pension for that period. On December 6, 1916, the General Officer Commanding Military District No. 5 was requested to have this man medically re-examined. On December 18, that officer advised this office that the man had not reported, although he had been written to twice. On February 22, 1917, the General Officer Commanding Military District No. 4 sent in a medical report. Up to that time the Commission had been unable to discover this man's address. Continuance of pension at the rate of class IV went forward on the 1st March, 1917. A cheque for $178.29, being the amount of pension due to date, and adjustment for the past pension period, was mailed to him on March 12. His complaint seems, therefore, now to be covered. There is apparently no evidence before the Returned Soldiers' Committee on this case. It was brought to the attention of our board by the Militia Department.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. I see by that report that the pension which was at first classed No. III was reduced by the Board to Class IV, why was that?—A. You can understand there is a period of accommodation during which a man becomes accustomed to his disability; since the disability is greater during that period a larger pension is given during it, but the pension that is given when the period of accommodation is past, is given only for the disability that then exists, therefore, it is reduced. He was re-examined on February 22 by the General Officer Commanding, and the degree of disability at that time was not as great as it was when the Board was first held.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And he was given the higher pension right down to that date?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. The next case is No. 15 (reads):

"Discharged 22nd September, 1915, as physically unfit; given three months pay ($50) pending settlement; given first degree pension for one year; medically examined 13th December, and rated as three-quarters disabled; pension reduced to $16 per month, and so notified January 16, 1917; underwent seven operations in the hospital and unable to follow any occupation; considers he is entitled to full pension. Submitted to Department March 31."

—A. This is a very long case. It is being investigated, and his claim will be given reconsideration as soon as the result of the investigation is received. It is a case of nerve-suture, and it is very possible that the man may not get his final pension for some time.

Q. Case No. 16.—Overpayment, claims that no explanation is given and considered he should have been allowed to look at receipts and ascertain that he has been overpaid.

—A. The complaint in this case is the same as that of No. 12, and the remarks in that connection apply to this case as well.

Q. Case No. 17 (reads):

"Badly wounded about the legs at battle of St. Julien, April 23, 1915—has to use crutches—has to lay off from work from time to time—pension $8 per month—witness submits that this man should be granted a higher pension."

[Major J. L. Todd.]

—A. This man was granted a pension of $8 a month, as dating from September 16, 1916, for one year. His disability is described as "foot-drop" sciatic nerve. Some time ago the wound in his heel re-opened; he refused treatment in the Military Hospital and was then informed that he could have treatment at his own home at his own expense. From the papers he probably has all the pension he is entitled to, but the man's case has been re-opened, and instructions have been given for further medical examination, with the object of discovering whether his pension should be increased or not.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is it the custom to allow the man to be treated by his own physician?—A. Speaking in general terms, I think it would be highly inadvisable to allow men to choose their own physician.

Q. There are some cases where the men would have greater faith in their own physician than in the military physician.—A. My opinion is, and I hold it very strongly, that in a matter where public money is being paid, the Government should have the right to say precisely what treatment should be given, and who should give it.

By the Chairman:

Q. Case No. 18 (reads):

"Disfigured for life. His jaw is turned sideways—pension $8 per month. Witness submits that a higher pension should be paid this man, since for the loss of one's nose, a returned soldier is placed in a higher class."

—A. This is a case where, perhaps, there is some sound foundation for complaint; the description given might permit of a higher pension being awarded than the amount given and another examination is being made with the object of discovering whether the pension should not be increased or further treatment given.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Has the attention of the Pension Board been called to the work that is being done in France, in the way of restoring disabled men who have been disfigured?—A. There is a special hospital for that treatment under the English service.

Q. Is there any special provision or facilities in Canada for the treatment of men who have been badly disfigured?—A. I do not know whether there is or not.

Q. Have any representations been made as to the necessity for the provision of such facility?—A. I think that will be done by the Medical Corps. General Jones is responsible for seeing that the men get the best possible treatment.

Q. Case No. 19 (reads):

Teeth knocked out—bullet in hip—pension $8 per month—suggested that his pay should be higher.

—A. This case is the same as No. 18.

Q. Case No. 20 (reads):

Medical report declared this man insane—had his palate removed while he was a soldier—right side partially paralyzed; deaf of both ears—has a wife and family—no pension and he is a public charge—has been discharged from hospital.

—A. This is a sad case. The medical board at Bramshott, on January 24, 1916, stated that this man's disability was due to infection, and would lessen his capacity three-quarters. It said nothing more than that. The medical board at the discharge depot states the cause of disability as being chronic otitis media developed while on service at Valcartier. His hearing is markedly defective, in both ears. Vision of right eye poor, unable to count fingers at three feet. Degree of incapacity one-half, due to service. Medical board held on June 21, found him to be suffering from chronic otitis media, laryngitis, and possible imbecility. The origin of the imbecility dated from since his return to Canada. There is a suggestion of syphilitic origin, and a recommendation that he be sent to the Provincial Hospital for insane for observation. Medical board held August 1, 1916, gives the disability as dementia, defective vision and deafness. Gives as cause of the disability, alcohol. Disability total. On August 30, our medical adviser felt that this man's insanity was due to negligence, but suggested that something be done for the children. A letter was received from the Children's Aid Society on September 21, from which the following is quoted:

The little children of this man were in absolute destitute circumstances when taken over by the society. The father is mentally sick as a result of alcoholism, and the mother morally unfit to care for or protect the children. They were in a starving and sickly condition when we found them.

—A Medical board was held on this man on October 16, 1916, which found his disability to be dementia due to alcohol, and recommended that owing to his unsatisfactory home conditions, he be sent to the almshouse. Class IV pension was awarded to this man.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Awarded to whom?—A. To the man.

Q. But to whom was it paid?—A. An administrator was appointed to receive and administer the pension and to see that the man's children were properly cared for.

The CHAIRMAN: The man's condition is due to his own abuse.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And he should never have been admitted in the first place?—A. Possibly not.

By the Chairman:

Q. Case 21 (reads):

Discharged 31st July, 1916—gratuity $100—became physically unfit and was returned to Canada—has a wife and three children—has hardly earned anything for seven months—is suffering from locomotor ataxia, and is growing worse. Before enlistment he was earning $75 per month.

—A. The medical board at Shorncliffe, on May 26, 1916, stated that the causation of this man's disability was syphilis, and found him disabled one-quarter for six months. Medical board held at discharge depot concurred June 27, 1916. Our medical adviser gave as his opinion, on July 22, that active service had, at the most, only hastened the onset of the disability and recommended a class VI gratuity of $100. In the original medical board, it is stated that this man never got beyond the base in France. As the disability was only slightly hastened by active service, a gratuity of $100 seems a just award.

Q. Case 22 (reads):

“Awarded gratuity of $25—pension Commissioners letter says, ‘This is a final settlement in respect of your disability.’ Medical Board's finding in this case was: General weakness; pains in the arms and legs; neurasthenia, following operation for hemorrhoid, contracted on active service. Witness submits as a complaint that in such cases no intimation of appeal, or any means of appeal is conveyed in the communication sent.”

—A. The Medical Board says that it found this was a healthy, strong appearing man, very well developed and rectal examination shows nothing abnormal. His disability was rated at 1/10 and he was therefore granted a gratuity of $25. The treatment which he had received had practically cured him. It is not considered that the award will be changed upon re-examination, but the file will be again carefully considered by the Commission. The witness complains that no memorandum of appeal is conveyed in the communication sent. It is not thought necessary to state that a man is entitled to appeal. In accordance with Section 5, of the Pensions Regulations, P.C. 1334 of June 3, 1917, a man is entitled to present his claim for re-consideration whenever he is dissatisfied with the award made. This man has this right.

Q. Case 23 (reads):

"Paid a pension of $132 a year from January 5, 1916, to April 26, 1916—was in hospital during this period; had an operation performed on his nose. Witness submits that man should have received pay and allowances, while in hospital."

—A. This man is claiming on account of an injury to the nose, nothing is said about such an injury in the original Board. This man's pension was awarded in accordance with the disability which was originally described as arising during service, that is to say loss of three fingers on the right hand and limited movement of the second and little fingers of the same hand, also pain and swelling of the left foot from frost-bite. On May 16, 1916, the Adjutant-General wrote to the Officer Commanding Military District No. 2, and stated that before pay could be issued, it would be necessary to determine whether the injury to the nose, the abnormality of lungs, or the rheumatism had originated on service. No information could be obtained regarding these conditions, and therefore, the man was not replaced on pay. The man has also complained to this Board, that he is not rated high enough. From medical evidence before this Board it was not considered possible to award this man a higher pension; nevertheless the case is being reconsidered.

Q. Case No. 24 (reads):

"Discharged while in a condition which could be improved by medical treatment—has been a bed-patient for two weeks—no pension and no pay and allowances—is a married man."

—A. This man has no complaint from the point of view of pension. The Army Medical authorities will no doubt give information with respect to his complaint, that he was discharged in a condition that could be improved by treatment.

Q. Is there anything to show whether he should have received further treatment?—A. We cannot give more pension than he is receiving, for the existing disability, under the present legislation; but if he requires more treatment he can always get it.

Q. Case 25 (reads):

"Received a communication granting him a pension of $132 for one year from April 1, 1916. Later was informed his pension would be increased. Will get a gratuity instead of pension. Witness submits that several of such cases are on record."

—A. His pension seems to be a just one for the amount of pensionable disability that he is suffering under.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. It seems to me that the amount of pension is insufficient in the case of a man who has totally lost the hearing of one ear.—A. I am of your opinion.

By the Chairman:

Q. Case No. 26 (reads):

"Pension reduced from $16 per month to $8, has not received any pension for the current year. Witness writes there are several cases of this kind. In some cases men have had their pensions stopped and are being paid a gratuity."

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Case No. 27 (reads):

"Received two statements of his pay and allowance which did not compare."

—A. This is not a pension complaint, but is one with regard to monies paid to the man. And Case No. 28 is one of the same sort.

Q. Case No. 29 (reads):

"Discharged in August, 1916, with a gratuity of $75. His case subsequently reported to Major, who ordered him to hospital; kept for six weeks—suffers from loss of memory, general lassitude—is married and has seven children."

—A. This man is suffering from general debility and is incapacitated in locomotion by progressive locomotor ataxia, due to syphilis aggravated to a small extent while on active service. The award of a gratuity of $75, was all that could be given in this case.

Q. Case No. 30 (reads):

"Discharged as medically unfit—pensioned January 26, 1916, at $132 per annum, under the old scale—reboarded January 16, 1917, and was awarded a gratuity of $50, informing him that pension was discontinued. Witness submits 'how could permanent disability be applied in the first place, if twelve months after he was supposed to be just temporarily disabled?' Man is married with three children—bones in feet broken,—cannot follow an occupation except where he can sit."

—A. This case is being considered again, and it may be that a further medical examination may be requested.

Q. Case No. 31 (reads):

"Has five wounds in side; lung penetrated by shrapnel—numerous shrapnel wounds in right leg, muscle of left forearm gone in all 42 wounds—pension $8 per month from December 27, 1916, till December 31, 1917. He is a married man."

—A. The opinion of the medical board is that the re-opening of the case would serve no useful purpose. The award is considered just and proportionate to the disability actually existing. A man may have forty-two or eighty wounds, the number does not matter; it is the ultimate disability which is taken into consideration in granting pension, not the suffering through which a man has gone.

Q. They are all flesh wounds. Case 32 (reads):

Stomach trouble caused by gas inhalation; often sick and weak; claims Government should give medical treatment; board at Folkestone gave six months; was discharged in two months; no pension.

—A. There is no record of any gas inhalation in this case. A misstatement is made. The board said he would be cured in three months and not in six. There is no statement here of gas. We are of the opinion that the award is just.

Q. Case 33 (reads):

Discharged 3rd November, 1916, but discharge reads 3rd December; received cheque for $50 on 3rd January, 1917, as gratuity in lieu of pension. Suffers from chronic muscular rheumatism and a pyorrheal condition of the teeth, according to a specialist's certificate. Perfectly justified in seeking help from the Militia Department.

—A. From the examination of many boards, it was considered that a gratuity of $50 was all that could be awarded to this man. The case is, however, still under consideration. This man has been medically boarded no less than six times since the 30th November, 1915.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Q. Case 34 (reads):

Discharged at Quebec, October 14, 1915, with right leg amputated above the knee. Received three months' pay till January, 1916; was pensioned at $16 per month; raised later to $24 per month. Got a limb on June 3, 1916, it has fallen off twice; the screws seem to get loose; the knee joint makes a lot of noise which is embarrassing.

—A. It is considered that no action is indicated in this case by the Pensions Board.

Q. He complains of the character of his artificial limb, which has twice fallen off, and of the knee joint making a noise which is embarrassing.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): That is a Hospitals Commission matter.

By the Chairman:

Q. Case 35 (reads):

Discharged as medically unfit; received pension of third degree, $133 per annum for six months from 11th February, 1916; re-examined August 26, 1916. Ear trouble began discharging May 1, 1916; disability not permanent, aggravated on account of mastoid; received local treatment for eight weeks; pension paid $66. Discontinued August 10, 1916, when cheque was received for $22.79.

—A. This a long story, sir. The man is over age. His disability is senility and lack of teeth, these are the reasons for discharge.

Q. Has he ever seen active service?—A. Yes, five days in the trenches. The opinion of our medical adviser is: "that, at present, the pensioner is suffering from mastoid disease not due to service." Continuation of pension is not indicated.

Q. Case 36. This was the case of a man injured on a recruiting tour?—A. I have not been able to obtain the file of this case; but it does not seem to be a pensions case.

The CHAIRMAN: I have information regarding Case 37, and will file this letter (reads):

DEPARTMENT OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE,
Ottawa, Canada,

April 26, 1917.

Dear Sir Herbert Ames,—With reference to your letter of the 21st instant, I find that Case 37 was discharged (Class 1) on the 25th of January last, as a special case, and that a cheque for $127.95, balance of his pay and allowances to date of discharge, was mailed to the District Paymaster, Military District No. 12, Regina, Sask., Case 37, on discharge, having given his address as Young, Sask.

Subsequently, Case 37 having informed the Department of his present address, Toronto, a communication was sent to him at that address notifying him of the action taken by the Department, and instructing him to apply to the District Paymaster, Military District No. 12, for his cheque.

Case 37 is also entitled to the bonus of three months' additional pay, authorized under the Order in Council recently passed, and he will receive the same in due course so soon as the necessary arrangements for the payment of the bonus have been completed.

Yours very truly,

EUGENE Fiset.

Sir Herbert Ames, M.P.,
Room, 40, East Block,
Ottawa.

This is a case where the man turned up in Toronto and his cheque had been sent to Saskatchewan where his address was supposed to be.

[Major J. L. Todd.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Now, Case 38.—A. This is also a case for which I could not obtain the file; it does not seem to be a pensions case.

The CHAIRMAN: This man complained that he could not get employment, that he was treated with scant courtesy by Messrs. Peter Lyall and Sons when he tried to get employment there. I took this matter up with the Soldiers' Employment Commission at Montreal, and have received a reply from which the following is an extract. (Reads):

I take pleasure in stating that Mr. Wright, who is in charge of P. Lyall's is giving the Commission entire satisfaction as he never fails, as far as we know, to report on the soldiers he engages, and we could not ask him to do more than what he is doing.

That is the end of the 40 cases.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. There are two things in regard to injuries to the ear and eye where, it seems to me, the pension is most unjust. For total injury to one eye, or total loss of hearing in one ear, a man gets only a gratuity; and the pension awarded for total deafness seems to me most inadequate. I would like to have your opinion of it. If I understand your evidence, you consider the awards are too small. What is the practice in England, can you tell us?—A. Yes, I can. Canada has a great opportunity. In devising our pension legislation we can meet necessities as they demand almost unrestricted by precedent. We have no past legislation. In France and Great Britain past legislation has given men acquired rights to certain pensions for certain disabilities. In France, legislation is influenced by precedents going back to 1831. French law consequently, gives disability ratings for injuries which are, in some cases, absolutely absurd. There is only one way of ascertaining the extent of the disability resulting from a given injury and that is through a knowledge of precisely what has happened to a large number of individuals, suffering from that disability, who have gone out into life and attempted to make their way in competition with their fellows. In order that there may be uniformity in pension awards and in order that those awards may be properly proportioned to the extent of the disabilities for which they compensate, it is essential that a Pensioning Body should be guided by a scale of disabilities. In some respects I am quite sure that the percentages of disability at which certain injuries are rated in our existing legislation are improper. For example, the loss of one eye and total deafness are both considered to entail a disability of from 40 per cent to 59 per cent. These are not equivalent disabilities. The loss of one eye entails a disability of less than 40 per cent and I am convinced that total deafness should be rated at more than 40 per cent. I think that total deafness should be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 60 per cent.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Is it as high as 60 per cent in England?—A. Yes. My opinion is that it should be as high as 60 per cent.

Q. For total deafness?—A. Yes.

Q. For deafness in one ear, what would you say about that?—A. The rating seems low since it brings only a gratuity.

Q. Do you think that is sufficient?—A. I think so, yes.

Q. For deafness in one ear?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you think you ought to take into consideration the percentage of chances of injury? Supposing a man is totally deaf in one ear, and he receives a blow on the other ear which makes him totally disabled?—A. In order to provide for cases of that sort, I should like to see some scheme established by which the

[Major J. L. Todd.]

Government would bear the increased cost to disabled men of insurance and of other services where price is dependent upon normal probability. The normal probability of a disabled man in respect of accident or length of life is altered by reason of his disability. For that reason, the cost of such service is altered—usually increased—for him. Some arrangement should be made by which it would be possible for disabled men to obtain such services with no more difficulty than they may be obtained by normal men.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you really think a gratuity for deafness in one ear is sufficient?—A. I would not say a gratuity, sir.

Q. That is all they get.—A. You remember in the suggested scheme, I have allowed something more than a gratuity. I think total deafness in one ear entails a disability of about 10 per cent and should give title to a pension of about $2 a month.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Under the arrangement of that scheme, it would also put such a man high.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Would you consider that the complete loss of hearing in one ear would be a tenth of a disability?—A. I think about a tenth.

Witness discharged.

Sub-Committee on Printing Evidence,
Returned Soldiers' Committee,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Gentlemen:—I herewith enclose carefully worked out tables of figures that have been compiled by Mr. W. F. Moore of the Military Hospitals Commission.

They show the following: Monthly rate of Return from January, 1915, to the end of the year; classification of men for immediate discharge without pension, men who are convalescent, and men whose medical treatment is complete, also a condensed statement of the disabilities and cases other than medical unfitness; the degree of disability awarded by Medical Board at the Port of disembarkation and the country of birth of the 13,826 men of whom they have record.

I think these figures are of value, and with the concurrence of your sub-committee would suggest that they be printed.

Yours sincerely,

HERBERT B. AMES,

Chairman, Committee on Returned Soldiers.

MILITARY HOSPITALS COMMISSION.

The following tables of figures have been compiled from records of men returning from overseas kept (a) by the representative of the Canadian Patriotic Fund at the Discharge Depot, Quebec, during the period from May, 1915, to October of that year, and (b) by the Commission for the period from October, 1915, to March 31, 1917.

2. Previous to May, 1915, about 550 men returned from overseas through the port of Halifax, but as the M.H.C. was not in existence at that time nor had the Patriotic Fund any representative, there are no records available from which figures can be obtained. The total number of men whose records have been analysed is 13,826. A certain number of men, some of whom returned for such reasons as stoppage of working pay, etc., are not included. There are also, doubtless, a number of men who returned on furlough and who did not go back to the front, either receiving appointments in Canada or breaking down in health and taking their discharge. The total number of men returned, according to the Militia Department, excluding those who returned during the winter of 1914-15, through Halifax, above referred to, is 14,176.

3. Table I shows the rate of return per month since May, 1915.

4. Table II shows the classification of the same men according to the Military Hospitals Commission system as follows:—

Class 1.—Men for immediate discharge without a pension.

- (a) Unfit for overseas service, but capable to take up their previous civilian occupation.
- (b) Disability not the result of service or involving claim as the result of or aggravation by service.

Class 2.—Men whose condition may be benefited by further medical treatment or rest in a convalescent home, hospital, or sanatorium.

Class 3.—Men having a permanent disability which would not be benefited by further medical treatment (such disability due to or aggravated by service) and whose cases will immediately be considered by the Pensions Board with a view to pension.

No Class, refers to such men as those returned on stoppage of working pay, special service, bandsmen, etc., wherever these cases were not classed as invalids.

5. Table III shows the reason for the return to Canada. It may be explained that the word “Overage” does not mean men over 45 exclusively, but corresponds to the wording of the disability as given by the Medical Board at the point of disembarkation. The same remarks apply to the heading “Underage.” The heading "Wounds" includes all men described by the Medical Board as having been wounded. It must be remembered, however, that quite a number of men were classified as suffering from shell shock, gas, rheumatism, etc., who have in the past suffered from wounds causing no disability at the time of disembarkation. The heading "Insanity" includes those men designated as suffering from insanity, dementia, and mania, but does not include a great number of men who might have been called temporarily unbalanced. "Other Causes" includes all other disabilities and also men returned under special authority; to complete studies; undesirables; stoppage of working pay; for special service, bandsmen, etc. The latter classifications are analysed in Table IV.

Blind and major amputations are already included in the figures of the wounded and are merely given as a sub-classification.

N.B.—It may be noted that nine blind men have returned and 177 men who have suffered major amputations. These are included under wounds in above table.

Table IV analyses the reason for return of 816 men who were included in the total of 13,826 examined. This group comprises only men who were fit and who had no claim on the Government.

The Soldier's Discharge.—Paper issued at Quebec.

My Dear Sir Herbert:—I think that someone's attention should be drawn to this matter, and as you are interesting yourself in returned soldiers' needs, I turn to you.

The discharge paper as issued, and I have seen some, is a very poor and inadequate documentary evidence of the soldier's service.

1. The paper is of a very poor quality and cannot last over a few months wear and tear, and cannot be renewed.

2. The particulars of the soldier's service is poorly set forth.

3. The document is inadequately signed by the Officer i/c Depot.

In fact some I have seen only bear the initials of the Officer i/c Depot.

Considering the value that will be attached to these documents in years to come, either by the man himself, or his family, there is great room for improvement along the lines I have criticized.

WILLIAM HENDRIE,
Lt.-Col.

THE VETERANS' CLUB OF BRITISH COLUMBIA,
VICTORIA, B.C., April 7, 1917.

Sir HERBERT T. AMES, M.P.

Dear Sir:—I am directed by the Executive Committee of the Veterans' Club of British Columbia to send you a book setting forth the aims and object of this association, together with a copy of a letter from H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught to Lt.-Col. Andrew C. P. Haggard, who with Major Seymour Rowlinson founded the Club more than a year ago.

The Committee take this action in consequence of some remarks, stated to have been made to you by Mr. H. W. Hart, the Victoria delegate of the Returned Soldiers' Association to Toronto, in answer to a question put to him by yourself, and which appeared in the columns of "The Victoria Times" of the 4th inst., a marked copy of which I send you by same mail.

The Committee strongly resent the statement made to you by Mr. Hart, and the inference implied in his words, and emphatically deny that The Club is used for political, or any other purposes save those for which it was established, and which are set forth in the rules.

At the time the Club was founded there was no other organization of the sort in Victoria, and returned soldiers were made welcome to the Club Rooms.

At the time, some of the returned men wished for an exclusive club, hence the formation of "The Returned Soldiers' Association" in Victoria, principally through Mr. Hart, although we still retain as members several returned men, a returned soldier being one of the Executive.

Trusting that you will understand, and appreciate the reason for troubling you with this statement,

I am, dear sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) ROBERT A. WICKS,

Secretary.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, ROOM 301,

FRIDAY, May 18, 1917.

The Committee met at 10 o'clock a.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

Members present: Sir Herbert Ames, Chairman, Mr. R. B. Bennett, Hon. Charles Marcl, Hon. Charles Murphy and Mr. F. F. Pardee.

Mr. J. W. BORDEN, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are the paymaster general of the Militia Department for the Dominion of Canada?—A. Yes.

Q. And the head of all the activities of the Government that cover pay and allowances to the enlisted men both going and overseas?—A. That is correct, sir.

Q. This Committee has been sitting for some weeks and has examined some 80 witnesses, among others a number of returned soldiers and representatives of returned soldiers. These gentlemen have come before us and have been asked by the Committee to state any grievances that they may have personally or may know of concerning others, and a very large number of their grievances deal with matters of pay and allowances. We have undertaken to extract a memoranda from the evidence some of which I will read to you. This will simply give you an idea of the general trend of the criticism, and as Mr. Fraser and General Jones are to follow you, you will all be able to base your evidence on the criticisms which have been made.

(Criticisms read to the witnesses).

The CHAIRMAN: I have read these statements by witnesses who have appeared before us because there are four gentlemen here who are going to appear as witnesses so that they have all had an opportunity of hearing what complaints have been made and in order to give point to my remark that the time and attention of this Committee has been very largely taken up, throughout this inquiry, with almost universal complaints, from one end of the country to the other, from soldiers regarding dissatisfaction as to pay and allowances, and that leads to the point upon which we shall be glad to hear what you have to say.

The WITNESS: Would it not be well to take up now these specific cases? That, I think, is the best way of getting at the bottom of this difficulty. It is one thing for people to come forward here and make wholesale charges against the Pay Department and it is quite another thing to prove it. Of course there has been delay in the past, particularly with regard to the first batch of returned soldiers; I think there were about 1,500, at all events a large number came out, and the Department was not notified by the overseas authorities of the departure of these troops. Consequently the men arrived and they were scattered all over Canada before any action could be taken.

By the Chairman:

Q. When was that?—A. That was the first lot that arrived.

Q. About what time was that?—A. Shortly after the heavy fighting at Ypres.

Q. That would be in the spring of 1915?—A. I think it was, I could not say exactly, but it was about that time. But in my opinion, as far as I can learn, the work of paying off has been fairly well expedited. They have been making charges about the delay and I asked Captain Aumond to give a statement of the last half dozen ships that arrived, the date the ship arrived, the date on which he had prepared the accounts and passed them on to the Paymaster for payment. That statement will speak for itself. Another thing I notice that Mr. W. E. Turley, I think it is, says he did not get any pay for four months after his arrival here. That, I think, is the sum and substance of his statement.

Q. He says: "had to wait four months for pay after return to Canada," at pages 771, 772 and 780 of the evidence.—A. Now we will take up the case of Sergeant Turley. I have a memorandum here prepared by Captain Aumond, Captain Paymaster Casualties, dated May 17, 1917, which gives the details of this man's case as follows:

"No. 47410—Sgt. Wm. E. Turley, Class III (Pension)."

(1) Arrived at Quebec, December 26, 1915, was paid $80 by Discharge Depot, Quebec.

(2) Headquarters adjusted his account to January 31, 1916, and issued a cheque on January 22 for $48.86.

(3) Pension took effect February 1, 1916.

(4) Order in Council, P.C. 11-1526, authorizing pay and allowances during period of treatment, viz, to September 17, 1916.

(5) May 20, 1916, account adjusted in accordance with above Order in Council and a cheque for $265.35 forwarded.

(6) June pay issued June 16, 1916, $89.

(7) July pay issued July 22, 1916, $76.10.

(8) August pay issued August 30, 1916, $76.10.

(9) Pension re took effect September 18, 1916.

(10) In the payments by this office of pay and allowances, paragraphs 5-6-7-8, the amounts of pension paid by Canadian Pension Paymaster were deducted.

(11) This account was re-adjusted in accordance with order issued in December, 1916, relative to subsistence and Separation Allowance, affecting soldiers returned to Canada prior to March 1, 1916, and cheques of $14.12 payable to Wm. E. Turley, and of $64.17, payable to Mrs. Wm. E. Turley, were issued January 17, 1917.

(12) Prompt payments, were, in every instance, effected by this office.

(Sgd.) A. AUMOND,

Captain Paymaster Casualties.

Q. He was reinstated in hospital?—A. Reinstated in hospital.

Q. Was there any time when for four months after his return he did not get any pay?—A. It is an absolute falsehood—absolutely a falsehood.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. He says: "I waited for four months for my first pay after I returned to Canada."—A. I have given you the dates on which the several payments were made to him; immediately after his arrival he was given $80 cash.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you those cheques endorsed by him?—A. We can get you those cheques.

Q. The reason I asked you that question is there is no doubt about his getting them?—A. He got the cheques all right.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. There would be some amount, perhaps, paid him that he thought was pension while it was really pay, would that be the explanation?—A. No, it is merely a misstatement on his part, and a misrepresentation on his part, there was no delay. The only explanation I can give of Turley's statement is that he is referring to this second adjustment, but he does not state that he got pay and allowances and pension during the intervening period.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He left the impression with the Committee that he had not.

The WITNESS: We will take Trooper Brown's case, that is one we looked up. Private Brown returned to Canada in July, 1916, on furlough, to September 1, 1916. He had three months furlough. While on furlough authority was granted for his transfer to the Military Hospitals Commission for duty, which was effective on the 1st January, 1917. His account was adjusted by the casualty pay office up to and including December 31, 1916, and transferred to the accountant of the Military Hospitals Commission, Ottawa, on the 21st February last with a Dr. balance of $6.38. Now, I have a statement of his English account and of his Canadian account.

By the Chairman:

Q. You had better file that statement.

There is a note to the effect that "further payments of pay and allowances are being made to this man by the Military Hospitals Commission." He is still in their pay. I cannot see myself, looking at his account, that he has any ground for complaint.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. He claims that his pay was not adjusted properly, that it has never been adjusted to his satisfaction?—A. If he would state just exactly in what way it has not been adjusted the matter could be looked into; but so far as I know it has been properly adjusted.

Q. Now, have you anything to say regarding any other cases?—A. There is the case of Pte. Baldock. He was one of the original cases, that is, he was one of the first men who returned to Canada, being paid in full by the paymaster at the discharge depot, Quebec, and given three months pay and allowances. At that time the regulation was that the men should be medically examined at Quebec on arrival there, and the medical authorities would state how long his illness or injury was supposed to last. In this case they said that it was three months. Accordingly, he was given three months pay and allowances.

Q. How much?—A. I cannot say what that would be. (To Captain Aumond) what would he be given?

Captain AUMOND: He was given one lump sum, the same rate that he was drawing otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN: Was that in advance for the three months?

Captain AUMOND: It was given in advance.

The WITNESS: Then he was discharged. The arrangement was that on discharge they gave him this three months' pay and allowances.

By the Chairman:

Q. Eventually, he was put back into hospital, and his claim is that he did not get the separation allowance due him for the time he was put back in hospital?—A. Yes, owing to his being an old case, and nothing having come up, the matter was overlooked in regard to that Order in Council which was made retroactive. Of course, had he applied to the Department for this, he would have got it. (To Captain Aumond): Did he ever apply direct?

Captain AUMOND: There was no application.

The CHAIRMAN: No application on record.

The WITNESS: The amount due him on this account is about $48.95, and that payment will be made forthwith.

By the Chairman:

Q. So that his complaint is really a valid complaint, but he had not presented it to the Department?—A. He had not presented it to the Department.

Q. So that you are sending him a cheque for $48.95 which will satisfy the account, and you would have sent it sooner if he had brought it to the attention of the Department?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. In the event of these men delaying to send in a complaint for what pay they have not got, there is no way of checking them up and seeing that they do get it until?—A. There is no reason why it should not be done, and it is done.

Q. You say there is no reason why it should not be done and it is done. What is done?—A. Why the case is looked into.

Q. I quite understand that, but there is no regular machinery in the Department that has the man looked up in the event of his not sending in a complaint regarding the amount that is coming to him?—A. (To Captain Aumond): You go through all these cases don't you?

Captain AUMOND: Well we have not had the staff to deal with it.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Suppose a soldier came over here, and he was six months here, and he failed to send in any request whatever for pay, have you any method of finding out that that man is not receiving the money, and sending it to him, except on his personal complaint?—A. Yes, certainly.

Q. What is the way?—A. As soon as these men arrive in Quebec, the list for the whole batch is sent up here with last pay certificates, and the whole account is gone over; every man's account is looked into, and forwarded on to the respective districts to which the men belong and pay is issued from there.

Q. Pay is issued from there?—A. Yes.

Q. If there is delay in that you do not know of it, except on the complaint of the man himself?—A. No, we would not know about the delay. What arrangements have you, Mr. Aumond, for ascertaining whether all of these accounts are paid—of the accounts which go to Toronto or Winnipeg?

Captain AUMOND: The accounts that are transferred now are supposed to be all right.

The WITNESS: Have you any way of knowing whether the paymaster actually pays that account?

Captain AUMOND: No, sir.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is it not reported to Ottawa that the amount has been paid?—A. No, we do not get any report back.

Q. Would it not be better if you did?—A. Yes. Unless the paymaster at Toronto or Winnipeg or Halifax is very lax, any one of these cases that he had not paid for any reason he would report back to Ottawa.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Is there any system of having him report back to you?—A. Well, there is no regulation issued asking him to do that, but we take it as a matter of common sense he would do it.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. He would not report back the cause of oversight or delay or anything of that kind?—A. He would report in case there was any complaint.

Q. But not otherwise?—A. No.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you here in Ottawa a separate account as against every returned soldier in the matter of pay and allowances?—A. The ledger account for every soldier.

Q. If a man is paid by the paymaster in Toronto, is the report of that payment made from Toronto reported here and entered in your ledger account against that man?—A. No, it is not.

Q. So that a man might have two ledger accounts, one at Ottawa and one at Toronto?—A. Yes.

Q. And neither case would be able to give a full statement of what he had received?—A. Well, the ledger account here would show what was due the man, but the paymaster at Toronto would be instructed to pay him.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. How would you know here whether the paymaster there had paid him or not?—A. We could only ascertain that by asking him to make a report.

Q. Does he make returns at any stated period at all?—A. Yes, they make monthly statements. Every cheque appears in the monthly statement, but they are not checked up with the ledger account.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. Supposing you send a cheque to the paymaster in Toronto for John Smith, and Smith does not come around for the cheque for a month or six weeks, do you get any report of that?—A. He does not have to come around. The paymaster immediately makes out the cheque and forwards it to the man. If he has not his address he endeavours to ascertain it.

Q. And if he does not secure his address?—A. If he does not secure the address, then he would report to Ottawa, or report to Captain Aumond. If they cannot find the address they generally apply to Ottawa for the information.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you not think it would be a good thing to have the publication of a monthly bulletin showing the unpaid balances, like the banks do—the unpaid cheques?—A. Yes.

Q. And you could find out if there was really any balance owing to the man?—A. Yes, it might be a good thing, but I do not think you would find very many cases.

Q. The cheque is issued and sent to Toronto and is not claimed. It might remain there forever and nobody would get it?—A. No, the paymaster cannot issue a cheque and hold it forever. He has to account for it. That cheque, in the settlement up of the bank's business, must be accounted for: if in no other way, it must be placed to the credit of the Receiver General.

Q. Suppose a man disappears for some reason or other, his relatives might claim the amount, if they could find out in any publication of the Government that there was a balance unpaid?—A. They might.

Q. It is done in the case of banks unpaid balances?—A. They might claim it, but it would not be turned over to them unless it was shown the man was dead and that the claimant was his legal representative.

By the Chairman:

Q. Naturally as the war has proceeded there have been new regulations in respect of pay and allowances, usually more beneficial to the soldier. Do you deal with the whole of these accounts with a view to making them retroactive?—A. Yes, we do, as fast as we can, but of course you can understand that we are a little hampered in the first place on account of press of work, in the second place we have not quarters sufficient to accommodate a full and efficient staff. I would invite the committee or some member to drop in Captain Aumond's office and see the situation.

Q. Then we understand that you are through lack of accommodation handicapped in your work here at Ottawa.—A. Yes.

Q. And that the effects of that handicap are felt through the work in the promptness and correctness of the results?—A. Yes, it is actually impossible for us to increase the staff until we get larger quarters.

Q. Is your staff well organized?—A. It is.

Q. And a sufficiently well managed staff?—A. It is, particularly in this casual pay matter, we have a very fair, very good and efficient staff in my estimation, but that staff, in view of the heavy work which is before us must be increased very soon.

Q. Is it obligatory, according to your militia regulations, that in any attempt to strengthen your staff you must take certain men because they are members of the militia, or soldiers, and you are not free to take any civilian whose experience in matters of pay would render them valuable? Are you hampered by the fact that you must use the permanent staff that was, prior to the war, attached to the military department?—A. No, I cannot say that we are hampered in that respect. We are asked to give returned soldiers the preference when making appointments. We have asked for returned soldiers, but, so far as I know, only half a dozen at the most have turned up, perhaps not that number.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. You mean returned soldiers who have capabilities to do paymaster's work?—
A. Yes, we have asked for them, but they have not responded to the call. I presume those who are efficient are retained in the London office.

Q. What I want to know more particularly is this: Suppose for the sake of argument, the Casualty Department was a weak one in its superintendence. Are you free to take a civilian with executive ability and business experience and put him in charge, or are you compelled to take someone who is a military officer?—A. No, I cannot say we are compelled to do that. All I have to do is to represent to the Minister of Militia that it is very desirable in the public interest to appoint such and such a man to a certain position.

Q. Are you absolutely free then to go outside and to select any civilian whom you think has the ability to put a sub-department under you in a thorough, business-like shape if you so desire?—A. No, I cannot say that.

Q. Can you, with the approval of the minister?—A. Yes, with the approval of the minister.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Does the minister consult you when he makes an appointment?—A. No. With regard to these local appointments the practice is for the local members to send forward lists of names of applicants, and from that list we select our clerks, the best that we can get. Hitherto I have been handicapped in respect of, for instance, the Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Branch, in regard to getting good men.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have been handicapped?—A. Yes, I have been handicapped.

Q. Why?—A. Because all these appointments must go through the channel I have indicated.

Q. Which channel?—A. Upon the recommendations of the local political chiefs.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Are you not at liberty to do what the Chairman asked you, Mr. Borden?—A. Yes, if it is the head of any big position, but appointments to the ordinary rank and file are made in the way I have indicated.

By the Chairman:

Q. Suppose, for the sake of argument, Mr. Borden, you were placed in charge of the accounting department of a big life insurance institution and called upon to organize it upon thorough business lines. You would feel free, would you not, to look over all Canada?—A. Yes.

Q. For a suitable man to bring that department up to a state of absolute efficiency. Now, have you the same feeling in connection with the Paymaster's Branch of the Militia Department?—A. I have not.

Q. Now, this has been suggested—A. Excuse me, I will not say I have not now, but I have not in the past.

Q. You have not had in the past?—A. No.

Q. How long since you had that?—A. There have been no specific instructions given.

Q. Only a different atmosphere?—A. Only a different atmosphere.

Q. Since how long has that existed?—A. Since the past few months.

Q. I have heard this criticism, and I want you to say whether in your judgment it is a valid one, that the military limitations of the department demanded that the best positions should be given to men who were all of the permanent military force, and that consequently you were not free to take men of outstanding ability to help you in reorganizing your pay branch, if that was necessary, from civilian life. Is that true? Do you feel that the fact that you have to take a captain or major, or a colonel of military standing in the permanent force, is a handicap to you in reorganizing your branch on a thoroughly efficient basis?—A. I do not think so. I have not been handicapped in that way. What we have been anxious to get among the military men are those who have had experience.

Q. Among military men?—A. Yes, among military men.

Q. Are you confined in your choice to military men?—A. I would prefer a military man to a civilian.

Q. If he has the other qualifications?—A. If he has the qualifications. I am speaking now in regard to pay work, not accounting work, because a military man who has had the experience and has a good knowledge of accounting, is far better qualified in my opinion for such work than a civilian who may be an expert accountant.

Q. Are there many good accountants available in the military?—A. The accounting in the Paymaster's Branch is not of a very difficult character.

Q. Will you tell us how these officials were selected in the early part of the work for the various units?—A. They were really selected locally.

Q. Was there any attempt made to determine their ability as accountants or book-keepers?—A. No.

Q. Do you not attribute a good deal of the trouble you have encountered to the choice originally of unqualified paymasters?—A. Oh, yes, a great deal.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Can you say in a general way how the paymasters were selected?—A. They were selected by the officer commanding the battalion and forwarded on the recommendation of the officer commanding the district. The latter was supposed to look into their qualifications, and then if he thought they were suitable, to make the recommendations and to forward them to headquarters.

By the Chairman:

Q. Was there any attempt made to give the paymasters a qualifying course?—A. That was absolutely impossible in the first stages of the war.

Q. Is it being done now?—A. It has been done for the past 18 months, and we have found it working very well. We have given paymasters as a rule from three to six months' instruction and experience in the district paymaster's office.

Q. And if a local man who is selected as paymaster does not turn out satisfactorily during the appointing period, can you get rid of him?—A. Yes, we could get rid of them, and we have got rid of them in some cases where they proved to be very bad.

Q. And you consider since you undertook to train the paymaster for this work, there has been a decided improvement.—A. Oh, there has been a decided improvement.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I have had an opportunity of studying the conditions and I have arrived at certain conclusions and I would like to know from you whether they are correct or not. At first, when you started in the war, you had a very limited number of accounts to handle, that is at the first.—A. Correct.

Q. Now you have something over 400,000 accounts on your books?—A. Correct.

Q. And that expansion has taken place between August, 1914, and May, 1917.—A. That is true.

Q. And until hostilities broke out you had a staff of less than one hundred in your pay department, is that true?—A. I think it was a good deal less than one hundred.

Q. I have made some inquiries and as far as I can find out it was not more than 50 in August, 1914.—A. That would be nearer correct.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. At the present time your staff in Canada amounts to about how many?—A. I could not tell you offhand.

Q. And there are now over a thousand, as far as my count goes, is that right?—A. Of all classes.

Q. I am now considering the expansion of the staff in the various districts and at the head office?—A. Oh, yes, it would be over a thousand, including the assigned pay and civilian clerks.

Q. And that has involved the necessity of taking into the service men and women in very large numbers, in many cases without training, because the army is absorbing the young men who ordinarily did that work?—A. Possibly more than 90 per cent of the present staff had absolutely no training.

Q. Another reason why trained men are not available is that the banks are keeping what they can and the army is taking the rest?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have a very considerable number of women here with limited accommodation for them?—A. As anybody will easily see who visits the office.

Q. Now, if my investigations are correct the chief difficulty that you have experienced has arisen because when our men went overseas it was necessary to open an account for them in the ledger in the London office, and therefore you had to close their account out here and transfer it to the London office where they have a large staff of men?—A. We have to close up their general pay account here, but, as regards their assigned pay, we have kept that account open, and also there is the separation allowance account.

Q. Now in practice, you have to maintain really three accounts; there is the man's general pay account, there is his assigned pay account, and his separation allowance account, that is so, is it not?—A. That is correct.

Q. And when he goes overseas you have to transfer his general pay account to the London office?—A. Correct.

Q. And there are left here his assigned pay and separation allowance accounts?—A. Correct.

Q. But if, subsequently, his wife takes a notion to go overseas, then the complication arises of transferring the assigned pay and separation allowance accounts over there?—A. That is correct.

Q. Then you have 400,000 accounts that will have to be dealt with in this way?—A. Approximately.

Q. And when the soldier becomes a casualty, if he is sent back to Canada the first thing they do in England is to close his pay account and send that back here?—A. Correct.

By the Chairman:

Q. To whom?—A. The casualty paymaster.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. It comes to you and you distribute it to that branch of your department known as the casualty paymaster?—A. Yes.

Q. And the unfortunate situation arises that if his wife is, by any possibility, remaining abroad, the assigned pay and separation allowance accounts have to be kept there until such time as she comes back here?—A. Correct.

Q. And we have the situation that you have to satisfy yourself as to the correctness of the overseas account, in order that you may have a correct account here?—A. As a matter of fact we take the overseas account as correct.

Q. You take it, in the first instance, as correct, and you re-open that ledger account in Ottawa for the man who left here perhaps a year or a year and three months before, that is the practice?—A. That is the practice.

Q. My investigation would seem to indicate that sometimes that overseas account has turned out not to be correct, as you got it in the first instance, because of some further information you received, is that not true?—A. It might possibly occur.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. It has occurred once or twice, has it not, because something has not been charged against the man, which should have been charged?—A. Yes, they have not, sometimes, debited the full amount of the assigned pay that we have issued here.

Q. And when that happens it is sent back to you here from the London office and you have to adjust that account?—A. Yes.

Q. And in the adjustment it has sometimes unfortunately transpired that a man has been overpaid, and he gets no more pay until the balance overpaid has been absorbed, is not that correct?—A. That is correct.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is he notified in a case like that?—A. He is always notified when there is nothing due to him.

Q. Is he notified that it is on account of overpayment he is not getting any more pay?—A. Immediately the account is made up he is notified of the state of his account, we do not wait for him to apply for his statement.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The general instructions given here are, and that is where the trouble has arisen, to shut off further pay to that man until the balance overpaid has been absorbed?—A. That is it.

Q. And I regret to say that, in some cases, that applies equally to the assigned pay and separation allowances where there have been overpayments?—A. Yes.

Q. And then, of course, the unfortunate wife and the soldier rush off to the nearest member of Parliament, or whoever will write his letters, and from that time on it is a long series of correspondence until they finally realize that what has happened is that an overpayment has been made and that an adjustment of the pay, or the pension, is necessary. Is that the story?—A. That is the story; that is absolutely correct.

Q. Those cases are not too numerous, are they?—A. They are not so very numerous.

Q. But, unfortunately, they attract attention out of proportion to their number?—A. That is the real statement of the case.

By the Chairman:

Q. May I interject a question? When a man's account is in such condition as described, and because of the fact that there is a debit against him, you cut off his pay on this side and the allowance to his family, do you take the trouble to notify him with an explanatory letter that he may know why, in a certain month, he got nothing?—A. (To Captain Aumond) You always send him a statement of his account?

Captain AUMOND: When they apply for a statement we give it to them.

The CHAIRMAN: When they apply. When they do not apply, when February comes, for instance, he is expecting his February cheque and he gets nothing?

Captain AUMOND: When we are adjusting his account we issue a last pay certificate to the district where he is sent.

The WITNESS: And the district forwards the statement to him.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. In many cases, Mr. Borden, you have letters written explaining what has happened?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is any explanation given the wife and family at home as to why there is nothing coming?

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I was leading up to that. In the early stages that was not done, but now you send a letter?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is the cause of misapprehension and trouble?—A. That is correct.

Q. What I have just said applies equally to officers and privates?—A. It applies to all.

Q. In fact, the officers, perhaps, have made the most trouble, and the trouble is due to having two offices and two sets of ledger accounts?—A. I cannot say that we have had so many complaints from officers.

Q. Perhaps my experience is different from yours, but I have had a good many complaints from officers' wives.—A. They are generally from the rank and file, generally from the man who is, perhaps, more or less ignorant.

Hon. Mr. MARCIL: Are you going to follow up your question with any suggestion, Mr. Bennett?

Mr. BENNETT: I am going to try to.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Going a step further, with improved conditions, that is better knowledge of conditions, you have been making some improvements, Mr. Borden, all along the line?—A. We have been trying to improve right straight along as fast as we can.

Q. It is not unfair to say that the burden cast upon the pay office in Canada is a larger one than has ever been imposed upon any institution in Canada during its existence?—A. I think that is quite correct.

Q. Four hundred thousand ledger accounts is an enormous burden. It is only fair to say that you have probably been working a little too hard at that sort of thing during the past two years?—A. During two years and one-half.

Q. You think that the divisions in your pay office are such as commend themselves to sound accounting practice?—A. I do.

Q. And you think they are now so established that it is a matter only of carrying into effect the arrangements you have made to secure absolute efficiency? The principles you have adopted are sound, you are satisfied of that?—A. I am satisfied. As I have already stated, all we need now are more commodious quarters.

By the Chairman:

Q. Can you tell us how many sub-departments you have?

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You have established, first of all, your great casualty department, and the assigned pay department?—A. Correct.

Q. And the separation allowance department, and the general ledger account department?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have selected yourself, I understand, men whom you believe, by reason of their training and experience, to be best fitted to have control of these departments?—A. That is what I have been most anxious to obtain.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Have you obtained them?—A. I have now, I think.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You have been making changes from time to time, you have not hesitated to cut one man out and bring another man in; and, in fact, it has been necessary for you to make many changes in order to arrive at an efficient administration.—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Can you give us the name of the sub-head in charge of each department? Who is the casualty paymaster?—A. Captain Aumond, who is here with me.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. Who is head of the assigned pay?—A. Major Ingall is acting at present. Colonel Mack was appointed.

Q. Who is head of the separation allowance?—A. Major Ingall.

Q. They go together?—A. Yes.

Q. Who has charge of the general ledger account?—A. The general ledger account is now overseas.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. That is in charge of the paymaster at London?—A. Yes.

Q. And in order that you might have the services of what you regarded as the best men possible, General Carson took over from Montreal two chartered accountants, Mr. Ross and Mr. Dowie, both gentlemen of large practical accounting experience in Montreal. You yourself have not had anything to do with practical administration overseas?—A. I have not.

Q. That is entirely in their hands?—A. As regards all the details. I laid down the general principles on which the work would be carried on.

Q. And it was co-ordinated with your work here, that was the purpose. And the divisions over there, roughly speaking, you asked to be the same as the divisions you are maintaining here?—A. Of the work, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. No, I cannot say that. We left it to them—

Q. I do not mean all of them. I mean separation allowance and assigned pay?—A. Yes.

Q. In practice, you think conditions have improved greatly during the last six months?—A. Both here and overseas.

Q. In bringing about that improvement, these investigations have taken place, and they may have been the cause of the feeling that has been abroad?—A. Possibly.

Q. Having regard to the conditions established in the light of your experience, I understand you to say, first, you want more space?—A. More space.

Q. In fact your staff is so congested that the men are tumbling over each other, and there is not room enough to work properly?—A. That is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN: And the staff is widely dispersed.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. That is the next point. Consequently your staff is so distributed throughout the city that anything like close supervision is practically impossible?—A. An efficient supervision by myself is practically impossible.

Q. That is what I mean. You have to rely then upon the supervision of each sub-head in the place where his staff happens to be located?—A. That is the case, sir.

Q. And there is no chance given you, under one roof, to call together your various heads for purposes of consultation and discussion, but you have to bring them from various places?—A. Yes.

Q. And your offices have very limited space in which to do that. Now, what do you suggest, in addition to additional space, as further means of improvement, assuming that you were not in the employ of the Government at all, that you were conducting this matter as a purely business enterprise?—A. As I say, in the first place, I would suggest more space, more commodious quarters at once; the need in that respect is very urgent, we must have it, particularly in regard to the casualty pay office and in regard to the separation allowance and assigned pay offices. Those two offices are very much overcrowded and congested. I am of opinion that the staff that we have in those two offices are quite competent to do the work. We have been weeding out in the separation allowance, and assigned pay branch particularly, all of the inefficients as fast as we possibly could and replacing them with more efficient clerks.

Q. Has political pressure prevented you from doing that freely?—A. No, and moreover there is a closer co-operation now with the London office, we have arranged that. I do not think there is any need, or rather, I would say I cannot make any suggestions for the present other than that larger quarters be provided. If we get larger quarters I am quite certain the work will go on quite satisfactorily. As regards the separation allowance and assigned pay branches, the troops are practically all overseas, recruiting has ceased, and that work is not increasing at a very rapid rate, as you can easily understand.

Q. As a matter of fact, you have recently established a separation allowance board to deal with conditions that have arisen in connection with disputed claims and for the granting of such allowances?—A. Yes.

Q. That policy has relieved you?—A. Yes. They have to deal with the individual cases.

Q. Heretofore there has been put upon you as paymaster general the responsibility of deciding in a judicial capacity with respect to the thousand and one cases that have arisen out of the interpretation of the different Orders in Council that have been passed?—A. Yes, that is the case.

Q. And the burden became intolerable?—A. That is quite correct, I could not possibly attend to it.

Q. It simply reached the stage where nobody could. Now a board has been appointed to deal with such cases. You are able to have the determination of that board, and upon it you act?—A. Upon it I act.

By the Chairman:

Q. Of whom does this board consist?—A. First of all of Major Margison, who is Chairman.

Q. What was his previous position?—A. He was paymaster, who has had experience overseas and also has had considerable experience in Canada in the auditing of accounts.

Q. Was he one of your inspectors?—A. He was, and he was a very competent official. The other members are Captain Batey, who is a lawyer and a returned soldier from overseas, and Mr. Morris, the assistant secretary of the Patriotic Fund.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Mr. Morris is the only civilian you have on the Board. You took him on in the light of the experience he has had in connection with the distribution of the Patriotic Fund?—A. Yes, he is a very desirable member.

Q. And he was the connecting medium between the Patriotic Fund and the Separation Allowance?—A. Yes.

Q. I suppose you have not had the number of complaints that you formerly had? It is only fair to say that about the middle of 1915 the complaints became very numerous?—A. Very numerous.

Q. In fact, I am advised they amounted to hundreds per day. That is a fair way of putting it, is it not?—A. Yes, that is quite correct.

Q. And now even in your cramped quarters conditions have so improved that the complaints amount to less than 20 per cent?—A. There are very few complaints. However, Major Ingall can give you more recent information as to that than I can.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you a daily complaint record?—A. Major Ingall tells me there is. I would like to say that in 1915 the recruiting was very brisk.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And the men were being moved overseas?—A. And the men were being moved overseas. Then there was trouble. The men were transferred from the separation allowance to a subsistence allowance, and then suddenly transferred back, with the result that there was considerable confusion and considerable delay. To this work there were some forty or fifty thousand new accounts added which were opened in the late winter or the early spring, I think perhaps it was in the months of April and May.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

By the Chairman:

Q. There is one more question I would like to ask. A good many of the returned soldier witnesses who have appeared before us have regarded it as a grievance that they were not allowed to keep their pay books. Is there any reason why any returned soldier should not have his pay book?—A. No. He should have his pay book, and I think in the majority of cases the returned soldiers do get them.

Q. There were a great many cases instanced to us where the men did not have their pay books, in fact, one man at Kingston stated that more than half of the men who came back did not have their pay books?—A. He was probably speaking without any knowledge of the facts.

Q. What was the reason so many pay books were kept?—A. The London office calls in the pay books for the purpose of checking them up and comparing them with the men's pay accounts. It is always intended to return the pay books to the men, but it sometimes happens that a man gets away without his book.

Q. Not having his pay book is a considerable nuisance to a man?—A. Yes, it is.

Q. Do you think there are at the present time any number of pay books in the London office that should be forwarded to the men or officers owning them?—A. I do not think there are very many, there may be a few.

Q. Are steps being taken to urge that these pay books be sent back here, so that they may be distributed to the owners?—A. As far as I know there have been no steps taken in that direction up to the present time.

Q. Would it not be desirable to do something of the kind in order to settle complaints?—A. I did not know that that state of things did exist until I read the evidence. I have received no personal complaint myself, that is, no soldier has come with a complaint to me touching the matter.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. A very considerable number of soldiers complain of the difficulties in connection with pay, stoppage of separation allowance, inability to get assigned pay, and matters of that kind. You say that most of these matters have now been dealt with, and that if there had been difficulties with respect to returned men, they would be attributable to two causes: first, to delays in getting information from London, and second, possibly delay or difficulty in getting into prompt communication with the men. Would that be about it?—A. That would be about it, except that I do not know whether there has been much difficulty on the part of district paymasters getting into prompt communication with men. Sometimes it happens that the paymaster does not know where the man is and has difficulty in finding him.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Have you any official in your department specially assigned to take up such complaints as come in from day to day from individual soldiers and to write to those soldiers as soon as possible, giving them an explanation as to the complaints they make?—A. Yes, it goes to the Casualty, if it is a matter of pay, and if it is a matter of separation allowance, it would go to the Separation Allowance Branch.

By the Chairman:

Q. They say that frequently they write letters and that they get no answer for a long time. Is it the rule of the department to answer letters of complaint sent by the soldiers?—A. Yes, as soon as possible when the matter has been looked up.

Q. But is there any acknowledgment sent immediately the letter is received?—A. No, we do not undertake to do that, but we endeavour to get all the information [Mr. J. W. Borden.]

as soon as possible, and then a reply is sent to the soldier. We do not follow the practice of acknowledging the receipt of the letter one day and the next day sending an answer.

Q. Would it not be desirable where complaints come in to immediately acknowledge the receipt?—A. Not unless it is a matter which cannot be decided upon, a matter upon which full information cannot be got within a reasonable time.

Q. Surely it would not take long if you had a printed form of acknowledgment, only requiring the filling in of the date, to have one of the clerks send that acknowledgment of each complaint as soon as it is received?—A. What would be the object if you can give a full reply within a week.

Q. It does sometimes go for months at a time, does it not, before the full reply is obtained?—A. Sometimes there is a delay in getting the full information and notice does not go out promptly always.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. I wish you would give me an explanation of this case, so that we may just put it right. This is the case of a Sergeant Harrison, in which there seems to have been some correspondence with you (handing newspaper to witness) and finally you wrote to him. Now it appears he was put in the hospital, he was discharged, taken back and finally discharged, and his wife left with nothing?—A. I could not tell you about that case offhand, I would have to look into it before I could give you any reply.

MR. PARDEE: Very well, then, if you will kindly prepare a statement with regard to that case, and you can give the full particulars, and it will be put on the record.

THE CHAIRMAN: Give the complaint, and your written explanation regarding it, and the secretary will insert it in the record.

MR. PARDEE: Now there is another case—I think the only way we can get at this is by giving concrete cases.

THE CHAIRMAN: I will pass over to you this list of concrete cases, and you will please have a statement prepared in regard to them.

WITNESS: Some of these have been already considered, and I have placed the explanation upon the record.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. There is a letter, Mr. Borden, from Captain Gordon with reference to the case of Private Lee, as you see there, that is a case of which I have personal knowledge. Will you just make a note of that case, and will you give me a report on that, Mr. Borden?—A. I will, sir. He went back to hospital.

Q. Yes, he went back to hospital in London, Ontario, and I have a letter at home showing that man had been put back on the pay and allowance lists, that letter is dated the 17th March, and his wife says she has not got any money yet?—A. Of course, he will be paid by the Hospitals Commission if he is in hospital.

Q. And he will not be paid by you at all?—A. No, by the Hospitals Commission. Captain Gordon is in the Pay and Separation Allowance Branch, but if the man is in the hospital, it would be a matter of pay and allowance here in Canada, and he should be paid by the Hospitals Commission's paymaster in Toronto.

Q. You would have charge of it, it is in your branch?—A. I will look into that and see what the trouble is.

Q. Do you think that you have too many people who have charge of the pay? Do you think it might be simply that there are too many people handling it?—A. The Military Hospitals Commission, of course, have their separate organization.

Q. What class of patients do they pay?—A. They pay all that go into the hospital.

Q. And what class of patients do you pay?—A. We pay the men up till the date of their arrival here in Canada. Then we turn them over to the Hospitals Commission, and they pay them.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. Then as soon as a man arrives in Canada, and you pay him off, your responsibility ceases?—A. Practically, and the Hospitals Commission are really responsible.

Q. You say the Hospitals Commission are "really" responsible, are they actually responsible, or have you something to do with it?—A. They are responsible.

Q. Do you have anything to do with it at all?—A. We have really no authority (to Major Ingall)—I think I am correct in that statement.

Major INGALL: The Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission came over to our Headquarters, and asked that our inspectors should be permitted to inspect their pay-accounts, that is the pay they advance to the men, but not other accounts in connection with the Hospitals Commission.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. The Hospitals Commission Command Paymaster is responsible that the man gets his pay and allowances?—A. He is responsible.

Q. And the man is passed over wholly to the Hospitals Commission paymaster?—A. Yes.

Q. Where does the Hospitals Commission paymaster get his money—from you?—A. He gets it from the Militia Department.

Q. Through you?—A. Through the District Officer.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who is the Militia Hospitals Commission paymaster?—A. There is one in each district. You had one of the Military Hospitals paymasters before this Committee, I think, in Toronto, Lieutenant Chadwick.

Q. Who is the superintendent of the Military Hospitals Commission paymasters; who is the head of that branch?—A. The Secretary, Mr. Scammel.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Then am I right in this that when a man comes home and there is pay due to him, you take care of him?—A. We take care of him.

Q. And you take care of his assigned pay?—A. And separation allowance—up to the date he arrives here.

Q. He arrives here, and he is put in the hospital; have you anything further to do with that man—I am talking now about your branch?—A. Well, he is turned over to the Hospitals Commission, and there is in a way, a sort of dual control, I suppose. The lines are not very plainly marked between the Hospitals Commission and the Militia Department.

Q. You are the Militia Department?—A. Ours is the Militia Department.

Q. Now supposing I want to write about a man like Private Lee, and I wrote to you, do you have charge of it, or do you refer me to the Military Hospitals Commission, because this man is in the hospital?—A. No, we refer you to the Military Hospitals Commission. I would write to the Military paymaster in Toronto, and ask him to look into the case, through the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. So that the process would be this: I write you, who ought to be written to as head of the Pay Department, you would write to a man in Toronto who belongs to your department, and he would write to a man somewhere else who belongs to the Military Hospitals Commission, and the Military Hospitals Commission would report back to you through the same source?—A. That is about it.

Q. So that it takes about six letters, where one ought to do and it goes through this endless chain in order to get at the facts in one simple case?—A. Yes, that is correct, but I do not know that it would take six letters. We would write to the District Paymaster, but he would not necessarily write to the Military Hospitals Paymaster.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. Then what does he do?—A. Hé might interview the paymaster by personal interview.

Q. And when he had that interview, then what would he do?—A. Write to me.

Q. And you would then—A. Write to you.

Q. So that there is, as a matter of fact, a dual control over these funds?—A. There is.

Q. And these funds cannot be paid out without your consent, and without the consent of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. That is correct.

By the Chairman:

Q. This case of Lee's is at Sarnia. Do I understand that you would write to Toronto in connection with that or write to London?—A. He was in London. In that case we would write to London.

Q. You would write to the paymaster of the military district to which he comes?—A. Yes, that is the channel through which I would seek information.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You have never hesitated, when cases have arisen in connection with the adjustment of differences between the overseas pay office and your office, to use the cables?—A. Never hesitated. We sometimes cable on the most trivial matter. We feel compelled to—

Q. And you use the telegraph as well?—A. Yes.

Q. Against the people making complaints?—A. In a case of promotion we often have to cable asking if Private So-and-So has been made a sergeant, and from what time, as it affects separation allowance, also assigned pay.

By the Chairman:

Q. When Major Todd was here, we asked him about how many complaints he had, and he stated that he would submit a memorandum, which he has done, of some forty complaints that have been received in his department. Then he gave an analysis of these showing how they were disposed of. Would you be inclined to give us twenty-five or thirty sample complaints that may have been received in your department within the last three or four days?—A. Regarding pay?

Q. Yes. Take the correspondence of complaints that have come in this week, and give us a memo. showing what were those complaints and what the departmental statement is concerning each?—A. Yes, I shall be glad to do that.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. There has been a class of cases brought to my attention, and in so far as the question of pay is included they can be referred to now. I do not know whether you can give us any information, but I refer to the case of men who while in England, say, occupied the rank of sergeant and received sergeant's pay, and who claim that before going overseas they were given to understand that they would be allowed to retain their rank and the pay of that rank; but after arriving in France were reduced to the rank of private and had their pay reduced accordingly. Can you tell the Committee anything about that?—A. They would not be reduced unless it was a case of a surplus N.C.O.'s sent over from Canada to England, and who volunteered to serve as a private. In that case he would draw the pay of a private, but his wife would draw the separation allowance of a sergeant. Separation allowance was not to be reduced in such cases. If the man who went over as an officer, warrant officer or N.C.O. volunteered to serve as a private at the front, he was to get a private's pay, but the wife was to get separation allowance as an officer's wife or a warrant officer's or N.C.O.'s wife, as the case may be; and in case of death I think it was understood that she was to be pensioned at the rates allowed for officers, warrant officers or N.C.O.'s, as the case may be.

[Mr. J. W. Borden.]

Q. I have had a memo. made in regard to two cases. (Memo. read). Based on the memorandum I have just read about the case of John Chorley, can you explain to the Committee why the reduction of pay was made?—A. I could not. We would have to seek information overseas.

Q. And your answer would apply to any other case of the same character?—A. We would have to seek the information overseas.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. That is one point I have not mentioned. When the men get overseas, N.C.O.'s very frequently find themselves reduced because of small offences by the operation of the military law or Military Board. Then the pay office keeps on paying both assigned pay and separation allowance on the basis of a sergeant until they get advices of a man having been reduced. The result is a further complication that necessitates an adjustment. I intended to mention that class.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That does not apply to the case I cited.

The WITNESS: We do not pay any attention to these reduction cases unless they are for some considerable time. If it is a temporary reduction, the allowances are not affected.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. If it is a permanent reduction, you have to reduce the allowances?—A. Then we have to adjust the pay accordingly.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Where can information be obtained about cases such as I have drawn your attention to?—A. We would receive a report. If you will forward the memoranda to me I will send overseas and ask for a report.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I will give you these memoranda (hands to witness).

By the Chairman:

Q. You will be good enough, if the task is not too great, to take the complaints that have come in this week regarding pay and allowances, prepare a list of them, and the result of your departmental investigation regarding each, and let this Committee look them over?—A. I shall be very happy to do that.

Witness discharged.

Surgeon-General CARLETON JONES re-called and re-examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. When you were before us last, General Jones, we asked you more particularly regarding matters of medical care and attention with regard to the men overseas. The Committee are of opinion that they require certain further information regarding the matter of pay and allowances. I wish you would tell us very briefly just what is the procedure overseas in the matter of pay and allowances in the case of men who are wounded?—A. When the man comes back to England, he has his pay book with him, and that pay book is sent from the hospital to the Pay Branch in London. He receives no pay while he is in hospital.

Q. Is the Pay Branch in London a sub-department of the Pay Branch or the regular pay and records office?—A. The pay offices.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. The Millbank offices?—A. Yes.

[Surgeon-General G. C. Jones.]

By the Chairman:

Q. To any special department thereof?—A. Yes, it is distributed in the departments I presume. He receives no pay while he is in hospital, except he is allowed, I understand—I am not quite certain on this point—I think it is now six shillings a week while in hospital.

Q. For spending money?—A. For spending money. When he comes to be sent to Canada his pay book comes with his discharge documents.

Q. Do you send to London for it?—A. There is a new procedure laid down. I was trying to get the department's copy. It was a memo. given out by the overseas authorities, dealing with the routine discharge of men in England. I think it is an important document; it might be submitted to the Committee.

Q. You will file it as an appendix to to-day's evidence?—A. It there lays down the duties of the Pay Branch as regards men in hospital in England, and who are discharged in England.

Q. Is the endeavour usually made, when a wounded soldier is sent back here, to have all papers relating to his medical condition and his pay and allowances go back on the same ship with him?—A. He is supposed not to go until his last certificate has been received either at the special depot at Buxton, or at the hospital which he is at.

Q. Upon whom does the duty devolve to make sure that the soldier and his papers return on the same ship?—A. The officer carrying out the discharge in England, that is the officer commanding the discharge depot at Buxton, or what is called the hospital representative of the Adjutant-General in each hospital or group of hospitals in England.

Q. If you were to-day sending a telegram regarding a man who had come out here without these pay documents, who would you send it to?—A. I would send it to the Adjutant General at London.

Q. For him to pass on to the proper party?—A. The officer in command of the Buxton discharge depot is under him, and also the hospital representative, that is the designation of the officer representing the Adjutant General in each hospital or group of hospitals in England.

Q. Are the men who are to be sent back to Canada mobilized from the several hospitals and sent back in a completed group?—A. The procedure is this: Those who have reached finality as regards medical treatment are grouped at Buxton.

Q. They may be in twenty hospitals. Are they brought together?—A. Those who have reached their finality go to Buxton. They are discharged for medical reasons. The others are brought from the different hospitals in England and are sent there to the hospital ship. But we are now establishing in England a clearing hospital of a thousand beds or more to which—

Q. At the point of embarkation?—A. I do not think so. I am not quite certain where it is. When I left it was to be at Manchester. I do not look upon the port of embarkation as being a good place for it. All the patients from the Canadian primary hospitals, the English hospitals, the Canadian convalescent hospitals and special hospitals and others, will be sent to this clearing hospital. I look upon that as being a most important thing to establish, because there every matter connected with them will be adjusted before they come to Canada.

Q. Then all their documents regarding pay and allowances and everything of that kind will all head up at that clearing hospital?—A. Yes.

Q. And hereafter there will be no question of three hundred dossiers coming back with the same number of men?—A. They should be always, eliminating the human element.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is there such a hospital now?—A. It is just being formed.

[Surgeon-General G. C. Jones.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you consider that that will do away with a number of difficulties that have existed heretofore? A. My own view is that the men should be started and transferred from the hospital in England to the hospital in Canada, in very much the same way as they are transferred from the hospitals in France to the hospitals in England.

Q. Your plan would be practically the same as carrying out the discharge depot on the other side. What is now done at Quebec and Halifax will be done in England?—A. On discharge they will be simply transferred from one hospital in England to one hospital in Canada, thereby keeping up the continuity of medical treatment and medical management.

Q. And you would do away with the discharge depot here?—A. For that class of men.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And the only question which could arise would arise when he would be transferred to the Alberta hospitals, or some other hospital?—A. Quite so.

Q. We are speaking of that classification?—A. Yes.

Q. And your statement is that the staff you have provided at Manchester has to see that he has everything in England before he departs, and that is done as far as that is concerned?—A. Quite so.

Q. And it is merely a transfer from one board to another?—A. If it is a hospital ship he need not go to Quebec, the hospital ships will always land at Halifax, I understand, and he will be sent direct from Halifax to the hospital for which he is destined.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is that scheme of which you speak, put into effect?—A. Yes.

Q. When do you expect it will be in full operation?—A. I could not say exactly, I do not know how far the clearing hospital is advanced, or at what stage it is now, but it is all in process and as far as the main question is concerned, it is already acting.

Q. And you think that the new arrangement, as far as documentation is concerned, will meet the difficulty to some extent that we have experienced here?—A. The question of medical documentation will certainly. As to the question of pay to the men, I am not an authority on that.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. There is no reason why it should not?—A. No.

Witness discharged.

Mr. JOHN FRASER, Auditor-General, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand, Mr. Fraser, that you went over to England some time ago, and spent several months there, particularly investigating the matters of expenditure. Have you anything to offer this committee in connection with the subject we have been taking up regarding soldiers' pay and allowances. What did you find to be the system in operation over there?—A. In what respect, Mr. Chairman? I have heard Mr. Borden's evidence as to how the accounts were kept. There was a different system over there.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You investigated matters yourself, did you not?—A. Yes.

[Mr. John Fraser.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Will you tell us something of the organization of the Pay and Records Department over there in respect of the matter with which we have been dealing this morning?—A. They have a Chief Paymaster and a Chief Auditor there, with a large staff, one branch of it keeping the pay and the other branch keeping the separation allowance and assigned pay. At that time, these accounts were kept in different ledgers, one ledger for a man's pay and allowances, another one for his assigned pay, and another for the separation allowance. I thought the system was bad, and I recommended that they be consolidated in one ledger. I did not see any reason why a man's account should not contain the whole transaction, instead of having it in three different ledgers. My chief reason for making that decision was to prevent losses,—I was more interested in seeing that military people did not get overpaid than that they should be underpaid.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. As a matter of fact the question of overpay has been very serious?—A. Very serious.

Q. And it assumed proportions of very great magnitude at one time?—A. It is pretty hard to tell, it is a matter of opinion; I do not suppose it will ever be ascertained.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What will never be ascertained?—A. The amount of the overpayments.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Do these overpayments occur in many cases?—A. The thing is so vast that it is a matter of curiosity; I think it would cost too much to ascertain the actual amount.

Q. As a matter of fact, they have made very persistent efforts, following up your recommendation, to prevent overpayments, and to absorb some portion of the overpayments that have been made?—A. Yes, there were efforts made, we changed the system of keeping the books, and some changes were made by the officials themselves in the way of adjusting.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Where did those overpayments take place, in England, Canada or both places?—A. It might be in both. Perhaps a better way would be to take a concrete case: there was one case where a man's assigned pay was paid, $15 a month, I think it was, for eleven months; the assigned pay was paid to his wife for that period, and there was no record of it in his pay ledger, through the neglect, I presume, of the clerk who should have entered it there. If that soldier had, during that time, come into London and had drawn his money his account would have been settled on the basis of his pay ledger, and a sum of between $200 and $300, I think, would be lost for the time being. Of course there would be an attempt made to recover the amount when it was discovered about six months afterwards, and if it had been a casualty case, where the widow was pensioned they would be trying to recover it from the widow. There are a great many cases in which the Pensions Board is asked to recover certain sums that were overpaid months and months before.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is they seek to recover from the pension given to the widow the amount of the overpayment that was made to the man?—A. Yes.

Q. I think the Government have decided not to do that?—A. It was very recently then, if they have. I have given my opinion very freely over there and I have given it to the Pensions Board too, but I do not think the Pensions Board have any right to deduct such amounts from the widow's pension; that the pension was given to her not for the purpose of paying her husband's debts.

Q. I think that is the attitude now taken by the Government?—A. It must have been taken very recently.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Has there been a change in the system with a view to preventing these over-payments?—A. Yes, they have transferred—I expect it has been done by this time—all the accounts to one ledger so that if notice is sent to the ledger-keeper that a man is killed, his account is closed automatically.

Q. Have you any idea, even approximately, what the overpayments amount to?—A. I should imagine hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Q. Is it not ascertainable more definitely than that?—A. No; when I was over there, there was a staff at work trying to recover the over-payments in connection with the men who went over with the first contingent.

Q. And do I understand you to say that while the amount may be as large as that, the cost of recovery would be too great to actually make the attempt?—A. Yes. For instance, you find there has been an overpayment in the Princess Pats, and you start a file of correspondence which is carried on for some time, and finally it reaches overseas, and it comes to some paymaster who proves up the account and finds out that the man who has been overpaid has been buried months before that.

By the Chairman:

Q. Or he has been sent back to Canada and discharged?—A. There were not many "Princess Pats" came back to Canada. I did not see that there was any use in wasting time on over-payments to "Princess Pats" at all.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Outside of that, are there many cases of overpayment?—A. I saw one statement of about $75,000 of overpayment, and $25,000 or $30,000 out of that had been recovered.

By the Chairman:

Q. By deducting amounts from the subsequent pay of men while in the service?—A. If the men are still in the service there is still a possibility of recovering.

Q. Are there many cases where an attempt has been made to get women to recoup separation allowance and assigned pay that were not due to them?—A. Yes. Of course it is a hardship; they had no doubt benefited from the overpayment, but that fact does not help them much when they have to refund it. I have a great deal of sympathy with the soldier and the soldier's family. Of course, I have to look at the other side of it. At the same time there is another class of losses, I do not know what they amount to, but there must certainly be a lot of them, running into very large sums. The pay-lists in the early portion of the war, when the men went overseas, required some time before they were got into shape. They had, I believe, to have a roll call of the men over there in order to get the books right, and they found they did not have all the people that were on the pay-roll. From what you have heard from Mr. Borden, here to-day, the machinery that was set at work here upon these pay-rolls would keep grinding out cheques until they got some information from England that these people were not over there—take deserters, and some men that were turned out of the regiment—

Q. For physical unfitness?—A. Yes, for a variety of reasons, these men remained on the pay-list.

Q. For assigned pay and separation allowance?—A. Yes, the paymasters, through ignorance or incompetence, would fail to notify the Militia Department that these men were discharged, and these payments would keep going on, and possibly some of them are going on yet.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You say you keep grinding out the cheques, what do you mean by that?—A. From the Department here.

Q. They would not have information that the men had left—where would these cheques go to?—A. To the people and to their families.

Q. And do you mean to say that these cheques were endorsed and cashed?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What the Auditor-General means is, that a man, we will say John Smith, was on the pay-list for a certain battalion, but John Smith was not with that battalion at all, but John Smith's wife got her separation allowance and assigned pay before the regimental paymaster reported that he was not with the battalion, and when the mistake was discovered they could not get the money back.—A. They could not get the money back, and I do not believe they can give you an assurance yet, in the Militia Department, that they are not still paying some of these cases.

Q. That is pretty well looked after now.—A. I will tell you what was done; when I was over there, and discussing these things, I said: "You ought to have some system of checking with Ottawa periodically." The result of that suggestion was that cards were taken from all the ledgers, giving the man's name, identity, and so forth, with the state of his account on the 30th November, and they have sent a staff out here who are engaged in checking off the accounts with the Militia Department books.

Q. And the statement has been made that the result has been very satisfactory?—A. I do not know whether it will be satisfactory to the Committee to hear that they have found there were hundreds of thousands of dollars gone and only a comparatively small portion of it recovered.

The CHAIRMAN: I may say, Mr. Auditor General, that at one period the patriotic fund drew the attention of the Government to a great many cases of women who were still drawing separation allowance and assigned pay, and whose husbands had gone back; and the Militia authorities were glad to get that information. But there have been very few cases of that kind during the last year.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. After the situation became known, instructions were issued to the paymasters insisting that the members of the unit sign an acquittance roll thereby establishing beyond question the identity of the individual?—A. That is overseas?

Q. Yes?—A. Yes, they sign the acquittance roll and the amount they draw is entered in their pass books.

Q. He signs the acquittance roll which is with the paymaster in the field, which makes it certain that that identical individual is an existing member of the unit. That has been introduced also?—A. That was enforced, I think, from the beginning.

Q. If there were a proper acquittance roll, that prevents the possibility of pay being given to some man under a false name, because his name is on the roll. That is clear. It does not get over the separation allowance and assigned pay question. Then there was later perhaps owing to your intervention, a line of communication established directly between the Pay and Records office, the point to which the acquittance rolls went back, and the Ottawa office, so that I think about the middle of 1915 the serious character of the situation had passed away. It was really serious in the early stages of the game?—A. Yes, and serious in 1915.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I know it was; I personally went into the matter.

[Mr. John Fraser.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Would that acquittance roll of which you speak contain the names of men who did not sign?—A. No, it contained the names of all the men on the muster roll. Then those men as they got their pay signed the acquittance roll.

Q. There were some names then without the men's signatures being obtained?—A. That is not quite correct. A man might not draw anything for the month. The paymaster makes out the roll.

Q. Would there be some inquiry made? Are those names in blank?—A. No, they step up and draw their pay.

Mr. BENNETT: What the Auditor General is concerned about is the difficulties of assigned pay and separation allowance.

The WITNESS: That is where the serious losses are.

Mr. BENNETT: There cannot be serious losses in the other thing. There may be a little, but they are insignificant.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. You have told us there are hundreds of thousands of these cases?—A. Probably thousands.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I am not saying how correct this is, but I am advised that the effort that was made in London which may have been as the result of your visit, and the co-ordination of your work here, had absorbed the major part of the losses that there were, but that it had worked a hardship apparently on some officers' families with respect to separation allowance and to some privates families in regard to assigned pay?—A. I do not think it would be much in connection with officers because the number would not be large.

Q. If there was a mistake of $500 in connection with ten thousand officers, going on for two years, and also mistakes in regard to assigned pay, it would involve a large amount. I suppose you realize that saving five cents a day with respect to 400,000 men would represent a large amount of money?—A. There are opportunities for saving. There was one piece of work in the office at London, in the audit branch, that I thought was useless, or, at least, a waste of effort. I said; "Why do you do it?" The reply was: "Well, we have no instructions not to do it." I said: "Cut it out, do not waste $10,000 trying to collect $100." I could not get it done then. I have a letter from my own assistant a few days ago saying they have adopted it at last and released 79 men. That is $100,000 a year probably saved.

Q. I was going to mention that, as a matter of fact, you have more closely tied your departmental activities to the overseas expenditures now than a year ago, that is, you have made your department more closely responsible for the audit of overseas expenditures than it was a year ago?—A. No.

Q. Did you not send over a direct representative?—A. Yes. We are slightly more responsible, because I wanted to create a little board over there to settle a lot of difficulties that arose very frequently, daily perhaps, that were referred out to the Militia Department here. There was nobody there supposed to be competent to determine them.

Q. And the establishing of an overseas Minister of Militia has necessitated a closer co-ordination between your department and the overseas department?—A. They have to do their own work. They had a representative of the Ottawa department there, but he could not settle these matters, through friction in the office—they were not consulting him. I suggested that a board consisting of the chief paymaster, the chief auditor, Colonel Ward and my representative should be established there to whom should be referred all these little difficulties instead of writing to Ottawa and waiting for months for action. Whether they are carrying it out or not, I do not know; I presume some of the work is being done.

Q. I know, as a matter of fact, that there have been great improvements at the pay office in Millbank since the establishing of the Overseas Ministry, that is in respect of being able to act on their own responsibility and dispose of little matters involving expenditures, as well as the improvements you mentioned such as the releasing of the seventy-nine men.—A. It must be a good deal better. The Overseas Minister has evidently got a full equipment there now which is able to deal with things just as they would deal with them in Canada.

By the Chairman:

Q. In your judgment is the Pay and Records Office, in London, at present efficiently handled?—A. Well, at present I do not know. They have sent a great many of the office staff to the front, in the ordinary term, they have cleaned out the office.

Q. That is, of able-bodied men?—A. And there were a lot of men that should never have been placed in the office.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. There are twenty-five hundred men there?—A. I think there are seventeen hundred in the Pay Office alone—some incompetents—they were worse than useless; it would have been better to pay them to sit out on the sidewalk and leave the books alone.

By the Chairman:

Q. Were they returned soldiers?—

Mr. BENNETT: They were returned from Canada, rather.

A. They went from Canada to Great Britain, they did not get any further. I am not satisfied that they have the best system over there. They have a military system for a civil proposition. There are ranks in the office, discipline and everything the same as if they were at the front fighting Germans instead of keeping books.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. How many colonels were there when you were over?—A. I do not know. I was afraid to speak to a man there in case I would have the wrong title.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you mean by that, Mr. Fraser, that the authority that a man may have in the Pay and Records Office depends not upon his position in connection with finance but on the title that he carries in connection with his military standing?—A. Certainly. A lieutenant has to recognize a captain as his superior, and the captain a major, and the major a colonel.

Q. If a lieutenant was an expert in book-keeping?—A. Go a little further, put him as a private.

Q. If a private had been at home an expert accountant, and the colonel knew nothing comparatively about book-keeping, and both were in the office, would the colonel of necessity be a superior officer?—A. Certainly

Q. Would he assume authority in matters of book-keeping over the accountant?—A. Oh, yes, and the chartered accountant who is a private dare not say a word about it.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You must be fair about that. Mr. Ross and Mr. Dowie were certainly accountants of high reputation, and they are the men who were put in charge of the office as such?—A. Yes, but there is this—

Q. And those colonels and majors who exercise authority in the sense to which you refer, get their ultimate instructions from Mr. Ross and Mr. Dowie. You want to be fair on that point.—A. They were in charge of sections.

[Mr. John Fraser.]

Q. But the sections in turn had to report to Ross and Dowie?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Well, it has been changed since my time.—A. Do you mean to say they had to report what they found there?

Q. Had to report as to their administration.—A. Well, they had charge of those men. If the books were wrong they were wrong.

Q. So far as the administration of the Millbank Pay Office is concerned, Ross and Dowie were primarily responsible?—A. Certainly they were. Suppose there was a section of chartered accountants keeping books there with a captain who was a plumber in charge of them. That section of men could get wrong. Colonel Ross would not know it, and Major Dowie would discover it six months afterwards when taking off the balance.

Q. Ultimately it would come to them when the books were balanced?—A. The case I mentioned of the eleven months' overpayment, at the end of the first six months in the balance Major Dowie's staff found it. They made an observation, what we call a memo. That was sent to Colonel Ross—I don't suppose he ever saw it. That was supposed to be sent down and be corrected. Another five months had elapsed, nothing was done except keeping the man's account wrong. When I came across it there and pointed it out to Major Dowie, he said: "Next month I will find that again." I said: "What is the use of finding it? Why don't you have a follow-up system?" He said: "It was not my business to see that it was corrected." That is the chief paymaster. The chief paymaster cannot see what seventeen hundred men are doing. If it was a properly organized office on a business basis, this chartered accountant as a private could go to Colonel Ross and say: "Here these fellows have made an error, and the man whom they are acting under knows nothing at all about this; I do not feel like having things wrong without reporting them." But under the present system he dare not go and report it.

Q. He does not?—A. The men told me these things. They told me: "I dare not."

Q. He has a right to go to his superior officer, to his captain, and can insist that his memo. be transmitted to his next superior officer.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Would men unfamiliar with military discipline know that?—A. I am told that some of those chartered accountants brought from the front because they were experts became so disgusted with conditions that they purposely put their accounts wrong in order that they would be fired and sent back to the front again. They prefer being in the trenches.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. They would sooner take the chance of being killed than work that way?—A. I do not know about preferring to be killed, but that is what happened.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Your idea is to have a pay office, an audited pay office.—A. A civilian office.

Q. A properly audited pay office, under civilian authority, operated probably as a branch of the Department of Finance?—A. No, you would have to have a number of trained militia men in that.

Q. You have not been over there since the new minister was established there?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you get back?—A. I arrived in St. John the day after Christmas, 1916; but it takes a good while to get a machine in running order, and the new minister has quite a lot of things to attend to.

Q. Are you satisfied it is running better now?—A. I think so.

[Mr. John Fraser.]

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. In connection with the overpayments of which you spoke, I suppose that efforts are constantly being made to recover these amounts?—A. Yes, there is a staff, I do not know how many, engaged on that work.

Q. How do these efforts result, are the moneys returned, or refunded by the people who received cheques they should not have received?—A. Those would be sums paid at Ottawa here?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not know exactly what your committee here is appointed to inquire into.

Q. Everything in connection with this subject; is there anything in that connection upon which this committee might obtain further information?—A. I certainly think there should be some inquiry into this question; I understand there have been very serious leakages in connection with these refunds.

Q. How do you mean?—A. In connection with refunds that have been made and not accounted for.

Q. Refunds made to Ottawa?—A. Yes. I am only giving hearsay now, but I would not say it unless I thought it were true. This is so vast a subject, that I cannot audit it in the way I audit other accounts, unless I create a staff such as they have or duplicate the work and keep the accounts, and it is not good business for me to spend half a million or $600,000 more trying to do the work that ought to be done properly in the first place.

Q. How does this leakage occur to which you refer?—A. Sometimes cases where the person has had a separation allowance continued after the man was discharged and when it is found out after a while, the department asks the parties to make a refund. The refund comes back in cash, possibly, or money orders, or cheques, and I understand there is a lot of that money that has never gone to the credit of the Receiver-General.

Q. Have there been any reports made to you on that subject?—A. No.

Q. Would there be any reports made to you in the ordinary course of events?—A. No, they do not usually tell me those things. It is just like the paymasters, there are defalcations of paymasters, quite a lot of them, some of them from overseas. I will give you one instance of a man who was, I think it was $3,500 behind. He was overseas, he was dealt with over there and sent back to Canada. He was discharged and sent back to Canada to be dealt with here. He was dealt with here, by putting him in command of a new regiment as colonel. He is now over in France, and he has never paid up this amount. I asked them to commence deducting this amount from his pay and they said: "Oh, we can't do that, the pay is to Colonel So and So; that was Paymaster So and So, we have no authority to deduct it from colonel So and So's pay."

Q. Was it known here at headquarters that he was a defaulter?—A. Yes, certainly, it is shown on the books there. I understand that lately there has been, I do not know whether it is a reorganization, or that different methods have been adopted here, but I heard Mr. Borden state to-day that Major Ingall was in charge there now.

Q. Can Major Ingall deal with all these cases?—A. I think so. I am very glad he is there. I think it is a very good place to put him.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you know anything about the paymasters, whether they keep their books properly; have you anything to do with that?—A. Now it is all under inspection, I think Colonel Langton of the Militia Department looks after that now.

Q. You have not to do with that?—A. Not with the inspection of it, but they have to be right when they come to me.

[Mr. John Fraser.]

Q. What has to be right when it comes to you?—A. So far as the additions and all that sort of thing are concerned, they must be right; but they may be absolutely wrong as vouchers. There is talk about padded pay-rolls and so on, but we could not detect that.

Witness retired.

Major C. M. INGALL, called, sworn and examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. I understand that you are acting head of the Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance Pay Office here?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been with us practically all the morning, and you have heard the criticisms that have come from men and the explanation with reference to complaints regarding pay and allowances. We will be glad to have you first give your evidence in your own way and tell us what you can regarding matters which have been under discussion this morning; afterwards we will ask you questions on the subject.—A. I proceeded overseas with the first division that left Canada, I went over in the flag-ship Franconia, and we made an endeavour on that ship to open up 33,000 accounts.

Q. In what capacity were you at that time?—A. I was taken overseas to be assistant base paymaster.

Q. Where?—A. Originally at Salisbury, and it was intended I should then proceed to Rouen, or wherever the base was in France.

Q. What has your civilian occupation been?—A. I have been inspector in the Army Pay Corps and a member of the Canadian militia for twenty-seven years, and I have been making pay-sheets for about twenty-five years.

Q. The 33,000 accounts were for the first contingent?—A. Yes. We found that it was impossible to open these in longhand. The authorities who despatched us overseas decided that the paymasters of the various units, and all their belongings should go on the ships on which their units were. The consequence was we were so spread out on the various ships that it was impossible to keep in touch with the other ships, so that, especially in cases where we did not have the attestation paper for a soldier his account was not opened. It was the intention when we went over there that all accounts should be kept at headquarters when in England, and eventually in France in the same manner, and I was to be superintendent of that division. Unfortunately when we arrived in England, the paymasters were allowed to go to the field. We went to Salisbury, and they gave us a hut 18 feet square where they expected us to run these accounts for 33,000 men. Col. Shanley was my chief at that time, and we looked over the field and found it was impossible to keep the accounts there, so we went to the town of Salisbury where we got a loft in an old building and started with six clerks.

Q. And you were the chief?—A. In charge of the compiling.

Q. But you were supposed to be in charge of the paymasters of those battalions?—A. Colonel Shanley was my chief, and there was a field cashier in each division who made all advances to the men.

Q. You might tell the committee how it was things went wrong, that has been brought out?—A. If the original plan laid down by the Militia Department, which had been considered, I understand, by some select committee of Parliament, had been carried out, all the difficulties that we experienced with regard to the soldiers' pay would never have occurred at all. But the paymasters were allowed to proceed to the field with their respective units taking their clerks with them, and each paymaster was therefore temporarily a law unto himself, instead of having them all brought to the one office at the base where they would have been under the supervision of one competent man. This, however, was never done. Just prior to the division moving away in February or March, 1915, we were able to persuade the general staff that we should have larger quarters, and they eventually gave us a big house in Salisbury, where all the clerks were brought together.

Q. And the paymasters?—A. No, just the clerks, the paymasters remained in the field to act as regimental accountants, and distribute the cash to the men, and anything else. When this office in Salisbury had been running for about six weeks, and after clearing up all the accounts, it was decided to move it to London.

Q. And was that the progenitor of the London pay office?—A. Yes, that is what started the whole thing, except that Col. Ward was in London before that, in charge of a small staff, keeping in touch with the War Office and the Canadian High Commissioner. Just prior to going to London a Mr. Dowie came to Salisbury and said he had been selected by the Minister of Militia, and General Carson, to inquire generally into our systems, that as he was a chartered accountant, no doubt he would be able to give us a great deal of valuable assistance. We received definite instructions that we were to co-operate with Mr. Dowie and show him all our books and everything connected with them, and he did not find any fault with our work at Salisbury except that the staff should have been brought together at an earlier date so as to have better control of them. However, after going into the organization at London, the second contingent were with us by this time, and the business expanded so rapidly there was not a proper organization to handle all the accounts, and unfortunately I had control of the most difficult part of it, the accounts of the non-commissioned officers and men. At that time the powers that were in control would not allow me an assistant officer, but suddenly, one morning, they sent me five officers who were not, I am sorry to say, of very great assistance. They knew more about other things than they did about keeping accounts, and the one officer who had come, having a knowledge of accounts, had no military experience at all, and could not apply military regulations in the circumstances we were then serving under. Many commanding officers when they arrived overseas found themselves suddenly empowered to deal with the men by giving them field punishment; they imposed fines upon their men for various offences, and we found that one commanding officer was piling up debit charges against some of his men amounting, in one case, to as much as $100, and the man was getting only $1.10 a day.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. You say the commanding officers had the right to fine their men?—A. They gave their men field punishment and fines, but they did not understand that those fines could not be piled up against the man; under field punishment the man can be sentenced to lose his pay, but he has to fight the same as any other soldier. He would receive a punishment for some offence one day, and a short time afterwards he would come back again and be punished again; the forfeiture would be charged up against him, and sometimes these forfeitures would pile up so that a man's pay would be mortgaged for a month ahead because the commanding officer had been clothed with a little brief authority. Then, before the office was properly organized the troops went into action, and were at Langemareke and St. Julien, and they began to come back to us before the accounts had been properly opened in England at all. The ledger accounts were in bad shape, the pay-lists had not been brought down properly to us. A man would come back with another man's pay book he had picked up on the field, having lost his own. He was issued money on that, and money was issued to the wrong soldier. As an example, there were two hundred and eighty-seven Smiths in the first division alone. There was really no satisfactory way to identify these men, the only way we could indentify the man at all was through his number, and we had to take the number shown in the pay book, and the amount shown in the pay book was compared with the acquittance rolls of the paymasters rendered from France and Flanders. Very frequently it was the case that entries were made against the wrong soldier. This matter was then discussed with the paymaster in chief of the Imperial Army, General Bray, and he recommended that the best thing to do was that the Canadians should follow the Imperial system of taking the soldier's pay book away from him when he became a casualty. This removed the full record when the soldier went into hospital.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By the Chairman:

Q. It was quite the common thing to do that?—A. That was the regular thing, that was the rule.

Q. For a considerable period?—A. For many months.

Q. There may have been thousands of books taken away and never returned?—A. Yes, they are kept in steel cabinets which were constructed in the chief paymaster's office. What books have not been distributed are waiting to be distributed there.

Q. Is any effort being made to distribute them?—A. Nothing being done at all so far as I know. Since the Auditor General's visit, the soldier's pay book is no longer taken away from him; he takes his pay book into hospital or wherever he goes. It is the same as a bank pass book.

Q. Then, these complaints that the soldiers have made before this committee that many soldiers had no pay book, are perfectly valid?—A. Oh, yes, they are.

Q. There must be many men back in Canada whose books are still in England?—A. Yes, I thing so.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The witness has told us that there are many books in the steel cabinets in England.

The WITNESS: I know exactly where they are. Of course, another thing, there is a regulation that lays down that when a soldier loses his pay book he will temporarily forfeit any balance due to his account until such time as the account can be verified. There is another thing, in the recovery of all these debit balances, that has been brought up in discussion, that is the matter of over punishments and that sort of thing. This does not affect officers. In the case of warrant officers, N.C.O's and men fifty per cent of their pay is deferred, and they cannot get it until they are discharged from the service, that is the men who do not assign any of their pay to their families. Many think they have lost this money. We find many complaints consequently are not well founded. Last Saturday we took a whole delegation, after I had secured permission, through the Assigned Pay Branch.

Q. That is the Great War Veterans Association Delegation?—A. Yes. We took them right through the department and showed them the difficulties we were working under. Two-thirds of the men promised to go back and tell their comrades that a great many of their complaints had not been well founded. I do not know that I can tell you anything further with regard to the work overseas.

Q. You might tell us a little more about the matter of debit balances how they occur and how a record is kept of them?—A. The system in use in England from the beginning of the war is the system that is still in use for the payment of troops other than officers. The officers' accounts are kept either in the Bank of Montreal at Waterloo Place or else at Cox & Co., Charing Cross. The officers are never notified after the first payment is made of the amounts that they are to receive for their pay and allowances, if they are promoted, or for some cause or other are given a step in rank, they are not notified of what is deposited to their credit; it goes in a lump sum to the Bank. Officers have a small pass book issued to them when the first deposit is made. That is the way the whole of the officers are paid. With regard to the warrant officers, N.C.O's and men, there is a base paymaster in France, who receives money from the Treasury chest, and who distributes it. Each division has a cashier. There is no longer a corps cashier, but there was until a few months ago.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

The divisional cashier receives money and distributes it to all of the regimental paymasters in his division, for which he takes a receipt. The next day at a given point in the trenches, or in billets, the paymasters meet him, and return to him the acquittance rolls. These show the soldier's regimental number, rank, name and initials, the sum of money he receives, and the soldier is required to sign for this, and these rolls the paymaster hands to the cashier to show that he has properly expended the money. The clearance the paymaster receives is, each soldier steps up to the pay table, or wherever they are paid, to receive his pay. He holds his pay book with his thumb on his regimental number. Sometimes it is necessary to examine the little metal disc which each soldier carries for identification purposes, to see if the numbers correspond. The paymaster enters in ink in the soldier's pay book the amount of money he receives and signs that the entry is correct. That is an offset against the acquittance roll.

Q. The soldier is entitled to receive, if a married man, the balance remaining after deducting from his pay of $33 his assigned pay?—A. No, sir. As soon as the troops move into France, irrespective of their rank, they get a franc, or twenty cents, a day. That is all the soldiers get.

Q. The rest is all held as accrued pay?—A. Yes, it accumulates. That is the system of payment. Acquittance rolls are made out in triplicate. The original and duplicate go down through the cashier to the base office and then to London. Enough time is lost in circulating through these offices before it goes to the Chief Paymaster's office where the soldier's account is really kept, especially where the soldier becomes a casualty.

Q. He may have been evacuated more quickly than his book?—A. Frequently that is so. He eventually returns to Canada; he comes back here, and the final statement of his account—

Q. Just there, we will follow that evacuated soldier. He has gone back to London. Where are his pay book and his account?—A. His pay book is with him, and his account is in London, no matter what Hospital he goes to.

Q. From that time forward the base paymaster in France has nothing more to do with him?—A. Nothing.

Q. His account is registered in London?—A. Yes. In the London office, as soon as the acquittance rolls are received, they are vouchered now into the various sections. They are sorted out, and are debited to the soldier's account. It has frequently been the case, and what has made the most serious complaint among the soldiers is, that sheets of the acquittance rolls are lost for a time. They do not turn up in some cases for perhaps three months. The soldier disputes the account and says: "Produce the acquittance roll" and the chief paymaster's office in London cannot do it. The soldier goes away with the idea that he has not received all the money that is due to him.

Q. What is the reason for the loss of these sheets?—A. Heretofore the acquittance rolls had circulated among too many branches. There never was proper custody or registration kept of them. Now the acquittance rolls are all paged, and they are sent into a vouchering section, who are the only ones who handle them.

Q. That point is now protected you think?—A. I think so, largely.

Q. The complaints arising from the soldiers in London that they are not able to prove their pay through lack of acquittance rolls is now largely a matter of the past?—A. It is. Suppose a soldier is evacuated from France to England and sent back to Canada, and the acquittance rolls have not come back from France to London as rapidly as they should have. In that case the soldier would have a debit to go against him.

Q. Have you any method to suggest whereby the transfer from France to London could be speeded up?—A. I have always been under the impression, in my humble capacity that the office has not been conducted in London as it should have been. Instead of keeping these accounts in London, the man's ledger account up to the time he is evacuated from France should always have been kept in France. If the accounts could be kept in a loose leaf ledger, when the soldier was evacuated from France, his ledger page could cross to England with him, and it would only be kept in England while he was actually in England. If that were done, accurate information would at all times be promptly available.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Did you make any recommendation to that effect?—A. No, sir, I never did. After finishing my duties overseas with the compiling division, I was sent to the audit office under Mr. Dowie to organize the auditing system of the soldiers' account, which I did. That was the first office connected with Canada that employed returned soldiers. I had approximately 135 returned men, gassed and wounded fellows, working in the audit office, and a more satisfactory crowd of men I do not think it was possible to get together. Frequently the men who had been gassed could not do as much work as an ordinary office man would do, owing to their having fits of coughing; but they were good faithful men, men who had been employed in banks, and they made the best men to handle an office like that. Besides they knew the military side. They had their clerical experience on this side and their service experience in France. I do not think we could have found more valuable men to carry on that kind of work.

By the Chairman:

Q. In your judgment, is the office in England at the present time capable of carrying this work on in a satisfactory manner? How long is it since you left?—A. I was there with the Auditor General during his last trip. I was with him most of the time, and came back with him on the 27th of December. The only thing that I think is this: that whereas Colonel Ross and Major Dowie are both very competent gentlemen and good business men, and understand putting systems into the ordinary civil office there is no officer whose great experience over there is so necessary perhaps as Colonel Ward's in a consulting capacity. Messrs. Ross and Dowie know all about the civil side of compiling the accounts, but the difficulty is that there are many intricacies in the soldiers' accounts where they are affected by military law. A good auditor with military experience going through these accounts knows that a commanding officer has not power to debit a soldier with a certain charge, and he is able to correct it. It makes the general feeling in the service better, and we do not have so many complaints afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN: You need a military lawyer, so to speak?

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. That is the knowledge that Colonel Ward possesses?—A. Yes. When these other gentlemen from Montreal came into the office, a bad feeling immediately sprang up, and Colonel Ward's great experience has not been taken advantage of in a consulting capacity. The stand was taken at first by Ross and Dowie that Colonel Ward had not the executive ability to swing such a large problem, but he did have the technical knowledge that was necessary, and even at present, so far as I know, this wide knowledge is not being taken full advantage of.

Q. Is he a Canadian?—A. No, an Englishman. He was eighteen years, I believe, in the Royal Navy. He was, I believe, for many years a Fleet paymaster, and had other most important administration posts.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your idea is that the military and civilian elements in the London office do not co-operate as much as they might?—A. The Auditor General has expressed the whole thing. Lower ranks are not at liberty to go higher up. Whereas, as Mr.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

Bennett says, the soldier has a right to appeal higher up, if he did it once, he knows he would lose the position he holds. I could name some junior officers who have told me they would be doing themselves an injury by reporting what they feel about the books.

Q. Do you concur in Mr. Fraser's statement that some superior officers have no knowledge of book-keeping and financial matters?—A. Yes. I do not know who all the officers are who are employed in England at present, but many of those who were there when the office was in the making would be much better in the field than in the office.

Q. Their soldierly attainments were superior to their book attainments?—A. Oh yes, very much so.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. When did you come back?—A. The first time in January, 1916.

Q. A year ago last January?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the nature of your employment?—A. I was brought back to join the Department as Chief Inspector and General Auditor of Pay Accounts and Records for the Forces in Canada.

Q. That is, you were brought back to occupy the position you have just mentioned?—A. Yes.

Q. And did you occupy that position?—A. Yes, I still occupy it.

By the Chairman:

Q. You have been a sort of inspector, have you not?—A. I have been Chief Inspector.

Q. Of pay and allowances?—A. Yes.

Q. And in that capacity you have travelled over Canada, visiting the various military districts and looking over the methods employed by the staff there and at the head office with regard to pay and allowances?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you suggest to us any lines along which there may be improvement in meeting those criticisms with respect to pay and allowances?—A. The great difficulty now is that the expeditionary force has practically all gone overseas and, of course, I am not acquainted with what organization is being adopted over there.

Q. I am speaking of casualties?—A. At the present time we are bringing in all these account inspecting officers. There has been a captain at the headquarters of each district, known as the District Inspector of Accounts and Records. He is responsible to me, and through me to the Department. This system has worked out very well.

Q. Have you the selection of those men?—A. No, sir, I have not. I selected two or three of them, men who had been overseas, and whose work I knew, and the Department were kind enough to employ these officers. All these officers are being brought to Headquarters because the troops have gone overseas, and the local offices are being closed, the proposal being to carry on the entire auditing of the pay accounts from Headquarters. If compulsory service, or anything like that were to be adopted, I think we should again open up audit offices; I have a small skilled staff at Headquarters, and their duty is to assist in instructing men in their duty as paymaster before they take up those duties, so that we shall not have the same trouble to contend with that we have had with the organizations that have gone overseas. Of course, the great difficulty was that up to a year ago the paymasters were selected in many cases on account of some personal connection, and in many cases their particular fitness for the job they were to take over was not always taken into consideration. Now for twelve months we have had an inspector going out and instructing these people, and checking up their work, visiting them in their office and giving them instruction on the books. I think Captain Aumond will confirm my statement that the trouble is between the Military Hospitals Commission Command and our own people. If it were definitely fixed that the Casualty Paymasters were all controlled by the Casualty Paymaster at Headquarters and that the Military Hospitals Commission would have nothing whatever to do with the payment of troops, instead of having dual control; if it were all under one central head so that we would be able to put our finger on the one who makes a mistake it would be very much better.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Will you explain what the Military Hospitals Commission has to do with these men?—A. When a soldier goes in to hospital he immediately goes on their pay-sheet for pay. Until a few weeks ago, the Hospitals Commission's paymaster at the various centres, requisitioned on the district paymaster at the Militia Department for the amount he required, but did not have to account to him for it.

Q. That would be an officer of your service?—A. No, sir, the Military Hospitals Commissions paymaster is appointed by the Military Hospitals Commission, and that paymaster gets the funds from the district paymaster of the Militia Department, and distributes it to the soldiers who are lying in the hospital or who are convalescing and reporting to the hospital. The secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission, Mr. Scammell, came over to militia headquarters and asked the paymaster-general if he would allow our inspectors to go in and inspect these accounts to see that overpayments were not piling up. We took it up and found that pay and allowances were being irregularly issued, not wilfully, but through lack of knowledge, and that is why I suggest that if the Hospitals Commission accounts were put under us we would get better results.

Q. You have heard the Auditor General speak about overpayments and refunds in cash, and the leakage that has occurred; will you tell us what has happened in that regard?—A. Unfortunately Col. Mack has been down ill, and I have been sent over temporarily to relieve him in the Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance Division. I found out there that a great many people have authority to sign correspondence, and they send it out over their own name, they sign for the officer in charge. I went over there and told them at headquarters that in my opinion in such a large office as that where there are some six hundred clerks who are handling correspondence, it was not wise to allow so many clerks to sign the correspondence unless in the name of and for some officer. The reason for that was I was told that people who had very slight knowledge in business affairs were drawing cheques, when making refunds, in favour of the person in the office who signed the letter requesting refunds. Of course, if the person who received such cheque were dishonest he would cash the cheque, and that would be the last of it. In some cases I found out that money had been sent in for refunds, in actual cash, and that this money had never apparently been properly brought to account. I have two cases, where, at present, I am collecting, the clerk who received cash is paying back in instalments, the amount of money he signed for in the book kept for that purpose, and had not properly brought into refund account.

Q. This was money that had been returned to him in cash?—A. Yes, there was one case where three twenty dollar bills came back, and the clerk says he turned it over to somebody else, but he has not been able to produce any receipt for it.

Q. And that refund was made to him, because of that particular clerk having signed the letter that went out asking for it?—A. Yes. I have explained to the staff, therefore, that it did not give me any pleasure to have my name on every letter that went out, but that it was sound business, and every letter now bears my name. All refunds now have to go to a special officer who has been appointed to receive them, and there are never any refunds received during the day that are not deposited in the bank; all cheques received during the day, up to 3 o'clock, are sent to the bank promptly.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By the Chairman:

Q. From whom do the refunds come, from men or from women?—A. I think two-thirds of them come from the women.

Q. Does it not often involve hardship upon the women to have to refund the money?—A. Since the establishment of the Board of Review on Separation Allowance, we have established a system whereby wherever the refunds are shown to be large and that it would create hardship in the family, that it shall be brought down to my own notice, for reference to Board of Review if necessary.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you not think that the letters sent out from that office should be toned down a little?—A. I have seen some letters that went out from there in the past, that I was ashamed of. We have now taken steps to remedy this. There are about 3,000 letters a day to be signed by a small group of officers.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Have you any record of the sums that have been returned and are not accounted for? A. Yes, these are all being properly accounted for now.

Q. Can you state generally what the amount is that you have been able to trace and get back through the refunds?—A. These figures are not accurate, but approximate, I think that the overpayments that I have note of would amount to from $245,000 to $255,000. Of these I have been able to get back in refunds, up to the present, approximately $115,000, and the other sums are now properly held "in suspense." There never was a suspense account until a few months ago, but now all these outstanding amounts go into suspense account, and when refunds come in, we write them off in the proper manner.

Q. How about those other sums that were sent in in cash, have you any account of them?—A. No, sir, that is a thing that happened before my time, and although we have been trying to establish what that amount is, so far I have not been able to get anything very satisfactory.

By the Chairman:

Q. I would like to ask you to take 25 or 30 cases of refunds that have been made and give us details of them, in order that we may judge for ourselves the reason why those refunds were demanded, and the conditions of claiming when the refund had been made?—A. Seven-eighths of these cases, I think that is a fair proportion, a very large proportion of them are on account of this office not being notified from overseas when casualties occur. This is the great difficulty.

Witness retired.

EXHIBIT NO. 1.

DEPARTMENT OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE.

OTTAWA, May 18, 1917.

SIR,—With reference to the evidence given by me before the Committee this morning, I beg to transmit, herewith, copy of "Instructions for dealing with Casualties and Non-effectives, generally, of the Canadian Overseas Military Forces," to which I referred in the above-mentioned evidence.

I would like to draw the attention of the Committee to section 10, page 7, which deals with the duties of the hospital representatives; and, also, to section 13, page 13, defining the functions of the Canadian Army Pay Corps—and to Appendix V, page 37, laying down the duties of paymasters of the hospitals in England.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

G. C. JONES, Surgeon-General,
Medical Commissioner.

The Clerk of the Parliamentary
Committee on Returned Soldiers,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

EXTRACTS FROM OFFICIAL CIRCULAR SUBMITTED BY SURGEON-GENERAL G. C. JONES.

1. Commencement.—

Commencing on the 10th day of March, 1917, the system outlined in this circular will be brought into force for the purpose of dealing with warrant officers, N.C.O's. and men of the Canadian Overseas Military Forces.

2. Casualties and Men not fit for General Service consist of those.—

(a) Overseas Casualties who arrive in England from two sources:—

(i.) Evacuated from hospitals of expeditionary forces to hospitals in England.

(ii.) Evacuated from base camps overseas direct to England, when they will be sent to their regimental depot.

(b) Local casualties, who are admitted to hospital from units in the British Isles.

(c) Not fit for general service, who have been placed in Categories "B," "C," "D," or "E."

3. Categories.—

It is the duty of every officer of the Canadian forces to understand and be familiar with the system of categorizing applicable to the Canadian forces, as set out in circular issued by the Auditor General, Canadians, on the 30th January, 1917. (Reference: A. G. Canadians, 2-1-29.)

Categorization is the sorting of soldiers into groups in accordance with their medical fitness for service.

There are five groups, viz.:—

- (a) Fit for general service.
- (b) Fit for service abroad (but not fit for general service).
- (c) Fit for service in England.
- (d) Temporarily unfit for service in categories "A," "B," or "C," but likely to become fit within six months.
- (e) Unfit for service in categories "A," "B," or "C," and not likely to become fit within six months, and therefore to be discharged from the service.

10. Hospital Representative—

(A) At each hospital or group of hospitals, there will be a combatant officer, as set out in Appendix II to this circular, who will be known as the hospital representative. He will

- (i) Be responsible directly to the Adjutant General, Canadians.
- (ii) Take executive action on all cases being discharged from hospital and generally take charge of all casualties when the functions of the medical service cease.
- (iii) Render a return of all men discharged from hospital showing the categories in which they have been placed, and the manner in which they have been dealt with by him.

(B) On receipt of the nominal roll mentioned in para. 9 (G), he will do such of the following as are applicable:—

- (i) Arrange with the paymaster of the hospital to give the man a minimum advance of three (3) pounds, or such sum in excess not exceeding five (5) pounds in all, as may be warranted by the state of the man's account as shown in his pay book.
- (ii) See that the man has been issued with clothing and necessaries at the hospital.
- (iii) Grant the man 10 days' "sick furlough," and give to him a railway warrant, together with a route letter with instructions as to where he will report on the expiration of his furlough, according to the category in which he has been placed. The route letter will show the category in which the man has been placed, the date when and the unit to which the man is to report, the man's unit in France, his regiment, and his address while on furlough.
- (iv) A man will be directed in the route letter to report after "sick furlough" according to the category in which he has been placed as follows:—
 - (a) If placed in category "A," to his reserve battalion or unit.
 - (b) If he requires "hardening" and has been placed in category "D (i)" to the command depot affiliated with his regiment.
 - (c) If placed in category "B" or "C" to his regimental depot.
 - (d) If placed in category "E," and is to be discharged in:—
 - (1) Canada,—to the Canadian Discharge Depot, Buxton.
 - (2) British Isles,—to the hospital representative who issued the route letter.

(V) Several copies of all route letters will be made and disposed as follows:—

- No. 1.—Delivered to the casualty.
- No. 2.—Canadian Record Office.
- No. 3.—Regimental depot.

No. 4.—The unit to which the casualty is to report on the expiration of his “sick furlough” if other than his regimental depot.

No. 5.—File.

No. 6.—C.C.A.C. (until it is finally disbanded).

(VI) Send all documents concerning the man which he has received at the hospital, in accordance with para. 8 (E).

(VII) If a man has been admitted to hospital from a unit in England and has not been lowered in category since admission to hospital, he will be sent direct to the unit from which he was admitted, and all documents obtained, together with proper notification showing his category, will be sent to that unit, but if he has been lowered in category by the Medical Board at the hospital and placed in categories “B,” “C,” “D,” (i) or “E,” he will be treated in the same manner as an overseas casualty, except that unless in category “E” he will not be given “sick furlough” and instead of a route letter he will be given a “pass,” and notice by wire will be sent to:—

(a) The unit from which he was admitted to hospital.

(b) His regimental depot.

(c) The unit to which he is sent.

(VIII) Will remove all men from hospital within 48 hours from the time when he has been notified that they are ready to be discharged from hospital and has received copies of the Board Proceedings (if any), Medical History Sheet, Transfer Clothing Statement, and Certificate of Freedom from venereal and other infectious diseases.

(IX) He will perform all duties in connection with the discharge of men, as allotted to him in Appendix IV.

NOTE I.—Local casualties will not be given “sick furlough” on discharge from hospital unless they have been placed in category “E” for discharge, when they will be treated in the same manner as overseas casualties.

NOTE II.—In the event of an overseas casualty being readmitted to hospital from a command depot or from any other unit, on account of being unable to carry on at the command depot or such other unit, he will not be granted “sick furlough” a second time on being discharged from hospital.

The hospital representative will, in all cases, scrutinize the Board Proceedings and the Medical History Sheet, in order to ensure that men do not get “sick furlough” a second time. Men so readmitted will be sent direct to the unit to which they are to report without “sick furlough,” and such unit notified by wire.

NOTE III.—The reserve battalion or reserve unit of an overseas casualty is that which reinforces the battalion or unit on the strength of which the man was carried at the time when he became a casualty.

13. Canadian Army Pay Corps.—(A) Will arrange for an advance to each man being sent on “sick furlough” from hospital, of a minimum of three (3) pounds, or such sum in excess, not exceeding five (5) pounds in all, as may be warranted by the state of the man’s account as shown in his pay book.

(B) Will see that all last pay certificates are at once prepared and forwarded in accordance with instructions contained in Appendix IV.

(C) The paymaster at each Canadian hospital will comply with the instructions contained in Appendix VI.

APPENDIX V.—(Page 37.)

PAYMASTER AT HOSPITAL.

For the purpose of ensuring that there will be no delay between the time that a man is paraded before the paymaster of the hospital, and the time that the paymaster of the hospital makes application to the divisional paymaster for last pay certificate, the paymaster of the hospital will ascertain:—

(a) That all advances and stoppages of pay have been entered in the man's pay book.

(b) That an account of all articles issued on repayment by the quartermaster of the hospital has been received by him so that same may be taken into consideration at the time application for last pay certificate is being made.

(c) From the orderly room, that there are no stoppages of pay recorded against the man which have not been promulgated in orders of the hospital.

(d) That, in cases where Canadian soldiers have been admitted into that particular hospital from another Canadian hospital, a statement of advances and stoppages for the previous 30 days has been received from the paymaster of the former Canadian hospital.

(e) That all advances and stoppages of pay may have occurred in a British hospital have been entered in the man's pay book.

NOTE.—All paymasters of Canadian hospitals will see that the above information is on hand at the earliest possible date after a patient is admitted to hospital, regardless of the man's condition, so that when last pay certificate is applied for no delay will be caused by lack of same.

MEMORANDUM OF STEPS TAKEN TO PROVIDE HOSPITAL ACCOMMODATION IN NOVA SCOTIA.

On September 30, 1916, our returns show that we had thirty (30) beds at the Ross Home, Sydney, twenty-four (24) of which were occupied, and at Kentville five (5) tubercular patients. In September, the Commission took over the Clayton Home, Halifax, twenty (20) beds; took steps to open the Discharge Depot, Halifax, with accommodation for fifty-five (55), and took into consideration various other buildings with a view to further extension of its accommodation in Nova Scotia. In November, 1916, arrangements were made to increase the accommodation for tubercular patients up to one hundred (100) beds; properly equipped accommodation for five hundred (500) men, including an isolation hospital for tubercular patients of thirty-five (35) was put under way.

In December, the most available building of proper size seemed to be the Arts Building of Dalhousie University. The governors of that university were approached, and consented to its use, but this involved providing accommodation elsewhere for the faculties of the university, then occupying the building. During the time that plans for the carrying out of this work were being prepared, it might be noted that the Works Department of the Commission were busy with providing accommodation in every province of the Dominion. Before the plans for Halifax were available, at the end of February and the beginning of March, the situation in Nova Scotia was reconsidered and instead of using the Arts Building of Dalhousie, through the generosity of the Presbyterian Church, Pine Hill was made immediately available with accommodation for one hundred and thirty-five (135), and a new hospital with accommodation for three hundred and ten (310) was at once proceeded with at Camp Hill. This course obviated the necessity of delay incidental to providing accommodation for the faculty of that university, and the expense of additions and alterations, and placed a substantial building on property owned by the Government. In addition, the Moxham residence at Sydney, N.S., was secured, and is now being altered to fit it for the accommodation of about one hundred and ten (110) invalided soldiers.

Thus, since November, there has been secured in Nova Scotia, accommodation for:—

EXTRACT FROM A REPORT ON HOW FRANCE RETURNS HER SOLDIERS TO CIVILIAN LIFE.

SUGGESTED ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE FOR THE "LIQUIDATION OF THE WAR."

Not so long after the commencement of the war, it became very evident to those who had competent knowledge that many changes would be made in the laws, regulations, and practices by which France had been accustomed to return her soldiers and sailors to civilian life, it is necessary to do so in order to secure harmony with the conditions surrounding the present war. As has been suggested in the introduction and in the preceding section, a new procedure is in process of formation and much new legislation is being considered or has already become law.

Whatever the procedure finally adopted may be, it is very certain that it will tend towards a realization in practice of the very definite democratic principles underlying French national organization.

A very able report (Appendix G 41) by MM. Lefas and Masse (Appendix E, 20), creates the phrase "The Liquidation of the War." This report expresses the universal belief that the liquidation, the winding up, of the war is a matter of the very first importance. By the liquidation of the war is understood all those operations which will be concerned in securing the reconstitution of normal national life at the end of the war.

To secure a proper liquidation of the war in matters connected with discharged soldiers and sailors will be a work of extraordinary dimensions; in order that it may be well done it is necessary that a proper organization for its execution should exist. Excellent legislation concerning this matter has been and will be adopted; but the existence of good laws and proper regulations will be useless if a competent organization is not provided to ensure their operation. Urgent efforts to supply that organization are being made. It is recognized that it must be prompt and accurate in its work. While the public will realize its difficulties and excuse some slight delay in its operations, because of the enormous amount of work with which it must deal; no unnecessary delay, due to lack of forethought in its organization, will be forgiven.

In their report, MM. Lefas and Masse classify the measures which they advise for securing through liquidation of the war, in three groups:—

1. A simplification of the records at present kept;
2. A simplification of the procedure by which pensions are now granted and paid.
3. The establishment of a central body, responsible for the administration of the whole question.

Matters included under the first heading are details to which it is unnecessary to refer here.

Under the second heading, it is pointed out that it would be useless to initiate an ideal organization in any one of the departments at present connected with the administration of pensions, unless similar improvements were made in the organization of all other departments concerned in the matter. Only by doing so can the desired expedition in the liquidation of pensions be secured.

The great bulk of the report is occupied in a discussion of the matter referred to under the third heading.

The discussion is prefaced by observing that the mass of business is so enormous that it will be insufficient to merely increase the size of the offices and the number of the clerks employed, before the war, in peace time in dealing with it. It will be necessary to reconsider the whole question and to re-design the machinery formerly dealing with it in order to secure prompt and economical execution.

It is recommended that an independent pension service should be created. It is recommended that this service should be subdivided into eight or nine appropriate sections. It is recommended that this service ("Direction des Pensions et Secours") should pay pensions to soldiers and sailors, and to civilians; it should also pay any gratuities given to indigent soldiers and sailors, or their dependents who are not entitled to pension. The amount of work which such a service would be called upon to do is suggested by the following figures:—

It is estimated that already there are from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty times more pensions to be dealt with than there were before the war; there are already about 1,800,000 pensions for soldiers, sailors, and their dependents. The office which at present gives assistance to discharged men and their dependents who are not entitled to pensions, expects to open, during the coming year, about 600,000 files and to pay out about 58,000,000 francs; in the following year it expects to be called upon to do about half as much.

The importance of dealing promptly and properly with the pensions question is insisted upon. There will be no village in France without its pensioners. The laws concerning the administration of pensions will be among the most important and the most discussed of the country's statutes.

The Direction des Pensions et Secours will form one of the main parts of the proposed organizations, a "record office" will form the other. There are several operations, at present, looked after by different departments, which should be combined in a single organization. These are operations connected with the succession (wills and heirs) of soldiers, with the supply of information concerning soldiers, and with the keeping of their records. At present, about 1,024 secretaries are employed in looking after soldiers' successions; 1,150 are engaged in supplying information concerning soldiers (this department has about 3,000,000 names on its files) the accurate keeping of soldiers' records is important, at present about 3,000 clerks are engaged in maintaining them. It is suggested that the succession office, the information bureau, and the record office should all be combined in a single organization.

The new record office would constitute a central depot where there would be filed, once for all, birth, marriage and death certificates and all information of any description bearing upon the service or status of the soldier concerned. Such a record office would form the centre of the organization devised for the liquidation of the war. It would employ a very considerable number of clerks, now, and until a few months after the war; then their number would diminish rapidly and, if the war is liquidated successfully, in a year, their numbers would be counted by tens instead of hundreds.

If a central record office is established existing procedure will be greatly simplified. For example, at the present time, on the death of a soldier it is necessary for his family to come in contact with no less than five different departments; this situation involves an unfortunate and an entirely unnecessary duplication of documents. If a central record office is established it will maintain a complete set of papers for each soldier and will give, to any department requiring it, complete information concerning any aspect of the individual for whom it is desired.

Not the least of the many advantages which the central record office would give would be a means of securing co-ordination between the ministry of war, from which all pensions are now paid, with works of private benevolence. By making easy reference to its records, the central office would make it difficult for unworthy individuals to receive assistance, to which they have no right, from public or private sources.

Connected with the pension and records offices would be a director's office (cabinet du directeur); the duty of this office would be to consider the higher questions of administration. It would follow the proposals for change in the pensions laws and other legislation affecting the interests of disabled men, which are certain to appear from time to time; it would also concern itself with financial questions. The Government is confronted now with the necessity of finding funds to pay the many hundreds of millions of francs worth of pensions, already past due; the capitalized value of these pensions alone represents many thousands of millions of francs.

The director's office would take steps to make it certain that the pensions laws were properly administered and well understood by all; so as to make it difficult for scamps to attempt sharp practice in connection with them.

By the director's office, also, a close understanding and an active co-operation would be insured between the Government and many of the works of private benevolence which already, and in the future, will wish to provide assistance for disabled men, and their dependents, who may require it.

Lastly, since the duties of the organization proposed for the liquidation of the war are so great, and so important, it should be given powers commensurate with its responsibilities.

Legislation containing an estimate of the personnel and material which the establishment of such an organization would require is already before the Legislative Chambers. The opinion of both the Senate and the Parliament seems to be favourable to it. The need for a central administration body, empowered to control all matters connected with the return of soldiers and sailors to civilian life, is very generally appreciated and the establishment of such a body is desired; whether the Office National des Reforms et Mutiles de la Guerre (Appendix A, 13), with its departmental and local committee (Appendix G, 72) will succeed to in performing the functions designed for it remains to be seen. It will probably do so (Appendix E, 29) although certain misunderstandings may at first impede its organization and operation.

Whatever the central administrative body in Paris may be, the carrying out of the measures adopted for the liquidation of the war will remain with executive bodies situated in the departments (Provinces, the Departmental and local committees mentioned above.)

In the five years immediately preceding the commencement of the war, France paid pensions and gratifications to the number of persons mentioned in the following table:—

Invalidity pensions.. . . .	460
Long service pensions.. . . .	6,885
Gratuities on discharge.. . . .	484
To widows and orphans.. . . .	1,040
Assistance.. . . .	50,000

Form. 13 Batt'n, C.E.F.

SIR,—I have the honour, by direction, to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, and to inform you that the case of the marginally named man has been thoroughly gone into.

This man has had a weak back since June, 1913, when he injured the muscles by lifting an anchor weighing 610 pounds. He was confined to bed for one month and was unable to work for three months.

All medical boards agree that the aggravation on service was very slight.

A special report reads "There is not sufficient evidence to suspect that the alleged damage was due to shell explosion."

It is apparent that the gratuity awarded is all that is indicated by the evidence submitted.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Resolution.

Resolved, that the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, having considered the recommendations made by the Toronto Housing Company, Limited, to the Dominion Government, re housing and garden allotments, place on record its warm approval of the plans suggested.

Further Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the members of the Dominion Cabinet, with the request that favourable consideration be given to the recommendations presented by the Toronto Housing Company, Limited.

TORONTO, May 17, 1917.

SCHEME OF THE TORONTO HOUSING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Re Provision for Suburban Community Settlements for Returned Soldiers.

The Directors of the Toronto Housing Company have studied the present problem of scarcity of desirable housing accommodation in the city of Toronto, especially having regard to the soldiers already returned, and to the many others still to be provided for, when peace is declared. As a result of their investigation and study the following suggestions have been submitted to the Dominion Government, together with a letter urging that immediate consideration be given to the recommendations made.

The following suggestions are submitted with a view to providing assistance other than direct monetary contribution toward the support of the semi-disabled, and for soldiers' widows who have children to care for and support. It is assumed that the danger of assistance which tends to pauperize is fully realized, and that plans only will be considered which encourage personal effort and productive labour on the part of the beneficiaries. So large a proportion of our population will be affected by the war, the adoption of any other course might lower the vigour and tone of Canadian national life. Our suggestions, therefore, deal only with means of supplementing by their own labour the incomes of those who will be pensioners of the Government, and especially of those who from any cause are debarred from engaging in arduous labour.

Provisions of the most liberal character are already being provided for those who are able and willing to engage in agriculture. There will be, however, and indeed already are, many who are unable or unwilling to engage in ordinary farming pursuits. The care of cattle, ploughing, threshing and the other manifold duties of farm life present apparently insuperable obstacles. The cultivation of a small parcel of land would appear to them less likely to end in failure and not beyond their power and ability.

It is recommended, therefore:

1. That land suitable for garden settlements be secured at carefully selected points, and provision made for rural or suburban community settlement.
2. That the land be acquired only in districts having (or soon to have) satisfactory transportation facilities. Along the line of radial railways would be of self-evident advantage, also where a suburban service by existing railways may be developed.

3. That where possible the land be acquired near urban centres where (a) a ready market may be found for surplus garden and other products; (b) employment if necessary may be obtained by the otherwise unoccupied members of the community; (c) trade training may be had for those desiring to engage in industrial pursuits; (d) an increasing land value may compensate for temporary initial losses; (e) the development of local industries may naturally be looked for; (f) culture under glass gives promise of satisfactory profit.

4. That allotments be made of varying sizes to meet the different requirements.

5. That substantial but inexpensive houses be constructed. A considerable saving may be made by careful planning, and standardization of designs.

6. That the developments be planned with a view to securing social amenities and normal rural activities—a nucleus around which the varied activities of industrial life will naturally develop.

7. That some form of co-operative marketing be developed under Government guidance, but without financial assistance.

8. That the dwelling houses and allotments of land be leased upon terms which will provide an adequate (but as low as possible) return upon the investment.

9. That leases be granted to others than pensioners upon similar terms—or slightly higher, if thought desirable.

10. That provision be made for leases as low as $15 per month, to include dwelling house and small garden allotment.

It is well known that the cultivation of even a small vegetable garden adds greatly to the available food supply. Wisely planned as to its use and carefully cultivated one-quarter of an acre will produce more than all the root crops and small fruits required annually for a family of four.

By marketing direct to consumers, surplus products will bring highest market prices. Standards of quality would naturally be provided for by those directly responsible for marketing.

These plans call for a minimum of capital investment, and promise a satisfactory economic return for the money employed. They have the added advantage that such investment forms an asset of permanent and realizable value. It is believed further that these measures will meet the needs and wishes of a considerable and important body of pensioners.

It is respectfully requested that the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, having a knowledge of existing conditions, and having considered the problem presented, endorse the recommendations made to the Dominion Government.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

The intention is to have such cards filled in by the men at the front: that is, those that are there now and those that are in England, and then to have subsequent contingents fill these cards in on the way over.

Q. What steps are being taken to distribute them on the other side?—A. It is being done through the office of the Overseas Minister of Militia and Defence.

Q. And how soon do you expect they will be filled out and returned?—A. We have no definite information on that point, but I should think within a couple of months or so.

Q. Have you indicated any desire in that respect?—A. Yes, we asked to have the promptest possible action taken.

Q. Are the cards to be returned here to Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. How do you propose to classify them after you get them back?—A. The intention was to divide them up according to military districts.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. By provinces, not military districts?—A. Provinces, yes, and then to compile the information, ascertaining how many men there are that have positions to go back to, those that are anxious to go into agricultural life, and so forth.

By the Chairman:

Q. In whose hands will the custodianship of those cards rest?—A. The National Service Board, for the time being, and then I expect the intention is to turn them over to whatever body was established afterwards to handle demobilization.

Q. Do you feel that the information once obtained overseas on these cards will be of a sufficient permanent character, or would this have to be done again?—A. I should think this information would be practically just as good two years from now as it is to-day.

Q. You think the soldiers' preference with regard to occupation will not change?—A. Not to any material extent.

Q. Have you anything further to say about that?—A. No, sir, we have not worked out any definite scheme yet. After the cards come back, and we have an opportunity of going over some thousands of them, we will be in a better position to say just how we can compile the most useful information from the returns.

Q. Do you intend to supply the provinces with a duplicate of that information?—A. The intention was to supply the provinces with the information, providing there is provincial organization for handling them.

Q. Do you mean the provincial government, or the provincial organization finding employment for returned soldiers?—A. Whatever body might be established to deal with that.

Q. What information is the National Service Commission at present gathering that will be of service later on, as showing where employment can be secured in Canada on demobilization?—A. We started in to obtain an occupational survey of Canada. I submit copies of the forms.

Q. A form for male employees and a form for women employees; that is what you have given me here?—A. I also submit the following covering letter.

Q. Who is it addressed to?—A. To the person who is supposed to make the returns.

Q. He would be an employer of labour?—A. Yes.

The letter reads as follows:—

NATIONAL SERVICE, CANADA,

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL.

DEAR SIR,—The Order in Council creating the Board of National Service imposed upon it the duty of obtaining necessary information respecting conditions of industry and employment throughout Canada.

The "man-power" inventory of Canada, now being completed by the National Service Board, discusses a large number of men available for work in the regular industries of the country in case of need. This labour will be of little value to the State unless it can be put to use in the manner desired. The Government has therefore decided to make an inquiry which will reveal the extent and nature of the present demand for labour as well as making a forecast as to the conditions in regard to employment in the future. The inquiry is by no means to be confined to industrial establishments. Even unemployed farmers, public and private, with the exception of the smaller retailers, brokers, professional men, etc., will be asked to take this return. Other means will be taken to deal with the

Two forms are herewith submitted, the larger one for men workers and the smaller one for women workers. Branches should be regarded as part of the Head Office organisation and included in the report if they are located in the same Province, but where a concern maintains industrial branches, warehouses, selling organizations or branch offices of any sort, in more than one Province, kindly deal with each Province on a separate form so that the statistical information may be properly compiled. Additional forms will be promptly supplied on application to The Secretary, National Service Board, Ottawa. No postage required on such letters.

Two forms are herewith submitted, the larger one for men workers and the smaller one for women workers. Branches should be regarded as part of the Head Office organisation and included in the report if they are located in the same Province, but where a concern maintains industrial branches, warehouses, selling organizations or branch offices of any sort, in more than one Province, kindly deal with each Province on a separate form so that the statistical information may be properly compiled. Additional forms will be promptly supplied on application to The Secretary, National Service Board, Ottawa. No postage required on such letters.

The following explanations are given in connection with each query

(1) May we ask that the officials responsible for filling out column One will be cautioned to use such explicit and generally understood names for each group of workers as will best indicate the nature of their work. For instance, in the printing trade we would expect the following classification:

(a) Hand type-setters. (b) Machine type-setters. (c) Pressmen and helpers.
 (d) Bindery employees etc. (e) Office staff, etc.

Concerns employing office and warehouse help exclusively would classify under the following heads:

	(a) Managers.	(b) General office staff.
(c) Miscellaneous.	(d) Warehousemen, etc.

(c) Massenläufer. (d) Warehousemen, etc.

(2) The intention here is to show increase and decrease due

(3) It is here desired to ascertain whether or not you are at present under-manned in your business by reason of any labour scarcity in any class and if so, to what extent this condition prevails.

(4) It is obviously necessary to know the duration of any employment you might be in a position to offer, in case there should be help available in other Provinces that could not be expected to fill merely temporary jobs.

(5) This is perhaps the most important question asked and your dearest attention is solicited. The only way for us to demonstrate that we can give the National Service Board the benefit of your best judgment on this subject is to have you figure upon the board. It is self-evident to those who estimate must be made to enable the Government of Canada to solve the after-war employment problem. The Government is not only aware of the possibility of opening up employment opportunities for the war veterans, but also the possibility of providing foreign markets after the war in the particular form of the war estimates more approximately correct than could the National Service Board in its offices at Ottawa. Taking the country over, under-estimate in one place may be expected to counter-balance over-estimate in another. It is expected that the Government will assemble the resulting total with accuracy. It is expected that the Government will supply you with a much more reliable basis for future plans than could be obtained by any system of estimating at Ottawa.

(6) This is self-explanatory.

(7) This is also self-explanatory.

(8) The object of asking this information is to ascertain to what extent your industry or business lends itself to absorbing partially disabled soldiers possessing the necessary qualifications. It is of course, fully understood, that the problem of the returned disabled soldier, does not belong to the general employer, except to the extent he may be voluntarily prepared to assist in his solution. The information here desired is intended for statistical use entirely and also for the guidance of the Vocational Branch of the Military Hospitals Commission.

(9) This is self-explanatory.

(10) After the war broke out many employers in Canada filled places with women hitherto occupied by men who went Overseas. It is desirable to obtain information as to the (11). In order to deal with the employment problem that will inevitably arise after the war and to intelligently outline demobilization plans it is very necessary to ascertain to what extent present women workers are likely to be replaced by returned soldiers. It is, however, fully realized, that each employer must deal with his duties and responsibility as a citizen in regard to employing returned soldiers, according to the peculiar conditions surrounding his enterprise and consistent with the maintenance of efficiency in his establishment. The extent to which this practice was followed.

ation asked is purely for statisti-

(12) This is self-explanatory.

(13) It is realized, that there is considerable labour scarcity in some lines at the present time. The National Service Board is anxious to ascertain beyond doubt whether there is a larger place for women in Canadian industry and business, at least for the duration of the war. In some cases, the employment of women might render available for Overseas service a large number of men at present employed.

(14) It is realized, that it will be a very difficult matter for the average employer to answer this question off-hand. It is supposed, however, that in certain lines of employment there may be so great a scarcity of skilled labour, that employers will gladly undertake expenditure in order to obtain additional help. It is also quite appreciated, that conditions are liable to change from week to week. Under the circumstances, there will not, of course, be any question of regarding the answers to this query as in any way binding. What the National Service Board desires, is to obtain an indication from employers as to the lengths they are prepared to go to obtain additional help at the present time. If we are able to place employers in touch with those wanting work, it is obvious that terms of employment, including questions such as those mentioned above, must be made more flexible.

such as these, must be a matter of mutual arrangement.

IMPORTANT.

Please fill in and return this form in the enclosed self-addressed envelope (no postage required) at the earliest possible date to the Secretary, National Service Board, Ottawa. Promptness on your part saves expense to the country. Realize that this duty performed is National Service rendered.

For the purpose of enabling this duty to be effectively discharged, we propose to make an occupational survey, and enclose blank forms, which we ask you to promptly complete and return in the addressed envelope herewith. Should the schedules enclosed not contain sufficient space, please let us know at once how many additional forms you require and they will be promptly forwarded.

I particularly direct your attention to the printed Memorandum of Instructions on the reverse side of the forms. This explains in detail the manner in which it is desired the required information should be given.

I need scarcely point out to you that the inquiry is being made for National purposes only and is specially designed to enable both after-the-war and present-day problems to be dealt with intelligently and efficiently. The information furnished will be considered strictly private and confidential.

While many of these questions can be answered from your records, others involve the exercise of your judgment, and you are earnestly requested to give us the benefit of your experience and considered opinion, as the future welfare of our bravest and best citizens depends to no small extent upon the accuracy of any forecast which may now be made of Canadian business conditions.

Thanking you in anticipation of your prompt and courteous attention.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

R. B. BENNETT.

On the back of these forms will be found a memorandum of instructions in which I have explained the precise manner in which we desire to have each question answered.

The CHAIRMAN: At this point in your evidence you had better put in the memorandum of instructions.

Witness filed memorandum as follows:—

The WITNESS: Shall I read those questions that deal particularly with demobilization, sir?

The CHAIRMAN: It will all go into the record, but you may indicate to us the ones you think are the most pertinent. I should not suppose the form for female employees would have any value in connection with demobilization.

The WITNESS: There is one form for males and another for females. In question 8 we ask: "Would the following physical defects interfere with employment in your establishment: loss of one leg, loss of one arm, loss of one eye, defective hearing." The question 10 asks for: "number of women workers now employed in each class where men were employed before the war." Then question 11: "Do you expect to substitute returned soldiers for present women workers after the war? If so, how many in each class?"

I would like to explain the scope of the mailing list. We obtained from the Census Bureau of the Department of Agriculture the mailing list which had been compiled for the purpose of making a survey of Canadian industry. That mailing list included the operations of hand trades, as well as establishments conducted under the factory system. We added to that, mining, transportation, banking, insurance, cartage and transfer and express company business. Our intention was to have a mailing list of all the employers in Canada with the exception of the following: retailers, brokers, agriculture, professions, and the smaller employers that would only employ three or four persons. This form was mailed to all those, and I think it substantially takes in all employers in Canada.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you make any attempt then to deal with the question of agriculture?—A. It would be perfectly impossible to get any information that would be worth while at this time. When the time comes, fair estimates, I think, could be made by the various Provincial Departments of Agriculture throughout Canada. In regard to the retailers the intention was to deal with the Dominion Retailers' Association. They promised us that when the time came they would obtain for us very quickly any information we wanted regarding the employment situation. In that way we should have a reasonably complete list of all the employers in Canada. The professions are not generally, of course, employers.

Q. Is it your expectation that this work of replacement will be carried on by provincial organizations, or that your Service may be called upon to do it?—A. The question of organization, sir, has not been considered. I should say the reasonable system would be for the Provinces to look after the distribution and for the Dominion to supply the information needed, giving a list of the men who had to be provided for, and so forth.

Q. For the sake of uniformity, you are getting the data that will enable the provincial organizations to do this work, and in case of their failing to do it you have the data enabling it to be done through other means?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In order that information of this character might be full and complete, how frequently would an industrial census have to be taken in Canada, in your judgment?—A. I think the information we are asking for now would be practically just as fresh a year from now as it is to-day; but no doubt at the last moment it might be desirable to send out a simple form of questionnaire to keep certain parts of this information up to date, and our expectation would be by that time to have a very complete mailing list of all employers so that it could be quickly and expeditiously done.

Q. So that in view of a final collaboration of material you are perfecting your mailing list?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent have the people to whom you have sent these questionnaires answered, and answered carefully?—A. The replies that we have received are most intelligently prepared. So far we have received, I should say, about 50 per cent of the effective total, which is very satisfactory.

[Mr. Charles W. Peterson.]

Q. Have you a follow-up system?—A. I am now checking up the mailing list, which is a somewhat cumbersome process. As soon as that is completed we will send out a follow-up letter and endeavour to get all the returns in, but there are a surprising number of men who have gone out of business since the war started or engaged in other occupations.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Is it intended before the conclusion of the war to get a final revision of all the industries in Canada in sufficient time to effect replacement?—A. With a complete mailing list that can be very quickly done. As only a small number of these questionnaires would have to be brought up to date, that would be a very simple matter once we have the mailing list, which is the basis of the whole business.

Q. A supplementary list?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. In addition to that, it was intended that the provincial establishments should supplement this information, and from time to time bring it up to date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is another thing: in addition to sending out these cards to men who have enlisted, and these forms to industrial establishments, you have also had communication with two other bodies, Mr. Peterson, the boards of trade of Canada and the labour unions?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENNETT: Please tell the Committee what has been done in that regard?

Mr. ROSS: I was going to ask a question along the same lines and you can answer it at the same time. You spoke a moment ago about the provincial authorities taking in hand largely the work of distribution of these soldiers. Have you approached them on the subject?

The WITNESS: We have instructed the Directors of National Service for the various military districts to obtain from the provincial authorities a complete record of what they have done up to date, what machinery they propose to provide, in fact, all the information bearing on the subject of demobilization and the handling of returned soldiers. We are getting information now on that point.

Q. I did not exactly mean that. I imagine that some question may be raised by the Provincial Governments as to this being a federal matter, and they might not care to go to the expense of co-operating with you in this matter if any expense were going to be entailed. I was wondering if they have been approached.

Mr. BENNETT: The fact is that every province has an organization.

Mr. ROSS: I know that.

Mr. BENNETT: All that is being done is to work through that organization, if possible, co-ordinating our efforts, such as they are, with theirs to enable this information to be as full as possible, and to ask them if they cared to undertake responsibility when the time comes to place the soldiers from that province back into civil employment. Is not that as far as the matter has gone Mr. Peterson?

The WITNESS: The intention was to get a complete statement first from each province of what they had done, and then, I understand, it was Mr. Bennett's intention to visit the various provincial authorities, discuss the matter with them, and arrange effective organization. I am turning in the letter we sent to the Directors of National Service asking them to obtain this information.

"Copy."

OTTAWA, February 22, 1917.

DEAR SIR,—As you are aware, it was resolved at the recent Board meeting that National Service should undertake to formulate plans concerning demobilization and the absorption into civil life of our overseas forces.

Survey work, as to opportunities for employment in this connection, has already been undertaken by various provincial organizations. In the province of Alberta, Dr. James C. Miller, Director of Technical Education, is at present engaged on an industrial and commercial survey of that province. I have obtained from him a set of the forms which he is issuing, and attach hereto a synopsis indicating the character and scope of his work.

It is necessary that we should have full information as to what is being done, or proposed to be done, in all the other provinces, in the same direction. Will you therefore please consult the authorities in your province and such organizations as the provincial branch of the Military Hospitals Commission, and secure complete details, copies of forms, etc., in regard to their plans for dealing with the problem of employment for returned soldiers.

The co-ordination of all such efforts is essential to the proper solution of this vital question. I feel sure that those concerned will give every assistance to any inquiries or suggestions which you may make, and should be glad to have your report when you have completed the investigation for your province.

Yours truly,

CHAS. W. PETERSON,

Secretary.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Not knowing what you had done, we have a recommendation in our report, which I will read: (Reads)

"The problem of providing employment for the whole forces upon demobilization and returning them to civil life, not being one which has been permanently assumed by the various provinces, we would in the meantime recommend with a view of preparing for their return, that a complete record should be made forthwith of the previous history and occupation of every soldier on active service, and his present capacity, his intention and wishes with regard to his future occupation upon his return to civil life, so that we shall know in advance the requirements with regard to their employment.

Your committee also recommend that a survey of all positions and occupations available and open in Canada to returned soldiers upon demobilization be made, and that a classification be made so that we may know exactly how many returned soldiers will dovetail into the available positions."

—A. I think that is substantially being done, sir, as far as it can be done at this time.

Q. Then no recommendation along these lines from this committee is necessary?

—A. I should hardly think so.

Q. This matter is being dealt with by the National Service Commission?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. It is distinctly understood that the National Service Commission have undertaken to obtain the information?—A. That is as far as we have gone.

Q. And the Commission is actually now doing that?—A. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: The communications to the boards of trade should also be put in.

The CHAIRMAN: You might read them, Mr. Peterson.

The WITNESS: We obtained a complete list of the incorporated boards of trade in Canada, and the following letter was addressed to the secretary of each, on the 5th of March: (reads)—

OTTAWA, March 5, 1917.

The Secretary,
Board of Trade.

DEAR SIR,—While the great struggle is still raging unabated, it is evident to all thinking men, that no time should be lost in making intelligent preparation for the inevitable disorganization that will accompany the demobilization of the troops now overseas. The responsibility for this preparation has been placed, by the Government of Canada, upon the National Service Board. The Board is directed to obtain data, submit recommendations and formulate definite, detailed plans for carrying out the task of demobilizing the Canadian Overseas Forces, when the time comes, and providing for their absorption into civil life.

At the end of the war, Canada will find herself face to face with the problem of returning into business and industrial life some half million men at present under arms. An enormous number of men and women, now employed in the manufacture of munitions and other war supplies, will also be compelled to change their occupations and there is also likely to be a problem of some magnitude to be solved in finding employment for an army of women now taking the places of men overseas who will, it is hoped, in most cases be afforded an opportunity to return to their former employment.

Apart from these problems that we know about and we trust will be able to provide for, the opinion is held by many in a position to form intelligent conclusions, that a large immigration may be expected from Great Britain and elsewhere, upon the declaration of peace. Also, that this influx will be composed largely of people with small means who will be looking for immediate employment although they may intend ultimately settling on the land.

In order to enable this Board to form an estimate as to the labour and employment situation likely to prevail within a short period after the war, an extensive "Occupational Survey" covering the whole of Canada, is now being made. I attach copies of the forms used in which have been incorporated certain questions dealing with the probable "after-the-war" situation. It is, of course, fully realized that at best the statistical conclusions that may be thus arrived at are mere estimates. It is, however, absolutely clear that such forecasts must be made by some one. Under the circumstances, our effort will be to make these estimates as nearly correct as possible, so that the problem facing the Government and the people of Canada may be forecasted as intelligently as possible.

In conjunction with this occupational inquiry, a questionnaire will shortly be sent to the troops overseas. Without going into detail, I may say, that the object of the latter inquiry will be to obtain essential facts bearing on the qualifications of each member of the Overseas Forces in regard to employment, whether he has a situation awaiting his return, the number of dependents, whether he desires to engage in agricultural life, etc.

With the information from these two sources available, the Board will be able to draw certain conclusions as to the extent of the problems before us, so far, at least, as the returned soldier is affected by the same.

I am now instructed by the Director General and the National Service Board to invite the co-operation of your Board of Trade in solving the task before us. It is felt that the situation is worthy of the combined effort of the best minds in Canada and that so many local problems will arise in dealing with the matter, that it is imperative these must be intelligently considered by local bodies in order that our general scheme may be prepared with a view to their solution.

[Mr. Charles W. Peterson.]

I am to ask you kindly to appoint a small committee, preferably one containing representatives of industrial, financial, labour, commercial and civil bodies, with instructions to consider the question in all its phases and to submit a report to your Board embodying such suggestions and recommendations as it may see fit, for transmission to the National Service Board when completed. It is hoped that prompt action in this matter on the part of all the boards of trade in Canada will lead to valuable contributions to National Service and will enable my Board to approach its task fortified with the best information available on the subject.

Thanking you in anticipation for your hearty co-operation and valuable assistance in this matter, I remain,

Yours faithfully,

CHAS. W. PETERSON,

Secretary.

Considerable correspondence emanated from this letter, and as it was apparent that these Boards rather misunderstood the object we had in view. The following letter was sent yesterday, dated May 31. (Reads):

File No. 274.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL,
OTTAWA, May 31, 1917.

The Secretary,
Board of Trade,

DEAR SIR,—With further reference to my letter to you of the 5th March asking your Board to appoint a committee to consider the many problems likely to arise in connection with the demobilization of the Overseas Forces after the end of the war and to submit to the National Service Board useful suggestions and recommendations in the matter, in order to facilitate the drawing up by that body of tentative plans for the consideration of the Government of Canada. I beg to state, that I have recently been asked by a great many Boards of Trade to give some indication of the special points upon which the National Service Board seeks guidance. Under the circumstances, I have thought it well to quote for the information of your special committee the following extract from a letter I have just sent to an Eastern Board, which might be found useful:—

“What system should be followed in “mustering out” the Overseas Forces? Should it be done as fast as the troops arrive in Canada, or should those who have occupations awaiting them be mustered out first and the remainder kept under arms and mustered out as employment is found for them, or should they be dismissed from the service at once with advance pay to enable them to look for employment independently? Should great public works be started when demobilization times comes, so as to absorb the greatest possible amount of labour and thus render general employment available for returned soldiers as well as for those who will be displaced by soldiers returning to their previous employment? Can you suggest an efficient system of employment bureaux or similar organizations to deal efficiently, expeditiously and economically with the whole subject? Each Province will probably have to organize according to its own peculiar problem in this respect. How should married men or men with families be handled, who have no immediate employment in sight?

These are merely a few of the problems confronting the Government on demobilization, and I refer to them simply to give you a line on the sort of information we seek. It is felt that the whole question is surrounded with difficulties, and that the best minds in Canada are needed to assist us in outlining plans that will provide machinery to deal reasonably effectively, at least, with the first shock of demobilization, having due regard to economy as well as efficiency. It is, of course, impossible to forecast exactly what conditions may prevail when peace comes, but it is equally certain, that the better we are prepared to meet the problem of absorbing an enormous number of men into civil life within a comparatively short time, the less disorganization and suffering will result.

I shall look forward with interest to the report of your Committee."

Yours faithfully,

CHAS. W. PETERSON,

Secretary.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you considered, Mr. Peterson, in sending out that memo., the suggestion that married men with families, who are at present drawing separation allowance, assigned pay, and Patriotic Fund money should be the first to be returned with a view of securing permanent positions for those men who are not mobile, whose family connection and home surroundings render it practically imperative that they should find employment in the city of origin, leaving the men without dependents, the more fluid population, to be sent, if necessary, from one part of Canada to the other?—A. Officially, we have not given the slightest consideration to the matter, because we have been bending all our efforts to gathering and compiling information, after which we had planned to make an exhaustive study of the whole subject, when this important phase of the problem would naturally receive the most careful consideration.

THE CHAIRMAN: But I see you have, in that letter, referred to what classes of men should go back first.

THE WITNESS: We have just asked their opinion on those points merely as a way of indicating some of the problems we would expect these committees to submit suggestions upon.

By the Chairman:

Q. I would like to have you bring the evidence of the fact as it would be most economical and advantageous, in many ways, that the men who are drawing separation allowance, and who cost the Government more than the single men, and who are also in receipt of Patriotic Fund money be the first to be looked after.—A. Absolutely, there is no question about that.

MR. BENNETT: The idea is to get this information and from that, by our own observation and experience, to make some recommendation that will be useful.

THE WITNESS: As a matter of fact, sir, the members of the Board have not had occasion to consult upon these questions as yet. Our effort so far has been confined entirely to gathering information at headquarters for future use.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You might indicate to the Committee the character of the information you have sought from organized labour throughout Canada.—A. We prepared a list of representatives for each province from each branch of organized labour; it was quite a large undertaking, and this letter was sent to them on April 10 (reads):—

OTTAWA, April 10, 1917

DEAR SIR,—As you may have noticed through press references, the National Service Board has been entrusted by the Government with the task of formulating and submitting plans for the demobilization of the Canadian Overseas Forces upon the declaration of peace. To do so intelligently, a great deal of information must necessarily be gathered, compiled and considered.

My board has now directed me to ascertain what period or periods of the calendar year, have in the past proven to be most favourable from an employment point of view in each Province in Canada. Also what period or periods have, in your experience, generally witnessed the greatest volume of unemployment in your trade in each Province. In other words, if some hundreds or thousands of men of that trade were to be turned loose in each Province in Canada, about when would be the most favourable and when the least favourable time, having regard, of course, to all the conditions prevailing in each Province affecting your trade?

You will readily see, that information on this point might easily have considerable bearing on any general demobilization plan. Obviously, those belonging to your trade should not, if it can possibly be avoided, be mustered out from service in the midst of the period when the demand for that class of skilled labour is at its lowest ebb. On the other hand, it would be found distinctly advantageous, if it could be so arranged that men of your trade should be mustered out at a time when employment in your line is most plentiful.

The systematic absorption into civil life of the skilled workers now serving with the Overseas Forces, without creating disorganization, is a problem of paramount importance, particularly owing to the fact that these classes of workers constitute a very large percentage of the whole. In the circumstances, I feel that you will be glad to give us the benefit of your very best thought and information, so as to enable us to help members of your trade now overseas and also, as far as we are able to do, to protect the interests of those who will be working at your trade by the time the war ends and demobilization problems face us. I enclose a return envelope. No postage is required for communications with the office.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) CHAS. W. PETERSON,

Secretary.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Will it be too much trouble for you to prepare for me a summary of what you have been doing along the lines which I asked you?—A. You want it just in memorandum form?

Q. Yes.—A. I will do so.

Witness discharged.

Major C. M. INGALL, recalled.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What is your position?—A. I belong to the Branch of the Accountant and Paymaster General, and I am general auditor and chief inspector of accounts and records for the Expeditionary Force in Canada.

Q. You are at present engaged in that work?—A. I am directing that division, but I am actively employed in the Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Division.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: In giving your evidence you might avoid repetition of anything you said the other day.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. How long have you been in charge of that branch?—A. I took over the charge of the Separation Allowance Branch on the 26th March, 1917.

Q. There has been some criticism here in connection with that branch. What do you say as to the position in which that Branch now is?

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By Mr. Ross:

Q. Before you go into that you might tell us how many people are employed there on that staff?—A. Do you want the male and female, or just the total?

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Whatever classification you have?—A. 13 military employees, 494 males, and 131 females, making a total in all of 638.

Q. That is in the pay and separation allowance branch?—A. Separation allowance and assigned pay.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Do you consider that branch as now in a satisfactory state, or have you any suggestions to make?—A. I believe the systems at present in use are better than at any time since the organization of the division, and this is constantly improving owing to the fact that we have been able to secure the services of some experienced officers who have had, as well as business experience, the benefit of service at the front, and this is extremely useful to us there in that they can apply their military and civil knowledge to the conduct of our business.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Why do you say it is necessary for them to have military experience to do effective work?—A. Because with the experience that they have had they know and are fully aware of the difficulties that are experienced at the front in reporting the casualties, and they are able to advise the large staffs that they have control of, and keep general watch to prevent over-payments and that sort of thing through having this knowledge.

By the Chairman:

Q. You might tell us a little about the difficulties of conducting this separation allowance and assigned pay department, so that we can get some idea of the situation?—A. Yes, I will.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Could you tell us, leading up to that, how many soldiers, widows or dependents are getting assigned pay and how many separation allowances, and say how many people you are dealing with?—A. Yes I can give you those figures.

By the Chairman:

Q. The statement you have before you is up to what date?—A. This is up to the 30th April. I could give a better idea of the whole thing by going back to 1916, and show the figures we had leading up to this. The assigned pay accounts in force on the 31st December, 1916, were 148,049. The assigned pay accounts in force 30th April, 1917, were approximately 170,000, an increase for the four months ending 30th April of approximately 22,000.

Q. Approximately one-half the men make an assignment of pay?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. They have to?—A. Yes. Where separation allowance is paid to the dependents of soldiers, through an Order in Council passed several months ago, a compulsory assignment is put into effect against the soldier.

By the Chairman:

Q. Besides that, there are a number of voluntary assignments where no separation allowance is paid?—A. That is so.

Q. So that at least one-half of the soldiers have a double account?—A. Yes.

Q. And one-third of them a triple account?—A. Yes.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Where a soldier does not assign his pay, is there any part of his pay kept back and held for himself?—A. Yes, that is called deferred pay. When a soldier goes to France he is only allowed to draw one franc a day. The rest is deferred until such time as he is discharged and is paid him in a lump sum, and it bears interest.

Q. Supposing a private gets promoted and qualifies for a commission, and it renders it necessary for him to have a little more money at his disposal, would you pay him more money in that case?—A. In stating that the balance was not paid, that is as long as he is in the ranks, but when he receives his commission his account is balanced up to date, and as an officer his account is kept for him at the Bank of Montreal, or at Cox & Co., bankers.

By the Chairman:

Q. In his new capacity?—A. Yes. If the number of accounts should continue to increase in the same ratio, at the end of the year 1917 it will mean some 2,205,588 cheques will have to be issued on account of assigned pay for the year 1917. That is allowing for the increase as averaged for the first four months of this year.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You are referring to assigned pay?—A. Separation allowance and assigned pay. I understand you want some of the troubles next.

By the Chairman:

Q. We would like to hear of some of your principal difficulties?—A. I will give them.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What about your correspondence? How many letters do you receive?—A. With reference to correspondence the number of correspondence files handled daily in the central registry at the end of 1916 was only 1,900 files. This increased as of 30th April, 1917, to approximately 2,400 files per day, anywhere from 300 to 600 new files are created each day, and it is impossible to foretell the number of files which will be handled daily at the end of 1917. We cannot even give an estimate of them. The average number of letters handled each day to December, 1916, was between 900 and 1,000. This had increased as of the 30th April, 1917, to approximately from 1,600 to 1,800 per day. The greatest number of letters issued in one day was 2,053.

Q. Letters going out?—A. Yes, outgoing. Now, in order to deal efficiently with the business of the branch, we have some of the best mechanical equipment we could get put in there, to try and deal with this large volume of business. The mechanical equipment in the branch at present consists of some 35 typewriters, 6 adding machines, 46 cheque writing machines, 8 scriptographs, which is a rapid cheque signing contrivance. We have 2 mimeographs, 1 electrical and the other a hand machine, and as we are unable and it is more expensive to put much of our printing through the Bureau, we are using boys to do this. The machines are not expensive, and are at present on a run of 850,000 forms. The machines are constantly running now from 7 o'clock in the morning till midnight, and we are able to get our forms as we require them. The Bureau, when they put our printing for the Division through, take quite a long time to turn it out, and they usually deliver us very large quantities, for which we have no storage. We have absolutely no room to put the stack of necessary stationery away.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Speaking generally, what are those forms?—A. In order to save correspondence we are endeavouring to put slips in the mail, so as to just have the one letter. It saves the postal people a great deal of trouble, and we put slips in with cheques, telling people the errors that are creeping in, and that they are not letting us know their change of address. These are the forms, and in addition to that we are making up a great many forms for the Board of Review in connection with separation allowance.

Another one of the difficulties we have had to contend with is that the Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance Branch is, and always has been, severely handicapped for want of space: we grow so rapidly. This trouble has been experienced ever since the inception of the Branch, and the magnitude of the work carried on therein is hard for any one outside to appreciate.

Then it is extremely difficult to employ the proper class of labour in this Branch, owing to the fact that the plan is to employ only men over Military age, or those who are physically unfit, or females whose financial position has been prejudiced by their financial support going on active service. In view of all this, we have a restricted constituency to drawn from. Also a certain amount of military knowledge is necessary to men holding responsible positions in this Division. The work in connection with this Division is of a particular nature an ordinary commercial training, whilst of Service, is not sufficient to render employees sufficiently competent to properly carry out the work of this Branch. When they are are not competent I have full authority to discipline, suspend and discharge them.

By the Chairman:

Q. How many employees have you in your Branch?—A. 638 employees.

Q. And in how many places are those employees scattered?—A. They are all in one part of the building, but we have to work one part of the staff at night owing to the lack of room and there is consequently overlapping to a certain extent by reason of that being done. Not a single member of the staff, no matter how important his position is, can say that he has a private room for the discussion of important or confidential matters. Many wives of soldiers, and other dependents, have to come and consult some of us there, we are paying over 10,000 accounts in Ottawa, and in close proximity to the city and frequently these people come in and want to tell us something of their family troubles, but there are three other officers in the room with me and it is, consequently, most difficult for these mothers and wives to lay their troubles before us because they do not care to do so in the presence of others. Owing to the insufficient space occupied by the staff, and the consequent vitiated state of atmosphere of the office which cannot be avoided, the health of the young lady employees is impaired.

A very serious cause of complaint of late from the dependents of soldiers, has been on account of the assigned pay being closed, owing to the soldier being reported as "Returned to Canada," by the overseas paymasters.

The chief paymaster sends me instructions by letter, stopping the account for assigned pay, and when these instructions are received, the account of course is closed, and the assignee notified. Hundreds of letters are received from the soldier in France, showing that at the time we notified the dependent, the soldier was "returned to Canada," he had instead gone to the front. This causes confusion, inconvenience and complaint. The trouble arose from the fact that the paymaster issued a last pay certificate for the soldier on the presumption that he was going to "return to Canada," and when he issued this last pay certificate, he stopped the assigned pay. Afterwards, the order, having the soldier returned was cancelled and he was retained in England, while I was not notified to resume payments to the assignment. This is a matter which has been responsible for a considerable amount of cabling between here and England, and in 95 per cent of the cases, where I have cabled the chief paymaster advising him that no record was received of the soldier's return, he has sent me a cable back authorizing me to reopen the account. The matter has been the cause of a great deal of correspondence with the chief paymaster overseas, and a cable has just been received to say that new arrangements are being made to obviate this difficulty in future, of course this does not help me to explain in any way the complaints which have been received about this matter in the past.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Cannot something be done to remedy that defect? How could that paymaster over there send that notice, and cause the stoppage of the assigned pay to the family whilst the man is there fighting in the trenches, arousing a spirit of resentment in him against the country, and properly so too, when his dependents are treated like that?—A. This has now been remedied.

Q. How?—A. Recently the new regulation went into effect, and we now pay altogether on the sailing list. The sailings as they occur from Liverpool or elsewhere, are cabled to the Record Office. On these lists appear the name, the rank, and other particulars regarding every man who is coming back by that steamer, we get the name of the ship upon which they are sailing, and we immediately proceed to make up every soldier's account up to that time. Although we may receive notice as before from the paymaster that the man is returning to Canada we do not take action unless we see by the sailing list that the soldier has actually returned by steamer. The full benefit of this change has not yet had time to show itself, but we feel that there will be no hardship in the future along these lines.

By the Chairman:

Q. When did that new regulation come into force?—A. This month, May.

Q. So that hereafter you will not stop the assigned pay and separation allowance until you receive notice that the soldier has actually sailed?—A. Not in that class of cases. There are many cases that have been referred to us by the Patriotic Fund, where the pay and allowances have been stopped for the reason that the wives of the soldiers have become immoral or something like that, and we have suspended the account in the meantime.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Why should you suspend the payment of the assigned pay and separation allowance for the wife under those circumstances? By what right do you stop payment because somebody tells you that she has become immoral? I want to know that?—A. Because we have received instructions to do so; those are our instructions.

Q. From whom? Have you a copy of those instructions?—A. No, I have not a copy here, but I can produce them later, if you wish.

Q. I want to know why somebody should take it upon himself to say that this pay should stop, simply because somebody says to him that some woman has become immoral. Who gave you those instructions? Where did you get them from, Major?—A. So far as I am personally concerned, I have not had a great many of these cases to deal with during the short time I have been in the Branch, but they were numerous in the past and, I understand, that they have worked hardship in some cases where it was afterwards found that it was not merited. But I might say that in many of the cases which we investigated we found the grounds upon which payment was stopped were sound, in fact, in the larger part of the cases where we have had to stop pay to the wife, that was the case.

Q. Yes, but see here: that woman's husband assigns her $20 per month and he goes to the front to fight; do you mean to tell me that the Government of Canada becomes the censor of her morals? The pay belongs to her when her husband assigns it to her.—A. No, the assigned pay is never stopped by us, only the separation allowance.

The CHAIRMAN: I would not say that the Government becomes the censor of her morals. When the soldier goes to the front, he leaves his wife and family, usually, in trust to the Government and the Patriotic Fund. Now if that woman becomes immoral and forgets the care of her children, and becomes a drunkard, and those children are likely to starve or run wild, the country owes an obligation to the children as well as to the wife. Consequently when it becomes necessary, and the department hears that the money is squandered and the children are neglected, in those cases the payment of the separation allowance to the wife is stopped, and it is applied for the benefit of the children.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to have a chance of getting this matter cleared up. There is a reason for it, perhaps, as far as the Patriotic Fund is concerned, that is a voluntary fund, and you can pick and chose if you wish, having regard to the morals of the woman. But when the husband assigns his pay to his wife I do not know that this Government is in the position to say, whether she is moral or immoral, that the pay which her husband has assigned should not be paid to her. In some of these cases, one has been mentioned here this morning, where they stopped this woman's pay, it was afterwards found that there was absolutely no reason for doing so; in any case, what right has the Government to stop it?—A. It is only the separation allowance.

The CHAIRMAN: In nine cases out of ten where there is ground for it, the soldier is only too glad to receive the report of her conduct.

The WITNESS: In connection with the criticisms which have been made in connection with the administration of the separation allowance and assigned pay branch, I would like to bring before the Committee the following, which may be considered as a few of the outstanding cases which we have to investigate and cause adjustments to be made:—

In the first place in the summary of fraudulent and unusual cases which have to be investigated and adjusted, may be placed (a) "Fictitious Wives".

(b) "Married men enlisting as single."

(c) "Deserted wives claiming separation allowance, or men disclaiming all knowledge of them in England."

(d) "Cases of guardianships; a foster-son, separation allowance to a sister under special circumstances."

(e) When soldiers inform dependents assignment has been made, but fail to do so.

(f) Compulsory assignment. Application delayed on account of soldier having made no assignment.

(g) Cases of widowed mother having a son and afterwards son marries. We have had many cases where women came down to us and we have shown them that the son has since got married, and the mother in that case ceases to be the beneficiary.

Many of the instances cited above have had to be referred to the Judge Advocate General, for a ruling, and the work under this particular heading has steadily increased, and necessitates sound and experienced judgment on the part of those responsible.

Of course you understand that my division does not pay the convalescent and the soldier receiving hospital treatment. His records and his pay are under the direction and control of the Military Hospitals Commission.

A great deal of valuable time was taken up in this Branch in attempting to deal with cases arising in connection with the payment of Separation Allowance and many of these cases required legal advice before a really correct decision could be arrived at. In order that these cases might be properly considered by Officers competent for that work, it was decided to establish a Board of Review, and this Board is at present in operation. The Board consists of one Field Officer, one Captain and the Dominion Secretary of the Canadian Patriotic Association. The two officers mentioned are Major Margeson and Captain Beatty, both of whom have had a considerable experience in law and have also been Overseas, and therefore are thoroughly acquainted with the Military as well as the Civil side of this portion of the administration. The Dominion Secretary was selected as a member of the Board on account of the great experience he had had in investigating the many cases in which the Patriotic Association are paying allowances to the wives and families of soldiers who have proceeded or are about to proceed overseas. This experience is of course extremely valuable to the Board of Review, as the cases in which the Canadian Patriotic Fund are issuing relief have been carefully investigated in the Districts in which moneys are being expended.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

In the majority of cases where the Patriotic Fund are issuing relief, the Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Division are paying Separation Allowance to the wives or other legal representatives of the soldiers who have proceeded or are about to proceed overseas.

The Board of Review are proving to be of the very greatest assistance in the administration of this large Division, and we are now referring all cases not covered by Orders in Council governing Separation Allowance, to the Board for their opinion, previous to opening any new accounts in our ledgers.

In a large number of cases in the past, accounts have been opened on behalf of families of members of the C.E.F. who were not entitled to receive any moneys from the department. This was not through any fault of any Branch of the Department of Militia but through misrepresentation having been made to the Department in these cases. All these cases are at present being carefully investigated and it is hoped before a very great length of time to have had investigated every single account now open for Separation Allowance.

By the Chairman:

Q. With the expectation of reducing the number of complaints considerably?—

A. Yes. With regard to assigned pay as well as separation allowances. With regard to assigned pay, not such a great amount of trouble is experienced in the administration, owing to the fact that this division only acts as a distributor or agent on behalf of the soldier and really turns over to his family any amount of his pay up to fifty per cent that he desires to give to any beneficiary.

In the early days of the war, owing to the fact that no complete check was made of the nominal rolls for assigned pay and other records necessary to be in the possession of every unit proceeding overseas, many confusing returns were received by the S. A. and A. P. division at militia headquarters. You must remember that in a battalion of infantry proceeding overseas approximately 50,000 documents have to be prepared and checked, it is no child's work. This work has largely to be done in a hurry. On the accuracy of these documents depends the subsequent correctness in reports of casualties, pay, separation allowance and similar matters affecting the soldier and his next of kin.

If I may be permitted I would like to produce, for the information of the committee, a sample nominal roll to show the condition of the papers and records we had to work on, (producing nominal roll).

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Is that the original roll?—A. Yes, and this specimen shows the condition that the rolls get in from constant handling, and the kind of rolls we have to work on. This is the roll that came in from the 38th Ottawa Battalion.

Q. Is that a typical one, or is it worse than the average?—A. No, sir, that is just an average one. During the earlier days of the war difficulty was experienced in getting together officers of proper experience to carry on the duties of adjutants and paymasters, and further, there were not sufficient experienced officers to advise the adjutants and paymasters, as to the proper conduct of their duties.

Later it was decided to organize an inspection division in connection with the branch of the Accountant and Paymaster General, and this division has proved to be of the greatest assistance to all concerned, and very especially to the officials in the record office and chief paymaster overseas.

In the early days of the war it very frequently happened that troops after a short time in England, were hurried away to France before the records in connection with the units to which these men belonged had been put into complete condition, and in cases where these troops were ordered into action almost immediately upon arrival in France, it was most difficult to trace from these incomplete records in London, the numerous casualties, as they occurred.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

After the organization of the Audit division, the administration of this was placed in the hands of an officer known as the General Auditor and Chief Inspector, Pay Accounts and Records, C.E.F. in Canada. This officer was charged with the proper audit of all pay accounts and with the supervision of the preparation of all orderly room records. In order that proper supervision of all of these important duties might be carried out in the various military districts, on the 3rd March, 1916, a district inspector of accounts and records was appointed and detailed to the headquarters of each military district. This officer from time to time reported to the regimental headquarters of each unit in his district, and gave instructions in pay accounts and advice to Adjutants with regard to the preparation of all documents necessary.

Prior to any unit proceeding overseas after the organization of this division, a careful check was wherever possible made of all pay-rolls up to the time of sailing, and at point of embarkation, the greatest care was taken to muster all of the troops on board the various troopships. This last muster was absolutely necessary owing to the fact that, in the early days of the war, before this was done, the names of a great many soldiers were shown on the nominal rolls submitted to headquarters as having proceeded overseas, whereas in fact they had absented themselves en route, or in other cases were left behind sick in hospitals, and no report was sent to headquarters of these cases.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. How do you account for these nominal rolls being forwarded in such an unsatisfactory condition with the consequent delay in the payment of separation allowances?—A. The majority of those cases have entirely disappeared, and that complaint now only applies to such units as the Forestry and Construction Battalions.

Q. Why is there a difference between these units and the others?—A. Because the Forestry and Construction Battalions are recruited all over the country, and they are not brought together as a unit until they arrive at the point of embarkation. During the last several months a great deal of trouble has been caused by the necessary haste in which several of the Forestry Battalions have been organized and sent overseas without being allowed sufficient time to prepare the documents necessary to the paying of separation allowance and assigned pay, and I might be at liberty to give by way of illustration the details with regard to the 257th Railway Construction Battalion. The O.C. and the public were proud of the rapid manner in which that battalion was organized, but when the unit was brought together it was just half an hour from the time the troop trains arrived at the pier at Halifax until the different troops were actually on board the ship. Although the inspector made every endeavour to carry out as much inspection as possible and forward all the rolls to headquarters, it was impossible to do it satisfactorily, because the signatures of the men were required on three separate sheets. The unit was over 1,100 strong, and that meant that 3,300 signatures were necessary on the nominal roll alone, and there was only half an hour in which to obtain them. It could not possibly be done. The Chief Embarkation Officer informed us that the British convoy was in waiting at a strategic point to take the ship over, and therefore it was impossible to wait in order to make a proper check of the rolls, which could not be done under the circumstances. Anticipating the possibility of such an emergency arising, I had wired two days previously for instructions as to what action should be taken by the inspector, and I received permission from the department to send an inspector to England if it were absolutely necessary to do so, but not to incur the expense if it could be avoided. There was no other course left but to send the inspector over. I had heard before that it was likely the time at our disposal at Halifax would be short, and therefore set an inspector at work on the troop trains all the way down, but it was impossible to do the work in the time. The same remarks apply to the 235th and the 230th Forestry Battalions.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. Did the inspector secure the signatures on the train?—A. No, he had to go overseas.

Q. Did he obtain all the signatures?—A. He did obtain them all finally.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. In that case what delay would there be in the payment of the separation allowances?—A. We had absolutely no rolls or anything here upon which to commence payment of the separation allowance and assigned pay. I would like to read a memo. I have here in connection with this special case of the 256th Railway Construction Battalion. (Reads):—

This unit proceeded overseas without forwarding a single card for separation allowance to this Branch, or any cards or nominal roll for assigned pay. Hardship was entailed on the dependents, and the complaint regarding same came from sources so numerous that separation allowance had to be granted for one month prior to receipt of regular records.

We had to give them separation allowance without the roll.

And in each particular instance where the separation allowance had to be granted for one month, a special investigation had to be made, a record of the soldiers' services had to be obtained, either from the district in which the soldier enlisted, or from the Record Office, and special recommendations obtained from clergymen and Patriotic Association, together with marriage certificates, etc."

There was more complaint in connection with this particular battalion from all over Canada, this delay caused more criticism than we received in connection with any other of the battalions that went overseas.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: I noticed the newspapers gave great credit to the Officer Commanding for getting his battalion recruited so rapidly, and getting them overseas so quickly, but evidently every rose has its thorn.

By Hon. Mr. Murphy:

Q. What did you say caused the criticism?—A. We did not know to whom to issue separation allowance cheques, there were no means of ascertaining who were entitled to receive them, because the rolls were not available. The work of obtaining these records entailed an enormous amount of work, but, I am glad to say, under present organization, each particular case in which any complaint was made was dealt with very promptly and a cheque for one month's separation allowance forwarded. When the nominal rolls and separation allowance cards were received from England, as many clerks as possible were put on same, and adjusting cheques for separation allowance and assigned pay were got out with all possible speed. This, of course, meant that the hardship to the dependents was to a great extent lessened, but it also meant that the work of the Assigned Pay and Separation Allowance section was greatly disorganized, and other important matters including correspondence of members of Parliament had to be delayed for attention later.

There was another particular difficulty that arose, and I would like to bring it to the attention of the Committee at this point. This is just an ordinary case which I have selected, it is a rather long one, but it will explain the nature of the difficulties with which we have had to contend in meeting the complaints which have been made. The case I will quote has been selected at random from the correspondence in the department.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

In every case of application for Separation Allowance, there is a considerable amount of trouble and correspondence. I quote as follows in the case of Private B. D. Smillie, who finally proved to be a soldier on active service leaving a mother at home, not a widow but with a husband incapacitated to support her. This can be considered as a simple case:—

The first letter I received in connection with this matter was from the soldier's mother about the end of December, when she stated that the soldier had enlisted in the 46th Battalion.

The records of the 46th Battalion were fully gone over and no trace of the soldier could be found thereon, and his mother was requested to confirm. In her reply, dated the 19th January, she did not state in which Battalion he was, but in a further letter received from her on the 21st January, she stated he was in the 65th Battalion, not the 46th Battalion, and on the Nominal Roll of the 65th Battalion he was not shown as assigning any pay, to which effect Mrs. Smillie was duly advised on the 1st February, and at the same time notified that the division was communicating with the Chief Paymaster, C.E.F. requesting him to advise us if an assignment could be put in force.

We received a further letter from Mrs. Smillie dated the 6th February, but again she did not give the soldier's Christian name, number or battalion and it was impossible to locate the file amongst the many thousands in the registry, and Mrs. Smillie was requested to furnish us with the necessary information.

On the 16th February, we received a card for separation allowance from the Chief Paymaster, C.E.F., and this card was forwarded on the 16th February to the Rev. Jos. Hunter, Belmont, Man., requesting him to sign the certificate on the back of the card to the effect that the soldier was the sole support of his widowed mother.

On the 27th March I received authority from the Chief Paymaster overseas to open an account for assigned pay at the rate of $15 per month, effective from the 1st February, 1917, and cheque adjusting February and March payments was forwarded by registered mail on the same day, and Mrs. Smillie was notified to this effect on the 29th March.

Early in April the necessary certificate for separation allowance was received from the Rev. Jos. Hunter, Belmont, Man., and separation allowance was granted from the 1st April, 1917, cheque for the month of April being forwarded with the April cheques. Mrs. Smillie was advised of this on the 13th April, and at the same time, informed that inquiry was being made to see if the grant should be made retroactive from the date of the father's incapacity. This was in accordance with instructions issued to this division to the effect that no payment or arrears of separation allowance for a period of six months should be made without receiving a favourable report regarding same from the Patriotic Association.

The Patriotic Association, Brandon, Man., on the 13th April, was requested to advise me if separation allowance should be made retroactive, and immediately on receipt of their report, the matter will receive prompt attention.

There is absolutely no cause for complaint so far as the Separation Allowance Branch is concerned in connection with the handling of this matter. In the first instance, when the mother of the soldier wrote in, she did not give the soldier's number or battalion, and in several subsequent communications, she still omitted to furnish this information, and in every instance a letter had to be sent to her requesting her to supply these details before the file could be traced, and as her address is in the province of Manitoba, every letter took a period of ten days.

If the dependents of soldiers, and others, in writing to this Branch in connection with matters would always give full particulars of the soldier, the reply would be greatly hastened.

In this case, a separate docket had to be prepared for each letter received from Mrs. Smillie, and held pending her reply to our letters.

The soldier evidently did not make any assignment until he proceeded overseas, as his assignment was only effective from the 1st February, and from the information

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

I have, it would appear that he did not take any action towards making an assignment or applying for separation allowance until such time as the matter was brought to the notice of the Chief Paymaster, C.E.F., by our letter of the 2nd February, 1917.

That goes to show that although we were making every effort to satisfy this claim, and the correspondence opened in December, we could not deal with it satisfactorily until April. That is only one case that has been selected from very many. I have had prepared here extracts, which are just taken at random from the correspondence showing on whose behalf the complaint came in, what action was taken, and what disposition was made of it. These complaints consist of letters written to us by various members of Parliament and others requesting us to make investigation.

The CHAIRMAN: We would like to have that on file. Here is a "sample of complaint" summarizing forty-four complaints that came in on the 17th of May, and showing the way in which each one has been dealt with. (See Exhibit No. 3.)

The WITNESS: This, (producing statement) showing a sample of complaints in reference to refunds, Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Branch for two days, and the method in which each complaint was dealt with.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do I understand you to say that these lists (lists exhibited) are taken at random from the correspondence?—A. Yes.

Q. Out of one day's work?—A. Yes, two days, I think, in the case of the refund.

Q. These (lists exhibited) are complaints in connection with refund that came to your department in two days?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. These cases are chosen at random from amongst the correspondence?—A. Yes, I went in and told the clerks to take the cases as they came in. (See Exhibit No. 2.)

By the Chairman:

Q. Now I want to ask you about a few cases here that were reported to us. In the evidence at page 536, Dr. Evans of Kingston spoke of the case of Private Jones who was for several weeks without pay. The Deputy Minister, General Fiset, has given a memorandum regarding the case. It is not necessary to go into it in detail, but I want to call your attention to the statement at the end, which reads as follows:

Debits.

Paid cash $123 30

March 15, 1917.—Casualties Paymaster wrote Chief Paymaster, London, for explanation re debit entry of $123.30 in Jones account as "Cash Paid," this not being understood as no payments were made in Canada other than by cheque. (See folio 40, H.Q. 649-J-2505.) No reply received from Chief Paymaster to date, but he has been again cabled to asking him to obtain proof from the ex-paymaster of 139th Battalion, Capt. H. W. McAdam, of the disputed cash payment in question.

That is dated 26-5-17, and it was 13th February, 1917, when the paymaster called for the last pay certificate.

Q. Why should the interval from the 13th February to the 26th May occur in securing the last pay certificate when cables were sent in both cases?—A. This is a matter which does not come under any branch that I am responsible for. This comes under the casualty paymaster. I am not responsible for payments of that kind, but as I understand the case, the soldier was returned to Canada. The delay is quite evidently overseas.

Q. The memorandum here is, "Private Jones became ill 24th June, 1916, and was sent to military hospital, Kingston, when he underwent an operation on right shoulder [Major C. M. Ingall.]

for abscess." The complaint made was that owing to his paymaster going overseas, and not being on his last pay certificate, he was for several weeks without pay. What I am trying to get light upon is why, if the cable was sent from Canada the 13th February, 1917, there should be no reply of any kind, and it should be necessary to send another cable on the 26th May, 1917, on the same matter.—A. As I understand the case, I do not think it was necessary to cable to England in the first place. If I understand the case correctly, the man was left behind in the hospital in Kingston to be operated upon.

Q. You might read the statement yourself and see if there was any unnecessary delay in that case.—A. I will do so (After reading file.) In this case the fault lies with the paymaster of the 139th Battalion, who is overseas, in showing a payment in cash that he did not make. He could not pay cash. Every payment would have to be by cheque.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. He could pay it out of his pocket?—A. Then it would be impossible to balance the cash. That is at it appears from the evidence given there.

This is another case that frequently happens, and this is not the only unit in which this has occurred, but it will be easier to illustrate the errors that creep in and the hardships that may be worked on various families by giving a concrete illustration. The following may be taken as a specimen case: The unit is to entrain for overseas service at 7 a.m., but keeps on taking recruits up to 3 p.m. the previous day. The result of this is apparent—particulars and signatures of recruits could not be obtained on the M.F.D. 902, assigned pay nominal roll. The officer commanding the unit may have been missing all the afternoon, and does not show up with his unit until the unit is to entrain, assigned pay-roll, therefore, is completed for signature of the senior major. A list of men who had not signed the assigned pay-roll would have to be prepared and given to the adjutant for officer commanding—for the men to be paraded—48 hours before the unit left. As a number of these men cannot be produced, and it is not certain that they are proceeding with the unit, the only way to protect the public is to cancel their names on this roll. The officer commanding is advised asking for assigned pay-roll of any men who are with him, but whose names are taken off the roll. He is also reminded by wire, and as the officer commanding or the paymaster are not heard from it must be presumed that communications were ignored.

Another cause of trouble is change of address. A great deal of work in this division is caused by changes of address. These number anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 per month. In fact, yesterday morning, the number of letters received by me for change of address was 1,120. Amongst these 1,120, I should say that, on a conservative estimate, at least 10 per cent have not quoted the soldier's name, number and battalion. This is despite the fact that I have prepared a special form and issued this form with each separation allowance and assigned pay cheque every month, showing the payee how to notify change of address. This change of address has to be noted in the assigned pay ledger, on the separation ledger, on the assigned pay card, on the separation allowance card, and the record office have also to be informed.

I produce copy of statistics for the year 1916 including the number of employees with details of the work.

(For statement see Exhibit 1 of Appendix herein.)

There was one other thing in connection with overpayments. It seems to me, in reading the evidence previously given that the matter of overpayments has been grossly exaggerated. The majority of the overpayments of assigned pay or separation allowance which had been made to the soldiers or their dependents are being recovered in the case where the soldier is still serving by the simple process of charging them up against the soldier's account. They are thus absorbed in a very short time.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

These form the great bulk of the overpayments. There is a class of overpayments, however, which cannot be recovered. These consist of overpayments of separation allowance and assigned pay made to dependents of soldiers who have deserted or who have been given their discharge in Canada. In some instances headquarters have not been notified of these desertions and discharges, with the result that the separation allowance and assigned pay have been continued for some months to the dependents before it has been discovered that the soldier is no longer on the strength of the force.

There is another class of overpayment, mainly where a soldier has been overpaid for some reason, either in respect of separation allowance, assigned pay, or has been allowed to overdraw his account. The soldier has been killed or has died, and in such cases it is difficult to recover the overpayment. These cases however, are not common, and the amount involved is hardly worthy of consideration. In many of these cases we have taken into consideration the fact that the woman has accepted the money in good faith, and if it is going to work any hardship, the husband having been killed, we must put it up to the Board of Review to consider whether we should take any further action or not. Of course, as the regulations stand to-day, we have to ask for a refund but we do not press for it in cases where it works hardship and the woman is poor.

There is still a third class of overpayments, and that is when the soldier has been returned to Canada, discharged as medically unfit, and overpayment has been made in assigned pay or separation allowance. The great bulk of these overpayments will also be recovered. They are not very numerous, however, and steps are being taken to recover what there are from the three months' pay and allowances to be issued to the soldiers after discharge from overseas service. These will be recovered during the next three months.

In the statements of overpayments made up recently there has been included as overpayments, separation allowance issued to the wife for the month in which the soldier arrived home. There are very many cases of these, and they should not be considered as overpayments, it being decided recently, by ruling of the Paymaster General, that the wife is entitled to separation allowance for the full month in which the soldier returns. It is difficult at present to give any exact figures. These, however, will be obtainable just as soon as the work of comparing the lists of separation allowance and assigned pay in the Ottawa office, with those in the London office is completed. This work will be completed in the course of a few weeks, or as soon as the officer in charge can return to London and finish up his checking there. By this checking all accounts which should not be on the ledgers will be closed out and a statement can be made up of just what overpayments have been made. It is very doubtful if the total amount will exceed $250,000. You know that in all hundreds of millions of dollars in pay which have been issued. The percentage will probably be less than one-tenth of one per cent of the total pay issued. Do you know that the British Government wrote off £1,000,000 overpayments after the South Africa war. Our force now is much greater than theirs was then.

By Mr. Ross:

Q. When are these cheques for separation allowance and assigned pay sent out?—

A. We commence sending out on the morning of the 15th so as not to block the city post office. We mail 40,000 the first day, and the balance of the quarter of the million as fast as the post office can handle them.

Q. So that if a man is honourably discharged on the 20th of the month and his cheque had gone out on the 15th, his wife gets the separation allowance for the whole month. And in the past in such cases, you have asked for a refund, that would be previous to this recent ruling?—A. Previous to that ruling we would notify the wife that the man had been discharged on the 20th, and would ask a refund for the 10 or 11 days. That caused a great deal of correspondence and hard feeling.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Take the case of a man killed at the front, on say, the 15th April. How long would it be before his case is settled?—A. Before the estate is settled?

Q. Yes?—A. Six months.

Q. And how is the widow of that man to exist during that period?—A. If he is the only and sole support and there is a pension to be paid on that account, we continue to pay right up to the time that the Pensions Board notifies us that the pension is allowed.

Q. Supposing he was the oldest of five or six children and sole support of a mother?—A. Then she becomes eligible for a pension.

Q. The only thing she would get is whatever balance is due to him?—A. The assigned pay and the balance due to the soldier. The pay can be adjusted very quickly, but the reason six months is usually fixed as the time necessary to wind up the estate is to allow everything to come in from the field. There are cases where the soldier's things have to be gathered together, they are in dugouts, etc., and they try to settle up everything at the time instead of increasing the suffering on the part of the widow or the woman by troubling her several times in connection with the matter.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. What provisions are there with regard to interest on the unpaid balance?—A. That is now being worked out. As I understand it, I have not seen the order, but I understand that the Order in Council has come down, that that is to be done; the interest is to be computed quarterly I believe, I am not certain on this, I have not seen the official document.

Q. It is treated as a savings bank deposit?—A. Yes, as a savings account.

By the Chairman:

Q. We have been advised by several witnesses that in paying this three months' bonus pay which is due to the man after his discharge, it would be better to have it spread over a long period of gradually diminishing amounts; for instance if $100 is due to the man, it would be better to pay him $30, the first month, $25, the second, $20, the third, $15, the fourth and $10 the fifth, in order to allow the man to rely less upon support from his military services, and gradually to depend upon his civilian support. Is there any departmental objection to that? From the point of view of the soldier it is somewhat better than to pay him up the full amount for three months in one payment and then to suddenly drop?—A. Of course it would mean the issue of that many more cheques, and spread the payment over a longer period, but I certainly consider it would be beneficial. I was connected with a small group which wound up the South African affairs, and we got a gratuity, by some special Act passed in the House, of three months' pay; in our own case there was one month's gratuity and many of the men a few days afterwards had spent it all, whereas if it had been spread over a long period, it would have been of much greater benefit. If the payments could be spread out the same staff could handle it, it would not require any more men, but they would have to be kept a few months longer.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Do you not think it is a hardship, when you say the men had spent their three months' pay in a few days, to ask their dependents to refund amounts that had been overpaid them, when they accepted the amounts in the belief that they were entitled to it and had spent the money?—A. I have found that in most cases, probably two-thirds of the cases, where families have accepted moneys that they were afterwards asked to refund as overpayments, they have done it with a full knowledge they were taking money that was not due to them.

The CHAIRMAN: There are a few cases I will take up with Major Ingall; most of these are cases that were complained of.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Major Ingall, I have here a statement from the Deputy Minister of Militia covering a certain number of cases that were referred to in the evidence. The first of these cases is that of Private Jones, which is covered by the evidence of Dr. Evans on page 536 in the printed copy of the proceedings of this committee. The full statement of the Paymaster General with reference to that case is here. Will you look it over (statement of Paymaster General handed to witness). In your judgment has there been any error committed?—A. Yes, in that an entry is made in the statement of account showing a debit as paid in cash of $123.30. This payment is shown as having been made by the Paymaster of the 139th Battalion. The system of payment for the Canadian Expeditionary Force is by cheque, and it is therefore not understood how the paymaster could issue the sum stated in cash.

Q. Then, I understand, that Private Jones' complaint is well-founded?—A. Yes, it would so appear.

Q. And it was therefore an unexplained error on the part of the Paymaster of the 139th Battalion that the man was for several weeks without pay?—A. Yes.

Q. The next case is that of Private Angus McVicar, which was mentioned by Major Tilley in his evidence on page 517.—A. It would appear that the claim had been put forward against Private McVicar for the difference between the charges for a private and a public ward in the hospital. From the evidence it would appear that Private McVicar desired to undergo treatment in the private ward. It is customary in the service when a man asks for a private ward he is allowed to have it, and when this is done I have never known of any other system than that the patient should pay the difference, as was apparently done in this case.

Q. Trooper V. R. Brown, No. 2810, claims that he did not get a cent from the time he landed at Quebec, he was debited, although he claims there was a sum of $60 coming to him. See his evidence on pages 485 and 486. You have before you the facts of the case as submitted by the Paymaster General; in the case of Private Brown was there any negligence on the part of the department?—A. I think the account, as far as I can see from the facts before me, has been correctly handled. I do not think there has been any undue delay.

Q. How do you account for the fact that Trooper Brown was under the impression that $60 was due him on his arrival here?—A. I am not sure, it is not apparent from the statement we now have before us. When he left England there was a credit balance, on the 30th January, of $49.22, which was transferred, that is his English last-pay certificate, and this was properly brought into account by the Casualty Paymaster in Canada.

Q. On what date?—A. That is not shown here, it just shows the credit, but it does not say as to the date.

Q. Private F. Sentell, mentioned in Major Tilley's evidence at pages 518-19.—A. The following letter explains the situation:

"No. 832104—Pte. F. Sentell, 146th Bn., C.E.F. Claims for medical attendance, etc.

"DEAR SIR HERBERT AMES,—

"With reference to your letter of the 21st instant, Private Sentell was injured in an automobile accident while on a recruiting tour in New Brunswick last June, and his injuries were of so serious a nature that his condition did not permit of his removal to the military hospital at Riverside in the neighbourhood where he was injured.

"The claims to which reference was made before your committee are the accounts of the doctor and nurse who attended Sentell and of Louis Comeau from whom Dr. Oulton, the medical officer of the 145th Battalion, hired an automobile to take him from Shediac to Riverside to assist in an operation upon Sentell.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

"The nurse's bill, which amounted to $270, was paid last month and steps are being taken to settle the bill for the hire of the automobile. With regard to the bill of Dr. Carmwath, the civilian medical practitioner who attended Sentell in the Riverside hospital, this account was for a large figure and was referred some time ago to the officer commanding, Military District No. 6, Halifax, for his remarks and recommendation and I have telegraphed that officer to submit his report immediately and when it is received, steps will be taken to settle the matter without further delay.

"Yours truly,

(Signed) "E. F."

"Sir HERBERT AMES, M.P.,

"Room 40, East Block,

"House of Commons,

"Ottawa."

Q. Lance-Corporal George L. Lajoie, No. 25963: his case is set out as evidence by Trooper Brown on page 488. His complaint was that on discharge his certificate of conduct overseas was not marked good. The departmental reply was to the effect that the documents had not been received from overseas. Is there any reason why a man discharged on November 11, 1916, should be reported on the 26th May, 1917, as incapable of securing a discharge certificate of his service overseas?—A. This case is entirely under the direction of the Adjutant General. All discharges come through him. I would not express an opinion without further investigation.

Q. How should it be possible for six months' delay to take place in giving a man a certificate which he claims?—A. I do not know. In all cases that have come under my notice, the man's discharge certificate was immediately available at the time he leaves the service, and his character is assessed at that time.

Q. Have you any reason to believe that any returning vessel containing documents necessary to the Militia Department has been sunk, and the documents destroyed?—A. Not to my knowledge, no, sir.

Q. Private R. Middleton, No. 81859 claims that the Government should pay hospital charges incurred between September 9 and November 5, see witness Herbert's evidence on page 888, also Major Todd's evidence on page 1078?—A. There is this to be said that if the man was sick in hospital on account of any illness or injury contracted while on service he is entitled to have his hospital charges paid for out of the public funds. In cases where the soldier remains in hospital after discharge, he is entitled to free treatment at the public expense, but is not entitled to pay and allowances for such period. However, in this case the department has never received any claim in this connection. If the claim had been received it would have been acted upon.

Q. The case of Sergeant W. E. Turley claims he had to wait four months after return to Canada, before he got pay.—A. His case is covered by the letter of the Paymaster Casualties, appearing on page 1098 of your evidence. He appears to be clearly in error.

Q. Private A. R. Baldock, P.P.C.L.I., his complaint is contained in Trooper Brown's evidence, pages 480 to 481, and also in Major Todd's evidence, page 1079.—A. He complains that his separation was stopped whilst he was in hospital. This account was stopped in accordance with the regulations in force at that time. There has evidently been some delay in properly settling up this case, but an adjusting cheque has now been forwarded, and the account is now in order.

The CHAIRMAN: The Military Hospitals Commission submits the following statement regarding the several cases that have been referred to in the evidence:—

"Private F. A. Cooper's (No. 2519) complaint was that the limb provided for him by the Militia Department was unsatisfactory." See page 1086 of evidence.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

On 27th July, 1916, the District Officer Commanding, Military District No. 10, reported that Private Cooper had received on 3rd June, 1916, the artificial limb made for him by the Carson Company, of Winnipeg. He had worn it continuously since that time, and stated that it was satisfactory, except for its weight and the looseness of the leather. On examination, it was considered by the A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 10, that these complaints were not of great importance. This is the only record at headquarters of any complaint made by Private Cooper. The Military Hospitals Commission has asked Dr. H. P. Galloway, orthopædic specialist at Winnipeg, to examine this limb and have any necessary repairs or alterations made. It is unlikely that there will be any further ground for complaint in this case.

The case of Private William James Laidlaw, complaint referred to on pages 840 and 843 of the evidence.

December 13, 1915.—A Medical Board held at Shorncliffe in this case found that Private Laidlaw's incapacity was total and of permanent duration.

February 14, 1916.—Private Laidlaw returned to Canada.

February 17, 1916.—A Medical Board at Quebec found that Private Laidlaw's left leg had been amputated at the level of the trochanter. The scar was somewhat tender but healing had taken place well. The Board found that the incapacity was 75 per cent permanent, and recommended that Private Laidlaw be furnished with proper crutches at once and have an artificial limb fitted. Private Laidlaw was placed in Class 3, by this Board.

February 26, 1916.—The Director-General of Medical Services requested a report as to whether or not Private Laidlaw had been admitted to a convalescent hospital and also requested that a service requisition for the crutches and the artificial limb, recommended by the Board, should be forwarded for approval as soon as possible. The crutches, however, had already been bought on February 23.

March 7, 1916.—The Pensions and Claims Board considered Private Laidlaw's case and granted a pension of 2nd degree, viz., $192 per annum for one year from April 1, 1916.

March 21, 1916.—The Director-General of Medical Services requested that if the stump of Private Laidlaw's leg was in condition to be fitted with an artificial limb, a requisition should be forwarded to military headquarters. This case came to the attention of the Military Hospitals Commission for the first time through a clipping from the Winnipeg Telegram of March 11, 1916. The secretary of the commission at once took up the case and requested the officer commanding the Discharge Depot at Quebec, not to have any man, who had lost a limb placed in Class 3, unless an artificial limb had been provided. At the same time, the secretary of the commission wrote to Lieut.-Colonel C. W. Rowley, of Winnipeg, a member of the commission, and asked that arrangements be made to have Laidlaw admitted to a convalescent hospital and have the military authorities arrange to keep him on pay until he was in a fit condition to work.

March 23, 1916.—The officer commanding the Discharge Depot reported that in future similar cases would be placed in Class 2.

March 27, 1916.—Colonel Rowley replied that he had asked Laidlaw to class in to see him, but he had not yet done so. He enclosed a copy of a letter from the Secretary, Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission, who stated that Private Laidlaw was working in conjunction with the toy-making movement in Winnipeg, and that he was afraid it would be impossible ever to fit him with an artificial leg on account of so much of the thigh having been taken off. The Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission was in constant touch with Private Laidlaw.

March 29, 1916.—Colonel Rowley wrote a further letter in which it was stated that he had seen Laidlaw and had also discussed with Major Reilly, the Acting Assistant Director of Medical Services, M.D. No. 10, the question of providing an artificial limb for Laidlaw.

[Major C. M. Ingall.]

March 29, 1916.—Major Reilly stated that the matter of furnishing an artificial limb had been considered by the department a month before and it was considered doubtful whether an artificial limb would be very satisfactory, and for that reason the matter had been in abeyance. Major Reilly recommended that Laidlaw be considered in Class 2, that he receive the pay of his rank and subsistence allowance of 75 cents per day. He also enclosed a letter from Private Laidlaw to the Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission in which he thanked Colonel Rowley and the commission for their consideration on his behalf and requested that he be allowed to stay at his home.

April 1, 1916.—The Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission stated that any artificial appliances were recommended for Laidlaw would be supplied by the commission. The secretary also wrote, "I hope steps have been taken by the paymaster, M. D. No. 10, and by the A. D. M. S., to have the pension recommendation held up and this man replaced on regular pay and allowances."

April 4, 1916.—Major Reilly wrote to the A.A.G., M.D. No. 10, that it was almost impossible to have an artificial limb fitted that would be satisfactory. He stated that when it was decided what occupation Laidlaw would undertake, it would be expedient to supply an artificial limb. In this communication, however, Major Reilly did not refer to Private Laidlaw's reinstatement to Class 2.

It was understood by the commission that this had been done, but on April 29, the secretary of the Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission stated that Laidlaw had received a cheque for his pension.

May 4, 1916.—The President of the Pensions and Claims Board wrote to Mr. T. S. Ewart, K.C., of Winnipeg, stating that the highest degree of pension had been granted Private Laidlaw for the incapacity stated by the Medical Board at Quebec. He stated that a special committee of Parliament was considering the question of pensions and that it was understood the pensions were to be considerably increased. He further stated that he did not understand that it was the intention of the department to carry men on pay and allowances for indefinite periods but only in cases where convalescent home treatment would be of benefit or where the man's condition would not permit of an artificial limb being fitted for a short time.

May 5, 1916.—The Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission wrote to the secretary, Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission, referring to the above communications. It was considered by the commission that a medical board should be held in Winnipeg which would recommend that Private Laidlaw be reinstated to Class 2.

May 10, 1916.—The Secretary, Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission replied stating that the A.D.M.S. was of the opinion that re-boarding was not necessary as full medical reports were on file regarding the disability. It was also stated that the A.D.M.S. considered that the necessity of passing an Order in Council for the reinstatement of men to pay and allowances, was the cause of a great deal of delay.

The Director-General of Medical Services wrote to the officer commanding, M.D. No. 10, requesting information as to whether or not there was any special make of artificial limb which would be of use to Private Laidlaw. He referred to the fact that an artificial limb factory was being established in Toronto and if there was the slightest hope of having a limb manufactured which might be of use, he might be sent there. It was suggested that the occupation which Private Laidlaw would undertake depended to a certain extent whether or not an artificial limb could be supplied.

May 17, 1916.—The Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission wrote to the Secretary, Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission, stating that there was no way by which Private Laidlaw could be replaced on pay and allowances except by the passing of an Order in Council. Reference was made, however, to the fact in the scale of pensions proposed by the special Parliamentary Committee on Pensions, disarticulation of the hip was classed to receive a pension of $32 per month.

March 25, 1916.—Major Reilly reported to the A.A.G., M.D. No. 10 that he did not know of any make of limb which could be fitted successfully to the stump.

June 27, 1916.—The Vocational Secretary of the Commission requested the Vocational Officer of Manitoba to report on Private Laidlaw's case.

July 6, 1916.—The Vocational Officer for Manitoba reported that vocational training could be supplied in Winnipeg if arrangements for the support of Private Laidlaw and his family could be made.

July 7, 1916.—A reply was telegraphed that an Order in Council providing for pay and allowances of men undergoing re-education had been passed by the Government and a report was immediately requested.

July 26, 1916.—The Vocational Officer for Manitoba reported that Private Laidlaw was unable to avail himself of re-education at the time, as his wound had re-opened.

August 15, 1916.—Major Reilly reported that the discharge had ceased, that the trouble was of a minor nature, and Laidlaw was receiving every attention that was required.

August 24, 1916.—The Secretary, Returned Soldiers' Manitoba Commission reported that Laidlaw's pension had not been revised.

August 25, 1916.—The Secretary, Military Hospitals Commission, placed the matter before the Pensions and Claims Board.

August 28, 1916.—The Vocational Officer for Manitoba was requested to proceed without delay with arrangements for vocational training.

September 19, 1916.—The Board of Pension Commissioners requested Laidlaw to forward birth certificates of his children within the age limit.

October 13, 1916.—The Board of Pension Commissioners authorized the adjustment of pension in accordance with the new scale granting the Class 2 pension for one year from April 1, 1916, at the rate of $32 per month, and also an allowance of $6 per month for each of Laidlaw's three children.

October 24, 1916.—A pension cheque was mailed to Private Laidlaw.

October 30, 1916.—The Military Hospitals Commission forwarded a cheque for $31.20, being the amount due for vocational training allowance from September 25 to October 31, 1916.

March 10, 1917.—A letter was written by Private Laidlaw to Major Cooke, Officer Commanding "G" Unit, Winnipeg, stating that he had never any complaint to make against the Military Hospitals Commission, but had always been treated with the utmost consideration (copy attached).

In view of the difficulty which has been experienced by the commission in obtaining artificial limb makers who are not of German birth but also because of the fact that the manufacture of a suitable artificial limb would be a work of great difficulty, the commission has decided that an attempt should be made to have the limb manufactured in Winnipeg by the Carson Company. The matter was placed before Dr. H. P. Galloway, one of the foremost Orthopaedic surgeons in Canada, who considered that this company could make an artificial limb, and he promised to take a personal interest in seeing that the case was properly handled.

In connection with this case it must be recognized that the disability is of an unusual nature. It was recognized, practically from the beginning, that the provision of an artificial limb was almost an impossibility and the Medical Board at Quebec was, no doubt, guided by this fact in placing Private Laidlaw in Class 3, and in estimating his incapacity as three-quarter. It is unfortunate that, at the time of Private Laidlaw's return, the pension of the second degree was only $16 per month. While it is possible that the military authorities in Winnipeg should have recommended to headquarters that Private Laidlaw be replaced on pay, it is doubtful if this would have been possible in view of the fact that Private Laidlaw's incapacity could not be lessened by treatment, and that the case was therefore one for pension. It is true that there appears to have been some annoying delays in the reconsideration of pension, but it should be recognized that the Board of Pension Commissioners found itself faced with a tremendous task on beginning its work, and in view of the labour involved in the reconsideration of pensions as well as the granting of new pensions, it is felt that no blame in this matter can be attached to any of the officials interested in this case.

It may be added that Private Laidlaw has been undergoing a course of vocational re-education at the Deer Lodge Military Convalescent Hospital, Winnipeg, and has been making good progress. He is now receiving a pension of $50 per month, including the allowance for his children, and under the provisions of a recent Order in Council, by which subsistence allowance for men undergoing vocational re-education has been increased to $1 per day, he is now receiving $38 per month from the Military Hospitals Commission, instead of $26 mentioned in the attached letter. It is believed that there will be no further cause for complaint of any kind.

WINNIPEG, March 10, 1917.

Major COOKE, O.C.

"G" Unit,

Military Hospitals Commission,
Winnipeg.

DEAR SIR,—Owing to some misunderstanding in regard to my going to Toronto to be fitted with an artificial limb, I wish to place on record that I never had any complaint to make against the Military Hospitals Commission, to my knowledge, ever since this body took up my case five months ago. I have always been treated with utmost consideration.

When Mr. R. B. Bennett was in the city a week ago, he asked me regarding my date of discharge, pension, etc. I told him that I thought I had not been fairly treated on my arrival in Canada, being pensioned off with the sum of $16 per month (without convalescence), which had to maintain myself, wife and three children, as it was utterly impossible for me to obtain employment, owing to my disability. Later, this pension, through the efforts of Lieut.-Col. Rowley, and the M.H.C., was increased to $32 per month, with $18 allowed for children, and later the M.H.C. formed their Vocational Branch, and offered me education which I am now taking, and the M.H.C. in addition are making an extra allowance of $26 per month.

I desire to place on record my thanks to the Military Hospitals Commission for what they have done for me.

Mr. Pearce, of the Returned Soldiers Manitoba Commission was present at the interview I had with Mr. Bennett, and can corroborate my statement.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) W. J. LAIDLAW.

Case of Sergeant-Major L. A. Langtry, No. 47278. Referred to by Witness Lowery, P. 779.

Mr. A. E. Lowery stated that Sergeant-Major Langtry had been suffering from a complication of an illness known as trench fever. He has been granted a gratuity of $50. The point made by Mr. Lowery was that Sergeant-Major Langtry accepted the gratuity of $50 in full settlement of his claim and felt that he had no further claim on the Government. It should be recognized that Sergeant-Major Langtry is entitled to a consideration of his case at any time.

The Board of Pension Commissioners has requested that this N.C.O. be re-examined, and action will be taken as soon as the medical report has been received.

Case of Pioneer Charles Herbert Ries, No. 220140. Referred to in evidence, page 542.

This case was brought to the attention of the Committee by Dr. J. G. Evans of the Commission. His complaint was that Private Ries, on his first leave from the Elm-hurst Military Convalescent Hospital at Kingston, was unable to find any one to drive him from Maynooth Station to his home at Peever Settlement, Ont. He therefore was forced to walk this distance and presumably in consequence of the exposure he developed pneumonia, which caused his death on March 4.

Private Ries was returned to Canada on 5th February last, and was examined at Quebec by a medical board on the 7th February. He was found to be suffering from a loss of a portion of the skull following a fracture due to gunshot wound. Two months' observation in convalescent hospital was recommended and he was admitted to Elmhurst Military Convalescent Hospital at Kingston on the 11th February. He was examined by a medical officer who recommended that he be granted the usual two weeks' leave to proceed to his home. On investigation it was found that no blame could be attached to any person in connection with this case.

Case of Private Harold Hodgson, No. 18647. Referred to at page 908 of the evidence.

Private Hodgson claimed that the A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 13, refused to have him examined by a medical board. He stated, "I was told to go up different times and every time I would go up there they said they were too busy, and it is still the same way yet."

Private Hodgson was returned to Canada on December 1, 1915. His disability was caused by a bullet wound in the left foot, and he was also suffering from gas poisoning. It was stated that he looked well, but became short of breath on exertion. Nothing abnormal in lungs or heart could be found. The incapacity was considered to be one-quarter for three months.

He was again examined by a medical board at Calgary on August 3, 1916. This board found that there was no disability due to the injury of the foot, but considered the earning capacity to be reduced one-half as the result of gas poisoning. In view of previous boards which had been held on the case, it was considered that Private Hodgson was entitled only to a pension of $8 for one year from September 27, 1916, he having been discharged on the previous day.

In November the A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 13, wrote to headquarters stating that in his opinion the board underestimated the amount of disability, and he was, therefore, asked to have Private Hodgson re-examined. The General Officer Commanding communicated with Private Hodgson, but no reply was received. Again in March the Board of Pension Commissioners requested that he might be examined by a medical board. Further requests were made in April to have Private Hodgson re-examined. Finally the representative of the Board of Pension Commissioners in Calgary was asked to investigate the case. He took the matter up with the A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 13, who replied as follows:—

"The A.D.M.S. does not remember telling this man that the Medical Board was busy, and told Private Hodgson this at the last interview, nor has the A.D.M.S. ever told any returned man that the Medical Board was busy on any occasion, and that it would be impossible to have a medical examination.

"It is further advised that Private Hodgson was written to on April 3, 13 and the 25th, and that he reported on April 30, and stated that he had a letter from Ottawa dated December 7, 1916, H.Q. 649-H-1346, in which it was stated that his pension was granted from September 27, 1916, to September 27, 1917, and stated that he would not appear before a medical board until September, 1917. A letter was written to Ottawa on April 30, the date this man reported the above."

It is now understood that Private Hodgson makes no further complaint.

The CHAIRMAN: Major J. L. Todd, of the Pensions Board has forwarded the following letter and statement of complaints with reference to pensions which will form part of the record:—

Of the cases re-examined, in 4 increased disability was found and the pension adjusted; in 2 the previous findings were confirmed; in 1 no disability due to service was found; 2 are still under consideration.

Of the 2 cases where the Medical Board was assembled, in 1 a gratuity was awarded; in 1 no change was made.

Greatest number of letters received in one day (during December, 1916)—about.. . . .	2,600
Number of Files now daily handled in Central Registry —about	1,900
Number of Cables and Telegrams handled August, 1916..	712
Number of Cables and Telegrams handled in December, 1916 (Prior records for Cables not available.)	1,387
Number of Employees, 1st January, 1916	240
Number of Employees, 31st December, 1916.. . . .	504
Number of Employees engaged during the year 1916.. . . .	442

The above statistics are compiled from the facts as from 31st December, 1916. With a view of showing the expansion of the branch, I give below a short comparison with the figures as at 30th April, 1917.

Assigned Pay Accounts in force 31st December, 1916 .. .	148,049
Assigned Pay Accounts in force 30th April, 1917, approx- imately.. . . .	170,000
Increase for four months, ending 30th April, 1917, approx- imately	22,000

If the number of accounts should continue to increase at the same ratio up to the end of the year 1917, it will mean that some 2,205,588 cheques will have to be issued on account of Assigned Pay for the year 1917.

Separation Allowance accounts in force, 31st December, 1916	83,469
Separation Allowance accounts in force 30th April, 1917, approximately	90,000
Increase for four months, ending 30th April, 1917, approx- imately	7,000

If the number of accounts should continue to increase at the same ratio up to the end of the year, 1917, it will mean that some 1,132,500 cheques will have to be issued on account of Assigned Pay for the year, 1917.

This will mean a grand total of 3,338,088 cheques on account of Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay will have to be written during the present year to say nothing of Special Remittance cheques, of which there are quite a number, and adjustment cheques due to promotions, etc.

The average number of letters handled per day, in December, 1916, was 900 to 1,000. This has increased as at the 30th April, 1917, to approximately 1,600 to 1,800. The greatest number of letters in one day was 2,053. Should the correspondence increase at the same ratio, during the remainder of this year, it will mean that in December, 1917, the daily correspondence dispatched will be between 3,000 or 4,000 letters.

The number of correspondence files handled daily in the Central Registry at the end of 1916 was 1,900. This has increased as at 30th April, 1917, to approximately 2,400. Anywhere from 300 to 600 new files are created each day and it is impossible to foretell the amount of files which will be handled daily at the end of 1917, but there is not the slightest doubt that it will be at least double or treble the volume at present handled.

The mechanical equipment of the branch is all of the most up-to-date description and is as follows:—

35 Typewriters.

These typewriters are continually in use from 9.15 a.m. to 5 p.m., and in addition the great majority of them are used on a second shift from 5.00 p.m. to 11.30 p.m.

6 Adding Machines.

46 Cheque writing machines. These machines are worked two shifts daily.

8 Scriptographs.

2 Mimeographs, 1 electrically driven and one driven by hand. These two machines are now running night and day and we have at present some 850,000 forms to be printed by them. This is made up of 48 different kinds of forms which are continually in use by this branch.

The number of employees as at the 31st December, 1916, was 504. This total has increased to date, by 134, made up as follows:—

8 officers.

3 warrant officers.

1 S.Q.M.S.

1 Sergeant.

Civilian Staff:—

494 Males.

131 Females.

Total 638.

Woman returned to Canada—apparently did not notify the Chief Paymaster, London, was returning. Ledger sheets not received back from England until May 9, 1917. Cheque, $200, adjusting separation allowance to end of May, forwarded May 15.

Assigned pay stopped by Chief Paymaster from December 1, 1916, to February 1, 1917, owing to debit balance. Authority to re-open from February 1, only received here May 9, 1917.

2. No. 1099544, Pte. John J. Morris, 256th Battalion, C.E.F.—

5. No. 273481, Pte. G. G. Abbott, 216th Battalion—

Letter from Mr. W. F. Cockshutt, M.P., asking why assigned pay of this soldier had not been received of late. Soldier assigned $20 per month, effective from April 1. Previous assignment paid by Regimental Paymaster. Nominal Roll of 216th Battalion issued too late to issue cheque in April—therefore, April and May payments made together. Mr. Cockshutt advised.

6. No. 874496, Pte. Albert J. Henderson, 184th Battalion—

Letter from Mr. H. McConnell, Barrister, complaining this soldier's wife only in receipt of separation allowance at private's rate, whereas he insisted he was a sergeant. 42. General—

Various complaints are being received from dependents of soldiers to the effect that they have not received separation allowance for some particular month. This is due evidently to the fact that they have changed their address without forwarding me any notification and the cheques are lying at their old post office perhaps, awaiting investigation. The postmaster has to be communicated with and cheques returned here or forwarded to their new address.

The delay of course is not the fault of this branch.

Mr. T. B. Kidner, representing Vocational Training of Returned Soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN: Gentlemen, I will call the meeting to order and prepare for the business of this morning, and, inasmuch as everybody is very busy here, we will dispense with the minutes and the communications, and deal with those at a later date. I see the agenda has something on it about an address to the delegates by the Chairman. I will content myself by saying that we are very pleased to have you gentlemen here this morning and shall expect you to do all the talking. We would like to hear the resolutions that you are prepared to present, and whatever you have to say in support of these resolutions, and if you desire to meet the Returned Soldiers' Committee again either on Wednesday or Thursday morning, to go more fully into details in regard to specific cases, we shall be glad to give you a hearing.

Major W. J. PURNEY, President Returned Soldiers Association of Halifax: I was given to understand yesterday that our programme this morning would be somewhat as follows: That I would be called on to give a general declaration as to our aims and objects in an endeavour to justify our existence as an association, and afterwards we would present certain resolutions which we had adopted after coming together here, and which were proper matters to be dealt with by your committee.

Am I correct in that?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes. That is quite agreeable to us. You are the President of the duly organized Great War Veterans Association for the Dominion of Canada.

Major PURNEY: Yes. This will be our first opportunity for giving public expression to our aims and objects and for what we stand.

The CHAIRMAN: I may say the proceedings of this meeting are being reported stenographically, so that everything that is said will be printed in our record and used for subsequent reference.

Major PURNEY: While I well knew when I came to Ottawa yesterday that I would have the pleasure of appearing before the Parliamentary Committee appointed to deal with the problem connected with returned soldiers, I had no idea that it would be in this way. I thought it was merely a matter of the taking of evidence. However, I cannot refrain from expressing my satisfaction that we are given the opportunity of setting forth our aims and objects, and endeavouring in that way to justify our existence, and perhaps touching on matters which may not strictly concern you as a committee. As many of you know, ever since men commenced to return from this war, small associations have been formed in various sections of the country, and these associations have been rapidly increasing until, at the beginning of the present year, in most of the provinces of the Dominion there were many local associations formed, some of which carried a large membership going well up into the hundreds in many cases. In April last we conceived the idea of organizing for the whole Dominion, and on the 10th April and following days of that month, delegates from a number of the associations in all the provinces met at Winnipeg for this purpose. At that convention the Great War Veterans Association of Canada was organized, and it is the executive of that association which has been called here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN: Are you all present?

Major PURNEY: We are all present.

The CHAIRMAN: I think it would be well to put on the record the names of your officers and executive and the places where you live. You can hand it in and it will be placed on the record.

Major PURNEY: We represent to-day a membership in the neighbourhood of 10,000 in number, and the membership is rapidly increasing. As to our aims and objects, we have defined them in rather general language. I want to be as brief as possible in my remarks. Our aims and objects are about as follows:—

To perpetuate the close and kindly ties of mutual service in the great war, the recollections and associations of that experience, and to maintain proper standards of dignity and honour between all the returned soldiers.

To preserve the memory and record of those who have suffered and died for the nation, to see to the erection of monuments to their valour, and the provision of suitable burial places and the establishment of a memorial day, to insure that proper provision is made for the due care of the sick, wounded and needy, among those who have served, including reasonable pension, employment for such as are capable, soldiers' home, medical care, and equitable provision for dependent families of enlisted men, to constantly inculcate loyalty to Canada and the Empire in unstinted terms in their interest.

[Major W. P. Purney.]

Now, sir, I think it must be admitted that our objects and our intentions as indicated by those objects, are most worthy ones, and deserving of the most sympathetic support of the Government of this country. It has been thought possibly that we might have left some of these things to others. And, now right at this point, that we may not be misunderstood I want you to understand that we are not proposing to remove any responsibility to our own shoulders that is now being borne by those who should properly bear it. Rather, sir, it is our object in such cases to see that the responsibility is recognized by those who have it, and that they properly and efficiently discharge their responsibility. In that way, we feel that we shall indirectly, but very effectively, I trust, attain some of our objects; and we should not overlook, or permit to be overlooked, any of those matters which concern the returned soldier. We surely are one of the most interested parties, and although we have full faith, and are not unwilling to put our trust, in the big-hearted public of this country, yet we know, and you all know, that it has been the history of all wars among all peoples, and in this busy modern life of the great commercial world it is likely to be even more the case that the men who in the day of great trial were ready to give, and did give, their time, their health, their careers, who abandoned willingly their natural opportunities in life, and were ready even to make the supreme sacrifice, that these men who, while they were in the performance of their great duties were the idols of their countrymen, eventually ceased to become the objects of interest they formerly were. Human nature ever was and ever will be the same. Life is too strenuous in these days for that interest to continue a permanent one in the minds of the public. Now, sir, do not take from my statement that we do not feel that this country has not already made, or will not make, provision for her disabled soldiers. We realize that much has been done, and that much will be done, and done willingly; but we think it is our duty to safeguard for the future—for that future when the idol and object of almost tender interest of to-day may become an object of practical indifference. We are the comrades and the brothers of those who in dying for King and Country, have left to the care of their country, and more especially to their comrades, their own loved ones, the memory of whom was the last conscious thought of many a hero as he lay dying in the muddy trench. Here I say that we shall be true to our sacred trust and those bereft ones shall be to us our own fathers, our own mothers, our own sisters and our own little brothers.

It is not always the pension law, it is not always the public fund, which will meet the case, but it will be our aim to play the part of the comrade true and tried and our living, though maimed, brothers and the loved ones of our departed brothers from the East to the West shall ever feel secure under the sheltering wing of our more than Masonic Order.

As a conclusion to this portion of my remarks, may I ask: "Can the patriot,—can the man who loves his country,—can the man who desires to be a worthy citizen of this great country, made great by the blood and suffering of its young manhood,—can he justify his existence as a citizen of Canada if he fails to co-operate heart and soul in our great work."

I will not answer the question, for that answer is written indelibly in your hearts, and you can see your duty plainly. I feel sure that you will do it.

We feel too that by our efforts to preserve the memory and records of those who have died for Canada we shall be doing much to keep alive that proud spirit which is so essential to the life of any nation; that spirit which the Huns thought had so deteriorated in the British people, but which, thank Heaven, only slumbered and was there ready to manifest itself in our race in greater brilliancy than ever; that spirit which exists in the heart of every true Canadian and which will again have to be reckoned with should our freedom ever be threatened in future, which, pray God, it may not, and which will demonstrate to future generations how willingly the sons of Canada went forth and endured great sacrifices.

[Major W. P. Purney.]

I want you to understand—and I feel that possibly we may have been misunderstood in some quarters in this respect—that our aims are worthy ones, and we trust that we shall not so conduct ourselves that the public of this country may think that we are unreasonable. We feel that our objects are worthy ones and we wish to keep our demands within the bounds of reason, realizing that there is a tendency in some quarters possibly to go beyond that stage. I wish to assure you that the great body of the War Veterans of this country only ask that they be given reasonable consideration, and having in mind that feeling we wish to present only what we consider are reasonable requests.

There are many things which we would like to bring to your attention if time would permit, but we shall content ourselves with bringing before you such matters as we consider of pressing importance.

In passing, will you permit me to say that we deem it advisable that our attitude in the matter of conscription should be known—not that it concerns this committee at all, but as it is now a matter of national importance, and one in which the returned soldier, speaking for his comrade in the trenches, is vitally interested, perhaps you will permit us to take this opportunity of placing our view on record.

While we have very broad and far-reaching views on this question, and while we may connect the conscription of manhood for fighting purposes with the conscription of the other resources of our country, yet I want it to be clearly understood that we stand, and stand clearly for selective conscription. The other phases of conscription which may be dealt with here this morning or elsewhere later, while they also may express our views and our hopes, yet we want it clearly understood that we are quite willing to sacrifice the consideration of them if they should have the effect of blocking or delaying the main scheme of simple selective conscription, for our comrade across the sea is calling and he must not call in vain.

A great question which must arise and must be dealt with is that of reorganization, which of course involves demobilization. The speaker who will follow me will give our views on this great question, and I assure you that we have given it very serious consideration, but no consideration of such a matter could be too careful or too serious.

The matter of pensions too, we wish to bring up in a general way, and while we may seem to lay great stress on this pension matter, yet I wish to assure you that it is only in the spirit of the guardians and protectors of our maimed comrades, or the representatives of the dependents of those who have fallen, that we deal with this question. It is our hope—it is our aim that we be more than careful to guard against the destruction or the weakening of the spirit of independence in our returned comrades, whom we wish to see take their places in the country as industrious, progressive and worthy citizens, but we have to bear in mind that all cannot do that, and for these we must see that proper provision is made. The present pension is inadequate; but this question will be more fully dealt with later.

The land question is our other great question. There has always been a land scheme in connection with soldiers, but alas, few of them have ever been of any real benefit to the soldiers. But now I am convinced there is a disposition to deal with this question in an intelligent manner, and while the suggestions we offer in this matter are the result of the thought and consideration of experienced men, yet there may be others as good, and we will be found open to conviction. However, we would not care to see any land measure put through (unless it be one based on our own plans) without an opportunity of a thorough discussion of it.

And we come to possibly the most important question of all—that of the re-education of the partly disabled soldier. Let me tell you that I do not think you have yet grasped the meaning of that over here. Re-adaptation is not re-education. These men can be re-educated—so re-educated that they are not only as good as before, but better. Now, there is no system for giving that. There is only one in the world, and that is the French system. That, we would like to see put into effect in this country, and I tell you frankly, sir, we will be satisfied with nothing less. All European countries are adopting it and we feel now that you have only to look into it carefully to recommend it. Therefore, I say to you: "Go to it with our blessing." We have a great deal of information in our hands with reference to it which we shall be glad to hand over to you.

Now these matters to which I have referred are our principal ones, and are matters in which we strongly urge that action be taken at once. We have other matters which may be brought to your attention, and in respect to which we shall content ourselves with offering suggestions, with the hope that they may be favourably entertained and acted upon, but we wish and pray for prompt action in the larger matters of,—

Conscription—and I want to remind you in speaking of this that we represent our comrades beyond the seas;

Reorganization, when the men come home;

Of Pensions, of the important land scheme, and in the still more important matter of the re-education of the maimed men.

Gentlemen, I thank you very much for the manner in which you have listened to me, and I thank you for the opportunity given us to place our demands before you. We understand, of course, that this means recognition of our claims and our rights to be the spokesmen of the returned and unreturned soldiers. This association and the recognition of it, are things that were bound to come. They were as certain to be as the coming and going of the day and night, or of the seasons, and, gentlemen, I can only say that you have done it at the proper time, and we appreciate the fact that you are trying to do it in a fit and proper manner. Now one more word with respect to recognition: soon it will be necessary for you to appoint various committees and commissions to deal with the returned soldier, and with his problems, particularly that of his return to civilian life. Gentlemen, we ask you that wherever possible on such committees and on such commissions, you should recommend the appointment of a man recommended by and representing the Great War Veterans of Canada. You must realize that such a step would certainly bring about greater confidence in all such committees and commissions, and we feel sure that such representation will do much towards the more speedy settlement of the many vexing problems which will come up before the government of the country. Now, sir, I will detain you no longer. You have been very good, and I must reciprocate, and, probably I can do so in no better way than in bringing my remarks to a conclusion.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In the statement you have just made you have enumerated the aims and objects of your association. Your association has a Bill for incorporation before the Senate, and in that Bill I notice that the objects of the association, as stated there, go beyond those you have enumerated here to us this morning. There are twice as many objects enumerated in the Bill as you have stated to the committee. Is there any reason for not enumerating those objects, other than those you have referred to this morning?

Major PURNEY: Not at all; I only wanted to cover the ground as quickly as possible.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And the whole of the objects of your association are as stated in this Bill?

Major PURNEY: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Major Purney has kindly furnished me with a statement of the subjects which the association desire to cover this morning, together with the resolutions that they will present, and the names of the gentlemen who are to present them. While the members of the committee may desire to ask questions with regard to some of those matters, I think it would be better, in order to get the record as complete as possible, that these gentlemen should be allowed to make their presentation without interruption as far as practicable. Some of these questions upon which they desire to make representations, do not, rightly, belong to this committee and, as these gentlemen have an appointment at 12 o'clock with Sir Thomas White, the Finance Minister, who will deal with the matter of the Pensions Act, with Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia, and the Hon. Dr. Roche, Minister of the Interior, who are to give a special hearing to these gentlemen with reference to matters which specially pertain to their departments, I would suggest that those resolutions which particularly affect the Government, instead of this committee, such as the matter of pensions, compulsory legislation and the alien question, be left to the Government and also that whatever representations on those respective questions the delegates may desire to make should be repeated to the Government, and that we merely put on the record the resolutions which deal with those subjects, such as compulsory legislation, the alien question, etc.

Major PURNEY: If you will, Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, permit me to put on record our resolution respecting conscription, we shall be satisfied; in the matter of demobilization, we would like to be heard on that. With regard to pensions we will present our reasons in support of the recommendation, which I think you may fairly hear. The land question will be embodied in the resolution with a very few explanatory remarks, which we would like to have on record. On the matter of re-education we would like Major Anderson to be heard, he will be very brief. The matter of orphan children will be nothing more than a resolution and the transportation of men on furlough, will also be nothing more than a resolution; pay-department, that is simply a resolution and, I think the same as you, sir, that with regard to those subjects on the list with which your committee would have nothing to do, that it will be sufficient to put the resolution with reference to them on the record. That applies also to the land resolution, which will be a matter for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN: Sergeant-Major J. Robinson, D.C.M., Vancouver, B.C., First Vice-President, will present the resolution on compulsory legislation.

Sergeant-Major ROBINSON, D.C.M.: Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen:—

The Officers, Executive Committee Members, and Membership of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada, realizing the sacred claims upon us of our comrades in the trenches and knowing their urgent need for reinforcement;

And whereas those who have gone, and will go overseas, have sacrificed all personal hope and private interest, for the time being, giving up everything for the nation's life; declare ourselves in favour of any legislation, however extreme, which will meet conditions fully, and cause a more equitable distribution of duty and sacrifice amongst all citizens of Canada;

We urge the adoption of the following or similar measures:—

(1) That all departments of the Government service be searched and an effort be made to comb out all eligible single and married men without children, between the ages of 18 and 45, who are avoiding military service, and that they be immediately attested and put in training for overseas service, care being taken that the work of the department be not seriously disarranged in which event the places of the men so called in the department shall be filled as soon as possible by competent returned soldiers first and then by persons ineligible.

(2) That all officers, N.C.O.'s, and men now employed in guard and home service duty, who are fit for overseas service, and have received reasonable training, be immediately sent overseas in drafts to fill the gaps in the fighting forces; provision being made for men in the Canadian Defence Force who are physically fit to be discharged and brought under the new order.

[Sergt.-Major J. Robinson.]

(3) That wherever possible, in the industries of the country where men eligible for military service are employed and their places could be efficiently filled by returned soldiers, older men and men ineligible for military service, and women if need be, these men be taken to complement the overseas forces till victory is awarded the Allies and the need no longer exists. We feel that men in non-essential industries, and others who have no settled productive value in the scale of the country's effort should be the first impressed for military service.

(4) That all aliens, enemy or otherwise, resident in Canada, be also conscripted for any service which the Government deem fit to use them for in the best interests of the State.

(5) That all factories, public utilities, and general industries necessary to the immediate successful conclusion of the war be taken over and conducted by the Government. Such compensation to be made to the present owners as shall be just and equitable.

(6) That it shall require that all incomes and wealth, in excess of the holders' reasonable needs be placed at the disposal of the Government for the successful prosecution of the war, and to meet the immense financial drain on the country, equitable retribution to be made as soon after the end of the war as possible so that the principle may be carried out that one citizen shall not give more than another that all shall give their best for the preservation of the nation.

(7) That if any general system of compulsory service is put in force, the Government, which is the body corporate of the people of Canada make ample provision for those who may be disabled in the service and the dependents of those whose lives have been, or may be sacrificed in their country's cause, and that a definite and comprehensive understanding be given to this effect.

These several resolutions we recognize ourselves as being rather extreme, and some doubtless will criticise us because of our stand on this platform. None more than we desire to see the war won and our comrades back in their old places having ourselves been overseas and knowing a little of how things stand. No measure put into effect by the Government of the Dominion of Canada is too extreme if it will hasten the accomplishment of our purpose in the successful conclusion of the Great War. I would like, for one minute, to address the committee further. The Great War Veterans Association excludes all other things, and we place ourselves solely and totally for conscription first in the Dominion of Canada.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 3, Resolution of Department of Demobilization, Norman Knight, Secretary-Treasurer of the Great War Veterans Association.

Mr. NORMAN KNIGHT: This Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada, while recognizing the valuable and earnest efforts that have been expended, to great advantage, by the various bodies now operating in behalf of the Returned Soldiers and the settlement of their difficulties, cannot refrain from expressing their opinion that the present system does not effectively meet the situation: and respectfully request the Government of the Dominion of Canada that they pay heed to our complaint, and adopt other means for dealing with the returned soldier problem, such as we shall now present for consideration.

Let us first point out the desirability of having the work of demobilization carried out altogether along civilian lines, with a complete separation from military or semi-military ideas. The object is to take men who have done nothing for the greater part of two or three years except the preparation for, and actual carrying out of a soldier's life and remake them into peaceful, useful and productive citizens again. It required experts, in a military sense, to put these men in the field trained, disciplined and capable soldiers. It is going to take experts, men of broad knowledge and big hearts, who know Canada well, to accomplish this greatest project (with one exception perhaps—the winning of the war) before the people of Canada to-day. The responsibility for the proper settlement of the Returned Soldiers and dependents belongs to the whole people of Canada, which is embodied in the Government of the Dominion of Canada. Any system which, in part even, depends upon public charity, or private benevolence, is an improper system, since it delegates a public function to a private body. Canada must not evade its obligations and disregard the promise made to the man who left our shores to fight for us, by leaving anything undone which will make life more worth living to those who have incurred disability in service, or whose breadwinner has been taken away.

As conditions prevail in Canada to-day, we have a Pensions Board Commission, Military Hospitals Commission, Soldiers Aid Commission, or similar body, and various other institutions, all endeavouring, as we fain would believe, to do their utmost to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the various problems. We very readily affirm the conditions are very much better because of the work already accomplished by these agencies. It is not our aim to question the personnel of the various institutions. To those, however, who have had occasion to have dealings with them, the amount of overlapping is very apparent. It is almost impossible to ascertain where the responsibility rests in any matter requiring adjustment. One is sent first to one individual and then the other, and it is exceedingly difficult to obtain results. This necessitates delay and often works needless hardship upon returned men and dependents of deceased soldiers. Any system to be effective must be prompt. We appreciate the difficulties experienced by the present authorities in the handling of some cases in particular: and in order to facilitate arrangements and make possible a more satisfactory method of dealing with the various problems respecting returned men, and dependents of deceased soldiers, we beg to submit:

(1) That a Department be created which shall be entirely separated from any other Department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Demobilization, to which shall be referred all matters in connection with Returned or Discharged Soldiers and the dependents of deceased soldiers, to be conducted along strictly non-partisan and business lines, and to continue until the need no longer exists.

(2) That this Department shall be presided over by a Director of Demobilization, who shall be directly responsible for the conduct of his Department, and shall be given powers sufficiently broad to cover immediate disposition in any case which may be submitted to him. The man chosen as Director should be an advanced student of economics, especially applying to our own peculiar Christian problems, and a man absolutely independent of party, or any objectionable influences.

(3) That wherever possible, in carrying out of the work of the Department of Demobilization, whether in the central or branch office, in the Pensions, Hospitals, Medical, Relief, Employment, Land Settlement, Functional and Vocational Training and every other section returned soldiers be employed as clerks and secretaries, and when efficient and capable men can be secured from amongst them, as assistant Directors and superintendents.

(4) That branch offices be so located in central points as to be conveniently reached by claimants, who shall be provided with transportation when, in the opinion of the Local Superintendent, the case warrants close attention to the office, and cannot readily be adjusted in the usual way. These district offices to be charged with all matters pertaining to the well being of returned soldiers, and deceased soldiers dependents in their own locality, and directly responsible to the Central organization.

In the foregoing, we, members of the Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada, offer what we believe to be sensible and reasonable suggestions. We have not gone into extensive detail, because the time is not ripe for it. With complete organization, and a programme based upon expert scientific advice and sound economic principles, we have confidence in the fairmindedness and intelligence of the people of Canada. Too often what other countries have done in connection with this great problem is quoted. We see no reason why our own country, this fair Canada, should not take the lead, and by so doing point the world to a happier way of settling difficulties, broader and more generous, vindicating her absolute faith and perfect confidence in the man who counted it joy to serve in her hour of need, suffering, enduring and dying, when the hearts of loved ones, mothers, wives and children, breaking at home, preferred rather a nation's honour than the love of son, husband and father. We come to protest, gentlemen, not so much on our own account, but on behalf of those who cannot be here, against the wrongs of the present system. We are not finding fault with any persons, believing that the majority engaged in the work are earnest and sincere in their endeavour to meet the present situation. Because of a faulty system, even present needs are not filled, and some are in want and evil circumstances who should not be. What of the day when the returning thousands shall demand attention? Surely we are not bound to the old system when another promises to better fill the need.

The CHAIRMAN: The next item on the programme is recommendations regarding pensions, by Captain Kenneth Macpherson.

Capt. KENNETH C. MACPHERSON: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the question of pensions is probably the most difficult one with which we have to deal. We have, however, gone into it pretty thoroughly, and we have a number of recommendations which we think will benefit the returned men and their dependents; things which have been omitted in the past and which, if considered and brought into force would help to relieve the situation considerably. Our memorandum is as follows:

RECOMMENDATIONS RE PENSIONS.

The Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans Associations of Canada respectfully submit the following suggestions:—

(1) That in order that none may benefit more than another, but that all service may be alike recognized, we recommend an equalized scale of pensions for all ranks of the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

(2) That the total disability pension be increased from $480 per annum to $840 per annum.

In connection with the foregoing recommendation we have arrived at the figure of $840 per annum by taking figures from the Labour Gazette of April, 1917, having to do with the cost per week of a family budget of staple foods, fuel, lighting and rent.

The CHAIRMAN: That statement will be printed in the record.

Capt. MACPHERSON: (Reads.)

(3) That the pension paid to a widow and a widowed mother of a deceased soldier, who have no children under 18 depending upon them, be 80 per cent of the total disability pension, but, if having dependents, it shall be the maximum amount.

(4) That the allowance for children be increased from $6.00 per month to $12.00 per month.

(5) That the allowance for motherless children be increased from $12.00 per month to $20.00 per month.

(6) That the pensions paid to the children of deceased soldiers be continued until the age of eighteen be reached.

[Capt. K. C. Macpherson.]

(7) That when a widow remarries, and thus foregoes further pension for herself, her children by her soldier husband shall be entitled to receive the rate in force for motherless children.

(8) That careful consideration be given to the request by and on behalf of the widows and dependents of British and other reservists of our Allies for supplementary grants, to place these widows and dependents on a par with the dependents of members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, providing they were resident in Canada prior to the outbreak of the War.

(9) That in the event of a discharged soldier dying directly or indirectly from wounds or disease contracted while on active service and through no fault of his own, a pension shall be granted to the dependent or dependents of such man of an amount equal to that which would have been awarded to such dependent or dependents had the man died before receiving his discharge.

(10) That in the event of the discharged soldier suffering increased disability through having undertaken some employment, or through no fault of his own, the Pension Board shall have power to increase the man's pension in proportion to the increased disability.

(11) That in the event of a man becoming insane, and it becomes necessary to send him to an institution, the dependent or dependents shall be entitled to the full disability pension, and the Government shall bear the cost of the man in the institution.

(12) That a pension once awarded, after a man's disability has reached its final condition, shall not be changed to a man's disadvantage. (This is taken from the British Pension scheme.)

(13) That very severe facial disfigurement be included under the heading of total disablement. (British Pension scheme.)

(14) That gratuities be abolished, and that the ratio of disability be expressed by units of five per cent, and not in units of twenty per cent as under the present scale.

(15) That a clear, simple and comprehensive statement of the principles governing the Pension Act, and of all the opportunities afforded for full consideration of grievances, be compiled in pamphlet form, together with a copy of the Pensions Act, and given to every soldier upon his discharge.

(16) That when the first pension cheque is mailed to a beneficiary (other than the man himself), it be accompanied by one of the aforementioned pamphlets.

(17) That whenever an application for pension is refused, a letter containing a full explanation be sent to the applicant.

(18) That the degree of pension recommended by a local pension board be not decreased by the Board of Pension Commissioners without first seeing the man in question themselves.

(19) That provision be made for a dissatisfied pension claimant to appear in person before the Board of Pension Commissioners.

(20) That, in special cases, not covered by the Pensions Act, the Board of Pension Commissioners be empowered to make such provision as they shall deem advisable.

(21) That, wherever possible, returned doctors be employed on Medical Boards.

(22) We would further respectfully urge on the Government their consideration of supplementing the pensions awarded soldiers of the Imperial Government, who were reservists of the forces of Great Britain, resident in Canada at the outbreak of the war, by such an award as will put them on a parity with the soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, providing they again settle in Canada.

Some of these recommendations, Sir, have been taken from the British pension scheme.

[Capt. K. C. Macpherson.]

The CHAIRMAN: Have you seen the new pension warrant which has just come over from England?

Captain MACPHERSON: I have not. We adopted these from articles regarding the new British pension system that we had seen in the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN: I will let you have a copy of it.

Captain MACPHERSON: I might point out with regard to raising the age of children from sixteen to eighteen, as recommended in resolution No. 6, that we consider it advisable in order to give a child a better opportunity for proper education. Another question was the allowance of motherless children, to increase it from $12 to $20 per month: that is to be taken up later by one of the other members of the executive. It involves the question of putting children of deceased soldiers who have no mothers in the homes of other returned soldiers instead of putting them in institutions. If proper provision is made, so they can be kept properly, a great many can be taken in. All these figures, sir, that we have quoted with regard to pensions have been taken up and arrived at from the Labour Gazette, and from another point of view in connection with the cost of army rations. I think the reasons for these recommendations are explained in the statements which support them.

The CHAIRMAN: The statements can be filed.

Cost of Living in Ottawa for a Man, his Wife and Three Children.

The cost of rations for a soldier for one month of thirty days, as per attached army scale, at retail prices in March, is $18.58.
It is obvious that a man's family would not require the same amount of food as a soldier on duty. It might be considered fair, however, to allow three-quarters of a ration for the man, three-quarters for the wife, and half for each child. This would mean three full rations for a family of five, $18.58
× 3, $55.74 per month, or in one year would amount to	$ 668 88
Rent of a six-roomed house, with sanitary conveniences at $24 per month (Labour Gazette)	288 00
Allowing one ton of coal per month at $9	108 00
Allowance for light as allowed for the permanent force (private) by Day and Allowance Regulations	16 00
Allowance for clothing to a private in the permanent force is $47 per annum. Three allowances might be considered sufficient for the family, as in the case of rations	141 00
Allowance for medical attendance to a private in the permanent force is $15 per annum, three times this might be considered fair for the family	45 00
Total cost per annum	$1,266 88

This amount does not include any allowance for car fares, insurance, or laundry.

SUGGESTED SCALE OF PENSIONS OF ALL RANKS.

[illegible]

Mr. SHANAHAN: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, very little remains for me to say in connection with the recommendations we have seen fit to make in connection with the pensions matter, unless that it would be proper for me to give some reason which prompted us to make those recommendations to the committee by way of information. I have no hesitation, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in saying that these recommendations are very very necessary indeed. I will just confine myself to commenting on one part of the recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not wish to interrupt you, but I might say you will have an opportunity at 12 o'clock of laying before the Minister of Finance, who is more especially charged with the matter of pensions, any further details you care to give, but at the present time we will be glad to have anything you may care to say for the purposes of our record.

Mr. SHANAHAN: I will just give an example in connection with Recommendation No. 12. That recommendation reads:

That a pension once awarded, after a man's disability has reached its final condition, shall not be changed to a man's disadvantage."

[Mr. J. J. Shanahan.]

This clause was taken from the British Pension Scheme, which was introduced in the House of Commons, I think, by Mr. Barnes, the Minister who deals with that matter for the British Government. It would seem, almost that such a recommendation is unnecessary, but, in reality it has worked out very very clearly in this country that it is very necessary indeed. The provisions of the first pension scheme adopted divided a man's disability into quarters, a man was either totally disabled, three-fourths disabled, 50 per cent disabled, or one-fourth disabled, and for anything underneath one-fourth he was given a gratuity. What was styled "An increased Pension Scale" was afterwards introduced which divided a man's disability into five grades, and this had the result of working out, in the majority of cases, to actually give the man who was suffering from disability an "Irishman's Rise". For example a man of the rank of private who was possibly receiving for his disability under the first award a pension of $11 per month would receive under the new award the increased rate of $8 per month; he goes from $11 to $8 per month and the man who was 50 per cent disabled goes from 50 per cent to two-fifths, and so on. It is to prevent an "increase" in the pension rate along these lines that we think it is very necessary indeed to introduce a clause of that kind in our recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN: The next subject on the agenda paper is the Land question, the resolution upon which will be read by Captain I. Finn of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, followed by Mr. W. Irwin, Edmonton, Alberta.

Captain FINN: Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, this is a very important question. We do not profess in the resolution to have covered the ground, knowing fairly well that in matters of settlement a great deal of technical and expert knowledge is required.

The CHAIRMAN: I might say, by way of explanation, that the Minister of the Interior, in whose Department the administration of any land scheme will fall, is anxious for you gentlemen to have the opportunity of speaking at length upon this question. You meet him at twelve o'clock, and subsequently if you desire to have any further conference upon the subject, he will be glad to furnish you further opportunities for discussing the matter with him.

Captain FINN: Then I will just read the resolutions (reads):

Whereas the Great War has caused unusual circumstances in the economic condition of the Dominion of Canada, more especially in the agricultural districts, and whereas it is desirable that Returned Soldiers should be induced to become independent, and self-supporting citizens in the Dominion of Canada, and whereas it is the desire of the Dominion Government to make a satisfactory Land Settlement for Returned Soldiers, and their dependents, and whereas the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada, through their Executive Committee, are desirous of co-operating in any scheme that may be found acceptable for such Land Settlement, we beg to submit the following suggestions:—

(1) In our opinion the work of Land Settlement being of National Importance, should be carried out by the Dominion Government.

(2) Two schemes of Land Settlement suggest themselves namely community settlement, and settlement on an individual plan. In the community scheme, we suggest that certain lands shall be obtained, and surveyed out on an approved community plan, no farm to consist of more than 160 acres, special provision to be made for community or common range, and a sum of not less than $2,500 be lent to each settler, interest not to exceed 5 per cent, term of loan twenty years, cash advance to be expended under supervision of experts in the best interest of settler. The advantage derived from above scheme enables settlers,

(1) to co-operate intelligently if so desirous,

[Capt. Finn.]

(2) Secure a certain amount of comfort not otherwise to be obtained under existing circumstances.

(3) Be more adaptable for those who have been living in congested areas.

(4) Assure education for rising generations on more comprehensive scale than is at present possible.

The Community scheme embracing 160 acres would be suitable for those provinces having control of their own Domain. It would be made attractive by being located on vacant Indian Reserves, and unallotted Railway Lands, within easy distance of railroad transportation.

The Individual Settlement:

Land granted to consist of 320 acres, financial aid not less than $2,500, interest 5 per cent, terms of repayment twenty years, loan to be for not less than five years, title to remain with the Government until loan repaid. Individuals having made use of their homestead rights shall under this scheme be entitled to not more than 160 acres land grant. The Individual Settlement scheme would be suitable for certain portions of the Western provinces, where the Dominion Government control the public Domain.

Participants in either scheme to be restricted to members, or their dependents, of the Canadian Expeditionary Force of the Forces of Great Britain, who have served during the Great War. We are aware that the question of land settlement is a matter of great weight requiring ample expert assistance, and we desire to offer the Dominion Government merely a sketch plan of what we believe would be acceptable, and of interest to Returned Soldiers, and a benefit to the Dominion of Canada as a whole. One important object we have in view is to make any settlement plan of benefit to the Dominion of Canada by introducing settlers of British citizenship.

That the Dominion Government supplement any arrangements made by the provincial governments in connection with their own lands, where it will facilitate settlement.

Mr. W. IRWIN, Edmonton, Alberta: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen:—The land question, as shown to you by the resolution, is a series of suggestions. We do not come to dictate, or to lay before you any set plan of organization along the land settlement scheme, though, if it is the wish of the Government we are prepared to do so. I take it that we shall be called upon for such suggestions as the Department of the Interior may ask for, in order that we may give our best aid in the solving of this very important matter, important to the soldier, important to the Dominion of Canada. We have, in the West, the land for the creation of a Dominion such as the world has never seen; we have the land, we have the climate, and we have the nucleus to start this settlement scheme. We have been assured that we can receive nearly seven million acres of land within ten miles of the railroad in the three western provinces. I mention that just to give you an idea of the extent of the country and the possibility of settlement there—I do not think that because we invite our British brothers and fighting comrades to join us, we are in a way limiting the opportunities of the native Canadian—we are at the same time extending an invitation to our Eastern Canadians to come West and grow up with us.

The CHAIRMAN: There are three representatives of the Department of the Interior here, who will be glad to meet the representatives of the Great War Veterans Association who have this matter of land settlement in hand, and I would suggest that Captain Finn and Mr. Irwin meet Mr. Blake Robinson, of the Interior Department, and have a conversation with him and his colleagues in the Land Branch of that Department.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Irwin, you are from Alberta, and I suppose you know the land situation there fairly well. You know that in the three western provinces there are only left seven million acres of land belonging to the Crown, within ten miles of the railway, and those are the culls. I suppose you know that, you know the situation out there.

Mr. IRWIN: Yes, I know the land situation there; I know that a good deal of it is cull land.

Mr. BENNETT: With the exception, of course, of the school sections which are good land.

Mr. IRWIN: Some of them are.

Mr. BENNETT: What do you propose in relation to that situation?

Mr. IRWIN: It is supposed that the soldier settler will have the same rights as a citizen to go anywhere he wants to. If he wants to go on a "cull" within ten miles of the railroad station—I have lived thirty-two years in the country and am familiar with the conditions, and I can take a half-section close to a station which may be, part of it, so bad that it has not been thought worth taking up, but there may be enough good land on it to suit the soldier's purpose, and to offset the advantages which a good half section would offer him if it were ten miles farther to the north. The better land would be farther away from the railway, and the poorer would be nearer the railroad, but the settlers should be the judge of that. I would let him settle a hundred miles north of the railroad if he wanted to.

Mr. BENNETT: Regardless of the facilities for transportation.

Mr. IRWIN: Yes, for the simple reason that we are legislating for the man who is expected to make good, and he is the best judge of the conditions under which he can make good.

The CHAIRMAN: We will ask Mr. J. R. Anderson, Montreal, to speak on functional training.

Major ANDERSON: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen:—This Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada cannot lay too much stress in connection with the need of those returned men who are unfitted to continue in their former occupations. It is not enough to secure a comfortable livelihood to returned men. They must also be encouraged to have self-respect and self-confidence. They must not only receive pensions covering disabilities incurred, but they must be taught when possible to be self-supporting.

Realizing that Canada never had a system of re-education for the maimed, and on the contrary, knowing that France has had a system for many years, which system has been adopted to-day and is in full operation in Russia, Italy, England, Belgium and France (also Austria and Germany) to save time we would advise that Canada adopt the same system; obtaining from France such instruments and instructors as would be needed for the installation of the system in this country. The system spoken of is known as the Amar system.

We beg to call your attention to the following facts and details:—

(1) Early in the spring of 1916, representatives from Italy and Russia visited Paris to study the Amar system, and on their return established centres of re-education under this system at Milan, Naples and Rome, in Italy, and in twenty centres in Russia.

(2) Later Colonel Mignault, officer commanding Canadian hospitals in Paris, after one year's study of the system, made a comprehensive report, urging its adoption in Canada.

(3) Major Todd, Canadian Army Medical Corps, followed this report with a similar one, arriving at the same conclusion.

(4) We have also in our possession the report made to the Right Honourable D. Lloyd George, M.P., by Sir Henry Norman in which he urges that it is imperative tive that the British Government adopt this system. This system has since been adopted in England and has been installed in the Canadian Hospital at Ramsgate.
[Major J. R. Anderson.]

After due consideration of these facts and further the fact that all the warring nations of Europe have adopted this system, and having studied the three previous mentioned reports, we would recommend that the authorities of the Government take immediate steps to have this system installed in all the centres of the country.

The CHAIRMAN: Have you anything to add to Major Anderson's remarks, Col. Mignault?

Col. ARTHUR MIGNAULT: I saw a great deal of re-education in France during the two years I was there. I was surprised to find that in Paris the re-education of disabled men has been practised for a great many years. Paris was very careful of its labouring men, as it is careful of everything else. It established a school of re-education, following the principles of the Amar system. When the war broke out, and the wounded men began to flock in, Paris and the rest of France were ready to take them and re-educate them. The other countries of Europe, learning of what France was doing, sent delegates to study the system, and established the same system in the different countries. To my own knowledge the Amar system of re-education was established at Milan, Naples and Rome. I knew the gentleman who came to Paris to study the Amar system, and who returned to Italy with the instruments and established it there. Officers from Russia did the same thing; and the Amar system, as Major Anderson said, was adopted in twenty centres in Russia. Very shortly after beginning to look into the system, I was visited by General Jones, who was then in command of the Canadian Medical Services. I showed General Jones what was being done in France with the Amar system. Under his direction, I bought a set of instruments and sent them to England, and this system is now in operation at the Canadian Hospital at Ramsgate. The English Red Cross have adopted it in their hospitals in London. When I was in France I visited Dr. Amar as often as I could, I used to see him every week or twice a week. Dr. Amar received a great many letters from Germany, and to my knowledge different German hospitals introduced the Amar system under the contention that it was to be used for maimed French soldiers. When I left Paris at the end of last December, every country in Europe had adopted the French system of functional re-education. I have learned lately, though I am not positive about it, that the United States has also adopted it, and it is now in use at Providence, R.I. It is on the principle that the system is now universal, that I would suggest that the Great War Veterans Association should urge that it be adopted in Canada. The apparatus required for this system is very cheap. A complete set of instruments which would be enough to take care of between fifty and one hundred soldiers a day, used to cost only $1,000 and Canada could be equipped fully at the expense of a few thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN: For our benefit, Col. Mignault, would you be willing to prepare a very brief statement of what the Amar system is, so that it may appear in our record?

Col. MIGNAULT: Unhappily, Sir Herbert, my report—I suppose it is because I am a physician, and I might say the same thing of Major Todd's report—is technical. I would advise you to see Sir Henry Norman's report. He is a business man, and I believe you will understand his report a great deal better than you will understand mine, because he is, like yourself, a member of Parliament, who has been investigating the same questions that you have been looking into since the beginning of the war. I believe that Sir Henry Norman's report is very good, though I will give you a short statement, if you desire.

[Col. A. Mignault.]

The CHAIRMAN: I have read Sir Henry Norman's report. His report covers his whole investigation of the French system, covering eight or ten months spent in France. There is a section dealing with the Amar system. We also have Major Todd's report on the same subject.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): Was the Amar apparatus introduced at Ramsgate Hospital?

Col. MIGNAULT: It was sent to Ramsgate by me. Very unhappily, it was not put into use at Ramsgate immediately, because the man who was to take charge of it died. I sent it on the first of August. I do not remember the name of the officer in charge of functional re-education at Ramsgate, but he died, and there was no one at that time familiar with the system.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): Then it was not really put into use at Ramsgate?

Col. MIGNAULT: I do not know. The man died while the instruments were on the way over.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): You do not know what became of them?

Col. MIGNAULT: When they were received at Ramsgate, not knowing what they were, the instruments were sent to cold storage. When I got back here, one day in January, I sent a telegram to Ramsgate and asked them how they were getting along with the instruments. They sent me a long letter, saying that, not knowing what they were, the instruments had been sent to Southampton, which is the storage headquarters. So I got into communication with one of the gentlemen of the Militia Department and a telegram was sent back to London, and the instruments are now at Ramsgate and are being used at the Canadian Hospital, and they are also in use at the Red Cross Hospital in London.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex): Are those the only two hospitals in Great Britain where they are being used?

Col. MIGNAULT: I am talking to you about last fall. Since then, I have been in this country. I cannot say how extensively they are used now.

The CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Col. Mignault. Sergt. A. C. Hay, of Winnipeg, will speak now about orphan children.

Sergt. A. C. HAY: As old returned soldiers, we are very sympathetic, and more so when it comes to the children. We think we should show our chivalry in regard to the children of our deceased comrades, to many of whom, when dying, we have given a promise that we should do all in our power to look after their children. We offer the following resolution:

In as much as it has come to our knowledge that in some cases children of soldiers who have lost both father and mother are being placed in public institutions throughout Canada, and believing that it would be best for these unfortunate children to be mothered and cared for in the homes of good people, without wishing in any way to reflect upon any persons or societies engaged in the work of ministering to children, we the Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada respectfully resolve:

That the Government of the Dominion of Canada whose wards they are, increase the amount of pension at present paid children's claims to a reasonable allowance, and that an effort be made in the case of every orphaned child to find a suitable home, preferably with a soldier's widow, with children of her own.

That the Government preserve the records of the father's sacrifice for the child's benefit, and in no case permit the child to lose the father's name.

I thank you, gentlemen.

[Sergt. A. C. Hay.]

The CHAIRMAN: You have, I think, a further resolution regarding the transportation of men on furlough?

Sergt. HAY: The following resolution was brought into effect owing to the fact that several men who joined the first Canadian contingent, and who have been overseas for a long while, within the last two or three months returned to Canada on furlough. In one case one soldier had four children and another five children, and both had to pay their own fare to come to Canada and their own fare to go back. I do not think any man should have to pay his fare to go back and make the supreme sacrifice. Our resolution is as follows:

This Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada, are of the opinion that it is very unfair for men who have served a long time in the trenches to be expected to pay their own transportation expenses when returning to Canada on furlough, we respectfully submit that whenever deemed expedient by the military authorities men who have served over one year at the front, and have families dependent upon them, be permitted to return to their loved ones on furlough for three months, the Government paying the expenses in connection with the trip.

A sergeant and a sergeant-major of the Canadian Engineers visited me in Winnipeg. These men were left practically destitute through having to pay their own fare. They came home without a cent to give to their family; they wanted to bring little presents for their children, but they could not do so; they wanted to become members of our association, but they did not have the wherewithal to do it. Of course, the boys saw to that, and we gave them membership all right. The point I want to bring out is that we think that, if a man went to the front in August, 1914, and has remained in the trenches there fighting, and has been lucky enough to get through alive, it is very hard to think that he should have to pay his fare in order to get home, and not have five cents in his pocket when he arrives or a present for his little children. I think that is a thing that should be taken up. If the Government knew the facts, and if the case was properly put before them, I do not think they would allow such a state of affairs to continue.

Mr. BENNETT: I had a case such as you mention. I am advised that questions of that kind are entirely in the hands of the Commander in Chief, and leave is not obtainable, because he cannot afford to spare the men. Do you know anything about that?

Sergt. HAY: As regards leave, when a man has been out since August, 1914, his rank counts for coming home. An officer comes first, then N.C.O.'s and so on down the ranks. Headquarters are really the people who are responsible for that.

Mr. BENNETT: Military Headquarters?

Sergt. HAY: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what they told me.

The CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Sergt. Hay. Now, we shall hear suggestions with respect to the pay department from Mr. Tippet of New Brunswick.

Mr. S. C. TIPPETT: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I submit the following resolution. (Reads)

While this committee recognizes the magnitude of the task undertaken by the various branches of the Paymaster-general's Department, and hesitate to bring this complaint, yet we have a responsibility to those who are unable to be here on their own behalf.

[Mr. C. S. Tippet.]

We respectfully submit:

That arrangements be perfected for expediting the work of the several branches, so that the long delays experienced now may be eliminated, and a more satisfactory method of adjusting soldiers', and their dependents' pay accounts be evolved.

The CHAIRMAN: The resolution regarding the "Last Post Fund" will be submitted by Sergt.-Major Stafford of British Columbia.

Sergt.-Major H. E. STAFFORD: (Reads)

Resolution re "Last-Post" Fund.

The indifference with which people of all times have accepted the services of those who fought for their liberties, and permitted them to sink in oblivion, reflects very gravely upon the ingratitude of humanity. To provide honourable burial for a soldier or sailor who has faithfully served his country should not be left to the chance generosity of the individual. It is a duty which should take precedence of all others. To honour and protect in death, seems but a small return to him who has protected the Nation's honour in life.

Having in mind the above sentiment expressed by one of Canada's leading citizens, we the Executive Committee of the Great War Veterans Association desire to call the attention of the Government to the lack of any provision existing covering suitable burial of those who have served in the wars of the Empire, and believing that this is a matter in which the Federal Government should act, we respectfully request:

(1) That all veterans who have served with the forces of Great Britain or her Allies in the present great war, or served with Britain in other previous wars, be accorded a military, or semi-military funeral, when it is possible to make such an arrangement; and that when the deceased leaves no funds for his burial, the Federal Government shall meet the cost of decent interment.

(2) That National Military cemeteries be established, or arrangements made for military plots in established cemeteries where veterans may be laid to rest, when no other suitable place is available.

(3) That the Government of the Dominion of Canada absorb and undertake the work at present being carried on by the "Last Post Imperial Naval and Military Contingency Fund" of Montreal, since we feel it is not a matter for private or public philanthropy, but a duty that belongs to the State he or she served.

The CHAIRMAN: We have still a few minutes before our appointment with the Minister of Finance and other Ministers. Captain Finn, of Saskatchewan, will now submit the resolution on the alien question, and will be followed by Mr. Irwin of Alberta.

Captain FINN: We beg to point out that a new and serious situation has arisen, more especially in Western Canada, owing to the effect of the Great War. While a great number of English-speaking citizens have joined the C.E.F., the majority of the foreign born have remained behind, and we believe are in the majority, that will seriously impair the rights of those who have done their duty in defence of the Empire. The Great War Veterans view with alarm the number of alien citizens, many from enemy countries, who have within the last few years, and until quite recently been permitted to take up land under the present homestead regulations; more especially as no attempt or restrictions have been made to compel or induce the foreign settler, or his descendants to adopt the English language. In many districts we are aware that the native language of foreign settlers, including Germans, Austrians and Ruthenians are being taught to-day to the detriment of the Dominion. It is a well known fact that all foreign born citizens are amenable to authority, the life which they have been accustomed to in their native land having eminently fitted them to this. This being so, we suggest that the Dominion Government, prior to the issue of naturalization papers to aliens, make as a condition of citizenship that the applicant shall qualify himself by being able to read and write in the English language.

[Capt. I. Finn.]

We respectfully bring to the notice of the Dominion Government the need, particularly in the West of a National School.

We beg to point out to the Dominion Government that the English speaking citizens of the Western provinces, who are now engaged by the Dominion Government on active service, have been discriminated against in the matter of Parliamentary representation, to the detriment of Western Canada and the Dominion as a whole.

These matters are respectfully submitted to the Dominion Government, in order that a satisfactory solution of the Alien question may be sought without delay.

Mr. BENNETT: By "Parliamentary representation," in your resolution you mean in the Legislature?

Mr. IRWIN: Well, parliamentary representation as it affects the western provinces, more especially Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. BENNETT: You know that under the new law the provision is that there shall be five years' residence, and that there must be a working knowledge of English or French in order to get naturalization.

Mr. IRWIN: That has probably been a very recent order, but I know for a fact that particularly in Saskatchewan, up to a very few weeks ago, the same old game is going on in view of the election that is to take place within the next few weeks. I have this to say Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that this is a very live question in the west. In previous years I had no great objection to civilizing a few of these foreigners, but I claim that the returned man is a reformed man, and I am an example of this reformation, a horrible sample perhaps, but I may say that I have civilized quite a number of them. I have naturalized a few of them to the benefit of the country and living in that country you have the right of every British citizen to protest and the rights of a British citizen are very dear to me; I have fought in, not one campaign, but several, and I am good for several more yet if they only come quickly,—but this alien question has got to be a very big question in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, because of the absence of so many of our men at the front, and the Government will have to deal with it speedily. They will have to take into serious consideration the solution of that problem, and we deem it right and fair that we should bring it to your notice and place before you our position in regard to that matter. We are not a political body, we do not intend to take any part in politics, we are non-partisan, but where such circumstances interfere with the right of those who have gone overseas then we object, we protest, and we will protest to both parties, and we will fight the one that is antagonistic to us on this question.

Mr. BENNETT: Inasmuch as you and I come from the same province, but are not of the same political faith, you might tell these gentlemen what you think about this alien question. They think, sometimes, that I am distorting the facts and that as politicians we are apt to exaggerate the true conditions. Under the old law which is in force yet with respect to those who came into the province prior to 1914 all that was necessary to naturalize these foreigners was to take around a piece of paper and have them sign it before a justice of the peace and sometimes they did not know what it really was.

Mr. IRWIN: I will give you an illustration of the way it was done, it is not for the record, but Mr. Bennett's statement is practically correct. I forgot to mention one thing; I believe that recently the Government received a deputation from the Mennonite settlers who came down to protest against National Service, and they promised the Dominion Government that in consideration of being permitted to remain in Canada, and not be required to bear arms, as it was against their faith to do so; they said they were willing to pay any taxes whatever to show their appreciation. Now, in the province of Saskatchewan, the Patriotic Fund was placed at one mill on the dollar on all farmlands and other property. Now in certain townships inhabited by these German Mennonites, during the last six months, they have reduced their assessment 25 per cent, in order to escape the payment of this tax. I have ample evidence which I can produce when necessary, to sustain this statement. These are the men who came down here within the last six months, demanding that they should be released from National Service and declared they would be glad to pay in any taxes to the Patriotic Fund, and then within six months they have endeavoured to avoid the tax by reducing the assessment on their property, and they have even attempted a second time to do so.

[Mr. W. Irwin.]

Mr. BENNETT: They sent me a cheque for $5,500 the week before last to be used for the orphans.

The CHAIRMAN: We have, on many occasions received generous contributions from the Mennonites in the four western provinces. I cannot say, speaking from memory what these contributions will aggregate, but I think it will be $10,000.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Are you aware that the Mennonites were brought to this country under a written agreement that they should be exempt from military service?

Mr. IRWIN: That is possible, sir, I am aware of that fact. I might point out that this is a local case; entirely local in the province of Saskatchewan. The Mennonites in Manitoba are quite a different proposition, the same may be said with regard to the Mennonites of Alberta, and some of them in Saskatchewan, they are good patriotic people and good citizens.

Mr. N. F. R. KNIGHT: Might I ask a question for information, as I have just heard something I did not know about. Do I understand that people were induced to come to Canada under an arrangement that they were to be exempt from performing a national duty and yet that no arrangement was made with them depriving them of their franchise? Do I understand that an arrangement was made to that effect?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: It is in accordance with the provisions of the Militia Act which says that all persons having conscientious scruples are exempt from military service.

Mr. BENNETT: An Order in Council was passed embodying the provisions of the Militia Act when these men came from Russia fifty years ago.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is that binding with regard to their children too?

Mr. BENNETT: The Statute is binding with regard to their children if they are of the same belief. The same provision exists in the Compulsory Service Act in England. It does not apply to the Mennonites alone, but there are Quakers and other people that hold that belief.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: The same provision is made in the United States Act, and in the New Zealand Act.

SIR EDMOND KEMP: There are people of other belief, besides the Mennonites who are exempt from Military Service.

The CHAIRMAN: There is one question I would like to ask Captain Macpherson; as I understand it the memorandum you have presented to the Committee is in favour of equal pensions for all classes.

Captain MACPHERSON: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: What have you to say in respect of the fact that many officers have gone overseas on the understanding that the pensions will be according to rank and in accordance with the existing scale—

[The Chairman.]

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Under a contract, virtually.

The CHAIRMAN: Have you considered that phase of the question, and if so what have you to say with regard to it?

Captain MACPHERSON: In taking up the question of equalization of pensions, and following up the resolution that was passed at the recent Dominion Convention in Winnipeg, whereby it was represented that our army being a citizens' army and that men are serving in the ranks whose earning capacity, prior to the war, was quite as large as the officers under whom they are serving, that the pension should be given on the basis of the man's disability, and of his real suffering. The pension is given because of the suffering of the man from his wounds and the private suffers in that respect equally as much as the officer. It is a different proposition from what it would be in the case of men serving in the permanent force where men have to put in years in the service in earning their promotion.

The CHAIRMAN: Supposing, however, for the sake of argument, that the Government and this Committee are face to face with the fact in respect to 12,000 officers that they have enlisted and gone forward on the understanding that their pensions would be graded on a scale higher than those of the private.

Capt. MACPHERSON: I would suggest, sir, that a clause be put in such as they have in the British scheme, that if any man can show the Pensions Board that with his pension, and with his remaining earning power, he is not receiving an amount equal to his pre-war earnings, that that pension could be supplemented.

Mr. NICKLE: If you take that position, you get away altogether from your resolution, which says that the disability shall be the only determining factor.

Capt. MACPHERSON: The matter of working pay—

Mr. NICKLE: Are you not then driven into this position—are you taking the position that the returned soldier shall be compensated in respect to the loss he, as an individual, suffers as a citizen of the state.

Capt. MACPHERSON: That would apply to my own rank.

Mr. NICKLE: Which line of argument am I supposed to take?

Capt. MACPHERSON: Really the pre-war earning, is, in my opinion, the proper one, but I do not think it is practicable. That is why I say that the only fair way is to base the pension on the living condition.

Mr. NICKLE: You and I then reach practically the same conclusion. I have given some attention to this subject. I find myself in this dilemma: After war was declared, a fixed scale of pensions was brought in which took effect on September 1, 1914, which made a very great distinction between officers and men. I am not taking into consideration now whether or not that distinction was wise. Ours was a volunteer army, and hundreds of men enlisted believing they would get a certain pension, and some enlisted as officers, otherwise they might not have gone. I am confronted with the argument that these men have a vested right, and while we may raise the pension of the lower ranks, there is a contractual relation between Canada and these men, and we have no right to rob them. How can I answer that?

Capt. MACPHERSON: That has puzzled me.

Mr. NICKLE: How can I answer it?

Capt. MACPHERSON: You must remember that faith was broken with regard to working pay.

Mr. NICKLE: Are we justified in departing from a national obligation?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: What do you mean by working pay?

Capt. MACPHERSON: Men went overseas in the ranks, and they were given to understand that they would receive 50 cents to $1 per day extra duty pay as working pay.

[Capt. K. C. Macpherson.]

Mr. BENNETT: Having regard to the profession they followed.

Capt. MACPHERSON: After having been over there in January, 1916, that working pay was cut off.

The CHAIRMAN: They were given the option to go home.

Mr. NICKLE: They were to get the working pay up to the time they were given the option either of taking it or returning.

Mr. SHANAHAN: Certain matters I have been assured of—

Mr. NICKLE: Will you please answer the question.

Mr. SHANAHAN: This has a little to do with it: to show how much these guarantees may be observed the men, as a matter of fact, were in complete ignorance for several months after this working pay had been stopped that such was the case.

Mr. NICKLE: Are you and I agreed, Captain Macpherson, that as far as possible a national obligation should be respected?

Capt. MACPHERSON: Undoubtedly, as far as possible.

The CHAIRMAN: Now, gentlemen, we have an appointment with the Minister at twelve o'clock. I may say we very much appreciate your coming here, and the opportunity we had to hear your views. Perhaps before we dismiss the Minister of Militia would say just a word to us, since at the present time he is the representative of the Government at this gathering.

Sir EDWARD KEMP: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think I voice the sentiments of the committee—I certainly voice my own—when I say that we are under a debt of gratitude to you for coming here and giving us all the information which you have placed before us this morning. You have come from distant parts of the country, and I feel the more grateful, and your representations in my estimation carry more weight, because of the fact that you have put them in such a sincere and moderate way. This is only what we would expect from men who, like yourselves, have faced the dangers of the trenches.

You have brought before the committee and before the Government very important matters. The representations which you have made will be of great benefit in assisting us in working out these difficulties. You have been frank with us, and I want to be frank with you, and tell you this: we are just as sincere as you are in trying to overcome all the difficulties and obstacles which present themselves from time to time. There are many of us who have engaged in affairs in connection with the war since it commenced who have tried to do the best we could, as you tried to do the best you could when you were striving for your country in the trenches. We might not have gone the length of submitting ourselves to all the hard work we have done, had it not been work in connection with the war. But we are prepared to go on, and listen to every representation, and give it the most careful and sympathetic consideration.

There are some matters that are very important. The resolution which you placed before the committee, and which you feel very strongly upon, in reference to selective military conscription, or selective military service, is not a matter upon which I am prepared to say anything this morning more than has been said by the Prime Minister for the Government, which has expressed itself in no indefinite terms on the matter. I can readily understand that men who have 300,000 or 400,000 comrades who have been willing to sacrifice their lives, who have been willing to offer the supreme sacrifice, and families that have given one, two, three, four, five and, perhaps, six sons to this cause, feel very strongly when they go up and down the streets, and when they come across a family of four or five rugged, healthy boys, none of whom have enlisted. There is something very unfair about that, and I can readily understand how this agitation in Canada has come about because of that and other conditions of the same character; and I sympathize with you in the very strong representations you have made. I thought when I looked over this agenda that I might refer to two or three items on it. But the time is about up, and we have to go and see the Finance Minister. I will say in a blanket sort of way that we will consider the whole agenda. So far as I am concerned, and the department is concerned, you can always feel that you have sympathy there, and we shall always be glad to hear from you, and everything you write us about and say to us will always have consideration and we shall always try and give you a decent answer.

Committee adjourned.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, OTTAWA,
COMMITTEE ROOM 301,

WEDNESDAY, May 30, 1917.

The Committee met at 10 o'clock a.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding. Members Present: Sir Herbert Ames, Chairman, Mr. R. B. Bennett, Hon. Charles Marcil, Mr. F. B. McCurdy, Mr. W. S. Middlebro, Hon. Charles Murphy, Mr. Duncan Ross, and Mr. Donald Sutherland.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of evidence given by Mr. Charles W. Peterson, Secretary of the National Service Board of Canada respecting Cards sent to the Canadian Overseas Forces, copy of which was filled by the witness; also by Major C. M. Ingall, General Auditor and Chief Inspector, Accounts and Records Branch of the Department of Militia, respecting separation allowances and assigned pay.

The attention of the Committee was then directed to the contents of an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Globe of 29th May, reflecting upon the treatment which the returned soldier received on arrival in Canada and subsequently in the Military Hospitals. The Clerk of the Committee was instructed to write to the Editor and to ask him for the names and addresses of the three returned soldiers alluded to, to enable the Committee to further inquire into their complaints, and invite the Editor to appear before the Committee and give evidence in connection with the statements as set forth in the second paragraph of the editorial.

The Committee then adjourned until Tuesday, June 5, at 10 o'clock a.m.

V. CLOUTIER,
Clerk of the Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER.

TUESDAY, June 5, 1917.

The Committee met at 10 o'clock a.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

Present: Sir Herbert Ames, Chairman; Brigadier-General Mason of the Senate Committee, Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia, Mr. R. B. Bennett, Hon. Charles Marcil, Mr. F. B. McCurdy, Mr. W. S. Middlebro, Hon. Charles Murphy, Mr. W. F. Nickle, Mr. Duncan Ross, and Mr. Donald Sutherland.

In attendance: The Delegates of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada (eleven in all), also Col. Arthur Mignault, Montreal, Major J. L. Todd of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada, Mr. E. H. Scammell of the Military Hospitals Commission, and Mr. T. B. Kidner, Vocational Secretary, Military Hospitals Commission.

PROCEEDINGS:

The Chairman delivered a short address outlining the purposes of the present meeting, after which Major W. P. Purney, President of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada addressed the Committee on the Aims and Purposes of the Association.

The Committee then proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions presented by the Officers and members of the Association as hereunder set forth:—

(See also Minutes of Proceedings.)

The meeting then adjourned to enable the Delegates and Members of the Committee to be at Sir Thomas White's Office at 12.15 o'clock.

V. CLOUTIER,

Clerk of the Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Room 301,

June 12, 1917.

The Committee met at 4 o'clock, p.m., the Chairman, Sir Herbert Ames, presiding.

Members present: Sir Herbert Ames, Chairman; Mr. R. B. Bennett, Hon. Charles Marcell, Mr. F. B. McCurdy, Mr. W. S. Middlebro, Mr. F. E. Pardee, Mr. Duncan Ross, and Mr. Donald Sutherland.

The CHAIRMAN: As requested by the Committee, the Clerk wrote to the Toronto Globe, asking for the names and addresses of certain returned soldiers respecting whom editorial comment was made by that newspaper, on May 29. The following reply has been received: (Reads)

THE GLOBE,

TORONTO, June 1, 1917.

Mr. V. CLOUTIER,

Clerk, Committee on Returned Soldiers,
Ottawa.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter of May 30, I beg to state that the Globe is not in a position to give you the names of the three men to whom reference was made in our issue of May 29. The condition affecting these men and criticized by the Globe is not limited by any means to their three cases. Their state of financial incompetency is typical of many cases, and it would be very misleading to suppose that this condition was confined to three men. Furthermore, the unfortunate delays which have been experienced by returned soldiers in securing their regular pay are not a matter of guarded secrecy. Stories such as the Globe referred to have been appearing for weeks in much greater detail in other Toronto papers. All that we can do, therefore, is to refer you to the Globe's source of information in regard to the three cases in question, namely, The Soldiers' Aid Commission, 116 College St. West, Toronto. We understand that at the same office you may also get information regarding the London soldier, who received no pay for twenty-two months, although legally entitled to the same, and whose case was only settled through the efforts of that Commission.

Yours very truly,

The Globe.

That is not very satisfactory.

Now, there is a considerable amount of correspondence not all of which it is necessary or desirable to present to the Committee. I have a telegram from Major W. P. Purney, President of the Great War Veterans Association, which reads as follows:

HALIFAX, N.S., June 11.

Sir HERBERT AMES,

Chairman Select Parliamentary Committee Returned Soldiers,
Ottawa.

Re our resolution on department of demobilization large majority of our committee realize the difficulty and impracticability of separating proposed new department from military control or supervision and now amend our requests in this matter to the extent of eliminating our demands for entire separation from military control.

W. P. PURNEY,

Pres. Great War Veterans Assn.

I received also a letter from Major Purney protesting very strongly against the action on the part of the Government in declining to give the three months' bonus paid to civil employees of the Federal and Provincial Government who on discharge are privileged to return to their former positions in the Government service. The letter is as follows: (Reads)

RUSSELL HOTEL,

OTTAWA, CANADA, June 8, 1917.

Sir HERBERT AMES

And Members of Select Parliamentary Committee on Returned Soldiers,
House of Commons.

GENTLEMEN,—As the majority of the Executive Committee of the G.W.V.A. of Canada will be unable to appear before you at your next Session, I am taking this opportunity of expressing the unanimous opinion of our Committee in the matter of withholding from the Government employees who are returned soldiers, the three months pay and allowances granted returned soldiers after six months service overseas.

We strongly protest against such action on the part of the Government considering the same a breach of faith. It will be found that many men in Government employ have made financial engagements on the strength of the Order in Council granting such pay, etc., and this part revocation of the same will have a most embarrassing effect.

We consider it unjust and unfair. All men, Government employees or others, having once been led to expect this payment mentioned, naturally will never understand how such a change as contemplated, could be justly made, and must be considered as I state above, a breach of faith, and could never be convinced to the contrary.

I wish to assure that this class has and will have the strongest sympathy and support of all their comrades in this matter, and I would strongly urge that you recommend that no distinction be made as contemplated.

This is written in great haste on the eve of my departure, but nevertheless, is our earnest opinion and conviction, and I would therefore respectfully request that you give our request your most serious consideration.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) W. P. PURNEY,

President G. W. V. A. of Canada.

There are a number of individual emendations to the evidence that have been sent in. There are three cases, those of Trudel, Whitton and Hart where the evidence of Major Todd was not quite complete, and where the Pensions Board undertook to attend further to the matter. They have sent their final findings in these cases, which are summarized as follows:

8610, Pte. TRUDEL: Since his appeal against the decision of the Pension Board, he was examined by specialists. After considering the specialists' reports the Board was of opinion that the result of the special examination did not prove the existence of any disability necessitating change in the amount of his pension; but in order to prevent any injustice he is to be medically re-examined in June.

57001, Sgt. Maj. WHITTON: This complaint was considered by the Board, and it was decided that the pension he is receiving, $136 per annum, is in accordance with his described disability.

77396, Pte H. W. HART: This man is still in receipt of $16 pension per month, and will continue to receive that amount until March, 1918, when he will be requested to undergo a further medical examination and his compensation will be continued, in accordance with the pensionability then present in him.

I have a letter which the members of the Committee should read, I think, in reference to the quarantine regulations for infected people coming from the other side. It is written by Dr. Montizambert, the Director General of Public Health. I have also a letter from Mr. Kenneth Archibald, the legal adviser, I understand, of the Pensions Board, regarding tuberculosis and venereal diseases.

Mr. McCURDY: What does Dr. Montizambert say?

The CHAIRMAN: The last clause of his letter reads:

It would seem very desirable, however, that in the case of returned soldiers found affected by these diseases, their segregation should be insisted upon until such period as they should cease to be a menace to others.

Mr. Archibald points out that the provinces have full control of matters like tuberculosis. The Federal authority extends to quarantine, leprosy, and the "Public Works Health Act." He states in his letter "the provinces have full control with regard to public health in the province in so far as the health of one province does not affect the Dominion as a whole." He also points out that "at the present time there is a Director General of Public Health connected with the Department of Agriculture."

I have also a rather interesting disquisition by Mr. Wm. Banks of Toronto, on the whole subject of returned soldiers, which I promised to lay before the Committee.

Now, gentlemen, we have with us General Fotheringham, who has seen medical service of a very remarkable character at the front, and who was brought back here to be of assistance in dealing with the problems that the Government is confronted with here. General Fotheringham has been here, I understand, a sufficient time to be fairly well seized of the situation in Canada, and I am going to ask him to take the witness box.

EVIDENCE.

General JOHN TAYLOR FOTHERINGHAM, called, sworn and examined:

By the Chairman:

Q. What position do you occupy?—A. My rank is Surgeon General, and my present appointment is that of Director of Medical Services, Invalids.

Q. When did you return to Canada?—A. On the 23rd day of April last.

Q. When did you take up your duties as Surgeon General of Invalids?—A. I reported for duty on the 1st day of May.

Q. Would you kindly tell this Committee what are your impressions and opinions? I think probably the best way would be to make your own statement regarding the situation as you find it here. I may say, for your guidance, that this Committee have found themselves face to face with a situation which does not appear to be all that is desired, namely, a situation of divided authority; and they have been taking evidence, much of which is more or less conflicting, and they would be very glad to hear what you have to say on the situation as you find it?—A. Well, sir, I will make it just as brief as I can.

Q. You need not hurry; take all the time you want?—A. I should like first to be questioned later on, if I might. In the first place I found, on coming back, that in my judgment the civilian organization which was founded as the Military Hospitals Commission, although at the time necessary, in my judgment, and further, still necessary, had reached a point at which a re-definition of its functions by the Government was necessary. Looking at it purely from the point of view of the medical attendants, there is no doubt in my mind that serious confusion exists in the country.

Q. Serious what?—A. Confusion in authority, with, of course, resulting confusion elsewhere. The net result is that there are two groups of military invalids in this country. One is the group which becomes invalids prior to going overseas. They are, in the main with certain exceptions in the care of the C.A.M.C., that is, in the care of the Militia Department. These, however, who come back from overseas as invalids are in another group and under other control. My judgment is that that state of affairs cannot conduce to efficiency. The remedy, if I have said enough about that is, I think that there should be at once a single control established, and I have no doubt in my own mind that the proper authority to take over the military patients is the military organization that we have provided, namely, the Medical Service of the Militia Department—so long as they remain soldiers.

Q. Does it seem to you that there is no great similarity between the soldier on his way to the front or who is in training, and the soldier who is on his way back from the front, who has served his bit, and who is anxious to get back into civilian life?—A. For the purpose of medical treatment there is no difference between them.

Q. Does not the ultimate goal to which these two men are working alter the situation materially; in the one case the man is endeavouring to become a soldier, and in the other case, you have a soldier who is endeavouring to become a civilian?—A. No, it does not alter the machinery at all, by which that end may be obtained. There are two sets or groups of duties which the Medical Service in every army has to discharge; the one group with which they have to deal is that of the outgoing tide of men—

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

The CHAIRMAN: The selection and examination, etc.?

The WITNESS: The selection and examining of them, the classification and their care during training.

By the Chairman:

Q. There are very few surgical cases among them, I suppose?—A. There were more at the outset, on account of the recruiting regulations, than there are now.

Q. And now their complaints are very largely due to their own indiscretion, are they?—A. I think that is rather strong—a great deal of it is, but a great deal of it is not. Then with respect to the incoming tide of men, whether sick or not, having regard to the fact that their pensionability, is to be determined, the duties of the Medical Service consist largely in caring for those who are sick, and advising so as to protect the country later from unfounded claims for pensions.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. You think that because that Army Medical Corps has been in charge of a man from the time he goes overseas until he comes back here, therefore they would have greater knowledge about his right to a pension than any other man or medical organization?—A. I do indeed; there is no doubt about it that the experience which the medical officer acquires by contact with the man for a long period of time gives him a better knowledge of that man's condition. I could quote instances, a number of them, to prove that assertion.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. You think the soldiers should be under the control of the Army Medical Corps from the time they enlist to the time of their pension or discharge?—A. Until they return to duty or are discharged.

By the Chairman:

Q. Do you think that the discipline should be the same for the man on his return here as if he were on duty in France?—A. Unfortunately it is not the same in this country as elsewhere.

Q. Do you think it ought to be?—A. I do indeed, sir.

Q. Do you think it should be the same as it is in France?—A. As in France and England, yes sir.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Do you know whether, in the British and in the French Army, that discipline is maintained until the soldier is discharged?—A. Yes, always; but of course you understand that the discipline in the hospital where the men are ill, is not of the same stern type as it is when they are with their corps, but with regard to infractions of the rules there is absolute control.

By the Chairman:

Q. What I meant by my question was would it not seem to you that a gradual adaption to civilian conditions is preferable to maintaining a strict military discipline up to the very day of a man's discharge?—A. I do not want to be understood as advocating that a man should be under the same stiff discipline when in the hospital as he is when with his battalion, but I do say that in the hospitals there is a better discipline, and it is lived up to in France and in Britain better than it is here.

Q. Is that discipline in a code of regulations?—A. Yes.

Q. So that there is an established system of rules and regulations that apply to men in hospitals prior to discharge?—A. Yes, sir, in the hospital regulations. I can submit a list of those regulations if you like, I brought one with me.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Q. I think you had better place on file a list of military regulations in force with respect to men under hospital treatment?—A. Yes.

Q. In hospital for discharge?—A. For treatment, either for return to duty or for discharge.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Having regard to the matter from the standpoint of the individual soldier, do you, General Fotheringham, think the system is for his welfare?—A. I do, very much so, sir. I am prepared to state that if the sort of discipline to which I am accustomed were enforced in our Canadian hospitals,—it is in force in hospitals everywhere except in Canada—that is in force at Lemnos, in Greece—I have not been there myself but I know the units that are there—and in France and Britain, the time which the soldiers stay in the hospitals is very much reduced; and speaking of some instances that have come under my notice here, I am satisfied that it could be reduced by a considerable period.

Q. What are some of the ill-effects from lack of discipline of which you complain?—A. The first one is discontent on the part of the soldier himself.

Q. Are there others?—A. The next one is that coming back to the atmosphere, such as that which obtains in Canada where the public is not very well informed and in a hysterical state with regard to the men they are very much more apt to get out of hand, and in that way damage themselves, many of them, particularly tuberculosis cases and men with any addiction to drink.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you not be making unnecessary discipline for the well-intentioned man for the purpose of getting after the few men who are more or less undisciplined?—A. No, sir; the well-intentioned man never finds these regulations irksome.

Q. We were led to believe by some of the testimony given before this Committee, particularly in Montreal and Toronto, that the men did find the discipline irksome, and thought that it was unnecessary in the military hospitals?—A. Some men would say so, yes, but those very men would not say so in Britain or in France. Of course there is a difference between the man who is sick in bed and the man who is loafing, unemployed, about a convalescent home. The outlook of the two men is different.

The CHAIRMAN: Naturally the man who is able to get about would be different from the man who is sick in bed.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. The man in hospital in France it is presumed will return to the trenches, while the man in hospital in Canada is supposed to be through with his military duty. Does that not make any difference?—A. No.

Q. I thought that only those men who were militarily unfit were sent back to Canada?—A. A man is not sent back unless he is unfit for further military service, or is in need of six months' medical treatment.

Q. Some of those who have been sent back to Canada do return to the other side?—A. Yes, but there are not enough of them going, in my judgment.

Q. Have you any figures as to the number who have gone back after medical treatment here?—A. I have not, sir.

By Mr Sutherland:

Q. Do you think more returned soldiers could be cured so that they would be able to go back?—A. Yes.

Q. Would that result be obtained by better discipline?—A. Discipline would help, but of course that would only be a contributing factor.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. We have had a good deal of evidence before the Committee showing that the system adopted by France is probably the most progressive and up to date?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me whether or not, under that system, the Army Medical Corps of France has the control such as you suggested a moment ago it would be better to have in Canada until the returned soldier is discharged?—A. I have visited none of the French hospitals. I was always at the Front with the army in the field; but I am quite prepared to say now that the French do maintain a military discipline and control in their institutions. The reason, gentlemen, is this: There is no better known document in international law than the Geneva Convention. That was arrived at in 1864, and in 1906 it was revised and re-ratified by no less than 35 of the world's Powers. Ingrained in every line of that document is the principle that military patients shall remain under control, and in Article 10 of that document it expressly states, among others, the conditions by which civil assistance may be had in military hospitals. I brought a copy of the Geneva Convention with me, and I will read the exact words. (Reads):

“The personnel”—

This is Article 10,

“of voluntary aid societies which are recognized and authorized by their Government, who may be employed in the Medical Units and establishments of armies, is placed on the same footing as the personnel referred to in the preceding article.”

That is the regular military personnel.

“Provided always that the first mentioned personnel shall be subject to military law and regulations.”

They not only take for granted that the soldier himself will be, but they do not admit civilian societies to care for the military sick or wounded except, under the condition that they also shall be under military law and regulations.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. What is the Geneva Convention the result of?—A. It is the result of the self-denying efforts of a Swiss civilian—I am sorry his name has escaped me—who was so horrified by what he saw after the Battle of Solferino that he started a campaign in Europe, much the same as the movement which Howard started in England for the reforming of prisons, and the result of his labours was that in 1864 the first Convention was held and the first agreement drawn up.

By the Chairman:

Q. That is a mutual agreement for the care of wounded soldiers?—A. An agreement for the neutralizing of the personnel and a large part of the material which has to do with the care of the military sick and wounded.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. The Geneva Convention is an agreement between the different Powers is it not?—A. It is an International agreement to which 35 Powers subscribed in 1906, subject to ratification by their Governments, and 27 of the 35 Powers whose representatives signed the convention in 1906 had ratified it by the end of March, 1911. Great Britain ratified the convention the next year, on the 16th April, 1907.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Can Great Britain bind Canada in a matter of that kind?—A. Yes, sir. To meetings of the powers held at the Hague for that purpose, only the sovereign powers are admitted, and Canada in this respect is not a sovereign power. I do not at the [Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

moment, remember the name of Canada's representative at the meeting, but I believe that Canada was represented on the British delegation.

Q. Do I understand you to say that the results arrived at in the Geneva Convention are a consensus of the opinion of all the Powers that were a party to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it the result of their accumulated experience?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. It was under the Geneva Convention that the Red Cross was supposed to be neutral and inviolate by all nations in time of war? That was one of the provisions adopted?—A. Yes, sir. I only quoted the article in question from the Geneva Convention to show you the trend of opinion in most of the armies in the world. The proposal by any country to hand over its sick and wounded to a civilian organization is a completely new idea. I am not disputing the power of the Government of Canada to do such a thing if it were so decided by higher authority, but if I were asked for my opinion I would say that in my judgment it would be an experiment of a most pronounced kind.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would there be any fundamental difficulty in the creation of a department such as has been suggested, and in seconding Army Medical Corps Officers, if necessary, for that work, to the new department?—A. I have thought that over very carefully, and I think, sir, that it would be the duty of the Medical Service to co-operate in every way with such an organization, we would have to do it in this way: We would give our officers and nursing sisters leave for civil employment with the Military Hospitals Commission. That would mean that they would appear in plain clothes as civilian physicians, surgeons and nurses, and would be appointed, controlled and paid by the Military Hospitals Commission, and would be, while on leave from the Medical Service, off our strength, but not losing their seniority in the Militia List; their military position would not be affected by their civilian employment. One main advantage of that would be that instances of indiscipline in the hospital would not be military crimes; they would not call for military punishment but would be dealt with as the authorities of the hospitals saw fit.

Q. Is the connection of the Army Medical Corps engaged in the care of invalids absolutely necessary with the Militia Department?—A. Yes, sir, absolutely.

Q. You have a Department in war time that is called upon to do the work of ten departments. Do you propose to divide that work somewhat so that the responsibility will not be quite so heavy upon one Department? Is there any reason why the Army Medical Corps could not function just as well under a Minister who had charge of the Medical Service, the Vocational Training and all the other activities which are working together for the comfort and training and help of the returned man?—A. Every reason, sir. I cannot conceive of any Military Department carrying out its work under that scheme. That is the trouble now. As a matter of fact the great bulk of the work which is being done for the Military Hospitals Commission in its institutions is being done now by the Medical Service. The Medical Service officers who are going there cannot tell at present who their master is; they do not know whether their allegiance to-day is due to the A.D.M.S. of the District or not. If they serve in our part of the Military Hospitals which takes the sick before going overseas, there is no confusion about it. If their service lies in attending to those who go sick after going overseas and coming back, it is a different matter.

Q. Of course, there are two separate hospitals completely separated, as a matter of fact?—A. These offices of the medical service, mostly, as I say, from the C.A.M.C., report not to the A.D.M.S., and through him to the General Officer Commanding the District, but to a junior captain from the Army Service Corps, or some such officer, who is appointed to the command of the Military Hospitals Commission Command

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Unit. I can give you an example—I could give you many—but I will give one in a few words: a member of the Military Hospitals Commission told me the other day that in his city he had gone in as a member of the Commission to look through one of the hospitals. He found that, ten days before, the Canadian Red Cross had sent in a lot of supplies for the service of the hospital, which naturally went into the charge of the Quartermaster. Among these were a lot of back rests for the patients able to sit in bed upstairs. For ten days that quartermaster had refused to issue these although the medical officers asked for them, contending that he had not got an order to hand them over from the Major—I do not know to what branch of the service he belonged—who had command of the unit and who had his office in another part of the town. That kind of misconduct is utterly intolerable, and should be absolutely prevented by giving absolute control to the medical officer who should command the hospital. Furthermore nothing can be more subversive of the proper control of the patients than the idea that the medical officers are incapable of issuing orders to the sergeants and corporals downstairs. No medical officers can maintain discipline under such circumstances.

Q. Do I understand that there is a conflict of authority between the Army Medical Corps and the Military Hospitals Commission Command?—A. I would not say it has come into official notice, or use the word "conflict". Yet the situation is one in which acute conflict may arise at any moment, just as in the case I mentioned. I could give another example in another city. The medical officer responsible for the health and the care of the patients in one of the hospitals got an order one morning from the Infantry officer in command of the unit to send that afternoon forty patients by train to another hospital in the same District but in another town. Well, he could not; he could only send six, because the rest would have either had their consecutive course of treatment, or appointments for the treatments during the following successive days, rudely broken up or they were not fit to go for medical reasons. When he reported these facts to the Commanding Officer, he was told that he was to carry out the order or to take the consequences.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What happened?—A. I cannot say. I think some went, I do not know how many.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Would you say that men went who should not have gone?—A. I do not know. If the order had been carried out, they certainly would.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Do you say that the officer in command was not a medical man?—A. He was the officer in charge of the M.H.C. Command who controls all the M.H.C. Hospitals in the District.

Q. Was he in the Military Hospitals Commission Command?—A. Yes, he was the commanding officer of that unit.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. He was not a member of the C.A.M.C.?—A. No sir. Gentlemen, you understand that I am not here to quarrel or be cantankerous. I am only trying to point out to you why a single control—and that a military and medical one—is necessary if these men are going to be properly handled.

Q. Let us follow that a little more: suppose that an order to move those forty men had been given by a C.A.M.C. man. The hospital that it would have been given to under your scheme would have been under the C.A.M.C. Is that right?—A. Yes.

Q. I am just asking for the purpose of getting an explanation. Why would it be any different coming from a Military Hospitals Commission man who was the officer commanding to the officer in the hospital—where would the difference be in carrying out a command that might have been given by the C.A.M.C. or the M.H.C.?—

A. Such a command would never have been given by a medical commanding officer.

Q. The man who gave the order to move the forty patients was not a medical man at all?—A. Not a medical man at all. I think he is a Militia officer, who saw service in France or England.

Q. He is a layman undertaking to tell a medical man what to do. That is practically what it means?—A. Yes.

Q. Now then, suppose that under the Military Hospitals Commission Command there were appointed medical men to say whether or not certain treatments should be given. Suppose he were the officer commanding the district in that regard?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, with the Military Hospitals Commission, with a medical man in charge, there would be no more difference whether the man in the hospital took his instructions from the man in charge of the district, if a medical man, than there would be if they both belonged to the C.A.M.C. Those would be parallel cases?—A. I am afraid I do not follow that question.

Q. Perhaps I am not very clear, I understand what I mean. Suppose there were in a Military District the Military Hospitals Commission in charge of that District?—A. You mean a command unit?

Q. Yes?—A. Then in charge of that, there is not a medical man, but a combatant officer?

Q. Yes. Suppose in that case it were all under the Military Hospitals Commission, would there be any difference except in the way of discipline as between the Military Hospitals Commission and the C.A.M.C.?—A. Except in the way of discipline?

Q. Yes?—A. Well, I am afraid I have not got that question yet. The point is that no such order would be issued, but that in all probability, as in the purely Military Hospitals, every day there would be laid on the desk of that official a list of all those who were fit to move, or fit to be discharged, and put in different categories. The A.D.M.S. of the District is there to do that under our system.

Q. Under the C.A.M.C. system?—A. Quite so.

Q. The whole point about the argument is then, that this man undertook, without any medical advice whatever, to peremptorily order those men to be moved?—A. Yes.

Q. That man should be in an insane asylum now. Any man who would peremptorily demand that men should be moved say from Cobourg to Whitby—I do not care whether every man in the hospital is on a sick bed or not—would that not be an extreme case in any event?—A. It looks very extreme.

Mr. PARDEE: That man should be in jail anyway.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Was he sent to jail?—A. He is a well-meaning officer. There is a point I noted in a memorandum which I would like to quote if I may.

The CHAIRMAN: If there are any statements you would like to read, the Committee will give you all the time necessary. If there are any documents you would like to put on our record, they may be inserted.

The WITNESS: Thank you very much, Sir Herbert. This memorandum will only take two or three moments to read. My first paragraph was this: (Reads)

General Considerations—1. As a result of our voluntary system and of the public attitude generally to all military matters the public mind with reference to the returned soldier is in a very ill informed and sensitive condition. It is forgotten that the returned invalid is still as much a soldier as before he became a casualty, is in receipt of public pay and is maintained by the public through the Government; that the country has towards him certain contractual obligations which end only with his final discharge from the Service, and that therefore, Hospital conditions as regards treatment, discipline, and all that pertains to the vocational training and repatriation of the man present problems which do not arise in civil life, and for these and similar reasons a system of medical care which is non-military is apt to be inefficient.

By the Chairman:

Q. I wish we were equally sure that the reverse were true. When you say that a system of medical care which is non-military is apt to be inefficient, I wish we were equally sure that a military system would be efficient?—A. I will refer to that later.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: I think it would be more satisfactory to let General Fotheringham read his memorandum without interruption.

The WITNESS: (Reads)

2. To this should be added the universal experience of all civilized armies, in all of which there has been provided a Medical Service for the purpose of discharging for the soldier duties which experience in all countries has shown to be not well discharged by civil arrangements. There is no reason for supposing that Canada can afford to depart from established and well understood methods proved effective by experience.

3. From the point of view of the patient it is an error to attempt to combine civil and military matters or to substitute civil for military control. The fact that the patient is still a soldier with the country's obligations to him unfulfilled must be borne in mind. For instance, he cannot be turned out of hospital for misconduct as in civil life, nor can he be asked or permitted to sign a waiver releasing the Government from its obligations to him, nor has he the moral stimulus arising from the necessity of early recovery and return to work, as he is still under pay and is maintained. The result of this is that the average length of stay in the military hospital in Canada is already much longer than for similar cases in civil hospitals, the cost to the public being correspondingly greater, and the ill effect upon the independence and self-helpfulness of the soldier quite distinct. These evils can be best neutralized by effective military control while in hospital.

By the Chairman:

Q. That was the point I wanted to be clear on. One result of military control will be to shorten the period of treatment?—A. As to the changes necessary in the A.M.C., they are directly these: first of all, the placing of all military medical patients under military medical control; and having that settled, the re-organization of the military medical services in a moderate way.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You mean the re-organization of the C.A.M.C.?—A. Yes; that is, have an "A" side and a "B" side instead of having the D.M.S. Invalids report direct to the Adjutant General, irrespective of the C.A.M.C., have a Director General of Medical Services who is head of the C.A.M.S. to direct both sides and give him a seat on the Militia Council. As it is, he has to report to the Adjutant General, who in peace time, with little to do, can present our little problems effectively, but he cannot under present conditions. Only within the last few weeks Lord Esher, whose committee organized the Army Council on which our Council is based, has publicly placed himself on record as saying that he greatly regretted that he had not taken the advice of Mr. Arnold Forster and his committee at the time when the office of Commander in Chief was abolished and the Army Council established, namely to put the head of the Medical Service in the War Office on the Council,—make him a member of the Army Council. In my judgment it is very necessary that that change should occur.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Who compose the Army Council to-day?—A. I would say the heads of departments—Adjutant General, Quartermaster General, Chief of the General Staff, and those heads of the staff into which the military services are divided. As things stand now, there are three authorities reporting direct to the Adjutant General in Canada on the question of sick and wounded. On one side there is a set of wheels composed of the Military Hospitals Commission; on the other side there is a set of wheels composed of the C.A.M.C—each of them with a separate group of invalids to deal with. Between them, for my sins, I come, with the returned invalids to deal with. You can see that the situation is unnecessarily complicated; and in addition to providing many occasions for co-operation it does provide opportunities for friction. The situation is complicated and ill-considered. I should think that the one who is responsible for the invalids, that is myself, should be wiped off the slate, and should be given a position in the Army Medical Corps under the D.G.M.S.; and on the other side, above referred to as the B side in the D.G.M.S.'s office, in Organization and Administration, have officers in each department selected for their capacity, and have them known as the Army Medical Department—A.M.D. for short. This is the rule in other offices. If he is on the "A" side he is called A.M.D., 1-A, 2-A, 3-A; if he is on the "B" side, 1-B, 2-B, 3-B. He is directly responsible to the sub-head, who is directly responsible to the Director General, who should have a seat in the Militia Council. Under a system of that kind everything could be smoothly carried on. The duties which I thought should be left to the Military Hospitals Commission under that scheme—because of consideration for all they have done, and out of regard to the public interest, because they can do for the returned men work which no other body can do—were the duties which ordinarily are left to the other departments of an army. The Engineers, Ordnance, Army Service Corps, and Pay Department, are the chief of those. In my judgment there is no reason why the Military Hospitals Commission should not continue; there is every reason why they should continue to discharge those duties, and be governed towards the medical service in this respect by all the regulations which control the medical service on the one side and those other departments of the army on the other. There is no reason why our relations with them and theirs with us, should not be as harmonious as they are at present in Britain and France and elsewhere, between the military services concerned.

Q. What would you leave, then, for them to do?—A. I would leave them all the duties other than medical that they are carrying out now—the providing of buildings and their maintenance and repair, their furniture and fittings; the question of technical supplies, that is, the original outfit of them—I think once a hospital is running its daily demands should be maintained through the medical side by the depots and district depots which we have, the purchases of which are all under the control of the Purchasing Commission.

Q. Catering and supplies?—A. Yes. The A.S.C. services would include maintenance, rations, food supply, and fuel; Ordnance would include clothing supply; of course re-education and re-employment and the relations with provincial or public organizations or efforts other than those of the Canadian Red Cross and the Order of St. John, should all be left for the very highest degree of co-operation that could be secured between the Medical Service and the Military Hospitals Commission and the other bodies concerned.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You would get dual control and dual wrangling again, would you not?—A. No.

Q. Would you not get a whole lot of quarrelling again?—A. No, we should not.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Take the matter of supplies, which are managed by the A.S.C., in the different districts for the army, and by the M.H.C., officials for the hospitals, why would there not be the same opportunity for friction there as there is in the Medical Service?—A. You mean, between them and the Army Service Corps?

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Q. Yes?—A. I do not see why it should arise at all.

Q. Take the fitting up of hospitals, perhaps that would be a clear case; the fitting up a military hospital would be done by the engineers of the district?—A. Yes.

Q. Who have a staff and who have employees for that purpose?—A. That is, repairs.

Q. What is the necessity of having another body of engineers and employees under the Military Hospitals Commission doing similar work?—A. One advantage is that it can be more speedily done, and that is largely because the statutory safeguards on expenditure do not exist in the case of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. Are those safeguards such as have been found necessary by experience?—A. Yes, as between the Military Departments.

Q. Then the removal of those safeguards would increase the risk of expenditures being made that should not be made?—A. That principle is admitted in the case of the Military Hospitals Commission.

By the Chairman:

Q. The Military Hospitals Commission can call for tenders, and can get it done by hire at a certain price?—A. Yes.

Q. While the engineering department has to get it done with the engineers?—A. That is so.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. If the work done by the Military Hospitals Commission were handed over to the Department the safeguard to which you refer would apply?—A. Quite so.

Q. So that in the event of the whole administration being kept in a separate department, other than the Department of Militia and defence, all that you have said with regard to the public interest being protected, would be protected, that is clear?—A. As regards the expenditure, quite so. Of course, I did not want to touch on that particularly, I was asked about it.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Except that you said, as I understood you, that friction might arise in connection with the Medical Service, and you observed that in connection with the other service there would not be the same friction?—A. I do not think there would be, and one reason for that is this that the method followed by Canada in France and England and in Greece and Egypt is that laid down by the regulations for the Army Medical Service, in which the Medical Service takes complete charge of the soldier when wounded until he is returned to duty or finally discharged from service. The regulations are plain and well understood and work smoothly everywhere, being based on experience. The relations of the Medical Service to the other Services and departments of the Army are well defined in the regulations etc., of the different services concerned. The necessity for co-operation is well recognized and the occasions for possible friction reduced to a minimum. There would appear to be no good reason why the Military Hospitals Commission, which has done and is doing, and, so far as one can see, must be required to continue to do good and indispensable work, should not enter into the same relations with the C.A.M.C. as these which are everywhere else borne to the C.A.M.C. by the other branches of an army, particularly the Engineering, Army Service Corps, and Ordnance Services and the Pay Department. This would leave the purely Medical side of the care of sick and wounded to the Medical Services, as is already the case with the C.A.M.C. outside of Canada. Under this arrangement the selection and control of Staffs and the details of the management of all Military Medical establishments would be administered by the Director General of Medical Services through the General Officer Commanding and the Assistant [Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Director of Medical Services in each Military District, and the returning casualty would remain in the care of the Medical Services from the place in which he fell sick or was wounded through France and Britain, during his return to Canada by Hospital Ship and Hospital Train to the Medical Units in which his final recovery would be attained. Then I wanted to say something about the attitude of the Army Medical Service and of the profession at large.

Q. You are referring to the Army Medical Corps, or to the medical profession generally?—A. I am referring to the medical men all over the country as well as to the officers of the C.A.M.C. From my personal knowledge of the state of feeling both in the Medical Service and the profession, in Quebec, Montreal, Kingston and Toronto, and I have no doubt also in the country generally, there is very deep dissatisfaction with the present confusion of authority as to appointment, control, responsibility and pay of the staffs of Medical establishments. It is difficult for the lay mind to appreciate the annoyance of the professional mind caused by interference, usually unintentional, with purely professional matters. This annoyance is not selfish or jealous, but based in the main upon a due appreciation of the patients' interests, which naturally appeal to and are understood by the professional mind with greater keenness and clearness. Confidence can be restored only by the early handing over of all such matters to the unhampered control of the C.A.M.C.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Might I ask a question with regard to that. You have been to Calgary, have you not?—A. Not lately.

Q. You know the Ogden Home there?—A. I know of it, I have heard of it.

Q. The Red Cross established that Home, and that is my excuse for making reference to it as an illustration; we found that as long as these men of the C.A.M.C. were there, we were troubled with difficulties with regard to rank, precedence and all that, goes with what I call "military caste," without using that term in any disrespectful way. We find, now that we are permitted to engage civilians and to determine whom we shall employ and how the work is to be done, we have had entire freedom from trouble or anything of that kind.—A. That is the alternative; I think I have already said, if not I intend to say, that the alternative of giving complete control to the Medical Service of the Militia Department is that the Military Hospitals Commission shall undertake to establish a complete set of hospitals with their own staff, on a civilian basis throughout; they will have either to do one thing or the other.

By the Chairman:

Q. A member of the C.A.M.C. is both a soldier and a doctor?—A. Quite so, and it is the same in every army in the world.

Q. His position is sometimes that of a soldier and sometimes that of a doctor. Is he given responsibility because he ranks high as a soldier, although he may rank low as a doctor, or is he given responsibility because he ranks high as a doctor, no matter what his rank as a soldier?—A. He is given responsibility because of his rank.

Q. As a soldier in the Army Medical Service he might have obtained a very high position in rank, while possibly he may be inferior as a doctor, might he not?—A. He might be, but that is carefully guarded against in the Royal Army Medical Corps, and I may say that the same applies in Canada.

Q. Does not his advancement in the Army Medical Corps depend far more on Military Service than it does on his ability as a medical man?—A. No, he cannot get a step in rank in the Army Medical Corps without examination and his examinations are not exclusively military.

Q. Because, frankly, we were not very deeply impressed with the medical excellence of the Army Medical Corps, as it has been displayed to us individually.—A.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Were you not thinking of the Permanent Army Medical Corps, whose duties are largely administrative, in time of peace their time being almost altogether taken up in administration work, or are you speaking of the Canadian Army Medical Corps throughout the country at large?

Q. Of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, as shown to us by the members of that corps that were examined by this committee. In their examination we were not particularly impressed with their medical status.—A. I would like to say this, that at the time the war broke out we had on the militia list about 600 medical officers and if I may be allowed to say it myself, we had in every city in Canada, the pick of the medical profession. It is true we did not have very many of the staff of the universities for various reasons. We did have on the list of the Canadian Army Medical Corps officers who had university connections, but they were junior men, ranking from Captain to Lieutenant-Colonel. We have sent overseas about 2,000, and we have on the list here now about 1,280 and we require to send 35 a month for service abroad.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And there are about 20 a month coming back?—A. Not as many as that. We will have to make our list larger, though. As the returning tide of men increases, we must bring them back; we intend doing that.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You have spoken of two tides of men to be dealt with, the outgoing and the incoming. This committee is more particularly interested in the incoming tide, and if the Canadian Army Medical Corps were as efficient in attending to these incoming men, as they were, judging from the evidence we have received, in looking after the outgoing tide, the work would not be very satisfactorily performed.—A. I can account for that very readily. In the first place a great many of the original examinations were made by medical men absolutely without military experience.

Q. C.A.M.C. men?—A. In many cases, no.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. But in the greater number of cases they were?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. In many cases they had no military experience?—A. In many cases they had been recently admitted to the service.

Q. It was that or nothing.—A. Quite so. There is no doubt that pressure was brought to bear on many of these medical men by those who were recruiting. At Valcartier, I know, very many soldiers who were rejected, but whose medical history sheets were torn up before embarkation by their commanding officers. They were ordered on board ship and told they would get their medical history sheets on the other side when they would be re-examined.

By the Chairman:

Q. What you say has reference to the first contingent?—A. Yes, the first contingent. Of course there have been mistakes since, but I feel now, with reference to the whole situation that we must bear in mind that in Great Britain as well as here, we have been amateurs. We have made a great many mistakes, but we must just buck up and not make those mistakes again. We must avoid recrimination and paste the page down as finished, with the feeling that we have learned our lesson. That is true of all branches of the service.

Q. You were referring a moment ago to an alternative proposal. Will you amplify your statement.—A. If the Military Hospitals Commission adopt the principle of a distinct medical service, first of all the institutions it created would be under its own control absolutely, and the Army Medical Service would be formally absolved of all responsibility with regard to the returned soldiers.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. That would involve the right to employ and discharge the men who acted as medical officers.—A. Certainly the commission would have their own staff.

Q. And their position should be determined in the light of fitness as disclosed by their work, and they should be retained without regard to military rank.—A. Certainly, it would be a civilian medical staff.

Q. Like the staff of an ordinary hospital?—A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Would you please continue to amplify your statement.—A. Then the medical service would undertake—if asked for by name for any officer or nursing sister—to release that officer or nursing sister on leave from the medical service, so that their seniority in the Militia List would not be interfered with on employment with the Military Hospitals Commission, without there being any “strings,” if I may use a slang term, just as if they were going to serve on a railway. The other personnel, the orderly staff, which has been largely obtained heretofore from the C.A.M.C. Training Schools in the different districts, should be transferred to the Military Hospitals Command unit. Another source of supply would be the Special Service Companies, or under the compulsory service system, the men classified under Class “C”. I do not think that the Commission would have any difficulty in securing a sufficient orderly staff in that way. There is one very important question which still remains, and that is the question of Boards. I feel that it will be impossible for the pensions of the men to be properly determined and the country fairly treated unless these Boards remain military. There must be continuity of service. I do not think the Military Hospitals Commission should be allowed to undertake them at all because I am perfectly satisfied that a Board, to conduct the examination of men for pensions on a civilian basis, will result in the muleting of the country in millions.

Q. Apart from the Board of Pensions Commissioners?—A. The proceedings of Boards which are accepted by the Pensions Commissioners are the proceedings of Military Boards.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. That is at present?—A. Yes.

Q. And you say that is right?—A. It has to be so.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I received a letter dealing with that very point, and the complaint was made that the members of the Army Medical Corps who had seen no service overseas were not the type of men who should sit on Boards.—A. I thoroughly agree with that.

Q. You do?—A. Absolutely. I will give you a reason for that belief; you will be interested in hearing it. There is a little town in France known as Aire, 23 miles in the rear of the firing line, which lies directly east. There was an officer—I will not say what service he belonged to, but I am glad to say he did not belong to mine—who came up before a Medical Board in London for leave on account of what he was pleased to term shell shock. He had been at a military hospital, I think No. 4 London General Hospital, Denmark Hill, under the care of the best Harley street specialists, and he had come to this Board with the recommendation that he be given six months leave. The recommendation was accompanied by a very sympathetic letter. Fortunately, the Board was composed of medical officers who had served in France and they knew their man. They knew that this officer's duties never took him nearer to the firing line than

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Aire. He belongs to one of the Administrative Services, not a Combatant Service, and his work was done quietly in an office 23 miles away from the firing line. The result was that the Board recommended that he be given two weeks' leave of absence, and then return to duty. He was on the toboggan slide for six months here in Canada.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Perhaps longer?—A. Yes.

Q. The medical officer who has been at the front often has a personal knowledge of the men himself?—A. Yes, and of the circumstances of which the man speaks.

By the Chairman:

Q. Will you continue further with the amplification of your alternative proposal?—A. I have nothing further to say on the point except this: that from my point of view as a member of the militia of the country, it seems to be tantamount to asking that the Militia Department shall strip itself of a certain very important part of its functions and, having done so, proceed to provide the personnel for some one else to carry on the duty, because I do not think that service can be manned without very large demands upon us.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly not.

By the Chairman:

Q. Which demands you are quite prepared to fill?—A. As a disagreeable alternative, sir.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. But apart from this disagreeableness, what we want to know is whether you, from the experience you have had overseas, believe it would be in the best interests of the returned soldiers themselves, to continue the medical end of the Army Medical Corps as it is to-day, distinct from the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. My deliberate opinion is that the returned men and the public both will do better if the medical care remains in charge of the Army Medical service.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. As long as the patient is a member of the militia force?—A. Until he is ready for discharge or return to duty.

Q. It would seem rather a remarkable thing to place him under the charge of a civilian body while he is still a member of the militia?—A. And still in some cases at least liable to return to duty as a soldier, and we hope we will have many more of that class than we have had so far.

Q. Where would you fix the dividing line, where should the man pass from the control of the militia to the control of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. As things stand now the patient is in the care of the C.A.M.C.

Q. Exactly?—A. At the ship end of the gang plank at Halifax or Quebec he is under the care of the C.A.M.C. When he steps on to the dock he is under the care of the Military Hospitals Commission.

Q. But he is still a member of the militia?—A. He is just as much a soldier as before he was wounded or became sick, and he is still drawing pay and allowance.

Q. And may be returned to his unit in the course of a month or two?—A. The regulations in regard to men who are permitted to leave the other side for Canada are that they must be either hopelessly incurable or require not less than six months' treatment.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: Suppose he gets six months' treatment and is ready to return, that is your point?

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. If he has six months' treatment and is sent back again, there is an interval then where he is not really under the control of the military authorities, yet he is a [Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

member of the military body all that time?—A. There is a sort of military control maintained over him even in those circumstances. Since the New Year, I think, but at any rate recently, the system of the Military Hospitals Commission Command was devised which is a unit in the Canadian Expeditionary Force. The Military Hospitals Commission Command has in each of the Military Districts in command of each of its units, an officer, mostly selected because he has seen service overseas, who is a combatant, not a medical officer, and who reports to the commanding officer of the Military Hospitals Commission Command in Ottawa, the latter officer reporting to the Adjutant General.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Reporting as to the fitness of each individual, as to whether he will go back to service or not?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. How do you get the man back into military control again, whereby he is boarded? How, under the Chairman's alternative scheme, would he be returned back to the military authorities to be boarded for pension?—A. That would be done by the Board which is controlled by the A.D.M.S. of the district. In a large centre like Toronto, there would be a standing board which does that; and in outlying places that same board would probably be known as a travelling board, who would go out to visit the hospital, say in Whitby, whenever they were notified that there were twenty, thirty or forty men to be boarded.

By the Chairman:

Q. The civilian hospital would simply notify the A.D.M.S. and the Board would sit on the case, and make a finding regarding the men's pensions?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. In other words, you release him at the gang-plank and have to take him back to be boarded out?—A. He is for that few minutes again under the C.A.M.C. He has to be examined for other matters than for pension by the Board.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You made it very clear, and you will pardon me, perhaps, for asking the question, that he is still a member of the Canadian Militia whether he is in the Military Hospitals Commission Command or in the Overseas Command?—A. He does not cease to be a member of the militia technically in that way.

Q. So that it is in fact really a branch of the Canadian Militia, and is a connecting link, so to speak, between the Military Department and the Military Hospitals Commission body as such?—A. That is a unit in the expeditionary force.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Your point is that while still a soldier he is away from medical care?—A. He is away from medical control.

Q. He is not away from military control, because he is still in the Military Hospitals Commission Command?—A. He is carried on our list, but the list is probably in another town.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Under your alternative scheme to put him under the head of a department controlled by a Minister of the Crown, you would not have the Military Hospitals Commission Command as I understand; this new department is to be entirely divorced from the Militia Department, and the Militia Department have no control of these men while they are going through this new civil department. When they get through that department and go back to the Militia Department, they would be treated as new men?—A. They would not be re-attested. Their names would be carried on some list.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: You would have this anomaly: the Department of Militia would release a soldier for a certain length of time as to his control, and perhaps this new department might do something that you, as a military department, would not want done. Supposing he is in hospital for five or six months under the new scheme, where there is absolutely no control by the military department, because as I understand it, under the new scheme there is to be no Military Hospitals Commission Command.

Mr. BENNETT: It continues; it is the connecting link always between the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I do not think that is the idea of the Chairman. (To the Witness) If it is continued, General Fotheringham, you have the dual control again. You have the control of discipline by one body and control of medical care by the other.

Mr. BENNETT: General Fotheringham has explained that it is purely technical at the present moment.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: It is control for the sake of discipline.

The WITNESS: I see your point, and I agree with it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: My point is this: if there is going to be an absolutely new department created, which is to take hold of the soldier the minute he steps off the gang-plank at Halifax, and the Militia Department will have nothing more to do with that man until he gets through this new department and either gets a pension or goes back into the army, during that period the Department of Militia will have no authority, nor will the Military Hospitals Commission.

The WITNESS: You do not quite understand the scheme, sir.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: The Militia Department cannot ask to bring him back.

The CHAIRMAN: You do not understand the scheme. The scheme was always to keep the Military Hospitals Commission Command intact.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Then there is dual control, there is control as to discipline and as to medical care.

The CHAIRMAN: The head of the Military Hospitals Commission Command is in the Military Hospitals Commission, who does his business from the Military Hospitals Commission's offices.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: How could the Militia Department get him back in the meantime until the Military Hospitals Commission is through with him?

The WITNESS: They do not.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Then he is out of their control.

Mr. BENNETT: It is only fair to say that if he can come back to Canada under those conditions, there will not be a single man go back to the army.

The WITNESS: There should have been a good many.

The CHAIRMAN: None of them refused their discharge and went back to the army. They have been discharged and re-enlisted.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: You cannot make them re-enlist.

The WITNESS: That is part of our amateur way of doing it. A man signs an attestation to serve for the duration of the war, and six months more if needed.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): If he has never been discharged, he should be sent back.

The WITNESS: As soon as he is fit.

The CHAIRMAN: If he does happen to be lucky enough to get sound again, in my opinion he is entitled to his discharge.

The WITNESS: Sir Herbert, I cannot sit by and listen to that. We can never lick the Bosche in God's world if we adhere to that.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. In your alternative scheme, you said that the doctors would come from the A.M.C., and the nurses would come from the A.M.C.—that that could be done?—A. They would go over to the M.H.C. on leave as civilians.

Q. But you said they could not use their uniforms?—A. No.

Q. A regulation could be made that they could do so; would that help any?—A. It would not help at all; it would only make things worse.

Q. Such a regulation could be made?—A. It would be very undesirable. If a nursing sister goes into a ward and asks a hulking blackguard to clean some brass, and he refuses, and she says, "It's the doctor's orders," he says, "Who the hell is the doctor?"—and refuses to do it. He cannot be made to do it until some one is brought down, after some days' delay from some office farther up town, or in another town altogether, and the slow processes of military law are invoked, and punishment is inflicted, and there is nothing summary about it. It is long-range discipline, which is really worse than nothing. When the thing comes to a show-down the nursing sister has to come to a court-martial and give evidence. The situation is utterly intolerable, and in the army it is invariably avoided.

By the Chairman:

Q. Why cannot you take half a dozen men who are unruly in a hospital like that and send them to prison?—A. It cannot be done without process of law.

Q. Why cannot you take out half a dozen men and deal with them summarily?—A. We do if we are allowed. That is done in the hospitals that are under military control.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. You say that if that nurse or that doctor has a military uniform on, they will have more control over their patients, or that the one that has not a uniform on cannot exercise the same authority as the one that has?—A. I do.

Q. It is merely a matter of regulation—A. It does not provide the machinery for enforcing it. The point I tried to make is this, that in a civilian institution, what is to be noted as military crime in the way of insubordination and insolence can be otherwise passed over provided it is not a military offence. If I go into the General Hospital in Toronto, where I have seventy-two beds—that I have not seen for three years—and am insolently spoken to by a patient, I am in plain clothes, I have my own remedy which is to be patient, because usually the patient is sick; but if I am in uniform and go into a military hospital where a man who knows what discipline is sees my rank badges on me, and deliberately insults me by refusal—I mean, insults the uniform I wear,—and kicks against the whole system of discipline under which he is, by that act, you have to take notice of it; and in a military hospital you cannot turn him out, as you can in gross cases in a civil hospital.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. In military hospitals you cannot turn him out?—A. Impossible; he has a contract with the country and the country with him.

By the Chairman:

Q. Cannot you transfer him to some other place where he can be dealt with properly, instead of making a hundred men suffer because they have gone in that hospital under rigid discipline?—A. The other men would not suffer, and those restrictions would not apply to them; punishments would not apply to them.

Q. You go through any of our big general hospitals in Canada and you will find hundreds of men who are drawn from exactly the same walks of life as our soldiers, who are citizens in the same sense that our soldiers are; why do they not have trouble with them?—A. Sometimes they do.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Q. But we arrest them and take care of them accordingly?—A. Quite; but you cannot do it under things as they are now. We can where there is a medical officer in command. In the convalescent homes in Britain and France, and everywhere, the medical officer in command can impose punishment.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Could not that be done under the Military Hospitals Commission just the same?—A. I do not think so. He would have to call in the civil authorities. In a civil hospital one cannot go and order a man put under arrest and locked in a cellar and put on punishment diet, and so on.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. There are hospitals in England in which there is not an officer in uniform—the V. A. D. hospital in England?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And there is a Scottish unit that is run entirely by women?—A. Yes, but they have “chuckers-out.” They have sergeants with stripes on for the maintaining of discipline. Of course in military hospitals every sergeant, when he has not his stripes on, has his stripes put over his bed if he is in bed.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Cannot that be done with Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Certainly, if they wanted to do it that way. That would be about the best way they could do it; but remember that in the military hospitals under the present system we will see one officer who is charged with the enforcement of discipline for probably fifty, and there may be in some districts a hundred medical officers, who are not permitted to interfere in the matter of discipline. They are the ones who get the rub.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. Say that again, please?—A. Under the present system the only official charged with maintaining discipline in the Military Hospitals Commission hospital is the officer commanding the unit of the M. H. C. Command. Now, in the second military district of Toronto, he has his office up on College Street, and there are hospitals for which he is responsible in Hamilton, in Newmarket, in North Toronto, in Whitby—where they will soon have probably 1,500 patients in the one place. Now, it is utterly impossible for that man, sitting in Toronto, to maintain the daily grind of discipline. He can inflict punishments wholesale when he comes down, but he cannot keep a steady, gentle pressure on them, more particularly for the reason I have mentioned, for in hospitals examples will arise where the medical officer is flouted by a sergeant of the subordinate staff, as in the case of the back rests I spoke of.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. But there is a military man in command of each military hospital—a returned soldier?—A. Not in every one, but I suppose it is the rule.

Q. It is a rule, but they are short-handed in getting suitable men back in that position; but there are four in my country, and there is a returned officer in charge who administers discipline in that home?—A. Well, Mr. Bennett, put yourself in the place of the medical officer, who has perhaps served abroad, or has been in the militia for twenty years, and who is a returned officer from another service and his junior in rank placed over him in matters of discipline so that the medical officer is not allowed to occupy his rightful position of seniority. The effect is that in the mind of most of the men he is nothing but what they call a “damned doctor.”

Q. Is not that like the superintendent of a hospital? He discharges his duty, and he goes away?—A. Yes, but he is a civilian. Now, the mixture that we have just now is in my judgment, intolerable.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

By the Chairman:

Q. Frankly, General, I cannot see how a hundred men who were citizens of Canada before the war, who have been to the war and come back, and are a hundred men intending to continue as citizens of Canada, on returning to Canada require altogether different medical treatment?—A. Not medical treatment—require different handling.

Q. Require different disciplinary treatment than if those hundred men were in our ordinary hospitals; what change has come over those men? Are they different men, as the result? Are they much more undisciplined than before they went away?—A. They are probably better disciplined; and those very same men in France or Britain would give no trouble.

By Mr. Ross (Middlesex):

Q. The atmosphere of the country?—A. Certainly. When they get over here they get home, and you know the kind of treatment they get. I quite agree that kindness and cordiality and the welcome home is the very least they deserve; but I do contend that that should not be allowed to absolutely submerge the fact that they are still soldiers, and that the country still has duties to them, and they to the country.

By the Chairman:

Q. The Government has recently passed an Order in Council to give three months' bonus pay to each man upon discharge, who has been six months in service and has been overseas; now, would not the forfeiture of that pay, in whole or in part, on account of his conduct, be quite enough to restrain the returned soldier?—A. It would have a tremendous effect if the soldier knew who was responsible for ordering the forfeiture. It would be an excellent disciplinary measure.

Q. Don't you think, if you had those hospitals of such a character as in the alternative proposition, and a medical man in charge of a hospital had the right to recommend that the whole or a part of that money would be withheld from the man for misconduct, and he knew that, that would help as a disciplinary influence?—A. It would help a lot.

Q. There would be no difference as between the civilian medical attendance and the medical attendance they will get from the C.A.M.C.?—A. None at all.

Q. One is as efficient as the other?—A. Absolutely. As a matter of fact the personnel would be practically the same no matter from which source it was drawn.

Q. Then taking a hospital under the C.A.M.C., and a hospital under the Military Hospitals Commission Command—I am told this is so—are there not, in a hospital under the A.M.C., a very great many more people employed, in the way of orderlies and that sort of thing, than seem to be necessary, if it is under the Military end of this business, than there would be if it were in the nature of a civil hospital?—A. That is true, if you have regard to the male employees it is quite true.

Q. The percentage is very large is it not in the number of employees in a hospital planned by the Army Medical Corps?—A. Yes, decidedly.

Q. And therefore it would be very much more expensive?—A. I do not see how it could be more expensive, there will be just as large a personnel, only it will be largely female in the case of a civil hospital.

Q. I am told that in requisitions that are made under the Army Medical Corps for hospital attendants, that they would be about four to one compared to what are required in a hospital under the Military Hospitals Commission.—A. I would like to see the requisition.

Q. I cannot tell you just what the difference is, but, for your benefit, I will give you the information which I have on that point, I have not the list with me.—A. Thank you. The point is, to begin with, in a civilian hospital the arrangements are made on the basis of normal conditions, not taking into consideration the "peak of the load."

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

The very opposite is the underlying principle in our military hospitals. Great Britain is maintaining daily at least 40,000 empty beds in France alone, and quite as many or a great many more in Britain. The reason for this is that if the military hospitals are already full, and there is heavy fighting, there is no margin available for emergency and the whole system is based on providing for the highest number of casualties. For that reason the normal establishment is large. Many years of actual experience have enabled the authorities to lay down the personnel required for a hospital of 1,040 beds, that would be a general hospital, and in the case of a stationary hospital of 520 beds; the normal personnel required for those hospitals is laid down on the principle of all the beds filled. Those hospitals may be, it all depends on the fighting, for 9 or 10 months out of the 12 only occupied by five hundred, instead of a thousand, but all the personnel is there to carry on the work if the hospital is filled.

Q. And you would keep a hospital here manned in the same way that they are there?—A. No, for the simple reason that all such hospitals are formed on the basis of a fixed establishment which applies generally to all the hospitals established under the military regulations but with regard to such hospitals as might be established here there is not a fixed establishment laid down for them. I quite admit, as a matter of practice that the universal tendency in all such offices as the Registrar's Office, the Steward's Office, and that sort of thing, is to accumulate an unnecessary number of men and in speaking this way—

Q. And in your opinion that could be largely remedied?—A. Yes, that could be controlled.

Q. Then just let me ask you this: You have told us what the Military Hospitals Commission should do, as against the Army Medical Corps. You assume that the Army Medical Corps would not have charge of vocational training or anything of that kind?—A. No.

Q. That would be attended to by the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Certainly, and the work of repatriation and dovetailing in with the National Service.

Q. That would be all work for the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. Altogether, except when the Commission would apply to us for vocational medical officers to assist them out of their difficulties.

Q. Then in the case of vocational or functional training, would the Military Hospitals Commission have to apply to the Army Medical Corps to supply the needed officers?—A. Not unless the Commission wished to do so. They might pick out men elsewhere if they preferred. I would say, have the both.

Q. Your idea would be that it would be quite in order to absolutely disassociate the A.M.C. from having anything to do with vocational or functional training?—A. Absolutely from that part of it which consists in refitting a man for social duties. I do not say that you should relieve the A.M.C. from the control of that part of the work which is therapeutic in character.

Q. In your judgment would it be following the line of least resistance for the military authority to take over the activities that are necessary for the returned soldier—functional training and everything of that kind—take over the whole thing, or for the Military Hospitals Commission to make the adjustments necessary for that purpose?—A. I would not consider it wise to ask either of them.

Q. Suppose we decide that the duties should not be mixed, which would be the easiest way to get out of the difficulty, for the military authorities to take it over or the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. I would not advocate either of them doing it for one moment. There should be co-operation absolutely in the public interest.

Q. Then do you advocate the continuation of the dual system?—A. No, I do not.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Do you believe in single control?—A. Yes, of the purely medical side.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

By the Chairman:

Q. I want to make your point perfectly clear. I understand you advocate the continuation of the two activities working for the returned soldiers, the Army Medical Corps looking after the medical care and the Military Hospitals Commission superintending the vocational training and all kindred subjects?—A. Yes, the latter dealing with what may be called the civilian side of the case.

Q. So that a mixed service is what you recommend?—A. I would not say "mixed service," I would rather say "a combined service."

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Do you think that these two separate bodies can co-operate and go on with the work, and yet there be no dual control?—A. Yes, quite easily.

Q. If you will be good enough to state briefly your views in writing in that regard and let us have the information to-morrow, you will be doing us a favour.—A. I can give the information to you now.

Q. Well, give the information to us now if you would prefer to do so.—A. In all that pertains to the medical care of men who are not fit for duty the medical service should have control—that is of the duties ordinarily discharged by the medical service in any army. That is to say, they should have command of the hospitals, the discipline in the hospitals and the treatment carried on in the hospitals, and there their duties should end. On the other hand, the Military Hospitals Commission should discharge towards all those men who are still soldiers the duties which are ordinarily discharged towards them by the Pay Department, or the Engineering, Ordnance and Army Service Corps services; all that has to do with their pay, their feeding, housing, warming and clothing. The whole thing is done every day in every army in the world, and what I would like to see in the public interest as well as the interest of the soldier, is that the Military Hospitals Commission should adopt towards the A.M.C. the relations which are adopted towards the A.M.C. by other departments of the army.

Q. The rules that are adopted towards the A.M.C. by the other departments of the Government—A. Of the army. If that were done, Mr. Pardee, long and bitter experience and painful adjustment has produced a set of regulations which are as nearly perfect as anything human can be for present circumstances, and there is no friction, no difficulty.

By Mr. Sutherland:

Q. Is there such a condition as we have here in any other country?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of any country where they have adopted regulations to compare with those that are in existence in Canada at the present time?—A. No, I do not.

Q. There must have been some good reason for adopting them here. Is it possible that the medical service was not properly looking after the work which was developing upon it?—A. The reason for that is, I was not here. But I think it was quite possible that the forming of the Military Hospitals Commission was an emergency measure. Every one of us failed to imagine what this war was going to be, none of us perhaps imagine yet what the future will be. As evolution has proceeded, it is reasonable to say that the time for reconsidering the situation can arise, and that it is in the interest of the country to redefine the duties that have been laid not only on the Military Hospitals Commission, but probably on a good many other organizations in the country; and I claim that a redefinition can be made without loss of face or prestige to anybody.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a matter of small importance.

Hon. Mr. McCURDY: It may not be.

The WITNESS: In the public interest—

Mr. BENNETT: In the soldiers' interests, too.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

The WITNESS: The medical service can be permitted to do at home what it does without question most efficiently in every other field to-day, the very duties that devolve upon it in France and in England.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. If what you say is correct the whole Military Hospitals Commission should be handed back to the Department of Militia and Defence?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Because it was formed purely as an emergency measure?—A. No, sir. That is for the Cabinet to say.

Q. You have been very frank with us, and exceedingly fair?—A. I do not think it is necessary or desirable. My personal opinion, my observation, is that there is a great deal of very indispensable work for the Military Hospitals Commission to do.

Q. With relation to the readjustment and rehabilitation of the soldier?—A. That is what I have in mind.

Q. There is no part of the world in which a war department has been carrying on vocational training. The War Department in Britain does not carry on that work. It is carried on by the Lord Roberts Memorial organization?—A. I think there are many organizations.

Q. But it is not carried on by the War Department?—A. It is not carried on as part of the activities of the R.A.M.C.

The CHAIRMAN: May I read one short clause from a report made to the Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George, then Secretary of State for War, by Capt. Sir Henry Norman, who was sent to France to study the treatment and training of disabled and discharged soldiers. He says (reads):—

The result of these independent and often conflicting activities was inevitably confusion, overlapping and waste. Therefore, on the initiative of the Minister of Labour, a co-ordinating scheme was created by interministerial decrees of March 2nd and 16th, and May 11th, 1916, known as the "National Office for Mutilated and Discharged Soldiers." . . . The creation of this national office, and the provision of funds for its support, were voted unanimously by the Chamber of Deputies, and it is now in operation at 95, Quai d'Orsay, although the Senate has as yet taken no action in the matter.

The object of the National office is to co-ordinate the work of public departments and institutions dealing with discharged and mutilated soldiers, and to centralize all useful information on the subject.

That is what they do in France.

The WITNESS: We ought to do so, it would be a splendid thing if we did.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex): That is what the Military Hospitals Commission was supposed to be.

Mr. BENNETT: In the light of wider knowledge do you realize that some such central department should be established in this country, charged with the responsibilities that have just been mentioned by the Chairman, and incidental to that, the Military Hospitals Commission would deal with the medical services, relating to its civilian activities, and that the Commission as such would be and you would be under a responsible minister in the Department.

The WITNESS: There is no reason why that should not be; so long as the medical service was not disturbed in the normal discharge of its military duties. There is no reason why that should clash at all in doing what they are doing in England, allowing the Army Medical Corps to carry out those wishes.

Q. As I understand, in England the whole problem has not yet been solved, and in some places a civilian doctor is working; is that true?—A. Yes, that is true. All the V.A.D. places where the civilian staffs work—and there are dozens of such places—are under direct military control; they are not assigned to another department control.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotherington.]

Q. No, because in England they have public "pensions," and in the reports that we have seen from England the whole question of co-ordination of various departments is urgent, and it is possibly a new department?—A. Yes.

Q. You have heard the discussion, and know how it stands?—A. I have heard a little of it, but you may be quite sure that no matter what arrangement is made they will not make an arrangement which will put their military invalids into two separate groups under two separate controls, as we have it. They won't have a situation in which a man who goes sick after going overseas is put under one set of authorities, and a man who went sick before going overseas is left in normal military medical charge.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Before you leave that matter of hospitals, I would like to ask a question to clear up a matter of misapprehension: I understand some member of the committee to premise a question on a statement that there were a large number of attendants about the military hospital that were not necessary, which you explained by saying that the military hospitals are kept ready to receive their maximum capacity of patients?—A. I fancy you and I are not thinking of the same hospital.

Q. Do you know anything about the operation of the Military Hospitals Commission in this country with regard to whether their hospitals are filled or not? In other words, do those conditions which the members of committees stated apply to any of the Military Hospitals Commission's hospitals in this country?—A. I do not know, but I suppose that they would add to their staffs as the beds get full.

Q. Do you know that we had in this country a Military Hospitals Commission hospital which has kept its full staff and has not any patients at all?—A. No, I do not. I have not been around to see.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. I suppose the conclusion one might arrive at depends to a considerable extent on whether one views the returned man as a soldier or as a civilian, does it not?—A. Yes.

Q. That is the basis of it all, is it not, more or less?—A. Well, it is a common jumping-off place, at any rate.

Q. And if we view him purely as a civilian we adopt him back to civilian life, and our conclusions might be much more warranted than if we looked at him in the way you mentioned a moment ago, as an instrument of warfare, just as a soldier?—A. Well, I think that your views would be very much more apt to be erroneous.

Q. If you looked at him as a civilian?—A. Yes, because as a matter of fact he is not a civilian.

By the Chairman:

Q. As a matter of fact you always had in mind the thought that the time may come when you can say to that man, "You have got to go back to the front?"—A. Yes, that must be possible on the terms of the contract which he and the country entered into.

Q. You are going to hold him to the last drop of his contract, as far as that is concerned?—A. I would not think of it if I did not know what the situation is at the front. If you lived for eighteen months the life of a stray cat, and moved around only at night, your only thought and your one object in life being to kill the Bosches, and to avoid being killed yourself; if you went around the corner and saw lying there a friend with whom you had been talking a few minutes previously, all smashed up by a shell, I think your viewpoint would be the same as mine.

Q. Would you care to give an expression of opinion that if the Military Hospitals Commission were charged with the duties which you have assigned them here, it would be worthy of a separate head?—A. That is a matter of policy which is not for me to suggest.

[Surgeon-General John T. Fotheringham.]

Q. I thought you might have an opinion of your own.—A. My opinion would be, no; I think it would be a case of putting a man to a boy's job.

By Hon. Mr. McCurdy:

Q. Can you tell us what the regulations are with regard to transferring individuals from England to Canada who are affected with venereal diseases?—A. I have had no service in England, but my understanding of the situation is that no man is allowed to leave there with active venereal disease which may cause trouble from a public point of view. You must understand that there are two venereal diseases, gonorrhea and syphilis: it is a very easy matter to hold up every man who has gonorrhea, but a man may return who has a syphilitic taint, and who has been treated and now shows no disease but may yet become the father of an infected child.

Q. What are the regulations with regard to venereal diseases?—A. The danger to the public lies almost completely in the situation here. The situation with regard to this disease in Canada is interesting from the fact that the percentage of incidence of this disease reported among members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force is the very same in Canada as it is in England, although there are probably ten women available in England to one in Canada, the percentage of venereal diseases is the same. There is a small percentage of our men who will get venereal disease, no matter where you put them, if there are women around; they will not get it in the field, but at the same time there is the same percentage of soldiers get venereal diseases right here in Canada, after enlistment, as there are in England, where the opportunities are probably ten times more numerous than they are here. This point is one distinctly in favour of the men as regards their moral quality.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Of course your remarks with reference to this disease only apply to the men who are enlisted in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and not to the general population?—A. Certainly, they apply only to the army.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. And your references to the Canadian Expeditionary Force apply only to a limited number of men who throw themselves open to the contraction of this disease?—A. Yes.

The Committee adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Room 301,

June 12, 1917.

The committee resumed at 8 o'clock p.m.

Mr. N. F. R. KNIGHT, called, sworn and examined.

The WITNESS: I would like to make a word of explanation. It is not my purpose to exaggerate in any way in regard to any of these cases. I use them simply for the purpose of pointing out that there are flaws in various departments. What has struck me more than anything else is the amount of delay involved in order to secure the adjustment of any case coming in. Out of perhaps 250 cases I have selected just a few. Most of them are very closely related to one another in the degree of complaint.

The first case is that of No. 75572, G. E. Drew, late 29th Battalion. So far as I know, all the facts I state in connection with this case are correct; I took special pains to find out. The circumstances were reported to me by one of our executive committee, who was ready to vouch for them; I believe the case to be as stated.

This man was wounded at St. Eloi, April 19, 1916, in right arm, right side and head. He was a prisoner in Germany for one month. Upon arrival in England I understand he had his arm amputated. Four months ago he arrived here and was sent out to Vancouver and has been living there since. I understand his folks are not in too comfortable circumstances. Four months ago he received a letter from the Board of Pensions Commissioners stating that his claim for pension was under consideration, but he never received a cent unless within the last fortnight. I took this case up with the Pensions Board by telephone, because I thought it could not possibly be true. In reply to my inquiries about the case I received a very rude remark over the 'phone. I insisted on knowing what was the matter and was told that an officer at headquarters had had charge of the man's file but that he had lost the file and could not find it. That is why no adjustment had been made in the case.

The next case is that of No. 418581, Pte. J. Saunders, late 42nd Battalion. This man discharged April 26, 1917, due to shrapnel wound in the right shoulder. His previous employment was railroading. Unable to continue work as he cannot lift his arm above the shoulder. Still has three pieces of shrapnel in his shoulder. Married, with two children. His pension of $8 per month is insufficient.

On the 19th of May I brought this man's case to the attention of the Board of Pensions Commissioners. On the 29th I received a letter back. The Board wrote stating that Saunders must have a medical certificate filled out by his own practitioner. Now, I know of one case where a medical practitioner charged a man $5 to make out such a certificate. In this case, however, the medical certificate was obtained and shows he has three fractures above the right shoulder. He cannot bring his right arm away from his body for more than three inches at the elbow-joint. Has frequent headache as a result of injury to the scalp. Foreign body probably still present. Cannot use his right arm unless with the elbow resting on right hip. This certificate is signed by Dr. H. B. Carmichael, 515 Wellington street, Montreal. Nothing has been done in this man's case yet in the matter of a re-hearing, so far as I am aware.

Then there is the case of No. 11014, 19th Battalion, C.E.F. This man was discharged with a pension of $8 a month. He was formerly a jockey and enlisted, I understand, living in St. Catharines. On his discharge, when he was given the pension of $8, it was said something was wrong with his heart. An X-ray examination showed a 30 per cent enlargement of the heart due to shell-shock. On his discharge he was told by the Medical Board that he was syphilitic. He did not believe he was syphilitic, and he went to a physician in St. Catharines, who took a specimen of his blood and sent it to the pathological laboratory of the New York Polyclinic, and the director, Dr. F. M. Jeffries, declared the blood to be negative to the Wassermann test. I immediately wrote the Pension Board, and received the following reply (reads):

SIR,—I have the honour, by direction, to acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date, relative to the pension awarded the soldier marginally named, and to inform you that the medical certificate forwarded therein has been carefully perused by the medical advisor of this Commission, who reports as follows: "The medical certificate sent verifies the diagnosis, but gives no estimate of disability. The estimate of all previous medical boards justifies the award already made. Therefore an increase of pension is not indicated."

That is the opinion of the Board of Pension Commissioners. Now, the trouble is that the man is not able to work. There are cases I know, very few, where men might lie down on the job, "play the old soldier," as they say. From all accounts this man is not of that kind. He is incapable of working because of dizziness and palpitation of the heart, due to service. A pension of $8 in a case like that seems absurd. I have also the certificate of Dr. W. J. Macdonald, who took an X-ray of his heart, and he says there is a thirty per cent enlargement; but there is nothing here that I have received that would warrant me to believe that they are going to give it to him.

This is the case of a man No. 21623, Private T. W. Kidd, 5th Battalion. This man's pension was cut off last month. I finally got word about two weeks from the time I first inquired from the Board of Pension Commissioners that they had acted. Two weeks ago, on May 28, I sent them a minute of the case, and I have this letter:—

I have the honour, by direction, to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated May 28, relative to the non-payment of pension in the case of the marginally noted, and in reply would advise you that this pension has been withheld pending a report of his medical re-examination on January 1, 1917.

In other words, they paid him pension for February and March, and then stopped the payment on that medical examination of January 1. Now, they have stopped it altogether, and no notification has been sent to the man why his pension is stopped. That is the last reply I received.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What is the date of that reply?—A. June 11; the inquiry was May 28.

Here is No. 61652, Private J. C. Poirier, 22nd Battalion, enlisted September 14, 1914; wounded September 21, 1915; returned to Canada, February 23, 1916; right eye gone; left eye badly affected; first recommended as seventy-five per cent disabled; now cut down to forty per cent. As to this man Poirier, I saw a man to-day that knows him very well; he is trying to work in the post office.

The CHAIRMAN: His case, No. 30-A, has already been before us. The memorandum states that he had been examined by three Boards; that he received $192 per annum for one year, and that the Pension Board did not consider that there was any just cause for the claim.

The WITNESS: We took that man up for reboarding.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Did you see him?—A. I saw him when I was in Montreal last time, about three weeks ago.

Q. How fit was he?—A. He wears a very thick glass on the left eye. The right eye is out.

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

Q. Has he been able to get any employment?—A. He was working in the post office.

Q. Is he able to continue?—A. No, sir, fears he will have to quit, because he cannot see well.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. What sort of work does he do?—A. Sorting, I think. He enlisted in Montreal with the 22nd French Canadians.

The CHAIRMAN: Private Poirier claimed that he had been recommended by the Medical Board held in Montreal for pension on the basis of 75 per cent incapacity, and that this had been reduced to 50 per cent by the Board of Pensions Commissioners. The Medical Board which examined him at Shorncliffe on January 15, 1916, said his incapacity had been total for three months, then one-half permanently. The Medical Board at Quebec considered the incapacity at 100 per cent for three months, three-quarters for three months, and one-half subsequently. At the further Board at Montreal his incapacity was stated at fifty per cent. He was therefore discharged on 16th July, 1916. The Board of Pensions Commissioners granted a pension in Class 4, $192 per annum, for one year from July 27, 1916. There is no evidence of fracture of the skull, although there is a scar above the right ear, due to scalp wound. It is considered there is no just cause for the claim.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. Is he a single man?—A. It does not say here whether he is or not.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: They recommend 50 per cent pension.

The CHAIRMAN: Apparently the trouble is that there being no 50 per cent pension he was awarded a 40 per cent.

WITNESS: The trouble is that the man's eye is still growing worse, and he is losing the sight of the other eye. His claim to me is that he has never been before a real eye-specialist.

By the Chairman:

Q. His year is up in July, and he can then be reboarded and then he will have to be reported on to see whether his pension drops or is continued; if it is worse, he will get the benefit?—A. The difficulty is that this man can only write French, I believe. This letter is from the local secretary at Montreal, and because the man has not got a letter from the Department he thinks they do not care anything about it. I understand now they have brought a returned soldier up from Montreal to look after letters of that kind, he is a member of our Association in Montreal, he came here yesterday, and has gone to work to-day.

The next is an unusual case, No. 65486, Private Edward James, enlisted November 2, 1914, in the 24th Battalion, and was discharged September 1, 1916. This man when he enlisted took his three sons with him, and they have all been at the front. One of them, Herbert, was killed on Vimy Ridge. This man was gassed, and I took his case up with the Pension Board and was immediately told that he was not entitled to any pension because of wrongful statement when he enlisted; he stated he was 45 years old, when he enlisted, and he was 56. I know that in the British Service they overlook that sort of thing now, and since the man has given his three sons to the service and was gassed himself, and is now in bad condition, we think he is entitled to some consideration.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. Was he on active service?—A. Yes.

Q. And you are sure about his being refused a pension?—A. Yes, I took the case up personally and I was told by the office of the Board of Pensions Commissioners, that he had forfeited his claim by wrongful enlistment.

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

Q. By giving incorrect information with regard to himself?—A. Yes. I have a medical certificate here from Dr. James Robertson, 1367, Wellington St., Verdun, stating that this man is suffering from asthma due to the gas-poisoning, difficult breathing appearing on the heart exertion. Decided limp of the left leg, and weakness of the same ankle. This patient requires an abundance of air and rest to counteract the asthma condition which would also enable the left leg to become stronger. I consider Edward James disabled practically for a number of years, on account of his age and asthma condition. In reference to this case, the fact is that the man passed probably three Medical Boards successfully before he got to the front. There might be unusual cases where men were put on and the papers were torn up as stated this afternoon; I do know of one battalion in which it is stated that was done wholesale, but that was not the case in this instance. This man probably passed three Medical Boards, and he passed it in England anyway before he crossed the channel so that he must have been in pretty good condition at that time.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. Where did he get his Board after his injury?—A. In England.

Q. What did they certify?—A. I have not their report, the Pension Board has that on their file.

I have another case here, No. 25868, Corp. James McRae, 14th Battalion. This is a case of corneal opacities. This is another man that sustained the total loss of sight of one eye, and the other is fast going. The first Medical Board at Dibgate said that he was suffering from defective vision, partially due to the old corneal opacities and partially to shock of concussion from exploding shell at Ypres on April 25, 1915. The main thing about this is that this man, too, went through medical boards, and he has to stand at a distance of 20 feet or more and with one eye covered, to read the small print; they take one eye at a time so that there could not have been much wrong with his eyes when he left Canada for England.

By the Chairman:

Q. If the test were applied to him?—A. It is supposed to be applied to him, and if the medical man who was the agent of the Dominion Government overlooks that, the Government is responsible for such condition of affairs. The fact is that after the man is once taken it is no consolation to him when he comes back and is going blind to receive a letter from the department stating:—

“I have the honour, by direction, to forward herewith a copy of the order of the Board of Pensions Commissioners for Canada, discontinuing your pension.

Enclosed please find statement of your account to date.”

Q. They cut off his pension after inquiring into the matter?—A. They cut it off, and at the time they cut it off his wife was in the hospital undergoing treatment, and the man himself was unable to work, consequently he would probably come to the local branch and ask for a “hand-out.”

Q. Why does he not work?—A. He is trying to work steadily, but he is practically blind.

By Hon. Mr. Marcil:

Q. He received nothing at all?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: He may be reboarded.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. If one eye is completely gone why does he receive nothing at all?—A. I suppose they say it was caused by these corneal opacities, whatever they are.

Q. The one eye was not blown out?—A. No, sir, shell shock.

The CHAIRMAN: Partly natural and partly shell shock.

The WITNESS: They cannot understand this thing. Take the case of this man, they write him that his disability is due to an old disease that he had. He went before several medical boards and they passed him, and he cannot understand now how they can take up this old medical complaint. He thinks it is simply to reduce his pension, that the policy of the Government is to offer him as little as they can so long as he is satisfied with it.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the policy of any and every Government, and always will be.

The WITNESS: This Government has declared itself, the Premier himself in the House said that that was not his policy, but that he desired to insure justice to every returned soldier. You cannot blame a man like this man, and the old man 56 years of age, who came back and was told: "You were a few years too old; you are entitled to no consideration." The old man can say: "I took my three sons with me, is that not worth something?" The responsibility comes in when the Government examining Board did accept him as fit.

The CHAIRMAN: I should think that was a case for reboarding, where the man is apparently going blind.

The WITNESS: Here is the case of Pte. Charles Hamilton, No. 16650, 7th Battalion. He claims that they withheld his pension, or rather gave him no pension because he had a pretty good job. He was wounded at Ploegstraate on August 9, 1915, returned to Canada in November of the same year, was boarded at Quebec and placed in Class 2 on pay and allowance. He was subsequently boarded in Vancouver, placed in Class 1 and discharged without a pension. This man is still suffering from the effects of wounds, having a large piece of shell embedded in the muscles of his back. His former occupation was that of marine fireman or labourer. At his board in Vancouver he was questioned as to his weekly earnings for the past twelve months, in reply to which he stated that he was employed as watchman by the Vancouver Waterworks Department, was in receipt of fair pay and was, up to that time, quite satisfied with the treatment accorded to him by the Military authorities. Some of these men are asked questions when they come before these boards. No man, unless he is playing a game, wants to make himself out worse than he is, consequently when they come before one of these boards and the doctor asks them how they are, they say: "I am feeling pretty fine to-day." Then the medical board gets it into their heads that the man is all right. I have another case of a man who if he works two days in an office, and does hard work, is no good for a week afterwards. This man Hamilton, if he is in the shape he states, should be boarded again and properly cared for.

The CHAIRMAN: It was stated here by Major Todd that the question of earnings did not affect a man's pension at all.

The WITNESS: There is a clause, sir, in the order in council to that effect. But I have the case of this other man who was getting full pension, I have the letter in front of me—the reason I am not bringing this up now is because I do not understand where the man stands in the matter. He was at his work in the Seed Grain Department, under Mr. Campbell, and a civilian doctor came around in January, dressed in civilian clothes and asked him how he was feeling. At that time he was getting a pension which was awarded for one year until November 30, 1917; and that pension, after this visit by the civilian doctor in January—who simply asked a few questions and gave the man no examination—was cut down to $16, after they had once granted it saying that he was to have a pension for one year.

The CHAIRMAN: You had better give the name and number of this case, it will not jeopardize the situation.

The WITNESS: I have been on this man's case trying to get him re-attested and put in a convalescent home. His father is crippled. The man is willing to go if they will give him sufficient pension so as to continue the $20 he has been paying to his father and young sister ever since he enlisted. They wanted to send him down to Miss Richardson's at Chaffey's Lock. He cannot afford to go on the $16 pension he is receiving. Mr. Campbell says he will have to discharge him, as he cannot have a man working one or two days and then being off for a week. The case is that of Arthur William Markey, his pension number is 4295.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Your complaint is that his pension was cut off on account of his earnings?—
A. That is as he claims. I have had no denial from the Pensions Board.

The CHAIRMAN: Except the general denial they gave before this Committee that that is not so.

The WITNESS: I called them up and asked them why his pension had been cut off. They told me the reason was that his pension had been granted while he was in the jurisdiction of the Military Hospitals Commission, which was irregular. As a matter of fact, his pension was not granted while he was under their care; he was six months away from their care, I am told.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. It was granted while he was under the care of the Military Hospitals Commission?—A. It was irregular if granted while still in the hospital. While a man is under the jurisdiction of the Hospitals Commission a pension is not supposed to be granted until he is discharged; and only the Military Hospitals Commission can recommend a man's discharge after he comes under their care.

By Mr. Middlebro:

Q. That is because he would be getting a pension, separation allowance and subsistence?—A. As a matter of fact, he was not under the jurisdiction of the Military Hospitals Commission when the pension was granted. Of, course, I took the matter up over the phone first, and found out afterwards that the information given me by the Pensions Board was not correct. I got Major Todd on the case yesterday, trying to get this man re-attested and sent to a convalescent home. The doctor examined him down at the Military Hospitals Commission.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What is he working at?—A. As a clerk in the Seed Grain Department.

By the Chairman:

Q. You are trying to get him reinstated?—A. They have already given him their authorization and he is to have another examination next Thursday. May be we will get him in by that time. This case I have been working upon for several weeks. I have asked Mr. Campbell, his chief, to keep him employed until some other provision is made for him.

Next, I wish to bring forward the case of No. 6897, Private John Carolan. I first took up the case of this man with the local authorities in the early part of April. He told me at the time that unless something was done to ease his head that he would go over to Ann Arbour and offer himself to the Surgeon in the University there, with the idea that they should do something for his head or kill him. He had a depression in his skull that you could put your three fingers in, and there was no protection whatsoever underneath. I took the case up with the A.D.M.S. of the District and he immediately told me to have the man report before the local standing Board. Well, the man had already gone to Major Cruickshanks, head of the local staff there, and he said he could not do anything with him, that the putting in of a silver plate in the man's head belonged to a by-gone age or something to that effect. So the poor fellow told me at that time that he was going over to Ann Arbour to offer himself to the surgeons there. I asked him to stay until we had gone over his case. Matters drifted along for weeks, and I brought his case to the attention of the Pensions Board here—he was receiving a pension of $16—and the Military Hospitals Commission. Then I received a letter saying that the A.D.M.S. had ordered the man up to London, where they would have an aluminum cap made for his head. Before this Carolan had gone to the States and had an aluminum cap made at an expense to himself of about $90, I believe. The trouble was that when he was working his head perspired and it got wet and drawn and uncomfortable underneath, and he had to take the cap off. In the meantime, however, the London authorities were too late. They wrote saying that Carolan was to be brought to London to get measured for one of those aluminum caps, but he had gone over to the States. This case was pending since the first week in April.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Where has he gone?—A. He has gone to Ann Arbour, I suppose.

By the Chairman:

Q. Ann Arbour, Michigan?—A. Yes, sir. This man was car inspector at the Dodge Bros. Motor Company, earning $8 per day when the war broke out. He immediately quit his job and enlisted right off in the 1st Battalion. He came back with this depression in the skull, and nothing has been done for him.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. You say he was given a pension?—A. He was given a pension of $16, but there was no protection given him for this injury. When he showed it to me I put my fingers in the depression. There was nothing but a sheet of membrane over it, and it was a running sore. The authorities are looking for him now, but he has been gone for several weeks perhaps.

Captain KENNETH MACPHERSON: Did he not get a bullet wound in the head?

The WITNESS: He received a bullet wound here (illustrating), and the bullet came out at the side of his head. While working at the factory with no protection for his injury he laid his cap off one day and a small piece of steel flew off the machine and hit him right underneath the sore. He was unconscious for days, and afterwards at periods would relapse into unconsciousness. I took his case up with the D.D.M.S. in the first part of April, before I went to Winnipeg. I have a copy of the letter I received.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. What answer was given?—A. Carolan was directed to appear before the Standing Board, but he had already appeared. In my last letter to the officer I stated that I understood the man had already appeared before the Board in Windsor.

Q. What was the date of the last letter?—A. In the latter part of April. The last letter I got was dated the 28th of May. There had been a lapse of nearly a month.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. What was the date of the last previous letter?—A. The 3rd of May. The letter dated the 28th of May reads as follows:—

“Ottawa, 28th May, 1917.

No. 6897, Pte. L. J. Carolan,
1st Battalion.

Dear Sir,—I have now heard from the A.D.M.S., M.D. No. 1, London, regarding the marginally noted man.

2. The A.D.M.S. states that he has been examined by the Medical Board in Windsor and that, in their opinion, further surgical treatment is not indicated, but they suggest that some protection for his old wound, in the nature of an aluminum skull cap, should be provided. Instructions have, therefore, been sent to Carolan to report in London as soon as possible in order that the necessary appliance may be ordered.

Yours faithfully,

(Sd.)

W. T. MOORE,

Sec'y. to Medical Supt.

N. F. R. Knight, Esq.,
Great War Veterans Association,
Citizen Building,
Ottawa, Ont.

The examination referred to in the letter was the old one I suppose. Then on June 2 I received the following letter. (Reads):

"LONDON, Ont., June 2, 1917.

No. 6897, Pte. John Carolan,—

With reference to the marginally named, I have been directed to inform you that on the 21st ultimo a communication was forwarded to Major C. R. Cruickshank, Windsor, Ont., enclosing Transport Warrant, and asking that Carolan be requested to report to the A.D.M.S., Wolseley Barracks, this city, as soon as possible. To date he has not reported and you are requested to have him apply to Major Cruickshank for the Transport Warrant, and to report to the A.D.M.S. without delay.

(Sgd.) J. G. WOOD, Captain,

For A.D.A.A. and Q.M.G., M.D. No. 1."

I immediately wired Windsor to know whether they could not get hold of Carolan, but found out he had left for the States a fortnight or more previously. What I am drawing attention to, I do not want to make a big fuss about it, is the delay which occurs. I took that case up first in April. I happen to know the man to whom I wrote at first, and I believe he is conscientious. I have every confidence in him, but it is not the man who is responsible, so much, it is the system. We are looking too much to the system and too little to the individual in that system. We go down to the Military Hospitals Commission and they send us to the Pensions Board. The latter will send us to Colonel Potter. That officer sends us to the Soldiers' Aid Commission and that organization refers us to Headquarters. The order is not correct but it conveys the idea. You keep on going round in a circle and cannot fix the responsibility in any matter.

By Mr. Bennett:

Q. And you get back to where you started in the first place?—A. Yes, but by that time you feel so mad you nearly explode. I have some more pension cases, but I am not going to bring them up now.

By the Chairman:

Q. Bring up anything which you think is pertinent. If they are the same kind of cases perhaps there is no use in repeating them?—A. I have got a list of cases of tubercular soldiers. But I want to mention a case in the Assigned Pay and Separation Branch. I have a letter from Mrs. W. G. Haynes, wife of No. 341705, Sergeant W. G. Haynes. In this case I called up the branch in question, wanting to know why the wife had not received any assigned pay since September, 1916. This woman has a boy three years old.

Q. Where does Mrs. Haynes live?—A. She lives at No. 10 Market Avenue, Verdun, Montreal. It is the oddness of the reply I received in this case which causes me to bring it to your notice. The officials, when I started to make inquiries over the telephone, told me in all cases it was not wise to tell the wife of a man why her pay was shut off. Naturally I thought Haynes had committed some awful crime. Now it seems that he has been overpaid, the excess of pay running perhaps into hundreds of dollars for all I know. That is the reason Mrs. Haynes is not receiving assigned pay allowance. Now where the Department makes a mistake of that kind it is the woman in the case who suffers, just as Mrs. Haynes is suffering. All she is receiving now for the support of herself and child is the Patriotic Fund grant and separation allowance.

The CHAIRMAN: The C.P.F. is ready to help in the matter of assigned pay if the man is overdrawn. If a man has been overdrawn he has got to pay that back. The complaint is, why there should ever be a mistake made in allowing him to overdraw to that extent.

The WITNESS: They claim that this matter is being investigated. They say they have no trace in the office of previous letters to the lady, but she claims she has written several times to the Pay Department.

The CHAIRMAN: The woman would not suffer in Montreal, because the Patriotic Fund would see that she got what she needed, as far as that is concerned,

The WITNESS: Here is a case of the wife of Sgt. W. R. Waugh, 16th Battalion, missing October 8th. In this case all pay and allowances were stopped in December 1916. In this case a wife and two children were cut off without any money to live on. I took the case up personally with the Pensions Board on 10th May, and heard nothing more until the 29th May. I was then told by an official in the Board of Pensions Commissioners that they would do something in the matter, although they were not bound to do so, but as it was an unusual case they would take it up. I don't know what has been done in this case, or what they have paid her, but I do know that the Winnipeg Association has been helping this woman out, giving her so much at different times to keep her going along.

The CHAIRMAN: The Patriotic Fund helps hundreds and hundreds of cases where Government separation allowances and assigned pay does not reach the right party.

The WITNESS: In connection with the Patriotic Fund, I have a complaint on general principles. The Patriotic Fund has now adopted the practice that when men are allowed to go home from convalescent homes, and allowed sixty cents a day subsistence, the Patriotic Fund is cutting off the allowances. Now, I know they have got it all figured out on a basis of $71 a month.

The CHAIRMAN: We do not think they are in need if they get $71 a month.

The WITNESS: But does it amount to as much as they would receive the other way, Sir Herbert?

The CHAIRMAN: No, but this is the way it figures out. The man is well enough to go home and do the light chores around the home, to go daily from the hospital and come back again. He is there in that home, and the women and children are no longer without the breadwinner. He gets $33 a month pay; she gets $20 a month separation allowance, and $18 that comes from 60 cents a day, that is $71 a month, and her husband has practically all his time if he wants to do any little odd jobs, or contribute.

The WITNESS: He is not permitted to do that, under the regulations of the convalescent home; but here is a claim that has been put forward—in several cases the doctor has recommended that the man eat eggs or other expensive food. One fellow writes that the doctor orders him chicken.

The CHAIRMAN: Then the hospital should supply it.

The WITNESS: But the hospital does not supply it, and therefore it works a hardship on him, and he cannot get the food that they say is necessary for him.

The CHAIRMAN: If it is hospital delicacies the Government should supply them.

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a case where the man eats food at the hospital; it is where the 60 cents allowance is made to enable him to get food of a special character.

The CHAIRMAN: The Patriotic Fund always works on the basis that it helps the woman and child while the man is away. The family is united; the man brings with him the whole $33; previously he only sent $15; that is, he brings $18 more of his own wages and he brings $18 or 60 cents a day sustenance allowance. That is, the woman has $33 that he adds by being with her. When a man can bring home $71 a month to his wife they do not consider it a matter of need.

The WITNESS: But take the matter of vocational training; they allow a dollar instead of sixty cents. You cannot keep a man on sixty cents. If you figure up the $71 in some of those places it is mighty slim kind of living; I know it costs me a lot more than that to live in Ottawa.

The CHAIRMAN: If we should add to that $71 we would be in danger of treating those families even better than the average family; but the main matter which causes us to bar them out is the simple fact that the man is home again. The Patriotic Fund is to help the family while the breadwinner is away. The man is home again to meet with his family, and their total income is as large as it usually has averaged in such families before. $71 a month for twelve months in the year, $852 a year, is certainly well above the average income of the ordinary man taken throughout Canada as a whole.

The WITNESS: I have several cases of estates in the Estate Department, but I prefer to handle them generally. There is a great deal of delay incident to the operation on the other side of the ocean. For instance, the chief of the Estate Branch told me that it is impossible to adjust the estate of a deceased soldier in less than seven months. Now, seven months is a long time. I know the troubles on the other side, but it seems to me that some arrangement could be perfected by which that matter could be adjusted far quicker than it is.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Suppose all his property is here in Canada, what difference does it make to them over there?—A. It is not so much about the property, the few little trinkets a man has; it is the matter of his back pay, which in some cases may mean hundreds of dollars.

Q. I can understand that personal trinkets would take a long time, but I don't see why his back pay should be kept?—A. It is the lack of back pay that works hard-ship on wife and children in some cases.

Q. Nobody is being prejudiced by the effects being kept there, as long as the money is paid?—A. It is the money that is needed.

There is another man I want to refer to—Harry G. Hall, of Winnipeg. This man is the brother of Sergt. Hall, a winner of the V.C. (deceased). He has been to the front—a returned man. He is the only support now of his widowed mother. He, with another returned soldier, were employed as clerks in the Militia Department in Winnipeg, I understand it was the Pay Department, the Pay Office at Winnipeg. They have been given notice to quit on May 31. In their places civilians have been hired, and other civilians are working. I am not going to read this letter, because he gets bitter in some places.

The CHAIRMAN: It is just a question of competency.

The WITNESS: This man is an accountant; both men are accountants. They held good positions before they enlisted for the front, and I rather imagine it is because they have said things rather openly to men who are civilians, and men who, while not their equal in accountancy, were placed over them in rank in the office; I think that is where the trouble lies. I know this fellow Hall—I don't know the other man—but

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

Hall is a very bright fellow, and a good boy, and naturally, with his other brother killed, and he alone left with the mother and sister perhaps dependent on him, he has got to make more money than $75 a month, which, I think, is the amount paid. He saw civilians come in from the outside, men who were not his equals, as far as knowledge of accountancy goes, and he saw them drawing from $90 to $100, while he was getting the same pay as the girls in the office, do you blame him for saying something under these circumstances?

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. I do not blame him for saying something, but it is better perhaps to say those things in a different way; there is no use cutting off your nose to spite your face?—
A. The reason I am bringing it up is this: it has been stated that returned men would receive the preference in making Government appointments.

Q. And so they are?—A. To a certain extent they are, but right here in the Government departments we have men who are drawing perhaps $50 a month as messengers, or something of that sort, and they took those jobs on the promise that they would be given better positions when vacancies occurred; but they come to me, day after day, and complain that openings have offered they have not been given the preference. I simply want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that returned soldiers do expect this preference. This brings me to the proposition of the three months' pay. I was asked to put in a protest formally; I say hundreds of men employed in Government departments who have come back from the front are shut of from the receipt of this three months' pay.

The CHAIRMAN: A letter was received here this morning from Major Purney, and a copy of it was given to the members of the committee.

Captain MACPHERSON: He does not deal with the whole of that question. There are men who are not in the Civil Service who are not being given that either, and they may be two or three months out of a job before they get that three months' pay.

The CHAIRMAN: Here is the Order in Council:—

"That as the intention when granting this additional pay was to enable discharged soldiers of the Expeditionary Force to maintain themselves until they had obtained employment in civil life, the Order in Council authorizing said pay and allowances be amended to exclude the following:—

- (a) Civil employees of the Federal or Provincial Government who on discharge are privileged to return to their former positions in the Civil Service.
- (b) Members of the permanent staff or the permanent force of the militia who are privileged to return to permanent duty again."

It says nothing with reference to any men who might be taken on.

Capt. MACPHERSON: I have met officials of the Ottawa office, and they said there had been no decision given in regard to that, but I understand there is contemplated an amendment to the amendment, and some of them called up the office and found out that this applied also to men employed in temporary positions and that payment was suspended or held back until after this proposed amendment to the amendment had become an Order in Council.

The CHAIRMAN: Well we have this letter of Major Purney here, a copy of which has been given to each member, protesting strongly against this provision.

The WITNESS: We wanted to get this matter cleared up for this reason, that these men when they heard about this three months' pay being allowed had begun to consider plans for replacing clothes they had left when they enlisted; some of us have not been able to get a second suit of clothes since we have returned home—I am sure that is the case with myself, and it is hard for a man to get any decent kind of suit for less than $30 or $35. They cannot wear the old clothes that they left, and lots of these men when they heard that they were to get this three months' pay expected to be able to purchase some decent clothing, and now they find that this amendment to the amendment or whatever is proposed cuts them off.

The CHAIRMAN: The original Order in Council was passed on April 18, 1917, P.C. 1091, and this was amended by P.C. 1362, one month later, on the 18th of May, which further defines the original Order in Council and includes these exemptions from its privileges. The original Order in Council is as follows:—

"The Committee of the Privy Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Militia and Defence advise that every person who has served, is now serving or may in the future serve as an officer, nursing sister, warrant officer, non-commissioned officer, or man in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and who has been or may hereafter be honourably retired or discharged from such service, after six months continuous service during the present war, be continued on the pay and allowances of the rank held at the date of retirement or discharge, for a period of three months, if the said service or any portion thereof has been performed overseas."

The amending Order in Council, P.C. 1362 reads as follows:—

"The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 11th May, 1917, from the Minister of Militia and Defence, recommending with reference to the Order in Council of April 18, 1917 (P.C. 1091) continuing for a period of three months the pay and allowances of officers, men, etc., discharged from the Canadian Expeditionary Force—

(1) That the expression 'Pay and Allowances' therein be considered as including the following only, viz: (a) Pay of rank, (b) Field Pay, (c) Separation Allowance.

(2) That in view of the fact that there are a large number of positions on the staff with special consolidated rates of pay, many of which positions are filled by officers of the same rank, each drawing a different rate of pay, the rates of pay and separation allowance of the three months in question be as laid down in the attached schedule, these being the regimental rates now in force up to the rank of colonel and major-general. This will give staff officers below the rank of brigadier-general and non-commissioned officers serving on the staff, the same rates as regimental officers and non-commissioned officers of corresponding rank.

(3) That as the intention when granting this additional pay was to enable discharged soldiers of the expeditionary force to maintain themselves until they had obtained employment in civil life, the Order in Council authorizing said pay and allowances be amended to exclude the following:

(a) Civil employees of the Federal or Provincial Government, who on discharge are privileged to return to their former positions in the Government service.

(b) Members of the Permanent Staff or the Permanent Force of the Militia who are privileged to return to permanent duty again.

(4) That when issuing this pay and Allowance ninety one days be considered as three months, and that three payments be made, the first and second one for thirty days, and the third one for thirty days, and where overpayments have been made deducted from his Pay and Separation Allowance.

(5) That soldiers serving in Bermuda or St. Lucia be considered as serving in the Canadian Expeditionary Force Overseas.

The Committee concur in the foregoing recommendation, and submit the same for approval.

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

In this connection the following letter from Major Purney and a telegram from Mr. J. H. Hill, Secretary Provincial Returned Soldiers Commission of British Columbia should be included in the record:—

OTTAWA, June 8th, 1917.

Sir HERBERT AMES, and Members of Select Parliamentary Committee on Returned Soldiers.

GENTLEMEN,—As the majority of the Executive Committee of the G.W.V.A. of Canada will be unable to appear before you at your next session, I am taking this opportunity of expressing the unanimous opinion of our Committee in the matter of withholding from Government employees who are returned soldiers the three months' Pay and Allowances granted Returned Soldiers after six months service overseas.

We strongly protest against such action on the part of the Government, considering the same a breach of faith. It will be found that many men in Government employ have made financial engagements on the strength of the Order-in-Council granting such pay, etc., and this part revocation of the same will have a most embarrassing effect.

We consider it unjust and unfair. All men, Government employees or others, having once been led to expect the payment mentioned naturally will never understand how such a change as contemplated could be justly made and must be considered, as I state above, a breach of faith and never could be convinced to the contrary. I wish to assure you that this class has, and will have, the strongest sympathy and support of all their comrades in this matter, and I would most strongly urge that you recommend that no distinction be made as contemplated.

This is written in great haste on the eve of my departure, but nevertheless it is our earnest opinion and conviction, and I would therefore respectfully request that you give our request your most serious consideration.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) W. P. PURNEY,
President, G.W.V.A. of Canada.

VICTORIA, B.C., June 7, 1917.

Sir HERBERT AMES, M.P.,
Committee on Returned Soldiers,
Ottawa.

Reference regulation governing payments of three months post-discharge pay authorized recent Order in Council understand separation allowance to be included in cheque issued to man. Respectfully suggest Department be urged to reconsider and arrange for payment separation allowances to dependents as before discharge.

(Sgd.) J. H. HILL.

The WITNESS: Now there is a matter that was brought up at the last meeting the matter of the Amar System of Functional Education—

The CHAIRMAN: I may say that is completely covered by Sir Henry Norman's statement of which each of the members has a copy.

The WITNESS: That is just why I am taking it up here.

The CHAIRMAN: I hardly think it is necessary to put all that on our record inasmuch as it is covered here.

The WITNESS: It is just on a recommendation regarding the matter of sending a deputation to France that I am asking an opportunity of addressing the Committee.

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

I have a letter here written by the Vocational Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission stating that that Commission is taking up the matter of the Amar system by sending representatives direct to Paris to look through the whole scheme in vogue there. In another letter Mr. Kidner goes farther and states that they are sending three experts to Paris for the purpose I have stated. In view of the fact that already of our very best men in Canada, Col. Mignault of Montreal, and Major Todd, one of our Board of Pensions Commissioners have already written exhaustive reports, which together with Sir Henry Norman's statement cover the matter fully we cannot understand why this important question should be delayed any longer by sending experts to make a further report. We think the time has now come that we need men who can give treatment under the Amar system. Instead of sending three more experts it would be far better to send three men there to be trained in the manner and application of that treatment.

Capt. MACPHERSON: Col. Mignault made the statement the other day that he could get men over from France at $1,500 a year as experts, and when he spoke about it they said it was too expensive and they immediately appointed men to do the training at $3,000.

The WITNESS: I would like to read a letter from Col. Mignault on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN: Col. Mignault was here and gave voluminous evidence. Unless there is something new—

The WITNESS: It is just on the matter that probably the men who go as experts often do not know how to speak French, and not knowing how to speak French will meet with a difficulty right away.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who are the three that are going?—A. He evidently has some inkling as to who they are, but would not give it to me. He says in his letter: "I would also suggest that those who are to be sent on such a study of re-education on the other side should be returned men." That is with the idea of learning the system so that they can put it into practice here and become operatives. France had to train her own soldiers. If we introduce the system in Canada I suppose we will have to do the same thing. Col. Mignault and Major Todd have both reported on the Amar system. Why have their reports not been acted upon?

The CHAIRMAN: Col. Mignault was in charge of a hospital in France. He was not sent to make a report on the Amar system.

The WITNESS: I understand he was charged by Gen. Jones to investigate the system, and he asked for another man to help him out in the work, and Major Todd was sent. Now, we have both reports, yet nothing has ever been done in the matter, consequently I have men coming in to see me with wasted stumps and the result of lack of proper functional training. There are cases where the stump has faded away and become useless as a support to the man who has had his leg amputated. Under the Amar system they bring that stump until it is almost as good as my perfect leg; they train every function in that limb. There is all the difference in the world between the two systems.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. And there is nothing doing here?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, there is. They are doing all they can to develop the stump and are given functional treatment.

The WITNESS: I understand that they have here what is called the Sandow system. I can give the names of the men I am speaking of, where the muscles have all faded away simply because the treatment of the stump has been neglected.

The CHAIRMAN: Is there anything else that you gentlemen desire to add?

[Mr. N. F. R. Knight.]

Capt. MACPHERSON: Just one thing, sir, regarding the matter I mentioned in my former evidence, of men in the Civil Service being allowed to start and being given the credit of their overseas service. I have had one or two cases, one being that of a man who applied for a position in the Dominion Government, and who was accepted, but in the meantime had enlisted, and who although he was offered his discharge did not accept it. Now he has come back and has entered the position which had not been filled, but he has lost the benefit of the time he put in at the front.

The CHAIRMAN: The Committee are going to take that recommendation up very carefully when they make the report, so that the representations already made upon that line will not be forgotten.

Capt. MACPHERSON: I wanted to make sure of it.

The CHAIRMAN: Before we close I want to refer to the telegram that came from Major Purney from Halifax, and which was read at the opening of to-day's session. Does Major Purney speak with the authority or with the backing of your entire executive on this change of recommendation?

The WITNESS: No, sir, he does not. The resolution as passed in the Committee was as presented, sir.

By Mr. Pardee:

Q. Why would he send that telegram?—A. I think, sir, that there arose some discussion afterwards amongst themselves about discipline, and I think that perhaps led up to the telegram.

Witness retired.

MOTION: Mr. Pardee moved, seconded by Mr. Marcil, that the Clerk of the Committee be instructed to furnish 100 copies of the Proceedings of Tuesday, June 5th, to Mr. Norman Knight, Secretary of the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada.

Resolution agreed to.

Committee adjourned.
